This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at `http://books.google.com/`

Digitized by Google

Mus 13.11 *

THIS BOOK IS FOR USE
WITHIN THE LIBRARY ONLY

HARVARD COLLEGE LIBRARY

MUSIC LIBRARY

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

THE

MUSICAL WORLD.

VOL. LX.

LONDON:
PUBLISHED BY DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.,
244, REGENT STREET.

1882.

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

THE

MUSICAL WORLD.

VOL. LX.

LONDON:
PUBLISHED BY DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.,
244, REGENT STREET.

1882.

Digitized by Google

Mus 13.11 *

Harvard College Library
Mar. 15, 1921
Naumburg Fellowship fund

LONDON:
PRINTED BY HENDERSON, RAIT, AND SPALDING,
3 & 5, MARYLEBONE LANE, W.

Digitized by Google

INDEX—1882.

A Buffalo view of Wagner, 417
A case of psychological delirium, 209
A catching tune, 469
A fête at Bucharest, 101
A frantic Gaul (Jules Lermina), 37
A genuine letter from a genuine artist, 546
A glance at the old Masters (Pencerdd Gwffyn), 20
A happy new year, 8
A Jewish synagogue melody, 318
A juvenile audience (D. T.), 38
A letter from Hamburgh, 461
A Liverpudlian view of the Nibelungen, 574, 597
A musical pilgrimage, 491, 507, 523, 548
A new opera at Manchester, 735
A new potentate, 547
A prompt decision, 137
A royal volume of music, 171
A scamper through the Dams (Phosphor), 511
A true prophecy, 484
A village concert (Pencerdd Gwffyn), 797
A visit to Mdme Pasta, 173
A wall with eyes and ears (Punch), 364
A Wimbledon silver shield, 432
An act to amend the law of copyright, 590
An Englishman in Vienna, 100
At rehearsal, 560
Actor's art, The, 674
Advice to those studying music, 702
Albani as Elsa, 11, 25, 56
Albani, Mdme, at Monte Carlo, 135
Albani, Mdme, at Berlin, 149
Albani, Mdme, in the Traviata, 268, 305
Alexandra Palace, 9, 277
Annie Louise Cary, 29

Balfe, 322, 332, 350, 401, 414, 559, 595, 671, 686, 724, 734
Balfe, his life and work, 815
Balloon society of Great Britain, 723
Bath, 460
Beaconsfield, Lord, on instrumental music, 518
Beginning of the concert season in Vienna, 750, 766
Benedict's, Sir J., Graziella, 579
Berlioz, his wife and son, 77
Berlioz, Hector, 782
Bernhardt, Sarah, 8
Bernhardt, Sarah, at Genoa, 106
Bernhardt, Sarah, marriage of, 211
Bernhardt, Sarah, at the Gaiety Theatre, 388
Bernhardt, Sarah, at Le Havre, 404
Birmingham Musical Festival, 118, 539, 545, 555, 561, 589
Births, 56, 336, 768, 800, 816
Bristol Musical Festival, 642, 651, 667, 674
Blackheath Conservatoire of Music, 514
Bülow, Hans von, and G. F. Hatton at Berlin, 10
"But Brighton," 767

Carl Rosa Opera Company at Her Majesty's (D. T.), 19; (Graphic), 19, 29, 35, 51, 59, 167; at Manchester, 332; in Glasgow, 735
Causeries de Couloir (Petipace of Winchelsea), 134
Caution to the public, 718
Centenary of Auber, The, 157
Champagne ring, The (Punch), 435
Chacun à son goût, 433
Cherubini, 60, 93, 166, 201, 216, 224, 237, 256, 286, 436, 469, 478, 517, 532, 565, 576, 611, 621, 644, 661, 677, 691, 709, 719, 731, 772, 798, 813
Chester Musical Festival, 363, 383, 396
Choir Benevolent Fund, 75
Choirs at Hamburg, Meeting of the, 524, 533
Church music at Oxford, 815
Coffee halls, 186, 194
Collected compositions of H.R.H. the Prince Consort, 11
Colour-hearing, 37
Copyright! copyright!! 655

CONCERTS:—

Agabeg, Josephine, 170. Aguilar, E., 26, 58, 213, 242, 817. Albert Hall Choral Society, 39, 91, 185, 194. Alexandra Palace, 275, 291, 324. Athenæum Amateur Orchestral, 139. Austin, Ambrose, 227. Arditi, Signor, 387. Avigliana, Mdme, 422. Bach Society, 123. Bache's, Mr, 155, 157, 722. Barnby, Mr, 227. Bayswater Academy of Music, 803. Beare, Miss Mary, 754. Bell, Minnie, 107. Benedict, Sir Julius, 422. Bergson, Michael, 75, 124. Berringer, Oscar, 259. Blandford, Percy, 107. Bodda, Mr and Mdme, 803. Bonawitz, Herr, 153. Bow and Bromley Institute, 170, 659. Bunsen, Mdlle Victoria, 402. Burns's night at St James's Hall, 61. Brinsmead concerts, 722. Brixton Choral Society, 193, 722. Carri, Hermann and Ferdinand, 125. Castellan, Mdme, 433. Chaplin, Misses, 185. Chaplin Nellie, 675. Cheshire, Mr and Mrs John, 153. Clark, Windeyer, 787. Clifford, Walter, 107. Corbett, Mr Hamilton, 91. Cottell, Lansdowne, 199, 242, 769. Cowen, Miss, 324. Cowen's, F. H., St Ursula, 338. Cronin, Miss Madalena, 388. Cross, Mr John, 26. Cusins, W. G., Mr, 371, 796. Crystal Palace Saturday, 138, 197, 242, 339, 370, 387, 413, 657, 706, 738, 786, 816. Dante-Liszt, 260. Dorrell, Mr W., 402. Dunn, Sinclair, 138, 242, 324. Edwards, Miss, 403. Ehrenfechter, W. C. A., 355. Endell Street, 91. Fioretti, Mdlle, 434. Floral Hall, 339, 421. Folkstone, Viscountess, 423. Foresters' Hall, 817. Furlong, Mr and Mrs, A., 185. Ganz, W., Orchestral, 253, 258, 291, 323, 354, 388. Gear, George, 291. Gill, Mr John, 325. Graham, Mr Selwyn, 403. Greenhill, J., 307. Guildhall, 421. Hallé, Charles, 291, 306, 732. Harvest Festival, 675. Hackney Choral Association, 275. Hackney, 769. Highbury Philharmonic, 185, 769. Holborn Orchestral and Choral Society, 307. Holland, Edwin, 339. Holmes, Henry, 198. Hopekirk, Miss Helen, 434. Hutchinson, J. T., 124. Irish Ballad, 213. Isidor, Rosina, 198. Jewson, Mr F. B., 434. Kenney, Rosa, 168, 199, 213, 227, 258, 306, 327. Kensington Orchestral and Choral Society, 371. Kensington Popular, 75, 139. Kensington School of Music, 449, 817. Kilburn Musical Association, 124, Kuhe, Mr, 371, 402, 705. Lara, Isidore de, 803. Lassere, Jules, 387. Lehmeyer, Herr, 324. Leslie's, Henry, Choir, 420. Lewis, Miss Emelie, 355. Liebhart, Mdme, 421. London Academy of Music, 99, 396, 461. London Amateur Musical Society, The, 815. London Ballad Concerts, 11, 27, 37, 77, 84, 107, 140, 156, 172, 181, 200, 319, 734, 755, 771. London Conservatoire of Music, 169, 199, 482, 707, 802. London Literary and Artistic Institution, 689. London Musical Society, 421. Lower Clapton Benefit, 325. Macfarren, Mrs John, 707. Macfarren's (Walter) Orchestral Concerts, 27, 140, 151, 169, 198, 200. Mattei, Tito, 355. Menter, Mdme, pianoforte recital, 252, 355, 387. Mitchell, Mrs E., 340. Monday Popular Concerts, 7, 54, 90, 106, 121, 150, 172, 210, 658, 689, 722, 734, 738, 767, 783, 812. Mori, Nicholas, 26. Muratori, Signor, 355. Musical Artists, 339, 433, 803. Musical Association, 259. "Musical Evenings" at the Royal Academy of Music, 817. Music for the people, 263. Navarre, Miss, 259, 277. Nevers, M. de, 482. New Southgate (N.), 259. Nilsson, Mdme, 402. Oberthür, Mr, 355. Pachmann, M. Vladimir de, 402. Paggi Family, The, 403. Partridge, F. W., 242. Patti concert at Swansea, The, 597. Penna, Frederic, 124. Philharmonic Society, 92, 108, 132, 164, 185, 197, 303, 370. Philip, Miss Elizabeth, 324. Pirani, Sig. E., 403. Pollitzer, Mr, 339. Popular Ballad (Clerkenwell), 124, 138, 689. Poplar Town Hall, 339. Post Office Orphan Home, 817. Powers, Mdme Isabelle, 107. Pradeau, Gustave, 198, 276. Promenade (Covent Garden), 498, 501, 503, 564, 629, 689, 706, 722, 755, 765, 788, 816. "Rahere Almoners," 817. Reeves, Sims, Concerts, 51, 92, 102, 135, 184. Reeves, Mdme, 803. Regency Club, The, 133, 276. Richter, The, 271, 306, 317, 354, 370, 718. Ria, Signor, 403. Riechelmann, Herr, 153. Roby, Arthur, 753. Roselli, Alice, 124, 306. Royal Academy of Music, 68, 83, 100, 118, 211, 253, 260, 293, 318, 367, 397, 412, 653, 670, 718, 748, 783, 797. Competition for Sterndale Bennett scholarship, 215; Lady Goldsmid scholarship, 236; Llewellyn Thomas gold medal, 259; Evill prize, 259; Sterndale Bennett prize, 414; Heathcote Long prize, 414; Institution of, 755; Bonany-Dobree prize, 785; Balfe scholarship, 804. Royal Albert Hall, 26, 258, 291, 658, 738, 751, 786. Royal Amateur Orchestral Society, 786. Royal Aquarium, 564. Royal Victoria Hall "People's," 107, 196, 786. Royal Society of Musicians, 753. Rummell, Franz, 371. Sacred Harmonic Society, 87, 93, 103, 106, 134, 169, 211, 214, 270, 291, 699, 733, 754. Sainton-Dolby, Mdme, 74, 802. Sanders, Mr, 483. Schubert Society, 154, 169, 258, 433, 769. Sgambati, Sig., 323. Singleton-Saidie, Miss, 370. Smith, Sydney (St Paul's, Kilburn, Church Fund), 139. Spontini, Linas, 185. South Kensington Ladies' Choir, 153. St Andrew's Eve at St James's Hall, and at Royal Albert Hall, 751. St George's Musical Association, 753. St George's Glee Union, 753. St Giles, Bloomsbury, 739. St John Robinson, M. H., students, 139, 675. St John's (Clapham), 259. Symphony Concerts, 276, 306, 340, 342, 420. Thomas, W. Henry, 324. Thomas, Mr John, 420, 468. Thompson, Miss Louise, 449. Thorne, E. H., 74. Trinity House, Southwark, 421. 817. Tufnell Park Choral Society, 90, 802. Vergara, Signor, 658. Villa, Signor, 421. Von Hennig, Mdlle Louise, 754. Wallworth, Mr, 434. Watts-Hughes, Mrs, 317. Waud, Miss Florence, 332. Waugh, Miss Bessie, 39. Weber, Carl and Kummer, Alex., 198, 242, 277. Willing's, Mr, Choir, 786. Whitechapel Young Men's Association, 170. Wynne, Mdme Edith, 402. Zimmermann, Agnes, 170.

Digitized by Google

CORRESPONDENCE :—

A comic cyclus (Diomed Shield), 797. A complaint (F. A. Gould), 750. A cry from the orchestra (An orchestral player of some water), 104. A day in the country (Athro. A. Knight), 382. A discovery (Jennius), 675. A grievous plaint (Phosphor), 62. A letter from Bucharest (Elise Jonnesco), 341. Ancient Welsh music (Fluellen), 687, (Pencerdd Gwffyn), 702. A new temple (Augustus J. Harvey), 550. A night-and-day-mare (Sagramore), 514. A protest from Harry Wall, 430. A remonstrance (Solomon Pipes), 700. A sop for the "Advanced" (Your Special Fanatic), 483. Archdeacon Dunbar's Services (Charles E. C. Dunbar), 36. Ashdown's "Gemme d'Antichità" (R. E. L.), 639. Balfe's Etoile de Seville (Archer Gurney), 135. Betraying or Revealing (Simon Half), 371. Böhm (W. S. Broadwood), 123. Brahms' new concerto (C. A. B.), 655. Brahms and Sarah Bernhardt (J. R. M.), 689. "By the sad sea waves" (Metzler and Chappell, Harry Wall), 462. Campana, the late Fabio (F. C. Hughes-Hallett), 341. Caution to concert-givers, &c. (A Reader), 116. Caution (E. Silas), 148. Chester Musical Festival (J. S. Howson), 367. Choral classes for the poor (Malcolm Lawson), 76. Coldly correct (A. K. S. Godolphin), 196. Colour-hearing (Otto Beard), 45. Concerts (T. A. Wheels, M.D.), 720. Conservatoire of Music for England (O. L.), 4. Copyright for representation, 293. Crystal Palace Saturday Concerts (Astur), 150. Dibdin's grave (Ch. J. Bishenden), 639. Did Mendelssohn write songs? (Yaxton Last), 71. Die Meistersinger (An English Musician), 354. Dowager Countess of Essex (F. Penna), 141. Dr Arne (D. Baptie), 86. Dramatic music at our Royal Academy (A Connoisseur of some Decades), 450. Dresden and Leipsic (C. W. T.), 590. Exit Clown (An old clown), 28. Female composers (O. P.), 642. Four times Lord Mayor (A. J. Phasey), 717. From Aix-la-Chapelle (H. G.), 516. Future of Italian opera (George Bowyer), 636. German opera (Tempest), 196. Guildhall School of Music (A professor), 463; (G. Li Calsi), 588; (A north countryman), 796. Herr Nottebohm, the late (G. Grove), 736. In re—? (E. A. B.), 209. Italian opera question, the (H. H. Statham), 687. Hérodiade (Ernest Gye), 209. Liszt's Christus (Thomas Noon Gadd), 200. Macfarren, Professor, and Mr Corder (F. K. Hatteraley), 25. Mackenzie's (A. C.) Columba (C. A. B.), 608. Musical copyright (S. W. M.), 381; (H. Lawrence Harris), 753. Musical ear, The (Phosphor), 278. Music at theatres (C. Armbruster), 724. National Anthem, The (C. V. Stanford), 527. National School of Music (O. L.), 708. Naples Conservatory, The (J. P. Goldberg), 208. National Anthem for India, The (F. K. Harford), 351; (Mancherjee M. Brownaggree), 414; (Monier Williams), 819. Nibelungen performances, the (Shulz-Curtius), 208. Organists' Quarterly Journal, the (Dr. Spark), 653. Oswestry festival, the (P. Joyce Twest, M.D.), 642. Out of town (Wm. Spark), 724. Park music (Enquirer), 518. Parsifal and Redemption (C. A. B.), 619. Parsifal the King, &c. (Your American correspondent at Bayreuth), 516. Patti, Mdme Adelina (J. H. Mapleson), 302. Pauca Verba (Flamborough Head, Bart.), 689. Persecution of the Jews in Russia (Charles Reade), 53. Phosphor, his dream, 575. Reply to New York correspondent of Musical World (Max Strakosch), 137. Richard Wagner v. Jews and Judaism (C. K. Salaman), 304. Richter Concerts, the (J. S. Fleming, sec.), 255; (Schulz Curtius), 748. Royal Academies of Music (A Reader), 709. Sacred Harmonic Society (A. J. Puttick), 589; (G. Grove), 753. Sgambati to Faccio (G. Sgambati), 293. Some hints for musical notebookists (Simon Toper Table), 485. Some not irrelevant queries (Enquirer), 485. Souvenirs d'un musicien (M—l B—n), 59. Symphony concerts (Schulz Curtius), 39. Tempora mutantur, et nos (R. J. K.), 673. The proposed National Conservatoire of Music (John Towers), 116. The Royal Academy of Music (G. A. Macfarren), 592. Theobald Böhm (Walter Stewart Broadwood), 21. Tonic Sol-fa (G. A. Macfarren), 171; (Mus.Bac., Oxon), 193; (J. Evans, music instructor), 211. To "An English Musician" (Fiat Justitia), 340. To Burnand, Esq. (Theophilus Queer), 527. To Epps of Ipswich (Thomas Noon Gadd), 39. To Francis Hueffer (Badrhamoot), 399. To Galleron of Galway (Petipace of Winchelsea), 534. To George Grove, Esq. (A. F. P.), 304. To Guy of the Glaciers (Groker Roores), 77; (Fiammata), 319. To Oakes of the Orkneys (Abraham Sadoke Silent), 122. To Polkaw (Paul Moist), 74. To Sagramore le Desirous (Dodinas le Savage), 453, 495. To Sir Kay Hedius (Petipace of Winchelsea), 559. Two Frankensteins (Interrogator), 785. Unsolicited favour (A constant reader), 516. Wagner's Tristan (T. Board Pooley), 389

Costa, Sir Michael, 72

County Hall, Worcester, Mons. Jullien's Grand Concert, 108

Cowen's, Mr, Scandinavian Symphony, 755

Craig-y-Nos (Mdme Adelina Patti), 302

Crystal Palace grand organ, 669

Cycles over (Cardanus and Pomponatius), 416

D'Albert, E., in Vienna, 165

Dante's Divina Commedia according to Liszt, 255, 292, 317

Davenport, Miss Fanny, 631

DEATHS, 40, 56, 88, 104, 121, 137, 152, 168, 183, 212, 240, 256, 289, 304, 336, 385, 400, 416, 496, 528, 561, 592, 672, 688, 704, 720, 736, 768, 784, 800, 816

Death of Bataille, General, 55; Callcott, W. Hutchins, 533; Campana, Signor Fabio, 103; Celeste, Mdme, 121; Engel, Carl, 739; Eschmann, Karl, 804; Gardoni, Signor, 197; Hiles, Mr John, 134, 196; Hipkins, Mr James, 262; Jaell, Alfred, 157; Kücken, F., 218; Kullak, Theodor, 156; Membrée, Edmond, 595; Prytherck, Miss (Mdme Gerard Coventry), 499; Raff, Joachim, 403; Rossetti, Mr, 236; Rouzeaud, M. Auguste, 121; Santley, Mrs, 561; Seligmann, Hippolyte Prosper, 125; Stephens, Miss (Dowager Countess of Essex), 121, 132; Sullivan, Mrs, 352; Wartel, F. P., 534

Departure of Adelina Patti for America, 689

Devonshire Music, 485

Donizetti's Posthumous Opera, 195

D'Oyly Carte electrifying his neighbours, 20

Drama, The, in Portman Market, 147, 163, 179, 191, 207, 223

Dream of Sir Julius Benedict, 429

Dudley Gallery (Pencerdd Gwffyn), 703

Dvorák's Symphony (Pencerdd Gwffyn), 303

Dvorák's opera, Dimitrij, 683

Edinburgh has something to say, 193

Edinburgh University Musical Society, 779

Educational Influences of the Drama, 101

Egyptian Symphony, The, 212

Elleviou, 437

Elenchus (Dr Blidge), 45, 577

Elijah at Birmingham (Graphic), 561

Encore Jeanne D'Arc, 290

Essipoff, Annette, 689

Euryanthe at Drury Lane, 372

Excerpts from Parke's Musical Memoirs, 459, 581, 613, 638, 725, 740, 756, 773, 804, 814

Falk of Folkestone, 449

Fedora, 782

Feminine in Music, The, 693, 699

Fires in Theatres, 29

FOREIGN PARAGRAPHS (every week) :—

Agram, 623. Aix-la-Chapelle, 132, 292, 319, 354, 623, 819. America, 706. Amsterdam, 325. Arezzo, 475, 502. Arnstadt, 403. Auckland (N.Z.), 639. Barcelona, 475, 573, 639. Basle, 348, 661, 821. Baveno, 518. Bayreuth, 254, 275, 307, 318, 343, 366, 485, 516, 533, 547, 580, 605, 657. Bergamo, 343. Berlin, 10, 30, 46, 58, 77, 92, 155, 179, 192, 225, 227, 235, 275, 286, 311, 327, 343, 356, 412, 431, 447, 461, 495, 547, 575, 596, 607, 637, 662, 702, 732, 757, 771. Berne, 39. Bologna, 796. Boston, 734. Breslau, 39, 607. Brunswick, 341, 655. Brussels, 30, 36, 62, 107, 164, 186, 295, 398, 661, 732, 764. Bucharest, 415. Buenos Ayres, 84, 708. Caen, 781. Cape Colony, 181. Carlsruhe, 689, 790. Cassel, 635, 660. Catania, 646. Choisy-le-Roi, 412. Cincinnati, 39, 51, 171. Cleves, 578. Coburg, 383, 397. Cologne, 39, 164, 209, 271, 341, 351. Colorado Springs, 559. Copenhagen, 327, 356. Constantinople, 318. Darmstadt, 30, 669, 815. Dessau, 575, 622, 782. Domont, 590. Dresden, 58, 118, 180, 196, 208, 293, 341, 391, 577, 605, 621, 655, 670, 795. Ebling, 689. Forli, 343. Frankfort-on-the-Maine, 165, 225, 412, 450, 614, 669. Geneva, 179, 225, 550. Genoa, 263, 790. Georgetown (Demerara), 167, 642. Gorlitz,

Digitized by Google

724. Granada, 293. Gratz, 660, 726. Hamburgh, 27, 77, 92, 135, 293, 381, 550, 674, 748. Hanover, 719. Havre, 295. Klagenfurth, 573. Komotau, 577. Königsberg, 686. Kreuznach, 343. Leipsic, 156, 203, 210, 225, 399, 516, 542, 558, 607, 660, 669, 708, 723, 739, 803. Liegnitz, 200. Lisbon, 577. Lyons, 323, 621. Madrid, 10, 515, 598, 674, 740. Maestricht, 639. Mainz, 550. Mannheim, 660. Meiningen, 561, 657. Milan, 10, 51, 86, 118, 141, 181, 194, 245, 325, 343, 447, 515, 717. Monte Carlo, 107, 515, 661. Moscow, 167, 191, 275, 635, 702, 750. Munich, 6, 174, 271, 311, 534, 565, 607, 669, 721, 815. Nancy, 225. Naples, 767. New York, 149, 164, 181, 241, 303, 381, 404, 611, 661, 686, 781. Nice, 51, 511, 531. Palermo, 225. Paris, 102, 149. Parma, 83. Pesaro, 126, 225. Pesth, 39, 348, 610. Piacenza, 135. Pisa, 9. Port Elizabeth, 604. Posen, 86. Prague, 356, 447, 661, 670. Rio Janiero, 796. Rome, 134, 147, 181, 200, 241, 447, 737, 782. Rouen, 6, 811. Roskilde, 126. Salzburg, 106. San Francisco, 819. Schnaith, 444. Schwerin, 277, 735. Sondershausen, 531. Stettin, 270. Stockholm, 636. St Petersburgh, 36, 110, 133, 171, 253, 391, 397, 454, 502, 565, 575, 669, 734, 783, 804. St Raphaël, 811. Strassburgh, 107, 389, 511, 590. Stuttgart, 85, 174, 181, 193, 268, 348, 373, 399, 589, 660. Sydney, 502. Toulouse, 382. Trieste, 523. Turin, 319, 351. Venice, 295, 595. Verviers, 30. Vienna, 11, 28, 55, 77, 116, 141, 174, 203, 214, 239, 254, 270, 293, 319, 343, 382, 404, 423, 451, 499, 511, 547, 607, 623, 654, 674, 687, 703, 757, 782, 815. Weimar, 210, 382. Wiesbaden, 550, 811. Würzburg, 307, 531. Zurich, 295, 358

Form or Design in Music, 5, 25, 52, 69, 131, 148, 165, 180, 192, 215, 228, 252, 269, 285, 349, 364, 389, 398, 476, 510, 526, 566, 578, 610, 628, 635, 660, 685, 700
Fracas between operatic singers, 215
French musical festival, 235, 271, 371
From Hungaria, 138
From Quigg, of Chicago (J. Travis Quigg), 399
Funeral of the late Mr B. Webster, 439
Fünfzehnter Deutscher Journalistentag, 390

Ganz's, Mr, orchestral concerts, 125
Garrett, Dr, and his Shunammite (D. L. R.), 724
Geaussent's choir, Mr, 757
German Opera, 475
German Opera at Drury Lane, 301, 310, 317, 325, 333, 340, 356, 364, 372, 379, 388, 406, 412
German Reed, Mr and Mrs, 13, 156, 678
Gounod on Mozart's Don Juan, 721, 736
Gounod's Redemption, 451, 557, (Graphic), 559, 620, (Royal Albert Hall), 693; at New York, 661
Grove's "Dictionary," 609
Guildhall Orchestral Society, The (Astur), 59
Guildhall school of music, 76, 180
Gzpzpbglmnpjhrqz, 500

Haydn, Joseph, 365, 382
Hebrew version of "God Save the Queen," 669
Heilbronn, Mdlle, 87
Hereford musical festival, 158, 518, 571, 587, 518, 603, 670, 732
Hiles, the late Mr John, 196, 213, 242
Hiller, Ferdinand, 208
Holmes', W. H., "Fantasia Sonata," 88
Holy Grail, the, 502
Holy pictures in Russia, 535
Howell, Mr Francis, 9
How the matter stands (Arthur Pougin), 434

Illness of Mdme Rudersdorff, 169
Il Seraglio, 352
ILLUSTRATIONS:—
Abbe Liszt and Sir Julius Benedict, 429. A German raid, 288. Amphigouri, 624. Anaximander and Anaximenes, 153. Arcturus Pasha, 212. Averroes and Avicenna, 433. Baylis Boil and Purple Powis, 448. Beard, Dr, 121, 449. Before the concert—Monday Pop, 120. Cyclical Reminiscences, 417, 432. F. C. B., 450. Dr Beard and Conductor, 415. Dr Calm and Major Tempest, 209. Drs Quince and Shipping, 464, 496. Drs Wind and Eagles, 318. Gounod and Costa, 560. Herr Grubemann, 469. Jamblicus-Democritus, 58. Dom Kensington, 123, 140. Knights of the Swan — Fancelli, Schott, 136. Manchester critics, 752. Paul Moist, 74. Paul Moist and Herr Grubemann, 418. Photograph fac-simile of a letter from Donizetti, 9. Publisher Bumpus and Professor, 431. Rosa, Carl, 8, 40, 137, 240, 256. Rubinstein and von Bülow, 72. Schira Cavaliere, 183, 385. Shadow, 56. Sullivan, Arthur, and Macdallah, 653. Tannhäuser as it was, 115. Tannhäuser just now, 182. Triumvirate, 272. Wagner, Herr, 273. Whale, Major, 138.

In earnest, 10
"Initials, The," 630
Interesting sale in Paris, 141
Iolanthe, or the Peer and the Peri, 747, 748
Irresistible, 123
Irving's, Mr, farewell speech, 484

Joachim in St Petersburgh, 76
Joachim in Berlin, 675
Judaism in Music, 273, 289, 304, 321, 337, 353, 368, 386, 400, 416.

Kennedy Family in New York, The, 102; in Dundee, 623
Kennedy and Scottish Christianity, 637
King's Concert Rooms, Hanover Square, 477, 578, 754
Kneller Hall, inspection of pupils, 238
Krebs, Marie, 740
Kullak, Theodore, 156

LEADING ARTICLES:—
Achilles and Patroclus, 72. Albani, Mdme, in Berlin, 24. A letter from Wagner, 449. A mingling of congenial spirits (Otto Beard), 672. A new ballet in Vienna, 656. A new editor, 88. A new want supplied (Dr Blidge), 816. A question of flutes, 104. Ashdown & Parry, 432. Attack on Rubinstein and his admirer (Simon Half), 785. At the German opera, 385. Bayreuth v. Paris, 352. Benvenuto Cellini, 240. Carl Rosa's company at Leeds, 688. Concerts, 400. Egyptian Symphony, The, 212. Exotic and Indigenous (an English musician), 464. Lamoureux concerts in Paris (Samuel Toper Table), 769. Latest Parsifal literature, 704. Left out in the cold, 448. Marie Roze, 256. New opera at Manchester, The, 752. Oscar Wilde and Music in New York (Havey), 73. Pills for candidates, 168, 183, 784, 800. Royal Academy of Music, 212, 289, 608. Royal College of Music, 41, 56. Royal Italian opera, 226. Schopenhauer v. Wagner, 480. The 25th August, 528. The Javanese Gamelan (Polkaw), 640. To Dr. Punch—Canone (Otto Beard), 384. Wagner's Kundry, 153. Wagner's Parsifal, 320
Lehrer-Personal der Königlichen Hochschule für Musik, 604
"Life of Balfe," Mr W. A. Barrett's, 709
List of new Italian operas, 21
Liszt's "Hungaria," 133
Literary work and tobacco, 581
Lohengrin not in Paris, 58
London Gregorian Choral Association (P.G.), 310
Lucca, Pauline, Speaks, 720
Lucca, Pauline, on Mdme Reicher-Kindermann, 783

Macfarren's, Professor, address, 624
Macfarren, George Alexander, at Manchester, 432
Marriages, 152, 273, 352, 368, 385, 496, 576, 608, 624, 768
Mario, Sig., in London, 137
Mayor's Nests, 430
Mendelssohn Family, 320
Merchant Taylors Company and the Royal College of Music, 262
Meyerbeer and Le Prophète, 287
Midgets, The, 558
Minasi's, Master, morning concert, scheme of, 462
More Persuasion, 140
More yet to be done, 788
Music at Boulogne-sur-Mer, 78, 100, 133, 200, 239, 294, 319, 437, 451, 475, 501, 533, 564, 643, 687, 748, 788
Music at Liverpool, 109
Music at the Antipodes (J.T.L.F.), 28, 342, 397, 501, 637
Music for Romeo and Juliet, 181
Music for the people, 263
Music from the East, 606
Music in 1881, (D. T.) 3
Music in Berlin, 366
Music in Egypt (Otto Beard), 137
Music in Geneva, 195
Music in Glasgow, 11, 28, 71, 86, 102, 820
Music in Leeds, 7
Music in Natal, 23
Music in New York, 229, 286, 672
"Music in Religion and Life," 531
Music in Vienna, 84, 795, 811
Music of the Future — unusual bargain, (Punch), 235
Music versus Drawing of Corks (O.B.), 516
Musical Association, The, 771
Musical Compositions, 653
Musical Copyright, 327, 350
Musical Ear, The, 236
Musical Motives, 454
Musical Union, The, 235
Musicians' Exchange, Berlin, 724

National Melodies, 14
New Irish opera, 211
New law on Musical Compositions, The, 519
New Organ for Rhyl, 530
New York Grand Operahouse, 239
New York Musical Festival (Havey), 308
New Music, 819

NEW WORKS:—
Gudrun, 103; Kevin's Choice, 211; Shipwright's Love, The, 482; Nibelung's Ring, The (D. T.), 244, 267, 283, 290, 294, 295, 299, 301, 309, 315, 327, 331, 347. The Wicklow Rose, 263
"Nibelungen" Band, The, 326
Nilsson, Mdlle Christine, 225, 226, 307
Norman-Néruda, Mdme, 73
No "Teachin Power" in England, 155

Digitized by Google

"Nym Crinkle" (Wheeler) on Marie Roze, 210

Oakeley, Sir Herbert, 525
Ode to the Passions, The, 796
On Change, 464, 496
Opera Season, The, 463
Opera Comique, 643
Operatic entertainments at the Crystal Palace, 470
Oratorios, 639
Orchestra of the Royal Italian Opera, 319
Orchestra for the Birmingham Festival, 528
Organ appointments, 305, 453, 518
Organ recitals (Temple Church), 306; All Saints, Stoke Newington, 340; Technical School, Bradford, 550; Wrexham, 690
Osgood, Mrs E. A., 10
Oswestry Triennial Musical Festival, 605

Paisley Musical Festival, 117
Park Band Society, The, 326
Park Music (Pencerdd Gwffyn), 499
Parsifaliana, 301, 336, 385, 673
Parsifal Prelude, The, at the Crystal Palace, 684
Patti, Adelina, at Swansea, 546
Patti, Adelina, Departure of, for America, 689
Philharmonic Society's seventieth season, 92
Piano players and playing of the near past, 612
Pianoforte playing during fifty years past (Phosphor), 812
Pinsuti's, Sig., new opera in Venice, 147
Pips from Punch, 71, 389
Plentiful supply, A, 814

POETRY :—

A confused dream (X.Y.Z.), 13. Adelina Patti, 320. A faded valentine (S. A. Stowe), 94. After the second Bayreuthiad (Wetstar), 543. A glee for men's voices (A. Gurney), 217. Alwina Valleria (R. M'Hardy), 733. Allegorical (Polkaw), 58. A May Dream (Polkaw), 544. Amphigouri (Sidney Spring), 254. An Acrostic, (C. Bridgman), 133. An Orson Valentine (X. T. R., junior), 117. Aoi (Polkaw), 56. April (Catherine Martyr), 199. A thought on skating (H. T. Arkcoll), 719. Bereaved (Wetstar), 735. Boatmen's evening song (Gwenny), 224. Bye-past time (W. Guernsey), 255. Change (X.T.R.), 646. Christmas (S. A. Stowe), 795. Dawn (Polkaw), 322. Day, Night (Polkaw), 72. Death's Four Visits (G. O. Vance), 201. En Erindring (Hiff), 90. Farewell (E. Josephs), 218. For aye (E. Josephs), 687. Good night, beloved, good night (S. A. Stowe), 62. Henry of Steier (G. S. Edwards), 610. Hope deferred (E. Josephs), 788. Hymn (Wetstar), 495. Impromptu (X.), 71; (Drinkwater Hard), 192. I have a ridiculous friend (Fun), 187. I'm but a simple country girl (D. A. Hume), 238. In a wood (Polkaw), 304. In manus tuas domine (Catherine Martyr), 479. I saw thy raven hair (W. Guernsey), 439. I slept and I was weary (W. Guernsey), 756. It's no use you courting me (Alice Mowbray), 203. I will say God bless you now (S. A. Stowe), 7. Jack's fancies (Wetstar), 575. Lines (Polkaw), 40. Little May (Justin F. M'Carthy), 742. Lost (Polkaw), 8. Mabel's answer (Wetstar), 239. Marie Roze (D. R. Williamson, M.A.), 749. Musical World Ballads—My Pub, "En Espagne" (by our special Cockney), 591. My bonnie wee Rose (Wetstar), 751. Old Pilot, The (Wetstar), 671. One summer evening (Ganelon), 168. Opening of St George's Hall, The (H. T. Braithwaite), 225. Our Gracious Queen (Wetstar), 655. Pardonnez-Moi, 227. Pauline Lucca, 336, 400. Peace all round (Wetstar), 229. Persecution of the Jews in Russia (Wetstar), 87. Russian persecution of the Jews (A. C. Swinburne), 53. Selene (Polkaw), 122. Serenade, 461. Sketch (Polkaw), 24. Song (Carleon), 515. Song (Thor-the-Thumbless), 9. Song, 561. Song of the Sunbeam (Wetstar), 623. Sonnet (Polkaw), 183. Spring is coming with the flowers, The (W. Guernsey), 564. Sunset (Emily Josephs), 406. The Harmony (Fun), 450. The Outlaw (Fun), 580. The voice of one we love (E. Josephs), 636. Three Stars (Emily Josephs), 391. Time (Emily Josephs), 151. Two Impromptus (Fleet Griffin, and Og of the Cubits), 92. The Border Raid (Wetstar), 23. The Gitana's Song (Carleon), 483. Thy will be done (E. Josephs), 174. To Guy of the Glaciers (Aliduke), 512. To J. J. (Wetstar), 121. To —— (Epps) 88. To Mdme Albani, 289. To Marie Roze (H. W. Longfellow), 287. To Marian from General Mite (Fun), 531. Visions (Wetstar), 783. We'll conquer or We'll die (Wetstar), 607. Welcome to the new year (S. A. Stowe), 819. What the waves said (Wetstar), 703. Where are they? (W. G.), 726. Words for music (H. J. Melville), 141. Ye heard yon birkie (Wetstar), 152. "Yesterday" (Rita), 645.

PROVINCIAL :—

Abergavenny, 483, 530. Anerley, 307. Banbury, 277, 676. Barnes, 723. Bedford, 818. Birkenhead, 199. Birmingham, 125, 214, 483, 547, 564, 659, 675, 676, 690, 770. Blackheath, 75, 819. Bradford, 596, Brighton, 91, 125, 242, 499, 629, 641, 707, 739, 770, 787. Bristol, 199, 609. Bushey, 91. Buxton, 515. Cambridge University Musical Society, 154, 739. Canterbury, 125, 787. Cardiff, 515. Cardigan, 519. Carmarthen, 818. Cheltenham, 125, 186, 434, 754, 799. Chester Musical Festival, 356. Cork, 723, 788, 799. Derby, 199. Devizes, 140. Dublin, 277. Dundee, 609, Ealing, 629. Eastbourne, 515, 577. Edinburgh, 46, 75, 139, 154, 199, 213, 707, 769, 818. Exeter, 770. Folkestone, 596. Glasgow, 676, 739, 818. Gloucester, 58. Hadlow, 596. Hawkhurst, 818. Hereford, 483, Inverness, 547. Ipswich, 26, 629. Leeds, 139, 371, 483, 676, 690, 770, 818. Leicester, 818. Liverpool, 186, 242, 403, 530, 547, 596, 690, 771, 787, 799. Llandrindod Wells, 530. Maidenhead, 307. Malvern, 596. Malvern Choral Festival, 468. Manchester, 26, 307, 468, 596, 609, 629, 771. Margate, 690. Middlesborough, 799. Middleton, 170. Newcastle-on-Tyne, 75, 139, 641, 659, 707, 754, 787. Northampton, 787. Norwich, 325, 483, 707, 769, 818. Oswestry, 596. Otley, 498. Oxford, 770. Paisley, 708. Penzance, 45, 242. Plaistow (Kent), 26. Plymouth, 45. Preston, 596, Reading, 291, 676, 819. Rickmansworth, 277. Rochester, 154, 259. Rugby, 799. Rye, 564. Salisbury, 739. Sandringham, 75. Scarborough, 818. Sheffield, 139, 564, 770, 787. Sherborne, 754. Southsea, 277, 325, 564, 799. St Leonards-on-Sea, 46. Stockton, 139. Stratford, 75, 799. Swansea, 498, 676. Taunton, 125, 307, 356, 770. Teignmouth, 515. Todmorden, 214. Truro, 659. Wigan, 259, 498. Windsor, 199. Wolverhampton, 125. Worcester, 546, 547, 641, 642, 707, 723, 769, 818. Wrexham, 690.

Raff, Joachim, 403, 415
Reid Festival, The, 148
Remarks on the past year, 85, 109, 116
Rémaury, Mdme Montigny, 323, 340, 515
Reviews (Pencerdd Gwffyn), 119
Richards, Brinley, on Welsh music, 216
Richter, Hans, at Darwin's, 367
Robert le Diable in Berlin, 414
Rossetti's pictures, 452
Rossini's, Signor, first subscription concert, 813
Royal Academy of Arts, 254
Royal Academy of Music, 427; (Letter from Prof. Macfarren), 464, 477
Royal Academy of Music Scholarships, 215, 236, 259, 414, 785, 804
Royal Albert Hall, 14; (Caerleon), 309
Royal College of Music, 40, 56, 88, 126, 149, 244, 295, 375, 427, 462, 469, 515, 678, 813
Royal English opera, 542
Roze, Mdme Marie, 87
Rubinstein's Paradise Lost, 369

Sacred Harmonic Library, The, 699
Sacred Harmonic Society, 733, 754
Sale of Autographs, 437
Savoy Theatre, 7
Schubert's Alfonso und Estrella, 255
Schubert's Seventh Symphony, 723
Schumann's Faust, 373
Scott and Sontag, 398
Scott, Clement, v. Mr Sampson, 202
Scraps from America, 252
Scraps from Paris, 10, 27, 86, 118, 172, 195, 243, 334, 413, 550, 622, 701, 765
Shakspere's benefits to the stage, 261
Sembrich, Mdme, at St. Petersburgh, 110
Simon Boccanegra in Vienna, 763, 785
Singers in former days, 12
Society of British Artists, 749
Soirée Musicale, Paris, 1820, 527
Some new publications (D. T.), 9, 25, 30
Sonnet (Turpin l'Archevêque), 152
Spontini, Mdlle Linas, 185
Sullivan, Arthur, bought a carpet, 653
Sullivan's, Arthur, "Egyptian Symphony," 196
Symphonic poem, 138

Ten original sonatas, 795
Teresa Titiens (M. Williams), 357
Testimonial to Mr E. R. Terry, 27; to Miss Louisa Ball, 110; to Mr Lazarus, 224; to Mr Arthur Sullivan, 270; to Sig. Arditi, 302; to Sig. Schira, 437; to Sig. N. Ferri, 454; to Mr Miller, bandmaster, 642
Theatre, The, 815
Theatres destroyed by fire, 6

THEATRES :—

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE :—
Pittore e Duca, 67, 83, 151; The Flying Dutchman, 87; Mignon, 87; Tannhäuser, 99; (D. T.) 154

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN :—
The Prospectus, 208, 247; Les Huguenots, 235; Lucia di Lammermoor, 251; Faust, 251; Guillaume Tell, 251; La Traviata, 271; Dinorah, 271; Aïda, 271 (Graphic), 290 (D. N.), 290; L'Etoile du Nord, 309; Il Trovatore, 319; Romeo e Giulietta, 335; Carmen, Faust, 335; La Sonnambula, Lohengrin, Il Seraglio, L'Africaine, 351;

Digitized by Google

Faust, Dinorah, Don Giovanni, I Puritani, 374, 390; Fra Diavolo, 405; Velleda, 411, 413; Mefistofele, 435
LYCEUM, Much Ado about Nothing at, 659; NOVELTY THEATRE, 781; SAVOY THEATRE, Iolanthe, 747
Theatrical dinner at Marlborough House, 117
The event (Punch), 401
To Bayreuth on horseback, 450
Topics of the day, The, 496
Tonic Sol-fa, 405
Toole, Mr, at Sandringham, 62
Toole's Theatre, 636
Trinity College, London, 700, 812
Two casts of the Tetralogy, 307
Two French tenors, 13, 54, 70

Vaudeville Theatre, 446
Vincenzo Bellini, 654
Vocalion, The, 326

WAIFS (every week)
Wagneriana, 509
Wagner's Ring in London, 151
Wagner's Parsifal, 465; (Lecture to the Tumbenheim Wagner Association), 465; (from The Theatre), 529, 549, 563; (Max Schönan), 500; Parsifal the King, &c., 516; (first performance of), 479, 480, 494, 496, 512, 544, 558
Wagner, Carlotta Patti, and Charles Heyman in Paris, 119
Wagner and Parsifal, 317
Wagner (from Kunkel's Musical Review), 419
Wagner and Wilhelmj, Meeting of, at Bayreuth, 509
Wagner and Gounod, 692
Wagner and Hoche, 643
Wagner and the comic papers of Vienna, 527
Wagner at Königsberg, 615
Wagner worship, 592
Wagner's Tristan und Isolde, 395, 415
Wall, Harry, 404
Ware Wong! 757
Weldon, Mrs, and the Birmingham festival, 803
"Weel may the keel row," 630
Willing's, Mr, choir, 630
Whitechapel Art Exhibition, 238
Who shall decide? 153
Wylde, Professor, on the Tonic Sol-fa system, 495

"Yes, I have dared to love thee," (Punch). 645

Zurich musical festival, 381

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 60.—No. 1. SATURDAY, JANUARY 7, 1882. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.—OPENING NIGHT, SATURDAY, January 14th.—RICHARD WAGNER'S Grand Opera, "LOHENGRIN."

MONDAY, January 16th, WAGNER'S "FLYING DUTCHMAN." TUESDAY, January 17th, VINCENT WALLACE'S "MARITANA." WEDNESDAY, January 18th, "LOHENGRIN." THURSDAY, January 19th "THE FLYING DUTCHMAN." FRIDAY, January 20th, AMBROISE THOMAS'S "MIGNON." SATURDAY, January 21st, BALFE'S "BOHEMIAN GIRL."

Doors open at 7.30. Opera at 8.

Subscription for the Season received by, and seats for any performance may be obtained from, the principal Librarians and the Box Office of the Theatre, from Ten till Five daily.

WEDNESDAY NEXT.

SPECIAL MORNING BALLAD CONCERT.

SPECIAL MORNING BALLAD CONCERT, ST JAMES'S HALL, WEDNESDAY Next, at Three o'clock, when the following Artists will appear: Miss Mary Davies, Mrs Hutchinson, Mdme Antoinette Sterling, Mdme Isabel Fassett; Mr Edward Lloyd, Mr Santley, and Signor Foli. The South London Choral Association, under the direction of Mr L. C. Venables. Conductor—Mr SIDNEY NAYLOR. A selection of the most popular Songs, &c., by Arthur Sullivan, will be given, including "The Lost Chord," "Let me dream again," "My dearest heart," "The Willow Song," "Will he come?" "Sweethearts," "Once again," "The distant shore," "A weary lot is thine, fair maid," "The Vicar's Song," "A life that lives for you," "O hush thee, my babie," "Joy to the victors," &c. The Second Part of the Concert will include all the most popular songs of the season. Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Area, 4s. and 2s.; Balcony, 3s.; Gallery and Orchestra, 1s.; Family and School Tickets, to admit Six to Stalls, £2; to be had at Austin's, St James's Hall; the usual Agents; and of Boosey & Co., 295, Regent Street.

MISS BESSIE WAUGH begs to announce her FIRST EVENING CONCERT, to take place on TUESDAY, January 17th, at STEINWAY HALL, Lower Seymour Street, Portman Square, to commence at Eight o'clock. Artists—Mdme Edith Wynne, Mrs Hutchinson, Miss Hope Glenn, Mr W. H. Cummings, Mr Bernard Lane, Mr Percy Blandford, Mr Lewis Thomas, Mr Thurley Beale, Mr Arthur Oswald. Solo Harp—Mr John Thomas (Harpist to Her Majesty the Queen). Solo Pianoforte—Miss Bessie Waugh. Conductors—Mr HENRY PARKER, Mr ALBERT LOWE, and Mr W. H. THOMAS. Stalls, 5s.; Numbered and Reserved Seats, 3s.; Area, 2s.; Balcony, 1s. Tickets to be obtained of Miss BESSIE WAUGH, 120, Great Portland Street, Portland Place, W.; and at Steinway Hall.

RESIDENT ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for the Parish Church of St Mary, Warwick. Salary £60 per annum. Instrument has forty stops and three manuals. Written application, with Testimonials, to be sent to the VICAR, on or before Thursday, January 19th, 1882.

TO THE MUSIC TRADE.

A GENTLEMAN of many years' experience as a London Music Publisher, and who is conversant with every detail of the Trade, is open to accept an ENGAGEMENT as GENERAL MANAGER, or otherwise, in Town or the Provinces. Address—"PUBLISHER," care of Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR FINLAY FINLAYSON will sing ASCHER'S Romance (by desire), "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" at the Eyre Arms, St John's Wood, January 16th.

"MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY."

MR JOHN CROSS will sing WILFORD MORGAN'S popular Song, "MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY," at the Holborn Town Hall, on Monday next, Jan. 9th.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR MANN DYSON will sing ASCHER'S popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU," at the Saturday Promenade Concerts, in the Montpellier Rotunda, Cheltenham, This Day.

NEW SONG BY J. L. HATTON.

THE GOOD SHIP ROVER. Words by JOHN STEWART. Music by J. L. HATTON. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Under the immediate patronage of
Her Most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN and the Royal Family.
President—The Right Hon. the Earl of DUDLEY.
Principal—Professor MACFARREN, Mus. D., Cantab.

The LENT TERM will commence on MONDAY, January 16th, 1882, and terminate on SATURDAY, April 22nd.

Candidates for admission (bringing music they can perform) may be examined at the Institution on Saturday, January 14th, at Eleven o'clock.

By order, JOHN GILL, Secretary.

Royal Academy of Music,
Tenterden Street, Hanover Square, W.

THE LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

ST GEORGE'S HALL, LANGHAM PLACE, and
No. 1A, HARRINGTON GARDENS, KENSINGTON,

Principal—Professor WYLDE, Mus.D., Cantab.
Examiners—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT and Signor BEVIGNANI.

Pianoforte—Dr Wylde, Mr J. F. Barnett, Herr Henseler, Herr Max Laistner, Mons. F. Logé, Herr Köhler, Herr Lehmeyer, Mons. Roche, Mr Trew, Mr G. F. Gear, Signor Mattei, Herr Ehrenfechter, Herr Friedericks. Singing—Signori Garcia, Lablache, Visetti, Sciuderi, G. Garcia, Raimo, Costa, Barnett, H. Gear, Romilli, Danieli, Dineff, and Signor Schira.

The Fee, Five Guineas per Term at St George's Hall, and Six Guineas at South Kensington, includes the whole course of instruction necessary for a complete musical education. The branch establishment, at No. 1a, Harrington Gardens, corner of 92, Gloucester Road, is solely for Amateurs.

The next Term commences on Wednesday, January 11th. Names of New Students received at St George's Hall, Monday, January 9th, and at Harrington Gardens, Tuesday, January 10th.

LONDON CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.—Principal—Mr LANSDOWNE COTTELL. New Branches—CONDUIT STREET, and MYDDELTON HALL. The Directors offer FREE TUITION for the higher encouragement of Solo, Oratorio, Operatic, and Choir Study (percentage upon introductions). Opera Rehearsals weekly. Candidates (Amateurs eligible) address the Secretary (enclosing addressed envelope, stating qualifications), 6, Tavistock Square, W.C.

THE EPIKLEIS, or Musical Domino (POOLEY'S PATENT), an Aid to Pianists for the Slow Shake and other Exercises—entirely a mental aid. Testimonials from the best Pianists and Teachers. By Post, 4s. Handbook, with Exercises and useful Hints on Playing, 1s.—JOHN POOLEY, 3, The Terrace, Clapham Park Road, London, S.W. Agents Wanted all over the world.

THE PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, AND KNIGHTAGE OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE for 1882. By JOSEPH FOSTER.

Early in January. In one or two volumes, royal 8vo, cloth gilt, price 42s. The Peerage or Baronetage separate, each 21s.

The THIRD EDITION, for 1882, containing all new Creations, has been considerably enlarged, and carefully corrected throughout. It is illustrated by upwards of 1,400 Engravings of Arms, &c., and contains fuller pedigrees than any other work.

Westminster: NICHOLS & SONS, 25, Parliament Street.
CHAPMAN & HALL, Limited, 11, Henrietta Street, W.C.

"'TIS ALL THAT I CAN SAY" ("I LOVE THEE, I LOVE THEE"), Song. Words by TOM HOOD. Music by HOPE TEMPLE. Sung with distinguished success by Mr Isidore de Lara. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"This song is already tolerably well known and proportionately admired, thanks, in a great measure, to Mr Isidore de Lara, to whom it is dedicated, for whom it was composed, and by whom it is sung. Miss Hope Temple has caught the spirit as well as the rhythm of Hood's half tender, half passionate lines, and the simple expressive melody to which she has set them cannot, once heard, be easily forgotten."—Pan.

SUNG BY MISS ALICE FAIRMAN.

"AT MORN I BESEECH THEE." Sacred Song, rapturously encored at Mdme Liebhart's Concert. Words by GABRIEL (12th Century), Music by MICHAEL BERGSON, is published, price 4s., by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

Just Published.

MIDNIGHT CHIMES.

(SONG.)

Words by MARIA X. HAYES.

Music by

MICHAEL BERGSON.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

THE OLD HOSTELRY.

Words by HARRY HAYNES.

Music by

W. REES-REES.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

ELISE.

POLKA MAZURKA FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By

W. SHARP.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

DANSE PYRRHIQUE.

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By

BROWNLOW BAKER.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Where may be obtained, Composed by Brownlow Baker, "Bourrée," in E flat, 4s.; "Memory" (Romance), 3s.

Just Published.

UNITY.

A NEW MASONIC SOLO AND QUARTET.

Dedicated by express permission to His Royal Highness PRINCE PATRICK, DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, and all true and accepted Masons.

By

RICHARD F. HARVEY,

Organist of Unity Lodge 238 (Dublin).

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

MENUET DE LULLI.

POUR LE PIANOFORTE.

Par BENTAYOUX.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—The "Menuet de Lulli" can also be played as a Duet for Violin and Violoncello.

Just Published.

MADEMOISELLE ET MONSIEUR.

POLKA, POUR PIANO.

Par BENTAYOUX.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—The Illustrated Title of "Mademoiselle et Monsieur" is by Alfred Concanen.

THE BICYCLE.

SONATA FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By STANISLAUS ELLIOT.

1. ALLEGRO.—"The First Attempt."
2. ANDANTE.—"Despair and Return."
3. SCHERZO.—"Second Attempt."
4. RONDO.—"Success at last."

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The wedding of humour to music is, perhaps, one of the signs of the age. 'The Bicycle Sonata' is an illustration. At first sight it might seem that no author of standing would attempt to write of our friends the riders. There can be no question of the boldness of the attempt; the delights and vicissitudes of 'wheeling' are interpreted with skill, dramatic power and a sense of humour which raise the work and rescue it from vulgarity."

LA POMPA DI FESTA. Grande Marche, pour Piano, à Quatre Mains. Par IGNACE GIBSONE. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"HER VOICE."

"HER VOICE." IGNACE GIBSONE's popular Song (poetry by "A Soldier's Daughter"), sung by Mdme ENRIQUEZ, is published, price 4s., by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

THE VOICE AND SINGING.

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

VOCAL EXERCISES COMPOSED BY FRANK MORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by the late FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

New Edition of "LE PETIT SOLFEGE."

LE PETIT SOLFEGE. Vingt Solfèges pour Voix de Mezzo-Soprano. Par JOS. CURCI. Price 6s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

"This work for educational purposes will be found of inestimable value, since it is one of the very few which confines itself to the cultivation of the middle of the voice; and whilst the phrases are admirably adapted to develop the breathing powers and volume of the voice, the melodies are so exquisitely harmonized that they must prove of great benefit in the improvement of the taste and ear of a student in singing."—Pictorial World.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE.

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdme Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklein, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis, of Basingstoke, says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

SONGS BY SUCHET CHAMPION.

"THE TEST." Price 4s.

"A GENTLE WORD." Price 4s.

"OLD ENGLAND, AWAKE." Price 4s

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

CLASSICAL GEMS FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

Transcribed by

HERMANN EISOLDT.

No. 1. "THE MERMAID'S SONG" (HAYDN) ... ... 3s.
2. "THE VIOLET" (MOZART)... ... ... 3s.
3. "KNOWEST THOU THE LAND?" (BEETHOVEN) ... ... 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"Any music which will help to make pupils sing on the pianoforte must be of service; and transcriptions of good songs, therefore—provided only that they do not degenerate into finger display—should be always welcomed, not only for the useful practice which they enforce, but because they make young instrumentalists acquainted with the standard vocal works. In this set of three we have Haydn's 'Mermaid's Song,' Mozart's 'Violet,' and Beethoven's 'Mignon's Song' ('Knowest thou the land?'). All these, of course, do not lend themselves equally well to 'arrangement' for an instrument; but Herr Eisoldt has acquitted himself of his task with much credit. It need scarcely be said that the pleasing accompaniment to the 'Mermaid's Song,' apart from the melodious character of the theme, will render this the most popular number of the three, but Mozart's beautiful vocal gem must also attract young players, and there is sufficient variety in Beethoven's well-known song to interest even those who hanker after 'pretty' music. Very little fingering is marked, except in the 'Mermaid's Song.'"—Musical Times.

"ON THE GOLDEN SANDS."

JUST PUBLISHED. "ON THE GOLDEN SANDS."

Words by MARY MARK-LEMON. Music by ISIDORE DE LARA. Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MUSIC IN 1881.

The closing year cannot be charged with neglecting the most valuable and most universal of all the arts. At no previous time has so much been done on behalf of music in this country, and, by consequence, never was its outlook brighter than now. The so-called unmusical nation is transforming itself before our eyes, or, rather, as those who read the Duke of Albany's recent speech at Manchester may prefer to put it, is returning to the love from which it was seduced by the business of making an empire whose strong places and fair lands encircle the globe. Saying this we do not so much refer to a multiplicity of concerts, and of public entertainments in which music takes a principal or accessory place, as to the genuine progress of musical education—progress testified in many ways by the records of 1881. Herein lies the best reason for satisfaction. It signifies comparatively little that concerts of a special character multiply in our great towns, and that the alien element amongst us has grown strong enough to conceive and carry through enterprises of its own. We do not undervalue these things, but it is much more to the purpose that musical academies are increasing, that some of them count their pupils by hundreds, that the art, in one form or another, is being taught to the mass of the people, and that the leaders of our social life, headed by the Royal family, are helping on the movement, with wise foresight and just discernment. Concerning all these agencies and forms of development much might be said. As to higher education in music, a need for some great central body, well-equipped and liberally endowed, is more and more perceived. Three Royal Princes journeyed to Manchester on a recent occasion for the purpose of making it known, and the force of their arguments could not be disputed, if only for the reason that, under present circumstances, no means of an adequate nature exist for the discovery and training of native musical genius. Nature, like nature's God, is no respecter of persons, and it often happens that her artistic gifts are bestowed upon those who lie under the frown of fortune. We want an institution able to remove this disability and to see that lack of money is no check upon the culture of talent. The question is how to create such an institution, and hereupon the whole project may wreck itself unless there be great mutual forbearance. Speaking at Manchester, the Dukes of Edinburgh and Albany and Prince Christian advocated a State-endowed National College of Music at South Kensington, built, as it would seem, upon the ruins of the National Training School established there some five years ago. On the other hand, the Royal Academy of Music appeals, with great show of reason and justice, to its charter, its sixty years' work, its present flourishing condition, and the fact that it is already—though in a miserably small measure—endowed by the State. Unless one or other of these rivals gives way, or both agree to a compromise, the project of a national conservatory cannot ripen, and we must depend for a solution of the question upon the increasing pressure of public opinion. In connection with the general culture of music no such difficulty exists as that just touched upon. The Royal Academy, by instituting local examinations resembling those carried on for some time by Trinity College, London, gave an immense stimulus to a movement already progressing vigorously, while in the same field of labour the Tonic Sol-fa organization, presided over by Mr Curwen, continues to work with increasing energy and success. No music-lover, no well-wisher to the social life of our people, can be sufficiently thankful to the Tonic Sol-fa teachers, who, armed with their simple and philosophical method of notation, are sowing musical knowledge and the means of musical enjoyment broadcast over city, town, and country-side. These agents of culture are everywhere, and everywhere doing good. There remains to add the important fact that the educational authorities at Whitehall have just seen the propriety of a step long advocated by their musical inspector, Mr Hullah, and others. Why the country should ever have paid school-managers a shilling a head for teaching children to sing by ear altogether passes the comprehension of an unofficial mind. True, moral lessons and the mysteries of the multiplication table may be conveyed in the most pleasant manner through the medium of song, but this has nothing to do with music. Mr Mundella's eyes were soon opened to the real facts of the case, and he spoke the simple truth when, addressing a deputation of the National Society, he remarked: "It is a scandal to pay a shilling a head for what is commonly called bawling." The Vice-President of the Council will, no doubt, be firm on this important matter. When the representatives of the National Union of Elementary Teachers complained to him the other day of the high standard exacted by the new Code he replied: "You must know how easily it is to be done, and that it is not beyond your achievement; and that you will do it when it becomes a necessity, and that singing by ear is not enough." We ask only that the educational authorities shall stick to the declaration, "singing by ear is not enough." From that will flow stupendous results, and already it has brought a universal and compulsory system of musical training within a "measurable distance." Objections will, of course, arise. Philistinism will open its wide mouth—perhaps after howling down some proposal to start a public library—and protest against spending the money of the tax-payer upon music. But Philistinism will protest vainly in the ears of the enlightened, who know that the money could not be used to better purpose, if our rough national manners are ever to be softened, if sources of enjoyment other than low and degrading ones are to be opened up, and if the masses are to be reached by the purest of all refining influences. This is the condition in which 1881 leaves us as regards musical education, and we must all acknowledge the reasons it gives for thankfulness and hope.

Looking back upon the year for the lessons it teaches as regards sacred music, we are again struck by the measure in which the religious branch of the art is flourishing in the Church. The great sacred festivals are more and more distinguished by performances of classical works, while the orchestra plays an increasingly important part therein. This is as it should be. We have always looked upon the Church as the proper "nursing mother" of art in all its religious forms, but especially of music, the invariable and essential accompaniment of her services. The oratorio and the sacred cantata, as well as the anthem, should derive nourishment from her bosom, while, as far as opportunity allows, all executive resources should be pressed into service. To these propositions few "nays" are now heard. An opposition, never strong, has dwindled to a mere shadow; and the time cannot be distant when the Church in England will once more rank as a school of composers able, let us hope, to emulate the glories of the past. It would be unfair in this connection to limit our remarks to the Establishment. The Non-conformists, we grant, have no cathedrals wherein to hold high festival with all the appliances of art, but many a time and oft during the past year the excellent organists and well-trained choirs connected with their chapels have done good service to the cause of sacred music. It may be said, indeed, that the oratorio is much more familiar in the conventicle than in the "steeple house"; but, without insisting upon comparisons, let us acknowledge the work accomplished by all the leading religious bodies, who together bid fair to match sacred music from the concert-room. Already some profess to see the influence of revived and enlarged church music in the condition of the societies which once flourished upon oratorio. They may be wrong, but in any case it is better for sacred art to have a champion in the Church than in organizations which necessarily regard it from the stand-point of profit and loss. The closing year has added little to the repertory of religious music in its higher forms. Mr Caldicott's Widow of Nain, produced at the Worcester Festival, stands almost alone as the contribution of English musicians, while Cherubini's Mass in C minor, brought out by the Sacred Harmonic Society, and Berlioz's L'Enfance du Christ, introduced by Mr Charles Hallé, represent the scanty gains from abroad. This is a meagre result; but there are various and potent reasons just now why the energies of composers and entrepreneurs should be turned into more exciting and popular, if less exalted, channels.

In the department of opera, recent events clearly show that we are going through a time of transition. Practically, Italian opera no longer exists in this country. The production of Verdi's Aïda made it flicker for a while, but the composer of Rigoletto is growing old, and has no successor, the genius of Boïto possessing little in common with that of his country. Our so-called Italian opera has for years been mainly supported by French works, and last season its chief hope rested upon the Il Demonio of the Russian, Rubinstein. Whither does all this tend? Does it point merely to the giving of opera in Italian under popular as distinct from exclusive and fashionable conditions; or may we expect the advent of lyric drama under new forms? To the first query we tender a decided negative, the experience of 1881 having shown that opera in Italian has a very scanty public outside the limits of "society," and apart from the famous artists whom "popular prices" cannot attract. On the other hand, we find one manager, and he a foreigner, having discernment and enterprise enough to play opera in English, with English-speaking artists. That manager succeeds. He is welcomed in all the great towns, and, when there is room for him in London, the metropolis welcomes him likewise. Putting the steady success of Mr Carl Rosa with the constant and growing favour shown to comic opera in the vernacular, it is not difficult to see ground for concluding that a national lyric stage is within reach. Apropos, the Royal Academy of Music has started an operatic class, and matters cannot go much farther before we shall see English musical drama established as a regular entertainment. It may not be all we could desire, but a great thing will be done for native art when the crass notion that a foreign language is essential has evaporated once and for all. Meanwhile, we are at liberty to contemplate the threatened invasion of German opera next season. As to this there is no cause for alarm, The mellifluous tongue of Italy will not be succeeded by the gutturals of the Teuton, nor the melodious phrases of Rossini and his compeers by the harsh progressions of the full-blown Wagner. They are bringing the latest wonders of the Bayreuth master to England for the same reason as that which led Mr Farini to introduce his "tattooed Greek nobleman." Both are curiosities to make a show of, and after a while the showmen will use the second half of a return ticket and take them back home.

Digitized by Google

In the history of orchestral music amongst us the record of 1881 will long be famous. Never was such a glut of orchestral concerts since Salamon brought hither the "father of symphony" and an opposition pitted Pleyel against him. From Vienna came Herr Hans Richter, from Paris, M. Charles Lamoureux, and from Manchester, Mr Charles Hallé; while the Philharmonic Society made a special spurt, and Mr Cowen, Mr Ganz, and Mr Manns went serenely on. We do not propose to discuss the particular doings and pretensions of these rival enterprises. They may not all have succeeded, but they all did good in some measure by increasing public knowledge of musical works, and supplying materials for the growth of an enlightened opinion. This is especially true of Herr Richter and M. Lamoureux, of whom one raised the standard of executive merit to a pitch seldom attained before, and the other added to work of like character and value the additional service of influencing public taste by means of the graceful genius of his country's art. It is more important, perhaps, to observe how the multiplication of concerts, such as those now referred to, indicates the growing pretensions of the orchestra, which, once a subordinate in the musical hierarchy, now bids fair to rank as chief, with an increasing disposition to elbow its former superiors out of place altogether. We will not stop to insist upon the fact that the musical significance of modern works for voices and instruments lies in the orchestra, as when, for example, Wagner's characters declaim, while the real singing is done on the other side of the "lamps." Enough if we remark the ever-widening scope given to the orchestra by contemporary composers, the nature of the subjects it is made to illustrate—subjects with which music was never before supposed to have any sympathy—and the unscrupulous manner in which the canons of art are violated for the sake of sensuous or purely nerve-disturbing effects. No doubt, these composers are wise in their generation, since artistic discernment and sympathies are rarely necessary for the appreciation of what they do; but in contemplating their action we must see that the place now held by the orchestra has not been wholly gained through legitimate means. Estimate those means as we may, they are, nevertheless, sufficient for the end, and the orchestra is likely to acquire yet greater prominence, especially if opportunities be multiplied for the glorification of devilry, as in Liszt's Mephisto Walzer; the depicting of rides to hell, as in Berlioz's Faust and Raff's Lenore; and the rattling of dead men's bones, as in Saint-Saëns's Danse Maccabre. Against the legitimate development of the orchestra none but the enemies of music will contend, and, happily, there are living composers who do not abuse its magnificent powers. At the head of these men stands Brahms; and amongst them our countryman, Mr F. H. Cowen, gained an honourable place when he produced his masterpiece, the "Scandinavian" Symphony. In this connection, note should be made of the favour increasingly shown to the works of Berlioz during the past season, and the discrimination with which, generally speaking, they were received. The French master's Romeo et Juliette is likely to remain on the active list, together with the "Symphony Fantastique," but we shall not be often called upon to hear Lelio or Harold en Italie. For the rest, Faust claims rank as the most popular of recently introduced works, and L'Enfance du Christ, we may rest assured, is only biding its time. Berlioz, with all his eccentricity, has been a welcome revelation, not only for many beauties and much true poetic feeling, but also because the public have been enabled to trace modern orchestral effects to their right source. The Frenchman was the father of the orchestra as we know it, and Richard Wagner plays second to his lead. "Why this is Brummagem Berlioz!" exclaimed the astonished Sterndale Bennett on first hearing the overture to Tannhäuser, and the criticism of surprise was not far from being the criticism of truth.

Within the limits of an article like this it is not possible to dwell upon the circumstances of chamber music, vocal unaccompanied music, and other like forms of the art, during 1881. Chamber music has happily flourished, supported by the well-established Popular Concerts, while purely vocal music, though not making a great public show, was perhaps never so generally cultivated as now. In these facile departments amateurs have full play, and they may safely be left to the care of the vast and growing mass who find in music a comfort and a delight for themselves as well as a means of doing good to those who would otherwise lie outside its beneficent influence.

Standing on the line dividing two years, the music-lover may turn from the past to the future with confidence, even though all he sees in prospective be not assuring. We have faith in the destiny of an art the onward career of which has never yet been seriously affected by vicissitudes arising from extravagances. At present it is surrounded by extravagances, but our belief is that their root strikes no deeper than did that of Jonah's gourd. Any blatant man preaching strange doctrines can get others to believe in him if he only preach loud enough. The musical world contains many blatant men, each with others in his train; but the art of music is not like the wall of Jerusalem which, said its enemies, if a fox run up it shall break down. Hence such people can do little permanent mischief, and whatever good they chance to advocate is sure to be appropriated by a true instinct, while the bad is rejected. The best proof of this appears when we look at the steady advance of musical culture along the lines which the wisdom of ages and the practice of great masters have sanctioned, and note that the conflicts and agitations attendant upon revolution are confined to a comparative handful of mystics and doctrinaires.—D. T.

—o—

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—On the 12th August, 1879, I had the honour to forward you a communication treating in detail on the urgency of a really substantial Conservatoire of Music being established in England. The Royal Speech at Manchester, on the 12th ultimo, most curiously coincides with all the essential elements of that contribution, inserted in your impression of the 16th August, 1879 (copy of which I enclose), and I am glad to see steps are now about to be taken for the establishment of the proposed conservatoire.

It would be needless to recapitulate my suggestions, for they have lately been sufficiently referred to; but, with your permission, I will just add a few remarks not altogether out of place at the present juncture. We must not for a moment think that once our conservatoire is a fait accompli we are on the fair way to style ourselves an independent musical nation; another most important matter will have to be studied simultaneously with the establishment of our national conservatoire, and that is the creation of national taste for real music. We have the repeated assertions of some of our eminent musicians, that we are a most musical nation, but I fear this hypothesis is hardly compatible with facts. I will, in as few words as possible, proceed to these facts beyond any polemic of argument.

Through the pecuniary influence of our aristocracy, who must be fashionable, we manage, and that not without difficulty, to support the opera for three months in a year in a city of nearly four millions of inhabitants, whilst Theatres out of number, and Music Halls are crammed every night during the whole year where operettas, musical burlesques, and songs of the day are provided. The taste of a nation cannot be judged by a few habitués alone, the taste of the masses should lead to that judgment. The sudden collapse of the Lyceum series of operas is hardly creditable to our great city. We must all admit the shortcomings in the performances, but are we so very refined that we can make no allowance?

I will now refer to the annual Promenade Concerts, they also have, with the growing taste for the grotesque and sensational, very much fallen off since the days of Mr Alfred Mellon, one of the most earnest musicians of that period, whose memory must ever be endeared to lovers of true music.

In conclusion, why boast of our native talent and tuition when we pay so heavily for foreign artists and send our own abroad to finish their musical education, while in all speeches on musical matters we invariably find that unfortunate element of self-sufficiency that will ever keep us back? In order to generate true musical taste in the masses (and that will take a long time), it will be necessary to elaborate a thorough scheme embracing every important item that tends to the fulfilment of this great desideratum.—I am, dear sir, yours faithfully,

O. L.

London, 2nd January, 1882.

Hans von Bülow, with his orchestra from Meiningen, assisted by Herr Brahms, gave the first of a series of concerts on Wednesday evening, Jan. 4, in the Singakademie, Berlin.

Digitized by Google

FORM OR DESIGN IN VOCAL MUSIC.

(Continued from page 836, Vol. 59.)

A song of very different expression, but, yet in a perfect sonata form, is the song, in D minor, of the "Queen of Night," in Mozart's Magic Flute. The first idea, which takes the place of the first subject, begins:

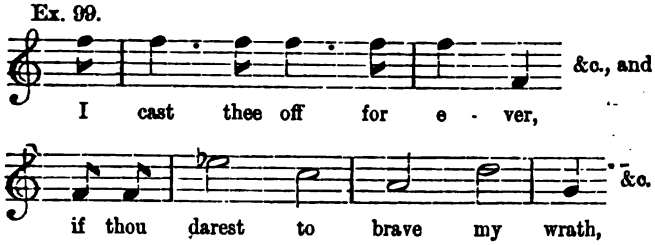
Ex. 97.

Shortly another idea beginning

Ex. 98.

is in F, instead of the usual dominant, and takes the place of second subject. This is carried on with increasing vehemence to its full close, in F, for the half-way rest. After a short interlude for orchestra, fresh ideas crowd in with ever-changing keys as in a second part:

Ex. 99.



From this it returns to D minor; one of the ideas of the first part is transposed:

Ex. 100.

but with this exception it is a recapitulation of key and sentiment, and not of musical idea. A transient modulation into the key of E flat, suggested first by the use of the Neapolitan 6th:

Ex. 101.

makes a short coda, which grows from the principal D minor of the third part, and strengthens the close of the whole:

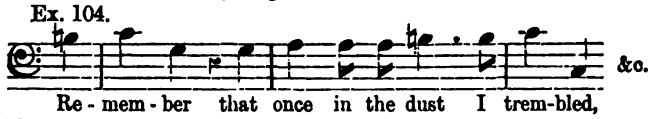
Ex. 102.

Yet another song of revenge cast in a sonata mould is Pizarro's song in Fidelio. Some points it has which differ from the most usual type. One of these is the absence of anything to represent a second part; a curtailment which it has in common with many instrumental movements, especially overtures and slow movements, where length of design is not desired. Another point of difference is the avoidance of the dominant key for the second subject, and the use not only of the major key of the mediant as the principal key of the section (as in the song just described, and in Mozart's sonata in A minor and Mendelssohn's Ruy Blas overture, pp. 15-16 of this work), but the preceding of this by a short portion in other keys (as in Beethoven's "Sonata Pathétique," in C minor). In the final part the transposition is made into the major form of the original tonic, instead of the minor, a treatment similar to that of the Ruy Blas overture. In Pizarro's song his exulting thoughts of the revenge which he believes now to be in his power, are given to the first subject:

Ex. 103.

His next thought, the recollection of the humiliation he once suffered at the hand of his victim, falls into the beginning of the second subject, with the introductory keys, and with an agitated accompaniment of triplet quavers:

Ex. 104.



Fresh exultation over the anguish his victim Florestan is now suffering, introduces a new musical idea, which is in the principal key of the second subject:

Ex. 105.

Digitized by Google

It does not require a great stretch of imagination to feel that these thoughts might go through Pizarro's mind once more, and with increased passion; thus recapitulation of the first part follows naturally, the ideas re-composed, new keys in the beginning of the second subject, and D major, in place of F, in a sort of triumphant climax of revengeful feeling. A slight modification of the words admits of a short extension, leading to an averted cadence and a coda in which the solo is accompanied sotto voce by the chorus.

OLIVERIA PRESCOTT.

(To be continued.)

—o—

THEATRES DESTROYED BY FIRE IN A CENTURY.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—The following list may, I think, interest your readers. It is taken from your contemporary, Il Trovatore, who says that, if not absolutely complete, it is more complete than any list previously published. In offering it you, I do not vouch for the correctness of some of the English and American names; any slight inaccuracy, however, in this respect, does not materially affect the general value of the list. Your obedient servant,

X.

1780 the Theatre Royal, Glasgow. 1781, the Délassements Comiques, Paris. 1788, Haymarket Theatre, London; and the Theatre at Saragozza. 1789, the Manchester Theatre. 1792, the Falmouth Theatre. 1794, Astley's Amphitheatre London. 1798, the Théâtre Lazari and Cirque Olympique, Paris. 1799, the Théâtre-Français, Paris. 1803, Astley's Amphitheatre, London (second time). 1805, Surrey Theatre, London. 1808, Covent Garden Theatre, London. 1809, Drury Lane Theatre, London. 1811, Richmond Theatre, U. S. 1816, San Carlo, Naples. 1818, the Théâtre-Français, Paris (second time). 1823, the Theatre Royal, Munich, and the Royal Theatre, London. 1826, the Cirque Olympique, Paris (second time). 1828, the Teatro Sutera, Turin. 1829, the Theatre Royal, Glasgow (second time). 1830, Astley's Amphitheatre, London (third time). 1831, the Lyceum, London. 1837, the Gaîté and the Théâtre Italien, Paris. 1838, the Théâtre du Vaudeville, Paris; and the Teatro San Fantino (now the Fenice), Venice. 1839, the Diorama, Paris. 1841, Astley's Amphitheatre, London (fourth time). 1843, the Grand Theatre, Berlin. 1845, the Theatre Royal, Glasgow (third time). 1846, the Theatre, Quebec, and the Garrick Theatre, London. 1847, the Grand Ducal Theatre, Baden. 1848, the Park Theatre, New York. 1849, the Olympic, London, and the Vaudeville-Theater, Cologne. 1851, Kroll's Theater, Berlin. 1853, Theatre Royal, Edinburgh. 1854, the Amphitheatre, Vercelli, and the Theatre, Philadelphia, U. S. 1855, the Variétés, Bordeaux; Covent Garden Theatre, London (second time); and the Cirque Renz, Berlin. 1856, the Pavilion Theatre, London. 1857, the Arena Acquedotti, Leghorn; the Boston Theatre; and the Theatre, San Francisco. 1858, the Theatre at Palma, Majorca; the Teatro, Santiago, Chili; and the Teatro Alfieri, Turin. 1859, the Imperial Circus, St Petersburgh; and the Stadttheater, Cologne. 1860, the new Theatre, Hamburgh. 1861, the Teatro Nuovo, Naples; and the Liceo, Barcelona. 1862, the Teatro Alibert, Rome; the Theatre, Alexandria, Egypt; and the new Theatre, Namur. 1863, the National, Boston, U.S.; the Plymouth Theatre; the Theatre Royal, Glasgow (fourth time); the Franz Joseph Theater; and the Treumann Theater (both in Vienna); the Teatro Ristori, Barcelona; the Teatro di Fabriano and the Nuovo Politeama, Florence. 1864, the Theatre, Chambéry, and the Theatre, Nijni-Nowogorod, Russia. 1865, the Surrey Theatre, London (second time); the Theatre Royal, Edinburgh (second time); the Stadttheater, Altona; the Sheffield Theatre; the Park Theatre, Stockholm; the Town Theatre, Angers; the Teatro Mondini, Verona; the Variétés, Bordeaux (second time); the Theatre Royal, Breslau; the Theatre at Kostroma and that at Kasan (both in Russia). 1866, the Théâtre des Nouveautés and the Belville Theatre, Paris; the Town Theatre, Brest; the Academy of Music, Cincinnati, U.S.; the Imperial Theatre, Constantinople; the Standard Theatre, London; the Grand Théâtre, New Orleans; Pike's Operahouse and the New Bowery, New York; the Metropolitan Theatre, St Louis, U.S.; the Louisville Theatre, U.S.; the Varieties, Nashville, U.S.; the Phœnix Theatre, St Petersburgh; the Theatre of Varieties, Philadelphia, U.S.; the Academy of Music, New York. 1867, the Town Theatre, Namur (third time); the Theatre of Varieties, Philadelphia, U.S.; Her Majesty's, London; the Grand Theatre, St Francisco; and the Grand-Théâtre, Lyons. 1868, the Teatro Nota, Turin; Butler's Theatre, New York; the Teatro Sociale, Treviso; the Orpheum, Vienna; the Belleville Theatre, Paris (second time); a Music Hall, London; the American Theatre, St Francisco; and the Stadttheater, Leopoli, Galicia. 1869, the Hippodrome, Paris; the Grand Theatre, Pernambuco; Rochester Theatre, New York; Milwaukee (U.S.) Theatre; Theatre Royal, Glasgow (fifth time); the Alcazar, Nice; Hull Theatre; Teatro de la Libertad, Malaga; the Stadttheater and another Theatre, Cologne; Teatro Bellini, Naples; Detroit (U.S.) Theatre; and the Theatre Royal, Dresden. 1870, Alexandra Theatre, Glasgow; Teatro de la Zarzuela, Madrid; the Theatre of St Jean d'Angely, France; the Varieties, Dantzic; Teatro del Casino, Luchon; the Stadttheater, Strassburg; a small theatre at Melbourne, Australia; and the Philharmonic Hall, Ramsgate. 1871, the Civic Theatre, Gratz; the Grand Theatre, Santiago, Chili; the Adelphi, Boston, U.S.; Griswold's Operahouse, Troy, U.S.; Stadttheater, Breslau; Theatre, Shanghai; the Grand Ducal Theatre, Darmstadt; the Stadttheater, Mayence; and four theatres at Chicago, U.S. We do not take into account the Théâtre-Lyrique, Théâtre de la Porte St Martin, and the Délassements Comiques, Paris, because they were set on fire by the Prussian Bombardment. 1872, the Operahouse, Washington, U.S.; the Stadttheater, Königsberg; the Theatre, Cronstadt; Operahouse, Sydney; Niblo's and another theatre, New York. 1873, Barnum's Hippodrome, New York; National Theatre, Odessa; Fifth Avenue Theatre, New York; Grand National Theatre, Washington, U.S.; the Theatre, Reichenhall; the Teatro Reale, Malta; Music Hall, Derby; Globe Theatre, Boston, U.S.; Alexandra Palace Theatre, Muswell Hill; the Alcazar, Marseilles; Ford's Theatre, Baltimore, U.S.; and the Grand Opera, Paris. 1874, Grand Ducal Theatre, Carlsruhe; Anfiteatro Babilla, Genoa; Eldorado, Avignon; Sommertheater, Cologne; National Theatre, Tiflis; Kasan Theatre, Russia; and Stadttheater, Augsburg. 1875, Theatre Royal, Edinburgh (third time); Theatre Royal, Leeds; Operahouse, Rutland, Vermont, U.S.; a London theatre; Sommertheater, Posen; Operahouse, Virginia, U.S.; Théâtre Bellecœur, Lyons; and the new Theatre, Düsseldorf. 1876, Theatre, St Brien; Theatre of Varieties, Newport; Royal Albert Music Hall, Leeds; Théâtre des Arts, Rouen: Teatro Mauroner, Trieste; Globe Concert Hall, Bristol; Theatre of Varieties, Louisville, U.S.; Central-Hallen Theater, Hamburgh; Theatre, Sauerbrun; Théâtre-Walter, Metz; Theatre, Lerida, Spain; and the Teatro del Circo, Madrid. 1877, Brooklyn Theatre, U.S. (about 300 persons lost their lives); Theatre Royal, Christiana; Cirque Cotrelly, Marseilles; National Theatre, Sacramento, Uruguay; Academy of Music, Indianopolis, U.S.; Teatro Romea, Murcia; Fox Theatre, Philadelphia, U.S.; Theatre, Galveston, Texas; Teatro Communale, Rapallo; Queen's Theatre, Edinburgh; Academy of Music and Dramatic Lyceum, St John's, New Brunswick; Rotunda, Liverpool; Politeama, Foggia; stage of the Victoria Music Hall, Liverpool; Teatro Alfieri, Genoa; Worcester Theatre; Variety Theatre, Pittsburg, U.S.; Wood's Theatre, Chicago; Théâtre des Variétés, Montpellier; Theatre of the Grand Exhibition, Cape of Good Hope. 1878, Théâtre des Fantaisies-Lyriques, Rouen; Teatro Recreos, Lisbon; Elephant and Castle Theatre, London; Hill's Hall, London; Theatre Royal, Oldham; Bombay Theatre; Plymouth Theatre; Theatre, Frankfort-on-the-Maine; Bradford Theatre; Théâtre Guignol, Lyons; Music Hall, Portsmouth; Star Theatre, Blackburn; Comedy Theatre, Bradford, Pennsylvania, U.S.; Theatre, Constantine. 1879, Teatro Principe Alfonso, Manilla; Theatre Royal, Glasgow (sixth time); Keith's Circus, Derby; Urania-Theater, Berlin; Teatro Carboni, Cagliari; Théâtre de la Perle, Algiers; Theatre, Toronto; Theatre, Besançon; 1880, Sherman's Operahouse, Texas; Theatre Royal, Rostock; Théâtre des Célestins, Lyons (second time); the Petit Théâtre, Lyons; Duke's Theatre, London; and the Academy of Music, Chicago, U.S. 1881, Theatre, Cronstadt (7 lives lost); Concert Hall, Worcester; Teatro Aliprando, Modena; Théâtre Municipal, Nice (about 100 persons perished); Theatre, Montpelier; Faleros Theatre, Athens; Vaudeville Theatre, Ramsgate; Teatro, Bajamonti, Spalato; Bijou Theatre, Fort Wajno, Indiana, U.S.; Belfast Theatre; Theatre of Varieties, St Petersburgh; Politeama Felsineo, Bologna; Circo, Madrid; Operahouse, Syracuse, U.S.; Teatro Principal, Cadiz; National Theatre, Prague (not opened before the 11th of June and burnt down in August); Park Theatre, London; Meyer's Circus, Hertford; and the Ringtheater, Vienna.

ROUEN.—Pezzani, manager of the theatres at Antwerp and Ghent, has been selected as director of the new Grand-Théâtre des Arts. He begins his season in the autumn. By a clause in his agreement with the Corporation buffo-opera is excluded.

MUNICH.—Theobald Boehm, Nestor of European flautists, died recently in this capital, where he was born in 1794. He was celebrated for improvements in the structure of the flute, for which instrument he wrote many concertos and other pieces. Boehm also devoted much attention to the pro-mechanical progress of the oboe and bassoon.

Digitized by Google

THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

After a short Christmas vacation, these concerts were resumed in St. James's Hall on Monday evening, when Miss Marie Krebs made her first appearance for the season. The accomplished pianist, who English amateurs have known from childhood, and who from childhood has found in England a second country, was as well received as ever. No lack of cordiality marked the applause that greeted her as she took her accustomed place. It was, on the contrary, a recognition animated by that true feeling which the British public never cease to cherish towards those who have ministered to their pleasure and obtained their favour. In response, Miss Krebs played Beethoven's Sonata in E flat major (Op. 29) with exceptional manipulative skill and artistic capacity. Connoisseurs do not need telling that the career of this pianist is essentially progressive. From the executant, and nothing more, known to us years ago, Miss Krebs has developed into a performer who deals with the spirit as well as with the letter of great works, while at no time has the measure of this expansion been greater than now. Year by year the young lady improves, and, as far as we can see, there is no reason why the movement should stop. To greater command of the keyboard she may never attain—indeed, that would be hardly possible; but, where the faculty of growth in the highest artistic qualities exists, there is always ample room for its exercise. Through the years that are to come, therefore, we may expect to find Miss Krebs more and more worthy of association with the masters to whose genius she has devoted her life. The lady's performance on Monday night was noteworthy for force, brilliance, and sureness, in union with a full measure of the finesse which her theme imperatively demanded. The Sonata in E flat is not one of the most recondite from Beethoven's pen, and its able analyst (Mr J. W. Davison) gives an apt idea of the work when he says, "If a comic opera, with some glimpses of romance, after the German fashion, might, dispensing with words, be represented through the medium of the piano, it could scarcely assume a more genial and dramatic shape than in this very original work." But, although the Sonata does not compel its interpreter to draw resources from the very depths of his artistic nature, it requires, like all its sisters, special qualities which the word finesse may be taken as roughly representing. Miss Krebs was equal to the call thus made upon her, lithely following the master through the rapid turnings and windings of a fancy bent upon being ingenious, and always conveying an impression of completeness and satisfaction. That impression the audience received, and marked their approval by a double recall and encore, responding to which Miss Krebs played one of the most brilliant examples of Scarlatti—a composer whom she seems to hold in high favour. The young lady afterwards took part with Messrs Hollander, Zerbini, Piatti, and White in Goetz's Quintet in C minor; and, with Signor Piatti, in Chopin's Introduction and Polonaise Brillante in C, for piano and violoncello. The opening quartet was Beethoven's, in A major (Op. 18), led by Herr Hollander—who made a very favourable impression—and, during the evening, Schubert's "Through the night" and Blumenthal's "Evening Song" were charmingly given by Mr Edward Lloyd.—D. T.

—o—

MUSIC IN LEEDS.

(From a Correspondent.)

A few months ago I bewailed in your columns the low state of music in Leeds, and expressed my belief that the great festivals were doing more harm than good locally, as it seemed pretty clear that the higher and more influential middle classes would scarcely be satisfied with anything short of festival excellence and attraction on ordinary occasions. Several writers have taken up the theme, and I am happy to add that, with decided improvement in trade, we have lately had corresponding improvement in music, and a goodly number of oratorio, orchestral, and chamber concerts, organ and pianoforte recitals, choral gatherings, &c., have been given with a somewhat unexpected and gratifying result. Just now we are overwhelmed with Messiah performances, scarcely an important town or village in this great county (especially in the West Riding) omitting to pay its annual tribute to the genius of the mighty Saxon, whose inspirations will continue to delight in spite of every caprice of fashion and every variety of style. Wagner isn't in it here, notwithstanding the success of Lohengrin when performed so admirably by Carl Rosa's company a few months ago at our truly Grand Theatre. Handel's rugged force and Herculean power (in chorus especially) appear to suit the vigorous Yorkshire character exactly; and the zest and real enjoyment which the West Riding choralists infuse into their singing of his chief oratorios show the iron grip with which the grand old master has secured their love and admiration.

For the benefit of the Leeds Charities, we had last Wednesday, in the Town Hall, a splendid gathering of singers, players, and people to hear "once again" the ever-green Messiah; and although the performance might have been better on the whole, still, there was very much to praise. More particularly was there cause for commendation and rejoicing in the successful first appearance of two excellent bass vocalists, Mr Sugden and Mr S. Webb—both Yorkshiremen, and both possessing fine voices, well trained up to the present time; so that we may expect to have the advantage, in these days of dearth, to hail not long hence two most competent and useful singers. Mr S. Webb has not only a voice of ample register, but equal power throughout; the style in which he declaimed "Why do the nations?" and the enthusiastic encore that followed, will not easily be forgotten by the amateurs of Leeds. Much more will be heard of Mr Webb, or I am greatly mistaken. At any rate, he has my best wishes, as one imbued with true musical instinct.

The Corporation Organ Concerts, at the Town Hall, continue to attract very large audiences. The following was one of Dr Spark's Christmas programmes:—

March, in B flat major (Silas); Song, "Nazareth," transcribed for the organ (Gounod); Selection from The Messiah (Handel); Barcarolle, in F major, from Fourth Pianoforte Concerto (Sterndale Bennett); Offertoire, on two old Christmas Carols—"Noël" and "Adeste Fideles" (Guilmant); Overture, Prometheus (Beethoven).

A well-varied and unexceptionably interesting selection, as few can reasonably deny.

I WILL SAY "GOD BLESS YOU" NOW! *

(The Reply.)

Dost thou long to hear me speaking
Words of tenderness and truth—
Words thou hast in vain been seeking
Since the dawn of early youth?
All my heart to thee is turning,
Sad regrets my spirit bow;
I to comfort thee am yearning,
I will say "God bless you" now!

Though 'tis true that I have wander'd
Over land and over sea,
On thine image I have ponder'd:
Thou hast dearer grown to me.
Memory has not ceased her mission,
I have proved as true as thou;
Bending lowly, in contrition,
I will say "God bless you" now!

Thou hast said that we must sever
Once again! It shall not be!
For, to be united ever
I have now return'd to thee.
As an earnest of our gladness
When we kneel in marriage vow,
And to chase thy tears of sadness
I will say "God bless you" now!

* Copyright. Sarah Ann Stowe.

Savoy Theatre.—At the special morning performance of Gilbert and Sullivan's æsthetic comic opera of Patience given at this theatre Dec. 28, the stage was for the first time lighted by electricity, and the experiment proved thoroughly successful. A very numerous audience had the privilege, after the performance, of being admitted behind the scenes to inspect the arrangements, while between the acts Mr D'Oyly Carte demonstrated, to the satisfaction of all, the greater safety secured from fire by the mode of illumination here adopted. Bringing a piece of inflammable muslin in communication with the electric light, and breaking the glass in which the the light was enclosed, it was demonstrated in the clearest manner that no danger existed in the contact, and with the flimsy material employed the lamp was quickly extinguished. The light is produced by heating a filament of carbon in a vacuum, and if a lamp breaks, the air rushes in and the light is instantly extinguished. The stage, similarly illuminated for the first time by electric lamps, was afterwards surveyed by many among the audience, and admiration of the ingenious arrangements, coupled with an acknowledgment of the manifest superiority of the new system, appeared to be unanimous. The scenic effects were in no degree impaired, and Patience was once more performed. A temporary variation of cast for the first time presented Mr Frank Thornton as Reginald Bunthorne, and Mr Arthur Law as Major Murgatroyd.

The Teatro Malibran, Venice, has been closed by the authorities, in order that certain structural alterations deemed necessary for the safety of the public may be effected.

Digitized by Google

ST JAMES'S HALL.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS,

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON, 1881-82.

DIRECTOR—MR S. ARTHUR CHAPPELL.

THE SEVENTEENTH CONCERT OF THE SEASON

WILL TAKE PLACE ON

MONDAY EVENING, JANUARY 9, 1882,

At Eight o'clock precisely.

Programme.

PART I.—Quintet, in E flat, for two violins, two violas, and violoncello (Mozart))—MM. Straus, L. Ries, Hollander, Zerbini, and Piatti; Air, "Lombrosa notte vien" (Hummel)—Mrs Hutchinson; Allegro, Allegretto, and Presto, for pianoforte alone (Scarlatti)—Mdlle Marie Krebs.

PART II.—Sonata, in G minor, Op. 5, No. 2, for pianoforte and violoncello (Beethoven)—Mdlle Marie Krebs and Signor Piatti; Song, "O sweet lute!" (Molique)—Mrs Hutchinson (viola obbligato, Herr Hollander); Quartet, in E flat, Op. 47, for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello (Schumann)—Mdlle Marie Krebs, MM. Straus, Hollander, and Piatti.

Accompanist—MR ZERBINI.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 7, 1882,

At Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

Quartet, in A minor, Op. 41, No. 1, for two violins, viola, and violoncello (Schumann)—MM. Straus, L. Ries, Hollander, and Piatti; Air, "Nasce al bosco" (Handel)—Mr Santley; Prelude and Fugue, in E minor (Bach), "The Lake" and "The Fountain" (Bennett), for pianoforte alone—Miss Agnes Zimmermann; Sonata, in D major, for violoncello, with pianoforte accompaniment (Locatelli)—Signor Piatti; Song, "Le Vallon" (Gounod)—Mr Santley; Trio, in C minor, Op. 1, No. 3, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (Beethoven)—Miss Agnes Zimmermann, MM. Straus and Piatti.

Accompanist—MR ZERBINI.

Lost.

This is the hour when she used to pass
Along the meadows of the dim wet grass,
And everything was still and grey and grand
Before the sun had risen o'er the land:
This is the very hour.—Now: the breath
That blows on me is bitter cold, like Death;
The trees are silent, motionless, and bare,
Like columns of some temple of Despair.

This is the place in heaven where she came,
And larks soared far faint-singing-out her name:
She gathered poppies here, and cornflowers,
And twined them with that glorious hair of hers.
—But now my eyes seek vainly for a trace
Of what was blossom, in a barren place.
No star is shining anywhere above,
Not one remotest star to comfort love.

Her face was like a music dear and strange
Made up of chords too utter-sweet to change:
Her look, a little anxious till she smiled,
Was soft with uncertain sadness like a child
Left all alone—My heart is aching now;
My brain is burning blind behind my brow;
I know not which of them is the heavier
For thinking what can have become of her.

Polkaw.

So Charles Hallé does not intend to discontinue his Pianoforte Recitals after all. Bravissimo!

THE pianist at to-day's Saturday Popular Concert is Agnes Zimmermann. Hoch! But why throw the Millstream out of window? Fye! Agnes you ought to be more valiant.

MDLLE SARAH BERNHARDT completed her series of performances at St Petersburgh on Tuesday evening and left on Wednesday afternoon for Warsaw, receiving at her hotel, previous to her departure, a number of handsome presents.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.'S, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). Advertisements not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 7, 1882.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR!

Hoch! Skaal!

Homeward Bound.

(Board ship—return to London.)

MANAGER (suddenly awakening from brown study).—Lyall!

C. LYALL (from cabin).—Here!

MANAGER.—Where?

C. LYALL.—Here.

MANAGER.—Hither then, quick. I want to tell you ——

Enter C. Lyall from Cabin.

C. LYALL.—What?

MANAGER.—I shall give them enough of Wagner till the others come; and then ———

C. LYALL.—What then?

MANAGER.—They shall have Benvenuto Cellini for an antidote.

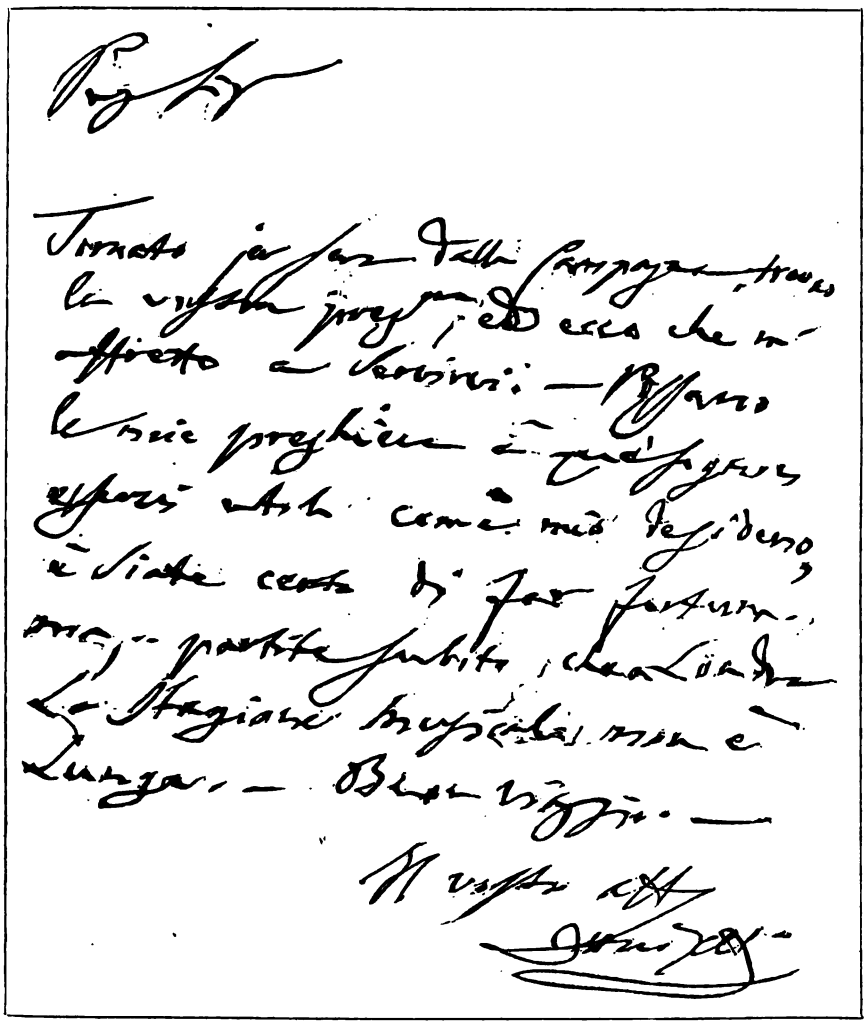
C. LYALL.—Benvenuto Hector!

Digitized by Google

PHOTOGRAPHIC FAC-SIMILE OF A LETTER FROM DONIZETTI.*



* Addressed to Professor J. P. Goldberg, of London.

Song.

I met thee in the Spring-time, Sweet,
Walking in a golden street
With daffodils about thy feet.

I sought for thee in Summer, Love;
And, lo, thou fleddest like a dove
Whom a vulture flies above.

I lost thee during Autumn, Mine;
Lost those large delicious eyne,
Uncertain as the blueish brine.

I wait for thee in Winter, Dear,
Vainly wishing thou wert near.
This is the burden of the year.

THOR-THE-THUMBLESS.

MR CHAPLIN HENRY gave a "smoking concert," on Wednesday evening, at the Bridge House Hotel, London Bridge. More than two hundred gentlemen patronised the undertaking and were evidently highly pleased with the music provided for the occasion.

SOME NEW PUBLICATIONS.

(From the "Daily Telegraph.")

Messrs. Duncan Davison & Co., have published Recollections of the Ukraine, by H. Eisoldt. Founded on national melodies of a very distinctive cast, this piece has sufficient character to command attention anywhere. If well played, even the confirmed talkers at musical parties would cease their clatter and listen. Mrs Mounsey Bartholomew's Prelude and Gigue are worthy of her clever and experienced pen. Especially has Mrs Bartholomew caught the spirit of the old-fashioned Gigue; and one almost looks instinctively through these pages for traces of hair-powder. In a day of revivals, amateur pianists will take note of the fact. A Danse Pyrrhique, by Brownlow Baker, does not conspicuously justify its name, but is by no means deficient in ability, or wanting in pleasing effect. It has the further advantage of being easy. The same composer's Bourrée, in E flat, closely resembles the piece just noticed, and to it the same remarks apply. A quaint and simple Menuet de Lulli, by Bentayoux, will please everybody, while many an amateur of culture will be glad to possess the Menuet from Schubert's Sonata for violin and piano (Op. 137), as arranged for pianoforte alone, by H. Eisoldt. This beautiful example of a charming master should on no account suffer neglect in its new form. The Mademoiselle et Monsieur polka, by Bentayoux, deserves notice on other grounds. It has a bright and lively theme.

Turning to the songs recently issued by this firm, we find "The Rainy Day," by G. B. Meniers—a setting of Longfellow's well-known words — somewhat ambitious in character, but are bound to add that the composer has hit his mark. No doubt it requires to be well sung and skilfully accompanied; but, this achieved, an effect is sure, and a musicianly effort meets with due reward. C. A. Ranken's "I watched, sweet babe, for thy waking," is marked by appropriate simplicity, and cannot fail to appeal to homely and domestic instincts. The same composer's "As shadows o'er the mountain" has more distinctive features, suggested by uncommon words, and well repays attention. In "The good ship Rover," (words by "Wetstar"), Mr J. L. Hatton comes to the front with a rattling nautical ditty, adapted to stir the blood and make every hearer think himself a hero. The tale it tells represents many an episode in our "rough island story," and the music is in Mr Hatton's best vein. A French serenade, "O ma si douce amie," by C. E. Stuart, will find many to admire its elegance and feeling, while the tender sentiment and unaffected musicianship of F. H. Cowen's "Farewell" are bound to command a large share of patronage.

MR FRANCIS HOWELL—composer of the oratorios Captivity, Land of Promise, the cantata, Song of the Months, and various other works—has, we hear, been seriously ill for the last fifteen months, and become totally blind. The leading inhabitants of Westerham, where he was organist for seven years, out of sympathy for his afflictions have started a testimonial fund, and Mr S. C. Grover, of the London and County Bank there, will gladly receive contributions in aid of same.

ALEXANDRA PALACE.—During the Christmas holidays a number of representations of Donizetti's opera, Elisir d'Amore, have been given. Madame Blanche Cole ably sustained the character of Adina. Mr Faulkner Leigh, as Nemorino, sang and acted remarkably well. The other parts were efficiently filled by Mr Durand, Mr Dwyer, &c. Conductor, Mr De Solla.

PISA.—After appearing at Florence as Mignon in Thomas's well-known opera, Nevada was engaged here for a series of performances, including Marguerite (Gounod's), and Amina. She will then sing at Nice, where Marie Marimon, also, is engaged.

Digitized by Google

In Earnest.

Let us be clearly understood. The word "Æstheticism" has been perverted from its original meaning; i. e. the perception of all that is good, pure, and beautiful in Nature and in Art, and, as now vulgarly applied, it has come in a slang sort of way to stand for an effeminate, invertebrate, sensuous, sentimentally-Christian, but thoroughly Pagan taste in literature and art, which delights in the idea of the resuscitation of the Great God Pan, in Swinburnian songs at their highest fever-pitch, in the mystic ravings of a Blake, the affectation of a Rosetti, the Charmides and revoltingly pan-theistic Rosa Mystica of Oscar Wilde, the Songs of Passion and Pain and other similar mock-hysterical imitations of the "Mighty Masters." Victor Hugo, Ouida, Swinburne, Burne-Jones, have much to answer for.

This Æstheticism, as it has gradually come to be known, is the reaction from Kingsley's Muscular Christianity. Exaggerated muscular Christianity, in its crusade against canting and whining religion, in its bold attempt to show that the practice of true religion was for men, as well as for women, trampled on the Christian Lily, emblem of perfect purity; and what Athleticism trod under foot, Æstheticism picked up, cherished, and then, taking the sign for the reality, paid to it the extravagant honours of a Pagan devotion; and the worship of the Lily was substituted for the veneration paid to the sacred character, in whose hand Christian Art had originally placed it. To this was added the worship of the Peacock Feather. It is this false Æstheticism which we have persistently attacked, and will persistently attack to the bitter end, and henceforward those who misunderstand us do so wilfully, and it may be maliciously.

WALTER MAYNARD TO THE FRONT.—The recent publications of Mr Lamborn Cock include six songs by Walter Maynard. Of these "Jack Ashore" is a right merry conceit, such as would make the grimmest Puritan relax the lines of his visage. Equally humorous, though in a different way, is "A Nineteenth Century Serenade" The gallants of our day are, it appears, not made insensible to cold and rain by the strength of their love. "The Golden Maid" amuses less, but "Comfort Bay" and "Neptune's Promise" are nautical songs of conspicuous merit, having in them the true hearty ring. "Love Described," the last of the set, strikes a more serious chord. On the whole these songs present a strong claim to the notice of amateurs seeking novelties for the coming season.

HANS VON BÜLOW AND G. F. HATTON AT BERLIN.—On Thursday evening, Hans von Bülow, with his Meiningen orchestra, gave his second Beethoven concert in the Singakademie, the St James's Hall of Berlin, which was again crowded with a brilliant audience, the Crown Prince and Princess being present. The master elicited the warmest applause by his wonderful performance, which competent critics say threw quite a new light on some passages of Beethoven. No inconsiderable share of the applause elicited by a concerto for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, with orchestral accompaniment, was accorded to the piano player, Mr G. F. Hatton (son of the well-known English lyric composer of the same name) who is a pupil of Hans von Bülow, and Court pianist to the Grand Duke of Meiningen. —Times Correspondence.

SCRAPS FROM PARIS.

Nobly desirous of doing something for the benefit of those who are suffering from the late terrible calamity in Vienna, Mdme Adam called a meeting of the representatives of the Press at her house. They responded with alacrity to the summons, and one result of the initiative taken by the kind-hearted and distinguished lady has been a performance at the Grand Opera. The programme was what the Americans entitle "mixed." The principal features in it were the fourth act from the Huguenots, with Mdme Krauss, MM. Villaret, Melchissédec, and Lorrain; Mdlle Mauri in La Korrigane; and Les Précieuses Ridicules, by a brilliant contingent from the Théâtre-Français. Mdme Adam, who occupied a box, and was the observed of all observers, must have been greatly delighted with the financial success of the performance.—M. Lamarche, a young tenor, and recent prizeman at the Conservatory, made his début as the hero of Robert le Diable.—M. Vaucorbeil is preparing to celebrate with due ceremony the centenary of Auber's birth, which will take place on the 29th inst. M. Léo Delibes has been requested to adapt to Auber's music some verses written for the occasion by M. Philippe Gille. The opera will be La Muette de Portici. Both Mdlle Mauri and Mdlle Sangalli will appear in the divertissement.—The stage rehearsals of M. Ambroise Thomas's Françoise de Rimini have begun. Reports having been circulated that the production of this work was, for various reasons, adjourned sine die, M. Vaucorbeil has officially denied that such is the case.—Mozart's immortal Don Juan has been revived with Mdme Krauss, Mdlle Griswold, Mdlle Dufranc, MM. Lassalle, Dereims, Gaspard, and Caron in the cast. The last-named artist, who played Mazetto, was recently prevented by indisposition from appearing, luckily for M. Lambert, who took the part at the shortest notice, and acquitted himself with an amount of ability for which neither manager nor public had probably given him credit.

Obliged to bring out a certain number of new works every year, M. Carvalho has produced Les Pantins, book by M. Montagne, music by M. Hue. The work was well sung and placed on the stage with liberality, but is not likely to remain long in the bills.—M. Faure and M. Ferdinand Poise, the composer, have been created Knights of the Legion of Honour.

BERLIN.—At the "Victoria," Anaha, "a humoristic, fantastic, and musical tale in a prologue and four tableaux, partially founded on an old Indian legend," libretto "by M. J. R.," music by Hermann Zumpe, is the most recent novelty. It was on the whole favourably received. The management had done everything which could be desired in the way of scenery and costumes, and the performers exerted themselves to the utmost.

MADRID.—Ernani has been produced at the Teatro Real, for the débuts of Espi and Cardinali. The lady as the heroine, Elvira, was applauded and re-called after her cavatina, but there was a general opinion expressed that her voice was not sufficiently powerful for so large a house. In the part of the hero, Cardinali gave satisfaction, as did Uetam in that of Don Silva.—In consequence of an obstinate affection of the throat, the tenor Aramburo (Mapleson again!) is compelled to take a short leave of absence.

MRS E. A. OSGOOD is to divide with Wagner Materna the leading business at the Musical Festivals in New York, Cincinnati, and Chicago. She will sing, also, at the New York and Brooklyn Philharmonic, at the concerts of the New York Chorus Society, of the Handel and Haydn Society in Boston, of the Cecilia in Philadelphia, and of the Oratorio Society in Baltimore. (And shall we not have our own Brünnhilde again among us at the Wagner Expositions?—Dr Blidge.)

MILAN (from a correspondent).—The season was inaugurated at the Scala on the 26th ult. with Rossini's Guillaume Tell, the leading singers being Andreef, Colonnese, Mierzwinski (Mr Gye's "tenore robusto" with the high C sharp), Aldighieri. The conductor was Faccio, whose return from Barcelona was right welcome. On the whole, however, the performance was not worthy of such a masterpiece.—The leading concert companies here have announced their intention of giving a concert for the benefit of the sufferers by the calamity at the Ring Theatre, Vienna. It is a fact not generally known that during the last five years there have been at least twenty outbreaks of fire on the stage of the Scala, Milan.—A Musical Museum, one of the results of the late International Exhibition, has been established in this city.—L. C. M.

[Who played Mathilde in Guillaume Tell? Was the part cut out? —Dr Blidge.]

Digitized by Google

ALBANI AS ELSA.

Madame Albani appeared on Tuesday night at Berlin as Elsa in Lohengrin, singing in German. The house was crowded to the ceiling, and extravagant prices were paid for seats. The Emperor and his Court were present, with all the leaders of Berlin society. Madame Albani achieved a triumph greater than any she has won here. After the first and second acts she was called three times, and when the curtain finally dropped the audience cheered enthusiastically.

The criticisms on Mdme Albani's Elsa are full of praise and admiration, but perhaps the general opinion of the English diva's artistic talents may be best conveyed by an incident which occurred on Tuesday evening at the end of the second act. Mdme Albani, after having been thrice re-called by an enthusiastic house, was sent for to the Royal box and most highly complimented by the Emperor and Empress, and the Crown Prince and Crown Princess upon her great success in so difficult a German part. They told her they had never seen her rôle in the opera so well sung or acted before, and it was a real triumph. The Emperor, too, on the spot appointed her "Court singer." Mdme Albani placed the proceeds of Tuesday's benefit performance at the disposal of the Emperor for charitable purposes. On Wednesday she was entertained at dinner at the Austrian Embassy by the Count and Countess Szechenyj, who have been constant attendants at the opera ever since Mdme Albani's arrival, and who are among her warmest admirers here.—"Times" correspondence.

—o—

LONDON BALLAD CONCERTS.

The Morning Ballad Concert given by Mr John Boosey last Saturday was, in every way, successful. The room was crowded, and the singers rendered all the favourite ballads con amore, especially Mr Santley, whose "Wreck of the Hesperus" (Hatton) and Mr F. Clay's "Gipsy John" (encored, and "Simon the Cellarer" substituted) were received with every demonstration of pleasure. Mr Maybrick and Mr Lloyd were called upon to repeat "The Little Hero" and "Good Company," Mr Lloyd responding with Balfe's "Come into the Garden, Maud," and Mdme Antoinette Sterling answered the "encore" awarded to "The Long Avenue" (Molloy) with Cowen's "Better Land." Mdme Patey gave a new song by Behrend, "The Old Barge"; and Miss Mary Davies, "The Angel's Call" (Max Silny), the obbligato violin part to which was well played by Mr Frank Arnold. The South London Choral Society also met with general approval by the effective way they sang Sterndale Bennett's beautiful part-song, "Come, live with me, and be my love," and Brinley Richards' "Up, quit thy bower." We must not omit to mention with approbation the characteristic style in which Mr Barrington Foote gave Pinsuti's new song, "The Night Watch." Mr Sidney Naylor, the excellent accompanist, was at his post, as usual, and assisted the singers by his musicianly tact and knowledge.

Mr John Boosey has announced another "Morning Ballad Concert" for Wednesday next, and an "Irish Ballad Concert" for Wednesday evening, Jan. 18.

THE COLLECTED COMPOSITIONS OF H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT.—We understand that Messrs Metzler & Co. of Great Marlborough Street are, by command of Her Majesty, preparing for publication a complete collection of the Musical Compositions, Sacred and Secular, of H.R.H. Prince Consort, the whole being produced under the able supervision of Mr W. G. Cusins, Her Majesty's "Master of Musicke." We believe we are violating no confidence in mentioning that the first idea was that this collection should be printed for private circulation only, but on its having been represented to Her Majesty that such a work, if publicly issued, would obviously command universal interest, both at home and abroad, a gracious assent to such publication was at once accorded, and the Collection will shortly be issued at the moderate price of One Guinea. This is scarcely the time at which to offer any criticism on the Prince Consort's musical abilities, but the high estimation in which Mendelssohn held His Royal Highness's musical attainments, combined with the great appreciation that is everywhere felt for his high personal qualities, naturally leads to the belief that this interesting memento of the departed Prince will necessarily become an object of eager acquisition to all who admire sterling worth and revere honesty of purpose.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(From our own Correspondent.)

What a time we are having in the way of music. Music here, music there, music everywhere. One cannot at present get leave to sleep in peace, for do not the "waits" perambulate the streets all night, playing (execrably) our national tunes? Alas! The head centre of attraction to lovers of high class music, however, of course continues in the doings of Mr Manns and his admirable orchestra of about sixty. They have had a remarkable busy week. The programme of the second orchestral concert embraced many fine things, amongst them being Mozart's overture to Idomeneo, Gavotte in G, and aria, "Zeffirette lusinghieri," from the same opera; Cowen's "Language of the Flowers" (suite de ballet); Vieuxtemps' Concerto in D minor, for violin and orchestra (M. Marsick); Schumann's First Symphony (B flat); and Weber's Invitation à la Valse. Mozart's Idomeneo excerpts, all charming, were quite new to Glasgow. "The Language of the Flowers," by the composer of the Scandinavian Symphony, contains many genuine melodies, delicately scored, and throughout bears clear indication of sound musicianship. It was played in perfection, and most of the numbers were thoroughly appreciated. Two of the movements (larghetto and scherzo) in Schumann's Symphony were exceptionally well rendered, the entire work, however, creating a marked impression. M. Marsick more than confirmed the favourable opinion of his talent pronounced on occasion of his début, his execution of Vieuxtemps' extremely difficult concerto displaying both fine taste and wonderful technique. Miss Carlotta Elliot was the singer on this occasion.

The Saturday Popular Concert opened with a spirited performance of Meyerbeer's Marche aux Flambeaux (No. 1, in B flat), "King of Bavaria," which was followed by a no less striking interpretation of Beethoven's magnificent overture, Coriolan. The Symphony was Mendelssohn's A major (the "Italian"), played as may be easily imagined, while Haydn's Serenade in C, for stringed instruments, was so warmly applauded that Mr Manns might have repeated it to general satisfaction. The other orchestral pieces were Weber's overture to Oberon: the "Bravura Waltz" of Mr Manns (first time); Pessard's Minuet des petits Violons du Capitaine Fracasse (first time)—unanimously encored; Selection from Félicien David's "ode-symphony," Le Dessert, which pleased greatly; and Schulhoff's "Bravura Galop," arranged for orchestra by Mr Manns himself. The solo vocalist was Miss Annie Marriott, who sang Verdi's "Ernani involami," and was encored in Molloy's "Great Grandmother."

On Monday (held here as New Year's day) the annual morning performance of The Messiah was given, the solo vocal parts assigned to Misses Annie Marriott and Hope Glenn, Messrs Joseph Maas and W. H. Burgon. The chorus as usual was that of the Glasgow Choral Union—Manns, as a matter of course, being conductor. Probably the feature of the day was Mr Maas's singing of the tenor part. He was in excellent voice, and gave forth his music like one who understood and felt it. Of this the "Passion music" was a special example; but it was with "Thou shalt dash them" that Mr Maas created the strongest impression. The choral singing was fairly good throughout; while the orchestra, under its experienced chief, left absolutely nothing to desire. In the evening a popular concert was given which was not well attended, nor, indeed, was it of sufficient interest to call for detailed notice.

The next Orchestral Concert (on Thursday) is to be a "Mendelssohn night." Mr Manns is responsible for the programme, which represents the composer's work and progress from 1821 to 1843. Miss Hope Glenn will be the singer, and the pianist, Mdlle Marie Krebs, who, besides other pieces, is to play the second concerto (in D minor).

Dr Leopold Damrosch opened the season of the New York Oratorio Society with Rubinstein's Tower of Babel, the solo singers being Campanini and Franz Remmertz.

VIENNA.—Thomas's Hamlet, after an interval of two years, has been revived at the Imperial Operahouse. Bianca Bianchi was much applauded as Ophelia, reckoned one of her best parts. Beck was Hamlet, and Gericke conducted. Among the promised "novelties" are Mefistofele, Tristan und Isolde, Françoise de Rimini (Thomas); and Don Carlos (Verdi). The Templer und Jüdin of Marschner will also be presented.

Digitized by Google

SINGERS IN FORMER DAYS.*

(Concluded from page 846, Vol. 59.)

Brigida Georgi Banti, a little street-singer, was heard one day in 1779, at Venice, by De Vismes, who was so enchanted that he engaged her for the Paris Opera. She earned immense sums, which she expended on good living, or rather drink. She died in want.

Elizabeth Weichsel, afterwards Mrs Billington, a vocalist di primo cartello, for whom Italy will always envy England, and whose life resembles a romance, asked and obtained, in 1780—she was then fifteen—a thousand pounds for a three months' season at Covent Garden, together with a benefit, making up a total which would now-a-days be equivalent to £2,400. Though very lavish with her money, especially in the cause of charity—such extravagance is sacred—she died doubly a millionaire, in 1818, on her magnificent estate at Naples.

***

Shall I speak of Signora Clementina Chiavacci, a pretty singer, whom Amelot, the Minister, loaded with presents, and who, like others, possessed, in 1780, a town mansion, equipages, and millions.

The life of Sophie Arnould is too well known to be told here, even in an abbreviated form; as to writing it in full, I should require a volume, so I will content myself with copying from the Mémoires Secrets a page which contains information concerning her official treatment.

"(2nd June, 1769.) The frequenters of the Opera have learnt with regret the retirement of Mdlle Arnoult" (sic). "It is customary to give great actors, besides 3,000 livres for bread and wine, 1,000 livres as an ordinary, and 1,000 more as an extraordinary gratification. The last has not been granted the actress in question, in consequence of her frequent absence as well as her continual indisposition and caprices, which prevented her from playing three-fourths of the year. It has been demonstrated to her that every one of her performances cost the Royal Academy of Music more than a hundred crowns. She considered herself above the ordinary rules and such calculations. She took offence and ended by leaving. Her loss, though very great, will be less felt on account of her frequent absence mentioned above, which almost habituated the great mass of the public to do without and forget her; but persons of taste, and those endowed with feeling hearts will long recollect her, and do not think her place can be filled for soul and intelligence."

The fact of her being refused a gratification of 1,000 livres did not prevent her from purchasing, in 1793, the house of the Penitents of Saint-François de Salles, at Luzarches, where she retired after being compelled to sell her other estate. The Opera was not always so scrupulous as to what the absence of its artists cost. Thus, in 1824, it engaged Mdme Demery-Gloslop for three years at the rate of 25,000 francs a year, and she sang once! Her performance cost, therefore, the treasury the trifle of 75,000 francs. As we see, the Government grant was well laid out in those days. I return to Sophie Arnould, to mention that, in 1793, she had still an income of 30,000 livres, but she lost it in two years. Having fallen into a terrible state of destitution, she would have died of starvation, had not Fouché, in 1798, granted her a pension of 24,000 livres, and a set of rooms in the Hôtel d'Angevilliers.

***

I said, when speaking of Mdlle Todi and Mdme Mara, that they received 240 livres every time they sang at the Sacred Concert; as I have made an excursion into modern times for Sophie Arnould and Mdme Demery-Gloslop, I will make another for the Sacred Concerts under Napoleon III. The following were the sums received by the artists for each concert: Mdme Patti, 3,000 francs; Mdme Carvalho, 1,000; Mdme Nilsson, 1,200; Mdlle Marie Roze, 500; M. Faure, 1,000; M. Capoul, 600; M. Troy, 500; M. Barré. 500; M. Colin, 500; and M. Bonnehée, 600. None of the above sums come up, as the reader can himself verify, to the salaries and gratifications paid the great artists of the eighteenth century of whom we have been speaking.

***

In the Year XI. of the Republic, the following was the scale of remuneration for every performance: Chéron and Lays received 100 livres each; Lainez, 40; and Lafont, 40; while the others were paid amounts varying from 20 to 12. Mdme Maillard, the Mdme Maillard whose speciality it was to figure as Liberty at the Republican festivals, had 60 livres; Mdmes Armand and Branchu, 40 each; and Mdme Chollet, 15. The following year the system of annual salaries was resumed; everyone in the first class was put down at 7,200 livres, plus 40 livres play-money; then there was another thorough change, the leading members of the company being raised to 10,000 livres, with 60 livres play-money. At this period, and since '93, they were reduced to their bare salaries. There were no more Court Concerts, no more Sacred Concerts, no more pensions from great noblemen, and no more profitable trips to foreign countries.

***

Once more I repeat it. I cannot open a book or a chronicle relating to the Opera without coming across the names of millionaires. Thus, for instance, there is Mdlle Carton, a simple member of the chorus, with 800 livres a year, celebrated for her princely connections. Then we have Mdlle La Guerra, who was on very friendly terms with the Duc de Bouillon, and who died when she was twenty-eight, after dissipating millions; and Mdlle Levasseur—Sophie Arnould's rival—and Mdlle Liancourt, who brought as dowry to her husband, the Baron d'Aubigny, the mansion now the Mairie of the IXth Arrondissement, Rue Drouot, and Mad. de Saint Huberty, Countess d'Entraigues, and Chevalière of the Royal Order of St Michel of France, who died so tragical a death. At Marseilles, in 1785, the people got up for her fêtes which would cause the Americans who organize triumphs in honour of Mad. Patti to die of envy. After a performance of Didon she was crowned on the stage.

***

If I had to narrate the intrigues of celebrated artists, what a number of pages I should require to recount those of a certain insupportable coxcomb—the most insupportable of all the coxcombs ever produced by all the lyrical theatres in the world. I have named the Sieur de Chassé, Lord of Le Ponceau, who was of good noblesse d'épée. He was once exceedingly rich, but his extravagance, seconded by Law's schemes, stripped him of his wealth, and one fine morning he awoke a ruined man. He left his company of Monsieur's Gardes-du-Corps and did exceedingly well. Women risked their lives for him, as is proved by the duel on his account between a Polish lady and a French lady, when the latter was wounded. The anecdote is too well known for me to tell it now in all its details. I will merely say that the puppy (faquin), as he was called by the Duc de Richelieu, received as salary, pension, gratification, &c., some 30,000 livres, without including the sumptuous presents made him from all quarters.

I will mention cursorily Chéron's 25,000 livres—I am speaking only of his remuneration at the Opera—and Giuseppa Grassini, who had a salary of 36,000 francs and a gratification of 15,000 at the Court of France, with £3,000 for six months in England; Mad. Mainvielle-Fodor, and, advancing farther into the nineteenth contury, Mad. Malibran, Mad. Pasta, Mad. Sontag, Mad. Damoreau, Mad. Alboni, and Mdlle Couvelli: did not all these marvellous singers count their remuneration by hundreds of thousands of francs?

Though not a rabid lover of art, Napoleon I. treated artists magnificently, like a sovereign who considers nothing too good or too expensive for his country. Mdme Catalani had the honour of singing twice at the Palace of Saint Cloud, and this is how the Emperor thanked her: Firstly, he ordered 5,000 francs to be given her; secondly, he settled an annuity of 1,200 francs on her; thirdly, he placed at her disposal the Opera, with the lighting and staff for two concerts, which brought her in 50,000 francs, the price of a place being fixed at 36, 18, 9, and 6 francs, as the case might be. After she had sung the second time at Saint Cloud, Napoleon went on the stage and said to her: "Where are you going?" "To London, Sire," was the reply. "Stop here and you shall have 100,000 francs and two months' holiday." Mdme Catalani curtsied her thanks and——started for England. The Imperial offer was a very fine one no doubt, but it paled before her terms in London. She had £10,000 a season and her extra engagements were worth as much more. Her remuneration some evenings was £2,000 and she had 200 guineas for singing "God save the King." In corroboration of what we have said respecting Napoleon I.'s generosity towards artists, we may mention one fact

* From Le Ménestrel.

Digitized by Google

which did honour to the Imperial impresario. Every time he went to the Opera, the leading performers received out of his privy purse a special gratification according to their respective merit, the maximum being 6,000 and the minimum 3,000 francs. So, when the words "by order" were inscribed at the head of the bill, not an artist was ill or suffering from cold. In addition to the salaries and presents paid by the Opera itself, the singers received extra pay for the performances at Court, while a further sum was regularly granted to those who belonged to the Chapel.

I think I must stop here, in the first place because we have entered the present period, and then because a journal is not a book, and I intend completing these notes in one which within six weeks will be published by Dentu. As I said on commencing this musico-financial review of our grand lyric artists in days gone by, I did not pretend to write their lives, so well, and so often narrated, from an anecdotal and artistic point of view; I simply wished, from given data, to prove with as little dryness as possible, that our ancestors were as generous as we are, and even more so, in what concerned their amusements; and, if it be a piece of folly to pay a fair singer three or four times as much as, let us say, a general of division, it is one which the dilettanti of all ages and all nations have committed and probably always will. This is a fact we have demonstrated irrefutably with that indisputable and brutal eloquence called arithmetic. But it must be plainly understood that it is not by way of adducing examples to be followed that we have given the history of the Past. While proving that our forefathers paid artists more liberally than we pay them, with all due deference to persons of a bashful disposition in our own time, we have shown that they honoured more than we do lyric artists who rose above the ordinary level. We have seen the greatest sovereigns and the most illustrious statesmen choosing as confidants, friends and ambassadors, singers of both sexes, without troubling themselves whether the person whom they entrusted with a difficult mission, to whom they confided an important secret, or whom they admitted to terms of intimacy in the morning, would be hissed at night. Now we assert that, in acting thus, they did well, when the artist combined honour with talent.

E. M. DE LYDEN.

A CONFUSED DREAM.

(After Concert and Supper at the Albion.)

No more, sir! No more, sir!
I beg to say no more!
No more, sirs? No more, sirs?
I ask'd for an encore.
Encore, sir? Encore, sir?
Be off and get to bed!
But, not to be done brown, this child
Went to his club instead. X. Y. Z.

MR AND MRS GERMAN REED'S ENTERTAINMENT.—Nothing could be devised more suitable for the season than the lively programme offered by the clever "entertainers"—the term here attains its fullest significance—who show at St George's Hall, Langham Place, how much amusement can be enjoyed when humour is linked with refinement, and vocal embellishments are associated with highly-developed musical accomplishments. Mr W. S. Gilbert's pleasant dramatic legend of Ages Ago, enlivened by the tuneful compositions of Mr Frederic Clay, retains too firm a hold of public favour on the occasion of its latest revival to be cast aside yet awhile, and the reproduction of Our Doll's House, by Messrs W. Yardley and Cotsford Dick, so happily described as "a fairy vision in one peep," will be heartily welcomed. Four years have elapsed since this amusing little trifle was first brought out, but it has lost nothing of its freshness of fancy or brightness of interpretation. Mr Corney Grain, whose Master Tommy at Home was so heartily relished a couple of years ago, now gives a supplementary musical sketch, entitled Master Tommy's Theatricals, in which juvenile efforts to attain premature histrionic distinction are most divertingly illustrated. Mr Corney Grain, by his mimetic powers, combining the comprehensive changes of his voice with his marvellous control over the piano, produces in his latest buffo scena some exceedingly ludicrous effects.—D. T.

TWO FRENCH TENORS.*

(Continued from page 790, Vol. 59.)

Roger was attracted with irresistible power to the Grand Opera. "Education and natural gifts," he said, complainingly, "marked me for the Grand, and I have fallen on a style that occupies only an insignificant place in literature and none in poetry." His burning desire to appear in great heroic parts rendered him manifestly unjust to French comic opera, the best specimens of which are after all the best things French music has given us. Nay, at this time he hardly estimated quite correctly what he himself had done, for, however admirable he may have been as Raoul, Edgar, and Fernand, his best and most original efforts were in musical comedy, in La Dame Blanche, Fra Diavolo, Jean de Paris, Le Domino Noir, &c. To the ill-will and petty jealousies of his colleagues he responded merely by redoubled industry and redoubled courage. "Refusing to be led astray by such scoffers, I will direct my looks on high and think only of the Future. Yes, a man must have ambition! Had Bonaparte been without ambition, we should have had no Napoleon."

Verdi's operas and the new Italian method of singing inspired him with undisguised mistrust. "The Italian school," he says, "never possessed any great stock of ideas, but it wrote well for, and spared, the voice. It now strives after, without attaining, profound significance and ruins the strongest lungs in a few years. I do not know what future there is in store for the Verdi school, but it is ridiculous to see how this music ventures on the highest ideas and undresses poetic creations such as Hernani and Macbeth to cloth them in the uniform of a negro general." Roger's opinion of the reciprocal influence of the latest Italian singers and composers is exceedingly just. "Why," he asks, "should the composer be less idle than the singer? If the latter can produce an effect more easily by his voice than by the thought, the maestro will save his thoughts and employ again and again a particular phrase which has a hundred times secured the singer's success." Roger was justly proud of never having sacrificed the poet to vocal effect. He himself, he tells us, worked slowly and perseveringly, always with confidence in the Future, though with continuous distrust of his own powers. His attention was unceasingly devoted to elocution and pantomime. It is characteristic of him that he once witnessed a drama from the prompter's box in order to study minutely and in close proximity the action of that admirable actor, Bouffé.

In the summer of 1847 Roger, having obtained permission from the Opéra-Comique, went to London for the Italian season. He now kept his diary with especial zeal and good results. In Hyde Park and Kensington Gardens, under the most magnificent trees and on the fairy-like sward, he saw assembled all that was rich and aristocratic. It struck him, notwithstanding, that the English amused themselves somewhat after the manner of cockchafers, with a straw sticking behind them. "These people must certainly have something about them which hampers them and which we do not see. Where? They do not tell us that." There was a warm patriotic feeling in Roger's breast; he loved France above aught else. Consequently he was seized with a fit of indescribable rage when, on going to a concert, he beheld Wellington seated close before him. "I heard the voice which commanded at Waterloo; I looked into the eyes which beheld the Emperor's back. The idea of my singing, of my delighting a man whom I should have liked to annihilate!" Still, he sincerely admired the English as a great nation, who knew how to honour their heroes, such as Wellington. France, on the contrary, says Roger mournfully, troubles herself neither about her Past nor her Future. He was not without prophetic instinct when he here exclaimed: "O, France, the worm which is gnawing at you and will prove your destruction is your esprit, or, to express it without disguise, your flippant chaff (blague). You believe in nothing, and ridicule everything."

In London Roger heard for the first time two of the most famous singers of the day—Viardot Garcia and Jenny Lind. Both failed to please him much at first. Mad. Viardot as Romeo produced on him the effect of a fair amateur who, after thoroughly studying her part, had noted down every gesture and every sigh. He calls her "a mask without life, a camelia condemned to dream of perfume." Still he readily admitted that her performance would have impressed him very differently had her voice and face equalled her artistic conscientiousness. Subsequently she gained over him the magical fascination from which no one brought into contact with her could free himself. He calls her "a specimen of knowledge without pedantry, and of the most perfect musical organization." He was somewhat disappointed the first time he heard Jenny Lind as Norma. "She sings 'Casta Diva' very well; the appeal to the moon harmonizes with her dreamy German nature; but the loving and betrayed mother's outburst of rage—No! a thousand times, no! It is pretty and prim. The voice, too—how worn!" But his admiration for her increased with every fresh part he heard her sing, and with his usual honourable frankness he confesses in his diary the error of his first impression. Thus he writes of her as Lucia: "One of the greatest artists it has been my good fortune to hear. Her voice, so fascinating in the high notes, is unfortunately weak in the middle register—but what intelligence, what power of imagination! She imitates no one, but incessantly twists and turns the dramatic situation about, as she does the musical phrase. There are bits of hers filled with the odours of woods and moss. This refreshes one amid all the talented individuals who can boast of only one good quality—neat execution. They possess the voice but not the inward fire." A tour he made in Scotland with Lumley's company delighted him chiefly on Jenny Lind's account. "What a piece of good fortune to be able to study so rare a woman! Feeling how true she is inwardly, she is full of confidence, and does great things without thinking of the critics. Her belief in herself constitutes her strength; she respects herself and lives like a saint. One might almost think she considers she is sent by God to render nations happy by the religion of art." On the 3rd November, 1848, he sang with her in La Fille du Régiment. In the last act, during the prelude to the final rondo, she whispered to him: "Listen carefully, Roger, for these will be the last notes you will ever hear from me on the stage." Utterly astounded, he could not believe that, in the midst of her triumphs, she really intended suddenly to retire. Yet so it was. "She has led the life of a saint. But people speak of a bishop who, despite this, has filled her head with scruples. May God judge him!"

* From the Neue freie Presse.

Digitized by Google

(To be continued.)

WAIFS.

Transcriptions of Pinsuti.—Among Mr Lamborn Cock's publications for the pianoforte are transcriptions of "Sowing and Reaping" and "The Unfinished Song," by Ciro Pinsuti. The adaptation is cleverly done, and a good effect secured without heavily taxing the performer's resources.

Mdme Albani has been created a Royal Prussian Chamber-Singer.

The subscription for twelve performances announced by the great Italian tragedian, Tomaso Salvini, in Alexandria, amounted to nearly £1,360.

The Messiah was to be performed at Cincinnati on the 28th ult., with Mdme Adelina Patti, Miss Anna Louise Cary, Messrs Toedt and W. Whitney, vocalists, and Mr Theodore Thomas conductor. "Absolute perfection is the only term applicable to Patti," says the Boston Musical Record.

Miss Francesca J. Ferrari is passing the vacation at Cowes (Isle of Wight), and is occupied daily in giving musical instruction to her Royal pupils at Osborne.

New York has founded a Tonic Sol-fa Association.

Petrella's Jone has been performed at the San Carlo, Lisbon.

Massenet is created knight of the Belgian Order of Leopold.

Emil Sauret, the violinist, has been playing in St Petersburgh.

There are above thirty Patience companies in the United States.

Gayarre, one of Mr Gye's tenors, has been singing at Palma, Majorca.

Desirée Artôt and her husband, Padilla, have taken up their residence for the winter in Berlin.

The Municipal Council of Trieste have rejected the proposal to impose a special tax on the theatres.

Lilli Lehmann, of the Royal Opera, Berlin, has been singing with great success at the Theatre Royal, Dresden.

The season at the Teatro Apollo, Madrid, was brought to a premature conclusion, after lasting only a fortnight.

Casanova De Cepeda, one of Mr Gye's most recent "dramatic sopranos," is engaged at the San Carlo, Lisbon.

Miss Blanche Roosevelt joins the Strakosch Opera Company in New Orleans, to sing on Mdme Gerster's off-nights.

A new musical society, "La Chambre Musicale," has been founded at Avignon, for the performance of classical works.

After the conclusion of the season at the Teatro Costanzi, Rome, there were four extra performances of La Traviata.

V. E. Nessler's Rattenfänger von Hameln is being translated into English, for performance (according to report) in London.

Arrigo Boïto's Mefistofele, recently performed by Mr Mapleson's company in New York, has not been very favourably received.

A series of seven pieces by Carl Reinecke, bearing the collective title of Sommertagsbilder, has been well received in Hamburgh and Leipsic.

At a concert given by the Ducal orchestra in Meiningen, Dr Hans von Bülow played the first Pianoforte Concerto in D minor, by Johannes Brahms.

The Musical Association of Gera, under the direction of W. Tschirch, recently gave a performance of H. Hofmann's Märchen von der Schönen Melusine.

Beethoven's birthday was celebrated at the Operahouse, Frankfort-on-the-Maine, by a performance of the Ninth Symphony, under the direction of Herr Dessoff.

Some of the members of the company at the Liceo, Barcelona, were, after the premature closing of that theatre, engaged for a short operatic season at Valladolid.

The San Carlo, Naples, is to be lighted with oil lamps and candles as well as with gas. The opening, announced for the 18th ult., had to be postponed in consequence of the illness of the leading bass, Jamet. (They must, indeed, be in a fix!—Dr Bridge.)

A Sunday school teacher gave a little girl a lesson to learn. At the next meeting of the school, she asked the little girl to repeat the lesson. As the child hesitated, the teacher recited it, and then said: "Now what is it?" "That is it," replied the child innocently, "just as you said it."

National Melodies.—Messrs Boosey & Co. have done good service not only to amateurs but to art by including in their series of volumes of national melodies the Songs of Italy, the Songs of Scandinavia, and the Songs of Eastern Europe. The first named contain fifty-four examples; the second, eighty-three; and the third, 100. We need not insist upon the importance of collections like these, whatever the country they represent; but we must say that no musical library is complete without the songs of Scandinavia and Eastern Europe. The editor, Mr J. A. Kappey, has taken great pains to secure melodies of a genuinely representative character, and at a time when attention is becoming more and more directed to folk-tunes as a source of new thematic ideas, the volumes in question are of peculiar value. They have our most hearty commendation, the Songs of Eastern Europe more especially, since the volume contains, besides examples of Liszt, Chopin, and other masters, a very valuable collection of Volkslieder from the hitherto untouched wealth of the Austrian provinces.—D. T.

Royal Albert Hall.—At the grand morning choral and orchestral concert, which is to be given to-day (Saturday), in the Albert Hall, in aid of the funds for the relief of the sufferers by the burning of the Ring Theatre in Vienna, the chorus and orchestra will number 1,000, the former composed of singers from the Philharmonic and other vocal bodies, and the latter consisting of eminent musicians, the services of all being volunteered. This is likewise the case with all the solo vocalists, instrumentalists, and conductors, of whom the chief is Herr Hans Richter. We are asked to state that half of the net proceeds of the concert will be given, by special desire of his Excellency, Count Karolyi, the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador, to an English charity.

Advertisements.

SOUVENIRS DES OPERAS DE

RICHARD WAGNER.

Trois Pièces pour le Pianoforte.

No. 1. "LE VAISSEAU FANTÔME," Mosaïque (Op. 203) ... ... 4s.
,, 2. "RIENZI," Morceau de Salon (Op. 204) ... ... 4s.
,, 3. "TANNHÄUSER," Bouquet Mélodique (Op. 205) ... ... 4s.

Also

"LOHENGRIN." Paraphrase (Op. 202) ... ... 4s.

Composée par

G. GARIBOLDI.

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

The only Gold Medal for Wind Instruments with Keys, in the Paris Universal Exhibition of 1878, was unanimously awarded by the Jury to Messrs P. Goumas & Co., for the fine quality of tone and finish of their Instruments.

SPECIAL MANUFACTORY OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS
FOR
CLARIONETS, FLUTES, PICCOLOS, OBOES, BASSOONS, COR ANGLAIS, FLAGEOLETS, AND SAXOPHONES.

P. GOUMAS & Co.
(Late Buffet, Crampon & Co.),
Established 1830.

Nine Prize Medals have been awarded to Goumas & Co. for general excellence and improvements in the Manufacture of Wind Instruments with Keys.
Manufacturers of all kinds of Wood Wind Instruments for Military Bands, Musical Instrument Makers to Her Majesty's Army and Navy, and to the Armies, Navies, and Conservatoires of France, Belgium, Italy, Russia, Austria, Spain, America, &c.
Manufactory at Mantes (Seine et Oise), France. Paris: Passage du Grand Cerf, 18 et 20.
LONDON: 39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET.
Price Lists sent free on application.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,
MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF
ALL KINDS OF MUSIC STRINGS FOR ALL MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Sole Depôt for Signor Andrea Ruffini's (of Naples) Celebrated Strings for Soloists, manufactured by him on a system invented by Mons. J. B. Vuillaume, of Paris.
Sole Agent for Charles Albert's (of Philadelphia, U.S.) new Patent Improved Chin Rest; also his improved String Gauge.
39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, W.
Price Lists free on application.
All kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner on powerful machines made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S). A Delicious Beverage and Tonic.
Made from Port Wine, Liebig's Extract of Meat, and Extract of Malt; Nutritious, Strengthening, Stimulating, Flesh-forming, Health Restoring, suitable for the Robust in Health as well as the Invalid. Strongly recommended by the Medical Faculty. An Immediate Benefit is experienced after taking it; the Frame is Invigorated, and no ill effects follow.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
TESTIMONIALS.

Sir,—A short time since I was induced by the novelty of the title to send for a bottle of your Liebig's Extract of Meat and Malt Wine. I was perfectly acquainted with the value of the Extractum Carnis, and not quite a stranger to the invigorating and fortifying properties of malt wine, and therefore felt a natural curiosity to test them when combined. Men who work hard, as I do, not muscular hard work, but that which is quite as exhausting, viz., brain work, very often experience the need of, and have sometimes an almost irresistible craving for, a "pick me up;" and very often the panacea for a time for lassitude, and that state of mind which renders work irksome, are alcoholic stimulants, the use of which must sooner or later end disastrously. The man who can furnish a remedy sure, certain, and harmless, for the lassitude which follows constant brain work is a benefactor of his species, and may be said to have added many years of usefulness to the lives of useful men. Your extract, if a success, and when more generally known, will be used by all toilers of the mind.—Yours faithfully,
O. D. RAY.
Thorpe Hamlet, Norwich, February 23rd, 1881.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Queen's Crescent, Haverstock Hill, London, March 5th, 1881.

Dear Sir,—Some time since, being greatly fatigued with over-work and long hours at business, my health (being naturally delicate) became very indifferent. I lost all energy, strength, and appetite, and was so weak as to be scarcely able to walk. As you are aware, I sent for a dozen of your Extract of Meat and Malt Wine, which, in a few days, pulled me up marvellously. Three or four glasses of it daily have quite altered and restored me to better health than ever, "without the assistance of a doctor." I am now giving it to my son, twelve years of age, whom we have always thought consumptive, and from a puny, ailing boy, he seems to be fast growing into a strong, healthy lad. Enclosed you have cheque. Please send me two dozen of the "Extract." With thanks for your prompt attention to my last, I am, Sir, yours truly,
GEORGE A. TYLER.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Granspound, February 25th, 1881.

Mrs Coulson thanks Mr Coleman for the book and stamps, and she has no doubt but that "the tonic" is a good one. Mrs C. encloses twelve stamps for basket.
Mr Coleman.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Vicarage, Kingsbridge, Devon, January 25th, 1881.

Dear Sir,—We are ten miles from the railway, and have been snowed up, consequently the wine has only just arrived. I enclose a cheque for £2 11s. 6d. I like the wine, and will recommend it.—Yours faithfully,
A. N. KINGSTON.
Mr Coleman, Norwich.

Pints, 30s. per dozen: Quarts, 50s. per dozen. Carriage paid to any Railway Station in Great Britain. Sample Bottle sent for 33 stamps.
P. O. Orders to be made payable to
COLEMAN & CO., MUSPOLE STREET, NORWICH.
Cheques crossed "London and Provincial Bank."
Sold by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the United Kingdom, in Bottles, 1s. 9d. and 2s. 6d. each. Ask for Coleman's Liebig's Extract of Meat and Malt Wine, and "See that you get it."

CHAPPELL'S
VOCAL LIBRARY
OF
PART-SONGS, &c.

		Composed or Arranged by	Price
1.	Dulce Domum. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
2.	Down among the Dead Men. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
3.	The Girl I've left behind me. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
4.	British Grenadiers. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
5.	Long live England's Future Queen. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
6.	My task is ended (Song and Chorus). A.T.B.B.	Balfe	4d.
7.	Thus spake one Summer's Day. S.A.T.B.	Abt	2d.
8.	Soldiers' Chorus. T.T.B.B.	Gounod	4d.
9.	The Kermesse (Scene from Faust)	,,	6d.
10.	Up, quit thy bower. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	4d.
11.	Maidens, never go a-wooing. S.S.T.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
12.	Fagot Binders' Chorus	Gounod	4d.
13.	Sylvan Hours (for Six Female Voices)	Joseph Robinson	6d.
14.	The Gipsy Chorus	Balfe	4d.
15.	Ave Maria	Arcadelt	1d.
16.	Hark! the Herald Angels sing. S.A.T.B.	Mendelssohn	1d.
17.	England Yet (Solo and Chorus). S.A.T.B.	Jules Benedict	2d.
18.	The Shepherd's Sabbath Day. S.A.T.B.	J. L. Hatton	2d.
19.	Thoughts of Childhood. S.A.T.B.	Henry Smart	2d.
20.	Spring's Return. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
21.	An old Church Song. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
22.	Sabbath Bells. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
23.	Serenade. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
24.	Cold Autumn Wind. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
25.	Orpheus with his Lute. S.S.S.	Bennett Gilbert	2d.
26.	Lullaby. S.A.A.	,,	1d.
27.	This is my own, my native land. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
28.	March of the Men of Harlech. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	3d.
29.	God save the Queen. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
30.	Rule, Britannia. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
31.	The Retreat. T.T.B.B.	L. de Rille	2d.
32.	Lo! morn is breaking. S.S.S.	Cherubini	2d.
33.	We are Spirits. S.S.S.	G. A. Macfarren	4d.
34.	Market Chorus (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	Auber	4d.
35.	The Prayer (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
36.	The Water Sprites. S.A.T.B.	Kücken	2d.
37.	Eve's glittering Star. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
38.	When first the Primrose. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
39.	O Dewdrop bright. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
40.	Sanctus from the Messe Solennelle. S.A.T.B.	Rossini	4d.
41.	Nine Kyries, Ancient and Modern	,,	2d.
42.	Sun of my soul. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	2d.
43.	'Twas fancy, and the ocean's spray. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
44.	A Prayer for those at Sea. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
45.	O Thou whose power (Prayer from Mose in Egitto)	Rossini	2d.
46.	The Guard on the Rhine. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
47.	The German Fatherland. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
48.	The Lord is my Shepherd (Quartet). S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
49.	Te Deum in F	Jackson	2d.
50.	Te Deum in F	Nares	2d.
51.	Charity (La Carita). S.S.S.	Rossini	4d.
52.	Cordelia. A.T.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	4d.
53.	I know. S.A.T.B.	Walter Hay	2d.
54.	Chorus of Handmaidens (from Friulolin)	A. Randegger	4d.
55.	The Offertory Sentences	Edmund Rogers	4d.
56.	The Red Cross Knight	Dr. Callcott	2d.
57.	The Chough and the Crow	Sir H. R. Bishop	3d.
58.	The "Carnovale"	Rossini	2d.
59.	Softly falls the moonlight	Edmund Rogers	4d.
60.	Air by Himmel	Henry Leslie	2d.
61.	Offertory Sentences	E. Sauerbrey	4d.
62.	The Resurrection	C. Villiers Stanford	6d.
63.	Our Boys (new Patriotic Song) H. J. Byron and W. M. Lutz		4d.
64.	The Men of Wales	Brinley Richards	2d.
65.	Dame Durden	...	1d.
66.	A little Farm well tilled	Hook	1d.
67.	There was a simple maiden	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
68.	Fair Hebe	,,	1d.
69.	Once I loved a maiden fair	,,	1d.
70.	The jovial man of Kent	,,	1d.
71.	The oak and the ash	,,	1d.
72.	Heart of Oak	,,	1d.
73.	Come to the sunset tree	W. A. Philpott	4d.
74.	May. S.A.T.B.	W. F. Banks	2d.
75.	Pure, lovely innocence (Il Roi de Lahore—Chorus for Female Voices)	G. Massenet	4d.
76.	A Love Idyl. S.A.T.B.	E. R. Terry	2d.
77.	Hail to the Woods! A.T.T.B.	J. Yarwood	2d.
78.	Near the town of Taunton Dean	Thomas J. Dudeney	2d.
79.	Our merry boys at sea	J. Yarwood	2d.
80.	The Shepherd's Farewell. S.A.T.B.	Berlioz	3d.
81.	When the sun sets o'er the mountains (Il Demonio)	A. Rubinstein	3d.
82.	Hymn of Nature	Beethoven	3d.
83.	Michaelmas Day (Humorous Part Songs, No. 1)	Walter Maynard	4d.
84.	Sporting Notes (Humorous Part Songs, No. 2)	Walter Maynard	4d.
85.	Austrian National Hymn	Haydn	4d.

LONDON:
CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND STREET, W.
City Branch—14 & 15, Poultry.

NEW VOLUMES of the ROYAL SERIES.

THE SONGS OF SCANDINAVIA
AND NORTHERN EUROPE.
EIGHTY-THREE NATIONAL AND POPULAR SONGS.

THE SONGS OF EASTERN EUROPE.
ONE HUNDRED VOLKSLIEDER OF AUSTRIA, HUNGARY, BOHEMIA, SERVIA, &c.

WITH ENGLISH WORDS BY CLARA KAPPEY.

EDITED BY

J. A. KAPPEY.

Price 2s. 6d. each, paper covers; 4s. cloth.

"Messrs Boosey & Co. have done good service not only to amateurs but to art, by including in their series of volumes of national melodies 'The Songs of Scandinavia' and 'The Songs of Eastern Europe.' The first-named contains eighty-three examples; and the second, a hundred. We need not insist upon the importance of collections like these, whatever the country they represent; but we must say that no musical library is complete without the songs of Scandinavia and Eastern Europe. The editor, Mr J. A. Kappey, has taken great pains to secure melodies of a genuinely representative character, and at a time when attention is becoming more and more directed to folk-tunes as a source of new thematic ideas, the volumes in question are of peculiar value. They have our most hearty commendation, the 'Songs of Eastern Europe' more especially, since the volume contains, besides examples of Liszt, Chopin, and other masters, a very valuable collection of volkslieder from the hitherto untouched wealth of the Austrian provinces."—Daily Telegraph.

"Messrs Boosey & Co. have published two additional volumes of their National Songs, which appear likely to be the most interesting of the series. We know little of the rich repertory of Scandinavian Songs, and Mr and Miss Kappey, the editors of these books, are to be thanked for introducing some of the best specimens to public notice. Five of the Russian songs are so old as to be traditional; and in the series are to be found a beautiful Cossack lullaby by one Bachmetieff, a gipsy song by Lvoff, and several songs by Warlamoff. These and the Polish songs (all of which are traditional) may be considered among the most interesting items of a small but acceptable collection. Two ancient Lithuanian songs, a couple of Finnish, and four ancient Norwegian melodies, will likewise be found in the book. The majority of the Swedish songs are by Lindblad, that prolific song writer, who died in 1864. Tradition says that the old melody of 'The Beggar Boy' was once sung in the days when she was a poor child by the distinguished artist now known as Mdme Christine Nilsson. Included in the Danish songs is the traditional 'Dannebrog,' the music of which is attributed to one 'Bay.' It would be interesting to inquire the foundation for this statement, as the origin of the Danish National Anthem was generally understood to be unknown. The tradition of the 'Dannebrog Banner,' which, in 1719, fell down from heaven to bring victory to the Danish arms, is duly recorded in a footnote. Most of the Dutch songs given date back to the sixteenth century; and there are besides three songs by W. F. G. Nicolai, and one Flemish song. Altogether eighty-three of the national songs of northern Europe are included in this valuable and interesting book. In future editions a larger preface or more footnotes, giving further particulars of the old songs whose history is known, would be welcome. Equally interesting are the songs of Eastern Europe, recently issued by Messrs Boosey, and likewise edited by Mr and Miss Kappey. Among the thirty-four Austrian songs, the large majority are volkslieder, and they include Tyrolean, Styrian, and Polish songs, two of them by Chopin. These are followed by twenty-three characteristic specimens of Hungarian songs, giving a very fair idea of the peculiarities of Hungarian music, and comprising modern songs by Liszt, and some traditional songs of Bosnia, Moravia, and Dalmatia. The first of the Bohemian songs is the 'War-song of the Hussites,' once, it is believed, the national song of the country. A few specimens of Servian, Swiss, Greek, and even Turkish melodies. The last are very peculiar; and the peculiar intervals common to this and other Eastern music are claimed by some to have been handed down direct from the music of the ancient Hebrews."—Figaro.

LONDON: BOOSEY & CO., 295, REGENT STREET.

Digitized by Google

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, & SPALDING, at 3 and 5, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, January 7, 1882.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 60.—No. 2. SATURDAY, JANUARY 14, 1882. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.—OPENING NIGHT, SATURDAY, January 14th.—RICHARD WAGNER'S Grand Opera, "LOHENGRIN."

MONDAY, January 16th, WAGNER'S "FLYING DUTCHMAN." TUESDAY, January 17th, VINCENT WALLACE'S "MARITANA." WEDNESDAY, January 18th, "LOHENGRIN." THURSDAY, January 19th "THE FLYING DUTCHMAN." FRIDAY, January 20th, AMBROISE THOMAS'S "MIGNON." SATURDAY, January 21st, BALFE'S "BOHEMIAN GIRL."

Doors open at 7.30. Opera at 8.

Subscription for the Season received by, and seats for any performance may be obtained from, the principal Librarians and the Box Office of the Theatre, from Ten till Five daily.

MR BARTON M'GUCKIN will make his first appearance at Her Majesty's Theatre on FRIDAY, January 20th, as Wilhelm Meister, in Ambroise Thomas's Opera, Mignon.

WEDNESDAY NEXT.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERT.—IRISH SONGS and BALLADS.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERT, ST JAMES'S HALL, WEDNESDAY Next, at Eight o'clock.—IRISH SONGS and BALLADS. Artists: Miss Mary Davies, Miss Ambler, Mrs Hutchinson, Mdme Antoinette Sterling, and Mdme Isabel Fassett; Mr Edward Lloyd, Signor Foli, and Mr Santley. The South London Choral Association, under the direction of Mr L. C. Venables. Conductor—Mr SIDNEY NAYLOR. The programme will contain the following popular Irish Songs and Ballads: "Terence's Farewell," "Come back to Erin," "Barney O'Hea," "Rich and Rare," "Shule Agra," "Meeting of the Waters," "Kathleen Mavourneen," "Kitty of Coleraine," "Oft in the stilly night," "Molly Bawn," "The Harp that once," "The Minstrel Boy," "The Cruiskeen Lawn," "The Legacy;" also Part Songs, "The wine-cup is circling," "The Last Rose of Summer," "Believe me if all," "St Patrick's Day," "A place in thy memory," "The Fairest Flower." The following old Irish Melodies, arranged by C. Villiers Stanford, with new words by Alfred P. Graves, will be sung for the first time in public on Wednesday next: "A Sailor Lad," by Miss Mary Davies; "'Twas pretty to be in Ballinderry," by Mrs Hutchinson; "The Foggy Dew," by Mr Edward Lloyd; and "Father O'Flinn," by Mr Santley. Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Family Tickets, to admit Six to Stalls, £2; Area, 4s. and 2s.; Balcony, 3s.; Gallery and Orchestra, 1s.; to be had at Austin's, St James's Hall; the usual Agents; and of Boosey & Co., 295, Regent Street.

MR SIMS REEVES has the honour to announce that his FIRST CONCERT of Operatic, National, and Miscellaneous Music will take place, at ST JAMES'S HALL, on TUESDAY Evening, January 24th, at Eight o'clock. Mdme Marie Roze, Miss Spenser Jones, Mr Herbert Reeves, Mr Barrington Foote, Mr H. Pyatt, and Mr Sims Reeves. The Anemoic Union (under the direction of Mr Lazarus). Flute—Mr H. Nicholson. Oboe—Mr Malsch. Clarionet—Mr Lazarus. Horn—Mr T. E. Mann. Bassoon—Mr Wotton. Pianoforte—Mr S. Naylor. Messrs Broadwood's grand pianofortes will be used on this occasion. Programmes now ready. Tickets, 10s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 3s.; Admission, One Shilling; at Austin's Office, St James's Hall; and usual Agents.

WALTER MACFARREN'S ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS,

ST JAMES'S HALL, SATURDAY Evenings, Feb. 25th, March 11th, March 25th. Violin—Herr Joachim and M. Sainton. Violoncello—Signor Piatti. Pianoforte—Miss Cantello, Miss Margaret Gyde, and Mr Charlton T. Speer. Vocalists—Miss Mary Davies, Miss Clara Samuell, and Mdme Patey; Mr Edward Lloyd and Mr Santley. Band of 70 performers. Principal Violin—M. Sainton. Conductor—Mr WALTER MACFARREN. Subscription, One Guinea. Sofa Stalls, 7s. 6d., or three for One Guinea; Balcony, 3s.; Admission One Shilling. Tickets of Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., 84, New Bond Street; of the usual Agents; and at Austin's Ticket Office, St James's Hall.

MUSICAL UNION. Thirty-eighth Season. M. JULES LASSERRE, Director and Proprietor, begs to inform his Friends and Subscribers that the SEVEN MATINÉES will Commence at ST JAMES'S HALL, on TUESDAY, April 18, to be continued on the following dates (Tuesdays): May 9, 16, June 6, 13, 20, 27. Subscription for the Series, £2 2s., received by Mr Austin, St James's Hall; Messrs Chappell, 50, New Bond Street; or Mons. LASSERRE, No. 124, New Bond Street.

MISS BESSIE WAUGH begs to announce her FIRST EVENING CONCERT, to take place on TUESDAY, January 17th, at STEINWAY HALL, Lower Seymour Street, Portman Square, to commence at Eight o'clock. Artists—Mdme Edith Wynne, Mrs Hutchinson, Miss Hope Glenn, Mr W. H. Cummings, Mr Bernard Lane, Mr Percy Blandford, Mr Lewis Thomas, Mr Thurley Beale, Mr Arthur Oswald. Solo Harp—Mr John Thomas (Harpist to Her Majesty the Queen). Solo Pianoforte—Miss Bessie Waugh. Conductors—Mr HENRY PARKER, Mr ALBERT LOWE, and Mr W. H. THOMAS. Stalls, 5s.; Numbered and Reserved Seats, 3s.; Area, 2s.; Balcony, 1s. Tickets to be obtained of Miss BESSIE WAUGH, 120, Great Portland Street, Portland Place, W.; and at Steinway Hall.

MDME ISABELLE POWERS has the honour to announce to her patrons that her FIRST GRAND EVENING CONCERT will take place on WEDNESDAY, the 8th of February, at the ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC, Tenterden Street, at Eight o'clock, assisted by the following Artists: Miss Manuel, Mdlle Pelletier, Miss Hipwell, Signor Ricci, Mr Walsham, Mr Elwin, Mr Yorke. Harp—Miss Andine. Piano—Signor Li Calsi and his pupil, Miss Aghlanta, Mr Sumpter, pupil of Herr Lehmeyer. Violin—Miss Brousil and Mr G. Brousil. Conductors—Mr S. LEHMEYER and Mr F. TRICKETT, F.C.O. Tickets of Mdme ISABELLE POWERS, 2, Hetley Road, Shepherd's Bush.

LONDON CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.—Principal—Mr LANSDOWNE COTTELL.

The Directors invite attention to the recent extension and increased accommodation, residential and otherwise.

Fees from Two Guineas per term, residential from Fourteen Guineas, inclusive of the Musical and Fine Art Lectures.

Free Tuition is awarded to talented young artists unable to pay fees by fund granted for this purpose.

Prospectus (one stamp), Hon. Sec., 6, Tavistock Square.

SCHUBERT SOCIETY. President—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT. Founder and Director—Herr SCHUBERTH. Sixteenth Season, 1882. The FIRST SOIRÉE MUSICALE of the present Season will take place on THURSDAY next, Jan. 19th. Full prospectus on application to H. G. HOPPER, Hon. Sec., 244, Regent Street, W.

HERR SCHUBERTH begs to announce that he RETURNS to London on the 15th January next. All communications to be addressed—244, Regent Street, W.

Paris, 10th January, 1882.

RESIDENT ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for the Parish Church of St Mary, Warwick. Salary £60 per annum. Instrument has forty stops and three manuals. Written application, with Testimonials, to be sent to the VICAR, on or before Thursday, January 19th, 1882.

AN Experienced ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for All Saints' Church, Newton-Stewart, N.B. Two-manual organ, small voluntary surpliced choir. Salary £50. Apply to Rev. C. G. DONTON, All Saints Parsonage, Newton-Stewart, N.B.

TO THE MUSIC TRADE.

A GENTLEMAN of many years' experience as a London Music Publisher, and who is conversant with every detail of the Trade, is open to accept an ENGAGEMENT as GENERAL MANAGER, or otherwise, in Town or the Provinces. Address—"PUBLISHER," care of Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

REDUCED PRICE, 2s. 6d.

THE EPIKLEIS, or Musical Domino (POOLEY'S PATENT), an Aid to Pianists for the Slow Shake and other Exercises—entirely a mental aid. Testimonials from the best Pianists and Teachers. By Post, 2s. 6d. Handbook, with Exercises and useful Hints on Playing, 1s.—JOHN POOLEY, 3, The Terrace, Clapham Park Road, London, S.W. Agents Wanted all over the world.

THE PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, AND KNIGHTAGE OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE for 1882. By JOSEPH FOSTER.

Early in January. In one or two volumes, royal 8vo, cloth gilt, price 42s. The Peerage or Baronetage separate, each 21s.

The THIRD EDITION, for 1882, containing all new Creations, has been considerably enlarged, and carefully corrected throughout. It is illustrated by upwards of 1,400 Engravings of Arms, &c., and contains fuller pedigrees than any other work.

Westminster: NICHOLS & SONS, 25, Parliament Street.
CHAPMAN & HALL, Limited, 11, Henrietta Street, W.C.

Digitized by Google

ONE of the most Renowned CONCERT-ORCHESTRAS of Germany (Director, JULIUS LAUBE) is open to ENGAGEMENTS for the Summer Season, from May next, or earlier. For particulars apply to Musik-director JULIUS LAUBE, Wintergarten des Central-Hôtel, Berlin.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" ARRANGED AS A QUARTET.

MR EDWYN FRITH'S CONCERT PARTY will sing ASCHER'S popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" arranged as a Quartet, at Winchester, January 16th; Leominster, 20th; Birmingham, 21st; and at all other Engagements throughout the Season.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR FINLAY FINLAYSON will sing ASCHER'S Romance (by desire), "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" at the Eyre Arms, St John's Wood, January 16th.

NEW SONG BY J. L. HATTON.

THE GOOD SHIP ROVER. Words by JOHN STEWART. Music by J. L. HATTON. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

SUNG BY MISS ALICE FAIRMAN.

"AT MORN I BESEECH THEE." Sacred Song, rapturously encored at Mdme Liebhart's Concert, Words by GABRIEL (12th Century), Music by MICHAEL BERGSON, is published, price 4s., by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

LA POMPA DI FESTA. Grande Marche, pour Piano, à Quatre Mains. Par IGNACE GIBSONE. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"HER VOICE."

"HER VOICE." IGNACE GIBSONE'S popular Song (poetry by "A Soldier's Daughter"), sung by Mdme ENRIQUEZ, is published, price 4s., by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

MIDNIGHT CHIMES.

(SONG.)

Words by MARIA X. HAYES.

Music by

MICHAEL BERGSON.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

THE OLD HOSTELRY.

Words by HARRY HAYNES.

Music by

W. REES-REES.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

ELISE.

POLKA MAZURKA FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By

W. SHARP.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

DANSE PYRRHIQUE.

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By

BROWNLOW BAKER.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Where may be obtained, Composed by Brownlow Baker, "Bourrée," in E flat, 4s.; "Memory" (Romance), 3s.

Just Published.

UNITY.

A NEW MASONIC SOLO AND QUARTET.

Dedicated by express permission to His Royal Highness PRINCE PATRICK, DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, and all true and accepted Masons.

By

RICHARD F. HARVEY,

Organist of Unity Lodge 238 (Dublin).

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

MENUET DE LULLI.

POUR LE PIANOFORTE.

Par BENTAYOUX.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—The "Menuet de Lulli" can also be played as a Duet for Violin and Violoncello.

THE VOICE AND SINGING.

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

VOCAL EXERCISES COMPOSED BY FRANK MORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by the late FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

New Edition of "LE PETIT SOLFEGE."

LE PETIT SOLFEGE. Vingt Solfèges pour Voix de Mezzo-Soprano. Par JOS. CURCI. Price 6s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

"This work for educational purposes will be found of inestimable value, since it is one of the very few which confines itself to the cultivation of the middle of the voice; and whilst the phrases are admirably adapted to develop the breathing powers and volume of the voice, the melodies are so exquisitely harmonized that they must prove of great benefit in the improvement of the taste and ear of a student in singing."—Pictorial World.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE.

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdme Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklein, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis, of Basingstoke, says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

"ON THE GOLDEN SANDS."

JUST PUBLISHED. "ON THE GOLDEN SANDS." Words by MARY MARK-LEMON. Music by ISIDORE DE LARA. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

SONGS BY SUCHET CHAMPION.

"THE TEST." Price 4s.

"A GENTLE WORD." Price 4s.

"OLD ENGLAND, AWAKE." Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

MADEMOISELLE ET MONSIEUR.

POLKA, POUR PIANO.

Par BENTAYOUX.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—The Illustrated Title of "Mademoiselle et Monsieur" is by Alfred Concanen.

THE BICYCLE.

SONATA FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By STANISLAUS ELLIOT.

1. ALLEGRO.—"The First Attempt."
2. ANDANTE.—"Despair and Return."
3. SCHERZO.—"Second Attempt."
4. RONDO.—"Success at last."

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The wedding of humour to music is, perhaps, one of the signs of the age. 'The Bicycle Sonata' is an illustration. At first sight it might seem that no author of standing would attempt to write of our friends the riders. There can be no question of the boldness of the attempt; the delights and vicissitudes of 'wheeling' are interpreted with skill, dramatic power and a sense of humour which raise the work and rescue it from vulgarity."

Digitized by Google

CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.

(From the "Daily Telegraph.")

Mr Carl Rosa has issued the prospectus of his forthcoming season at Her Majesty's Theatre, and a very interesting and attractive document amateurs find it to be. The year upon which we have just entered will rank as memorable in the musical records of the metropolis because of the revelation of Richard Wagner in his full-blown, or, as many contend, in his over-blown, condition. We are promised a display of the master's middle state at Drury Lane, and another of his latest phase at Her Majesty's; but the thing would not be complete without Mr Rosa, who intends to round off the grand "cycle" by producing the earlier works of the same bold and indefatigable pen. He, therefore, who can endure to the end may, between now and next July, know all there is to know of Richard Wagner, and finish up by forthwith journeying to Bayreuth for the unveiling of Parsifal. We do not pretend to forecast the mental and physical condition of the student, or, rather, patient, after such a course. Perhaps it would be as unique as the opportunity. Mr Rosa, we observe, begins at the beginning with Rienzi, and then goes on in order, to The Flying Dutchman, Tannhäuser, and Lohengrin. Here, when the time arrives, Herr Francke will take up the "wondrous tale" with Tristan and Isolde and The Mastersingers of Nuremburg, Herr Neumann following on with the Nibelungen Ring. As this arrangement is not the result of an understanding amongst the managers, observers given to looking behind the phenomena of life have ample room for speculation as to the cause of so fortuitous and fortunate a state of things. Has the providence that shapes our musical ends resolved upon enlightening this dark island without more delay? Or is it that the same providence, being anti-Wagnerite, is bent upon enlisting against the master the feeling that comes of satiety? Whatever the conclusion of curious minds, the result will be watched with interest, and, whatever the result, we ought to esteem ourselves favoured in the enjoyment of so splendid an opportunity for deciding, each on his own account, one of the greatest art-questions of the day.

Although all the Wagner operas promised by Mr Rosa are well known to his patrons, the prospectus does not lack novelties of interest. It bids us look for Balfe's Painter of Antwerp, an English version by Mr C. A. Barrett of Pittore e Duca, produced at Trieste in the autumn of 1854. The late Mr C. L. Kenney, in his memoir of the composer, remarks as to the early fortune of Pittore e Duca:—

"It was produced, but not with that amount of success which Balfe had reckoned on, or those who had previous knowledge of the work and could judge its merits, had anticipated. It had been regarded by these as his highest achievement up to that time, but from a change in the cast originally intended the opera was inadequately executed, and, after a few representations, Balfe withdrew the work and declared it should never again see the light until it could be executed in a thoroughly fitting manner."

As far as we can ascertain, Pittore e Duca has never been performed from that time to this; and it is pleasant to be assured that its revival by Mr Carl Rosa will occur under the conditions upon which the composer resolved to insist. That a "thoroughly fitting manner" awaits The Painter of Antwerp belongs to the order of facts which reason, upon ample premises, determines beforehand. The fate of the opera we cannot venture to prophesy, but should the work be found rich in the qualities that made Balfe famous, it is bound to succeed. Our public have not yet lost their love of gracious and graceful tune. It may be accounted a simple and a lowly taste by those who make bouquets of diminished chords and "live up to" them; but it exists in strength sufficient to carry through the opera which gratifies it.

Mr Rosa's second novelty is Hector Berlioz's Benvenuto Cellini, the only work of the French master produced at the Grand Opéra and at our own Covent Garden. Fortunate to some extent in Germany, Benvenuto Cellini had a hard time both in France and England. The Parisians condemned it, as the composer himself tells us, "with admirable unanimity and energy," while in London an unscrupulous Italian cabal managed for it a prompt and decided catastrophe. Benvenuto will have a fairer chance now. The public ear is open to Berlioz; there is no fear of intrigue, and upon nothing save its merits is the opera likely to be accepted or rejected. In any case, the performance will add to our knowledge of a remarkable composer, and Mr Carl Rosa will prefer another undoubted claim to public gratitude. Turning to the ordinary repertory of the company, we find that it consists of thirty-eight operas, of which seven are by British composers.

Among the artists engaged for the season are six débutants on Mr Rosa's London stage—namely, Misses La Rue and Eugenie Kemble, Messrs Barton M'Guckin, Ben Davies, Herbert d'Egville, and, last in order but first in importance, Mdlle Alwina Valleria—an artist whose services cannot fail to prove of the highest value. Misses Gaylord, Yorke, Warwick, Warren, and Burns return to their many metropolitan admirers; and with them come Messrs Packard, Lyall, Thomas, Turner, Ludwig, Bolton, Pope, Crotty, with others more or less well known. Finally, Mr Rosa has once more secured the services of Herr Anton Schott, whom Dr von Bülow does not love, being, presumably, no great judge of manly beauty and dexterous stage equestrianism. The orchestra will comprise sixty-five performers, with Mr Carrodus as leading violin; Mr Pew again acts as chorus-master, and Mr C. Betjemann as stage manager, while the supreme musical direction falls to Mr A. Randegger, than whom, it is safe to say, no one more efficient could have been obtained. We need scarcely add that the prospects of the season are good and even brilliant. Mr Rosa will have the field to himself, and every amateur will support a manager who not only keeps faith with the public but always strives to put before them of his very best, doing so, let us emphatically add, in the language "understanded of the people."

THE CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.—The opening of Mr Rosa's season of operatic performances in London is always looked forward to with interest, no matter in what house it may occur. This year the theatre elect is (for the third time) Her Majesty's, in the Haymarket. The subscription list is to comprise fifty representations, the first being announced for the 14th inst., and Lohengrin being the opera selected for the occasion—with Mr. J. P. Jackson's English version of the drama. A special feature in Mr. Rosa's programme is the conspicuous place assigned to Richard Wagner, three other works from whose pen are included, viz., Rienzi, Tannhäuser, and The Flying Dutchman. With English adaptations of the first and third (also by Mr. Jackson), the enterprising manager has already made his patrons acquainted; but Tannhäuser in this shape will be new to them, and it is hoped, for the sake of all concerned, acceptable. Mr. Rosa has in his company artists capable of undertaking any and all the characters belonging to these operas (Lohengrin not excepted—as was proved some three years ago); while with his orchestra of sixty-five practised experts, led by our great violinist, Mr. J. T. Carrodus, and conducted by Mr. Alberto Randegger, fresh from his artistic successes at the Norwich Festival, no less efficiency is expected in the occasionally over-elaborated instrumental accompaniments. Be this as it may, the preponderance of Wagner's music in the general scheme will possibly be found by many well-wishers somewhat excessive; but whether they argue for the best, or the contrary, the result alone can show. What with the Wagner operatic performances under Herr Richter's direction, and the "cycle" of the Ring des Nibelungen tetralogy—Rheingold, Die Walküre, Siegfried and Götterdämmerung (all in a breath, and three times over), at Her Majesty's Theatre, the Prophet of Bayreuth will have to undergo a severe ordeal, through which if he pass triumphantly, without exhausting the patience of London amateurs, the forebodings as to the speedy dissolution of Italian opera (so called) will find ample justification, and the "advanced school" (promoters of "higher development") henceforth have matters all their own way. We profess no fear on the subject, and think the time still far off when absolute melody, which is the pith and marrow of absolute music, is likely to be heard with indifference, or the genuine charm of a simple ballad-tune have passed away. As if the four Wagner "dramas" were not sufficient, Mr. Rosa promises a formidable and unanticipated addition—no other than the Benvenuto Cellini of Hector Berlioz, whose recent vogue, both in France and in England, would have astonished no one more than himself. Benvenuto Cellini was originally produced at Paris nearly forty years since, and about ten years later was given (in Italian) at Covent Garden, failing in each instance on account of supposed "cabals." In Paris the "cabal" (as in the case of Wagner's Tannhaüser) was charged to the "lions" of the "stalles d'orchestre," in London to Italian artists connected with the late Mr. Frederick Gye's establishment. Germany, however—more especially Weimar, under Franz Liszt, and Hanover, under Hans von Bülow—have appreciated Benvenuto Cellini at its worth. The English version is the work of Mr. W. Grist, of the Crystal Palace, an accomplished scholar, and just the sort of man for the task. Another advertised novelty is the late Balfe's Trieste opera, Pittore e Duca, the only work of that popular composer unknown to us. An English version, from the highly competent pen of Mr. W. A. Barrett, whose knowledge of music will have served him in good stead, has been prepared. The English name for the opera (originally intended, by the way, for our own stage) is to be The Painter of Antwerp. Many hope that Mr. Rosa will make London audiences (as he has already made country audiences) acquainted with the Promessi Sposi of the much talked-of Italian composer, Ponchielli, and that he will not overlook the Taming of the Shrew of the regretted Hermann Goetz, especially if he can find in his company so emphatically shrewish a Katharine as Minnie Hauk. Further details there will be opportunities enough to discuss. Meanwhile it must suffice to add that most of the old favourites of the Rosa Company are again in the ranks, with the addition of Mr Barton M'Guckin—that deservedly popular artist, Mdlle Alwina Valleria being re-engaged, as also Herr Schott, the last especially for the Wagner operas and the Benvenuto of Berlioz.—Graphic.

Digitized by Google

A GLANCE AT THE OLD MASTERS.

Strolling through the rooms of the Royal Academy, now set with pictures of the old masters, may be undertaken in a different frame of mind to that employed in visiting the May exhibition; for the critical faculty is not called upon for judicial activity—only a state of passive receptivity is absolutely needed to enjoy works sealed by the approving judgment of years reaching far into centuries. Whilst, at the present day, science is seen undermining and toppling over theories and dogmas propped up by the piety and learning of countless generations; whilst the jade Fashion is ever restlessly engaged in turning things upside down and inside out; still, in this age of revolution, many of the old masters, from the fifteenth century downwards, manage to hold their own, or, at least, that considerable part left from the crushing onslaught of Ruskin's eloquence. To enjoy the interesting collection at Burlington House, there is little need to trace the connection between the skill and morality of the painters. Beauty of performance and loveliness of character do not always go hand in hand, for the morality of the singing nightingale, where a worm (Darwin's latest pet) is concerned, differs little from that of the croaking raven. In the first gallery there are some excellent specimens of Sir Joshua Reynolds' work; indeed, the great Englishman is fully represented in this winter exhibition. The likeness of "Lady Wray" (No. 2) reveals, in many respects, qualities seldom absent from his portraiture. It is natural in look and feature, and yet everything about it speaks of Reynolds; it bears such a distinguishing stamp that, used by a lesser genius, would certainly have been a mark of conventionality. Reynolds, however, never sacrificed the individuality of the "sitter" to manifestations of his peculiar genius; he always managed to throw a certain something of heart and temper, as well as the features of the person, upon the canvass; but they were just the points that he alone could see and express. Callcott is seen at his best in a "River scene" (No. 7) that deals cleverly with shadows, formed by foliage overhanging cottage and stream. In the "Sea piece" (No. 14), by Cotman, the light, breaking through dark clouds, falls upon a bark struggling through surging waves, and steering out from land into a sea hugged by blackest of clouds. Collins' "Fisherman's farewell" (No. 21) scarcely realizes the merit indicated in the well known engraving of that picture—colour has not aided design. Turner liked surprises, and in "The unpaid bill" (No. 30) he threw one at the public. Leaving for the moment the glories of earth, sea, and sky, in calm and storm, at morning, noon, or eve, he placed for view a chemist's laboratory, with light streaming in through the window upon shelves and tables laden with glass bottles of every size and shape, glowing and sparkling with varied hues. In the shade a young couple are receiving a lecture from the parent, turning from his occupation to speak of other matters than science. In cannot be said that the tale is well told, nor are the figures effectively drawn; but if this great painter failed, where smaller men succeeded, he took his revenge, notably in "Sea coast: Hastings" (No. 179), and demonstrated that he was far away the greatest of all landscape painters. The second gallery, containing works of the Dutch school, affords ample illustration of the merits, as well as the weaknesses of that distinctive class. On entering the room are found side by side two pictures, "The marriage feast at Cana" by Jan Steen, and "An interior with a dead pig" by Lelienberg. The latter (No. 56) is remarkable for perfection of workmanship, every detail of the darkened kitchen is wonderfully drawn; indeed, labour has been lavished upon such common things as poker, tongs, candlestick, birdcage, and flagon, and all so coyly done as not to distract the eye from the principal subject, the dressed carcase of a pig, which positively glows in the dark room, even like to the fabled jewel in a swine's snout. In (No. 55) Jan Steen has shown that cleverness or even perfection in technical art can never make amends for poverty, commonness, or ribaldry in the treatment of sacred subjects. It is somewhat repulsive to see a representation of the Divine Person, surrounded by tipsy Boers, in the act of supplying the rabble with liquor by the working of a miracle. The patient Dutchmen did great and beautiful work, but it is a pity they ever laid hands upon holy themes, demanding for delineation lofty ideality. The "Young Lion" (No. 77), by Rubens, is a marvel, for the skill shown in depicting the big kitten rolling and stretching out his lithsome limbs in sheer wantonness of supple strength. "Le Chapeau Rouge" (No. 85), by David Teniers, is one of the most agreeable pictures painted by the renowned master. Amongst many excellent works in the third gallery Van Dyck's "Portraits of the Lords Stuart" (No. 126) must be noticed for its nobility of subjects and treatment. There are also three embodiments of Murillo's genius, the one (No. 151) shining the brightest, is the least pretentious; a "Female figure" (No. 139), by Leonardo da Vinci, with face as fresh as the flowers that deck her beauty; a "Triumph of Pan," by M. Poussin; a glorious "Venus and Adonis," by the all-embracing genius of Titian; an unsatisfactory work attributed to the "divine" Raphael; "The Cottage Door" (No. 177) that tells of the tenderness of Gainsborough; and "The Lock" (No. 181), that testifies to a vigour of brush possessed by Constable. The fourth gallery affords examples of that branch of the art classified by Sir Frederick Leighton in a recent address to the students of the Academy, as the "didactic." Notwithstanding the undoubted good to be gotten by study of those works, still the eye will dart off to rest gratefully upon such mundane subjects as Rembrandt's "Cook," and Ruysdael's "Waterfall." In the fifth gallery Romney gets full justice done to merits conspicuously declared in the "Portrait of Lady Hamilton," (No. 247); Wilson's conventional charms are spread over the "Landscape," (No. 279); Wilkie's command of character, sense of humour, and skill in composition are proclaimed in "School," (No. 255); and Morland's thoroughly English art has seldom been witnessed with such satisfaction as in the "Hunting Scene," (No. 267) and the "Wreckers," (No. 270). This thirteenth winter exhibition, without being sensational or extraordinary, is one of well-sustained merit, and worthy of the Royal Academy of Arts.

PENCERDD GWFFYN.

D'OYLY CARTE ELECTRIFYING HIS NEIGHBOURS.

In view of the probable extension of the system of lighting theatres with electricity, it is intended to provide engine power on a very large scale upon the piece of land immediately adjacent to the Savoy, where the two engines now at work are placed. The scheme includes the supply of the electric current to hotels, shops, and private houses in the neighbourhood of the Strand. The spot, which is the vacant ground between Mr D'Oyly Carte's new house and the Embankment, has the advantage of being somewhat retired. One of the principal obstacles to the extension of electric lighting in London is the circumstance that neighbours within reach of the sound of working engines find themselves, as a rule, wholly unable to sleep of a night save under the soothing influences of substantial compensation.—M.T. (Daily News.)

[That "substantial compensation" will doubtless be supplied by Mr D'Oyly Carte with the aid of MM. Gilbert and Sullivan.—Dr Blinge.]

A NEW PIANOFORTE TUTOR.—Messrs W. Morley, jun., & Co. may be congratulated on the issue of a common-sense Pianoforte Tutor, by G. B. Allen. We call it a common-sense book because the learner is not confused and disheartened at the outset by a lot of introductory matter having no special relation to the instrument. Just as in our best manuals of language the pupil begins translation as soon as he begins grammar, so here the keyboard is reached at once, and instruction in written music is conveyed only as it is required to facilitate progress thereon. Knowledge thus advances side by side with practice in the pleasantest companionship.—D. T.

Digitized by Google

THEOBALD BÖHM.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—I notice in your contemporary, the London Figaro, charges brought against the late Theobald Böhm, of Munich, which are, as I think, both inaccurate and misleading.

The Figaro's correspondent seems to consider that the main feature in Böhm's improvement of flutes was a system of fingering generally, erroneously, he says, attributed to him, but in reality "annexed" from one Captain Gordon. This it was, says the Figaro's correspondent, which made Böhm's name famous. Gordon, we are told, invented and perfected this fingering; and after vainly advertising it throughout Great Britain, France, and Germany, he died of a broken heart, maddened by his failure to sell his invention, and by Böhm's "annexation" of it. We are not told why, what in the one case failed so signally, succeeded in the other so completely.

In justice to Theobald Böhm, whom I knew very well for nearly forty years, I venture to suggest an explanation:—He was a man of very considerable scientific, as well as technical attainments. Originally a gold worker, he subsequently became an Inspector of mines; besides being for many years first flute in the principal orchestra of Munich. Whether he did or did not borrow ("annex" if the Figaro's correspondent prefers that term), the first notion of what Sir H. Bishop in his 1851 Exhibition report calls a system "for reaching and stopping the flute holes at great distances," is not very material. Böhm always claimed the invention of fingering known by his name; and I am not aware that it has ever been proved that Gordon's fingering was identical with it. The question which the Figaro's correspondent begs, and on which he founds very serious charges has, as he admits, been debated very "fiercely," but not conclusively settled. Be that as it may, Böhm soon perceived that the really essential points to be determined with a view to the improvement of his instrument, were: (1) The shape and proportion of the tube, more particularly of that part known as "the head" where sound is generated; (2) the exact position and proportion of the "embouchure" and finger-holes. In order to solve these problems, Böhm set himself to study acoustics, under the well-known Professor Schafhäutel, and after several years labour produced as a result: (1) "a cylindrical tube with conical head;" (2) "a geometrical diagram (I now quote from Mr Pole's report, 1862), with explanations by which makers of tubular instruments can with the greatest accuracy construct their instruments according to any of the recognized pitches."

It is upon these calculations, and upon their practical application, that Böhm's fame rests. It is no exaggeration to say that their publication produced a revolution in the manufacture of wind instruments. So little did the merit of Böhm's invention depend on any one system of fingering, that it was applicable not to flutes only, but also to oboes, clarinettes, and bassoons, which are fingered quite differently. At the Exhibition (1851) competent and impartial musical judges pronounced it to be "an entirely new and scientific system of construction, which has done more than anything else to lift this class of instruments to their present degree of perfection, both of intonation and of timbre."

If Böhm, originally like Captain Gordon, a poor man, had, like him, relied solely on a novel system of fingering, he would, probably have been as unsuccessful. In our day, nearly every flautist has his own pet system of fingering, of which he proclaims the superiority, and which, at all events, suits him best. Several of these have been adapted to Böhm's tubes, with more or less success. That Böhm did not "annex" his scientific knowledge may easily be proved. His letters, of which I have still a considerable number, prove it conclusively. The head of the Pulteney Street firm—whose intimate practical knowledge of everything connected with the manufacture of pianofortes will be contested by no maker, whether English, French, or German—has repeatedly and ungrudgingly acknowledged the assistance afforded him years ago by Böhm when calculating what is termed the scale of grand pianofortes. He told me that he found Böhm very well versed in the acoustical bearings of that subject. But, to quote the Figaro's correspondent's words, "it is an old tale," that of disputed inventions. A crude idea occurs to one man; it is developed and carried out, perhaps, by another. The former may have had neither the knowledge, nor the perseverance necessary to mature his notion into practical utility; yet, he eventually claims, or his friends claim for him, all the merit of the invention.

The French point triumphantly to Papin, the inventor of steamboats, as they assert, in Louis XV.'s time. My friend, Mr Hipkins, in his very able and interesting paper (see "Grove's Musical Dictionary"), shows, with more probability, that Cristofori invented pianofortes. For the sake of argument, let us associate with them Gordon, as the alleged inventor of the Böhm fingering: originator, if I rightly understand the Figaro's correspondent, of the most material modern flute improvement? What would any of these, in their very different degrees of importance, say to their bantlings now full grown? Would they even recognize them? And what are we to say to those—if such, indeed, there be—who would claim for the putative progenitors all the merit?—I am, sir, very obediently yours,

WALTER STEWART BROADWOOD.

Cabalva, Radnorshire, Jan. 1882.

—o—

LIST OF NEW ITALIAN OPERAS

Produced in 1881, *with, in each case, the composer's name, date of first performance, and theatre in which it took place.

1. Lola,† buffo, Ant. Orsini, Jan. 15th, Olympic Theatre, London; 2. Dora, serious, N. Guerrera, Jan. 24th, T. Dal Verme, Milan; 3. Ercole III, comic, 3 acts, A. Buonomo, Jan. 29th, T. Nuovo, Naples; 4. Don Chisciotte, serio-comic, Luigi Ricci, Feb. 4th, T. Rossini, Venice; 5. Giordano Bruno, serious, 4 acts with prologue, A. Bartolucci, Feb. 9th, T. Manzoni, Pistoja; 6. L'Ereditiera, buffo, 3 acts, C. Domineceti, Feb. 14th, T. Dal Verme, Milan; 7. Il Partigiano, ballet-opera, 4 acts, Conte d'Osmond, Feb. 14th, T. Municipale, Nice; 8. Ugo e Parisina, serious, 3 acts and prologue, G. B. Bergamini, Feb. 23rd, T. Municipale, Ferrara; 9. Hermosa, serious, 4 acts, Gugl. Branca, March 6th, T. Bellini, Naples; 10. Le Nozze in Prigione, buffo, 3 acts, Emilio Usiglio, March 23rd, T. Manzoni, Milan; 11. Simon Boccanegra, serious, 3 acts with prologue, G. Verdi, March 24th, Scala, Milan: 12. Nella, serious, 3 acts, F. P. Frontini, March 30th, T. Comunale, Catania; 13. Ericarda di Vargas, serious, 4 acts, M. Michielli, April 16th, T. Nuovo, Pisi; 14. La Perla del Villaggio, semi-serious, 3 parts, A. Gambaro, April 28th, T. Avvalorati, Leghorn; 15. Giorgione, serious, 3 acts, Giov. Magnanini, May 25th, T. Municipale, Reggio (Emilia); 16. Lo Starnuto di Giove, buffo, 2 acts, O. Scarono, May 26th, Circo Nazionale, Naples; 17. Il Rinnegato, serious, Baron Bodog d'Orczy, July 9th, Her Majesty's, London; 18. La Rosa di Perona, semi-serious, 3 acts, Teresa Guidi, July 26th, T. Rossini, Naples; 19. Jella, serious, 3 acts and prologue, Giov. Bolzoni, July 30th, T. Municipale, Piacenza; 20. I Burgravi, serious, 4 acts, C. Podestà, Aug. 17th, T. Riccardi, Bergamo; 21. Il Caporal Fracassa, buffo, L. Cameroni, Sept. 3rd, Politeama, Casale (Monf.); 22. L'Amico di Casa, "giocosa," 3 acts and 4 parts, F. Cortesi, Oct. 13th, T. Niccolini, Florence; 23. Zuma, serious, 4 acts, V. Fornari, Nov. 24th, T. Bellini, Naples; 24. La Congiura di Chevreuse, serious, Paolina Thys, Dec. 3rd, T. Nuovo, Florence; 25. Cordelia, serious, S. Gobatti, Dec. 6th, T. Comunale, Bologna; 26. I Burgravi, serious, A. Orsini, Dec. 10th, T. Costanzi, Rome.

To the above must be added the following operettas, &c.:—

27. Capitan Fracassa, operetta, Giov. Valenti, Jan. 3rd, T. Varietà, Naples; 28. Il Segreto della Duchessa,‡ operetta, G. Dell' Orefice, Jan. 4th, T. Nuovo, Naples; 29. I due Possidenti, operetta, Cavagnaro, Jan., Circo. Filarmonico-drammatico, Rome; 30. Alla Caccia dei Fiori, operetta, Giov. Varisco, Feb. 7th, T. Filo-dramm., Milan; 31. I Guanti Gialli, operetta, Nic. Spinelli, March 1st, Collegio di Musica, Naples; 32. Un Telegramma, operetta, Cesare San Fiorenzo, April, T. Nazionale, Genoa; 33. La Jettatura, operetta, Goudron, April, T. Quirino, Rome; 34. Gilberto, operetta, Enrico Abate, April, Collegio di Musica, Naples; 35. Orgoglio di Nascita, operetta, Deschamps, May, Scuola di Declam., Florence; 36. Montevirgine, operetta, various composers, June 19th, T. Varietà, Naples; 37. Isolda, (?), Addi, October, T. Beretta, Bellagio; 38. Il Padre della Figlia di Madame Angot, operetta, L. Zandomeneghi, October, T. Goldoni, Venice.

* From Il Trovatore and La Gazetta Musicale.

† English libretto by Frank Marshall.

‡ Previously performed by the Philharmonic Society, Naples, in May, 1879.

Digitized by Google

FORM OR DESIGN IN VOCAL MUSIC.

The Rondo.

(Continued from page 6.)

It has been pointed out that both the sonata and rondo forms have their origin in the repetitions of a dance tune, such as the minuet, gavotte, and others, and that the alternative minuet or trio is represented by the second part or free fantasia in the sonata, and by the episode in the rondo. We have already spoken of the simplest kind of rondo when we described that variety of the Scarlatti form which has a principal subject and an episode; but we have yet to speak of those more elaborate kinds which have more than one episode. They also have the resemblance to the dance tune and its trio; but it is with more than one trio, or with the trio used more than once. In Handel's first opera, Almira, there is a dance which he calls a rondeau, and this consists of a principal subject, and two trios or alternatives. The first trio is to be played by two hautboys and a bassoon; the second by the violins without hautboys; and after each trio the principal subject is repeated.

Handel's song, "Lascia ch'io pianga," which is in his later opera, Rinaldo, bears a great resemblance to this in its plan; the only difference being that the first episode is used a second time as if it were a third trio. Each of the three ideas is distinct in key from the others. The principal subject ends with a full close (d); the episodes, as is generally, though not always, the case in instrumental rondos, end with chords or passages (e) that are not final, but lead into the repetition of the main key and idea.

Ex. 106.

The opera, Almira, in which is the rondeau mentioned just now, contains a sarabande, of which the first strain is the same as that of "Lascia"; there is but one episode or alternative, and this differs from both of those in the song. It seems as if Handel, in appropriating the music of his earlier dance tune to a later song, had kept the feeling of the sarabande dance in his mind while extending it to the length and rhythm necessary for the song.

The final allegro of Beethoven's "Ah, perfide" is a free rondo. Coming as it does after a movement in E flat, this, which is also to have E flat as its main key, does not begin with its principal subject, but with the first episode.

Ex. 107.

This is in C minor, and thus becomes a sort of introduction to the principal subject. The latter, as is generally the case with the principal subject of a rondo, is a complete rhythmical idea, or ballad sonata, with a half-way rest on the dominant chord (a) and a full close (b) at the end.

Ex. 108.

The two bars for instruments (c) at the beginning are introductory to the voice; but those which occur after the half-close must be considered as part of the rhythm which is continued by the voice. The close at the end of four bars (d) is not quite final, and a codetta of two bars brings the final full close (b). Immediately following this is the second episode:

Digitized by Google

Ex. 100.

which is as it were a recomposition of the first in other keys and with more modulation. A half-close ends this, which goes with a repetition of the principal idea (see Ex. 108). After this is a long coda with the words of the principal subject, but beginning with the time and accent of the foregoing episodes—the ideas differing and incomplete, always working up to a climax, and the closes always averted in one way or another, until a sudden stop and half-close leads to a portion of the principal subject. This is also broken off short, and the quick time of the episodes resumed for a few bars to bring the song to an end.

OLIVERIA PRESCOTT.

(To be continued.)

—o—

MUSIC IN NATAL.

(From a special correspondent.)

The Philharmonic Society of this town, which has been in a moribund, if not actually defunct state for many months past, has again been resuscitated, and, a few days ago, gave its second performance. The new conductor, Mr McColl, is not a professional musician, but has that true love for the art which covers many deficiencies. Under his sway, the Society—numbering sixty members, with an orchestra of about twenty—bids fair to do much good work in the future. The subject of this second performance was the "antiquated" Messiah, and I must say it was creditably rendered. The chorus had evidently been well drilled, and the soloists came with some success out of the trying Handelian ordeal. The lady who sang the contralto music—notably the number, "He was despised"—threw an amount of religious pathos into it that surprised me, even though accustomed to oratorio performances in England.

That the Durban people are musical cannot be denied, though one would not think so to judge from a critique of this performance which appeared in the Mercury, the leading paper of the town. Some of the phrases are "rich," and deserve reproduction. The reporter was evidently more accustomed to race-meetings than oratorios, to judge by the following inimitable passage: "With the exception of the orchestra once getting very slightly across with the vocalists, all went very well until near the end, when there was apparently a little lagging; but the stroke of the conductor's bâton brought them all up to a triumphant finish!" With regard to "He was despised," we are told that "each semibreve was held its proper length, whilst due regard was given to the amoroso (!) parts as well as those requiring expressivo" (sic). It is also consolatory to know that in "He is the King of Glory" the "canto was sung with brillante," and that the basso had one of his airs "well under his comprehension!" Mrs Wheeler, an "old singer," sang that "sweet air," entitled "I know that my Redeemer liveth," and "humoured her voice with good taste"—furthermore being successful in "securing the triplets!!" But it would take up too much of your space to give you all the plums of this critique.

It would not be fair, in speaking of music in Natal, to omit mention of Maritzburg, which is, if anything, a-head of us in musical matters. Maritzburg, which is the capital, is seventy miles inland by rail, and has about 8,000 of a population, while we have nearly 9,000. It is a pretty lively place, though, and has a Philharmonic Society of about eighty members, with a capital orchestra, as regards numbers. The "city" is favoured by the presence of a professional musician, Mr Charles Lascelles, who has done good service in the way of introducing English opera to the Maritzburg public, assisted by local talent. But he has been getting himself into hot water lately, as I see by the papers up there. It appears that the Purists of Maritzburg have been objecting to the manner in which he has been mutilating the sacred works he has been producing. As I happened to be in Maritzburg on business, I stayed over night to hear the Society's recent performance of Samson, and I must say I was considerably shocked at the liberties Mr Lascelles had taken. The solo, "Ye men of Gaza," as far as regards the runs, was almost entirely re-written; and that fine air, "Thy glorious deeds," was equally mutilated. Imagine, too, that sublime chorus, "Then round about the starry throne," taken in indecent haste with cymbal accompaniment! To crown all, "Let the bright seraphim" had fully thirty bars of a concluding cadenza, entirely written by Mr Lascelles, the bald commonplace strains of which were accompanied by cornet obbligato. After that, I cannot wonder at our Maritzburg friends being so wroth with "Charlie," as they call him in their colonial playfulness.

The Durban Society has a number of good works in prospect—Bennett's May Queen and Gade's Crusaders amongst others; whilst the Maritzburg Philharmonic is studying Mendelssohn's Walpurgis Nacht for Christmas.

C. B. S.

Durban, Dec. 10th, 1881.

THE BORDER RAID.*

The red sun set o'er moss and fell
In a stream of burnished gold,
And the curfew rang its parting knell
From the belfry quaint and old;
Through the distant haze the Warden's gaze
Swept up to the Border Pass,
In the twilight gray concealed there lay
A foe mid the tangled grass.
"Tis a Border raid," the Warden said,
"Of a hundred men and more;
"By the Holy Mass, this night the Pass
"Shall reek with the raiders' gore."

"To arms, to arms," cried the Border chief,
"To death alone we yield;
"For the bold Buccleuch rides not to sue,
"When Douglas takes the field."

The moon rides up the azure steep,
And it gleams down Tinto's side,
As the troopers sweep from the Border keep,
Like the Solway's heaving tide;
'Mid the tangled grass that skirts the Pass,
Where the rebel tartans wave,
The challenge floats from a hundred throats,
Who'd die their chief to save.
By the pale moonlight they close in fight,
And fierce is that Border fray,
On the fatal field Buccleuch doth yield,
Ere the dawn of morning gray.

"To horse, to horse," cried the rebel chief,
"To might alone we bow,
"For the Douglas bold his own can hold
"Though branded traitor now."

Copyright.* WETSTAR.

H. HOFFMANN'S "CINDERELLA."—Among the numerous publications of Messrs. Novello, Ewer, & Co. are several that call for particular notice. In this special list we include Cinderella, a setting of the popular legend by H. Hoffmann, whose music, we need scarcely add, is rapidly attaining popularity amongst us. Cinderella, is a work of considerable dimensions, but it never outgrows its interest, and did space allow, we could easily give proof of this assertion. Choral societies, on the look out for a really attractive novelty, cannot do better than turn their attention to this cantata, since, by its means, they are certain to please if not all, at least a majority of tastes.—D. T.

Digitized by Google

ST JAMES'S HALL.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS,

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON, 1881-82.

DIRECTOR—MR S. ARTHUR CHAPPELL.

THE NINETEENTH CONCERT OF THE SEASON

WILL TAKE PLACE ON

MONDAY EVENING, JANUARY 16, 1882,

At Eight o'clock precisely.

Programme.

PART I.—Quartet, in A minor, Op. 51, No. 2, for two violins, viola and violoncello (Brahms)—MM. Straus, L. Ries, Zerbini, and Piatti; Canzone, "Ritorneral fra poco" (Hasse)—Mdme Fassett; Sonata, in B flat, for pianoforte alone (Schubert)—Mr Charles Hallé.

PART II.—Trio, in E flat, Op. 70, No. 2, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (Beethoven)—Mr Charles Hallé, MM. Straus, and Piatti; Song, "The Willow Song" (Sullivan)—Mdme Fassett; Pensées Fugitives, for pianoforte and violin (Heller and Ernst)—MM. Charles Hallé and Straus.

Accompanist—Mr ZERBINI.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 14, 1882,

At Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

Quintet, in A major, for two violins, two violas, and violoncello (Mendelssohn)—MM. Straus, L. Ries, Hollander, Zerbini, and Piatti; Air, "Revenge, Timotheus cries," by desire (Handel)—Mr Santley; Sonata, in E minor, for pianoforte alone (Weber)—Mr Charles Hallé; Nocturne and Siciliana, for violoncello (Piatti)—Signor Piatti; Song, "Medjé" (Gounod)—Mr Santley; Trio, in C minor, Op. 66, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (Mendelssohn)—MM. Charles Hallé, Straus, and Piatti.

Accompanist—Mr ZERBINI.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

EPPS OF IPSWICH.—No. Sir Suppinabiles was a spy from the court of King Howell of Little Britain, whose rebellious vassal, "An Earl which hight Grip," having vanquished in battle, Sir Tristram was compelled to marry the King's daughter, Isonde les Blanches Mains. Hence the wrath of Sir Launcelot, who was living with Queen Guenever (King Arthur's wife) at his castle, "La Joyeuse Garde," and could not tolerate the idea of Sir Tristram's forgetfulness of his vows to "La Belle Isonde," wife to King Mark of Cornwall. About Mark, Elias the Harper sang a "villanous lay," composed for him by Sir Dinadam, the common friend of Sir Launcelot (who played him many tricks) and Sir Tristram (who played him none).

Sketch.

He vainly sought her in a crowded house,
From which he went away the latest guest,
And walked about beneath the foggy moon.
And long ago the city was asleep,
What time he trod the pavement everywhere,
And heard the echo of his pacing feet
Start from the houses on the other side,
And saw his shadow lagging now behind,
Now gliding forward as he passed a lamp.
And when he lay him down to rest awhile,
Strange heavy dreams arrived, like gloomy birds
That perch upon a corpse and pick its eyes:
Till hard pain woke him in the morning hours,
A pain slow-burning, fearful to the head,
So fearful that he could not say a word
But rose and chose a road that led far off.
And after many miles of deep despair
He found himself, towards the end of day,
In the beloved and blessèd glimmering
And soft fresh coolness of a great green wood.
And there, bareheaded, thinking of her face,
He wandered. And the birds were never loud.
And all betokened the kind hand of God.

Pelkan.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.'S, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). Advertisements not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 14, 1882.

MDME ALBANI IN BERLIN.

ORIGINALLY for four nights only, Mdme Albani's engagement at the Royal Operahouse was extended to eight. Seldom has a "star" taken such a firm hold on the public. She has achieved a triumph in every one of her characters, more especially in the last one, Elsa. The Berliner Zeitung says:—

"It may certainly be denominated an important event in the domain of dramatic vocal art, that an artist like Mdme Albani, who, as being a born American, was brought up to use the English language, first embodies before the Berlin public, with a perfection all her own, various creations—musically never to be forgotten—by means of the Italian idiom, and, finally, in German opera and in the German tongue, conjures up the character, most rich in poetry but likewise most difficult, of Elsa in Lohengrin with such consummate mastery that the audience, though spoilt, are roused by her to enthusiasm. Mdme Albani, as was once more proved the day before yesterday, is an artist 'by the grace of God.' Her performance was another high victory of art; the great art of classic and good singing, ennobling and embellishing Nature when rendered by it, for the daughters of Nature are the Muses and the Graces, and Mdme Albani combines them all in her art. The Elsa whom she created for us on Tuesday was an impersonation which, though full of character and noble womanhood, was yet thoroughly poetical. There was no ranting, no striving after effect, either in her essentially plastic and æsthetic acting, in her gestures, or in her singing. How easy it was to perceive, nay, to feel convinced by her performance that the 'beautiful singing' (bel canto) of the Italian classical vocal method suits even 'Wagner-Music' when that method is so brilliantly exemplified in all its rules and laws as in the case of Mdme Albani, by whom, besides other things, the pronunciation had to be treated as an important study. It was further seen that Wagner-Music, though certainly only in its first epoch, where we have still to do generally with music without chaos, can very well bear the Portamento di voce, the Legato, nobleness of tone, piano, and, in short, all the attributes of the classical vocal school. Mdme Albani's voice is free from the throat notes, the nasal and palate sounds, with which the majority of our German singers are so often chargeable. How beautifully effective, too, was the admirable evenness of her vocal register, and her management of the breath, as well as the free and correct manner in which she takes the note.

"Were we to endeavour to specify the separate brilliant points in Mdme Albani's Elsa, we should find the task somewhat difficult, for she was equally successful in elegiac, gentle and affectionate, as well as in highly dramatic and passionate moments. This celebrated artist, who perhaps, by word and deed, deserves more than any other the title of a Royal Chamber-Singer, fascinated the public in such a degree that she was re-called three times after the first act . . . ."*

The Berliner Tageblatt admires the gifted vocalist no less than does its contemporary. Here is what it says:—

"Signora Albani, as Elsa in Lohengrin, achieved a success as brilliant as well merited. Although the part is one of those which most strongly command the sympathies of the public, and therefore, a highly favourable one for the singer, still in Signora Albani's case it was apprehended that, having previously played Italian parts in which her vocal art was exhibited to the greatest advantage, she might not always feel at home as Elsa, for in this part there is not a moment in which pure vocal art can assert itself; on the contrary, the great requisites, in addition to unfailing correctness and absence of fatigue in the voice, are a homogeneous style of execution and characteristic impersonation. Combined with this apprehension was another fact of very great weight, namely, that Signora Albani sang the part in German, and even the most superficially educated musical layman can appreciate the unusual difficulties which beset a fair artist who has sung only in Italian when she undertakes in German a character which we cannot conceive as properly rendered without distinct enunciation and appropriate elocution. Signora Albani not only proved all fears

* The conclusion of this extract has not come to hand.—ED. M. W.

Digitized by Google

to be groundless, but completely satisfied in every respect the high demands made upon her. Not even the sharpest observer could discover a tone in her singing or a movement in her acting which bore an Italian impress and belied the German character of the music. Her very first entrance, her appearance before the King, her dumb gestures, and her sorrowful exclamation: 'Mein armer Bruder!' afforded proof of perfect intelligence; the narrative of the dream, the prayer, the dialogue with Lohengrin, and the cry of joy after his victory, left no longer room for doubt as to the genuine artistic nature of the performance; a storm of applause burst forth from all sides of the densely crowded house. The second act was given with the requisite elevation of feeling. For ourselves personally, the duet with Ortrud before the church was especially interesting. The varying feelings of indignation at the sneering reproaches; of pain at discovering she had been deceived, and at ingratitude; and of secret fear at the possibility of truth in the hints of Lohengrin's false magic power, were admirably given. The whole performance was the more admirable because Signora Albani, as we know for a fact, is by no means a mistress of the German language, and Elsa, which in London she always sang in Italian, was not studied by her in German till she came here. To this expression of our great admiration we beg to add that Signora Albani should now learn German thoroughly. An artist who can pronounce it so plainly, and sing German parts so beautifully, is, as it were, morally bound to appear in the master-works of German song, and cause her light to shine brightly in them as it shone the day before yesterday."

PROFESSOR MACFARREN AND MR CORDER.

(To the Editor of the "Musical Times.")

SIR,—Will you kindly permit me space for a few words concerning Professor Macfarren's recent address to the students of the Royal Academy?

Being myself a student at the Royal Academy of Music, and possessing a copy of his address exactly as it was delivered to the students, I should like to correct one or two misunderstandings of which Mr F. Corder has availed himself somewhat freely. Professor Macfarren distinctly said that he desired no wilful disregard of present art, but merely that students should be cautious in accepting innovations upon established principles. Surely this is only the mild and natural advice which every wise and discreet artist of every age would give. He also stated that in order to arrive at a just appreciation of present art, and to understand thoroughly the productions of modern times, we need a sound knowledge of bygone masterpieces. Truly if any man has the ambition to compose an oratorio, we expect that he possesses also the ability to carry out his intentions; and if Mr Corder wishes specially to impress on our minds the fact that we cannot compose a modern oratorio merely on the strength of our acquaintance with such works as The Messiah, Creation, Elijah, &c., I may remind him, or perhaps inform him, that still more impossible would all our attempts be if we relied solely on our knowledge of present works.

If Mr Corder so soon grows weary of such a master as Mendelssohn, he may indeed soon get to the end of art, even before he has reached the beginning.

FREDERICK K. HATTERSLEY.

48, Fitzroy Road, N. W., December 3, 1881.

SOME NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Messrs Chappell and Co. have contributed to the social resources of the approaching season by issuing the Christmas number of their Musical Magazine, which, as heretofore, contains a choice selection of compositions for the ball-room. It is needless to praise work of this class when done by such favourites as Messrs D'Albert, Waldteufel, Kinkel, &c. Enough that the Olivette Quadrilles and Olivette Lancers, besides being fresh, are admirable examples of adaptation, while the original pieces have all needful attraction in the shape of good tune and well-marked rhythm. It may be useful to add that the music exacts little from the pianist. Nellie's Song Book, by T. Crampton, contains twenty-five ditties of a kind well suited to young people, both as regards words and music. Mr Crampton is so well known as a caterer for little folk that his name will be accepted in this case as a guarantee of merit. We may state, however, that there is nothing in the collection which displays other than perfect, though, of course, simple good taste. Nellie's Song Book is a valuable addition to the nursery répertoire, and handsomely got up withal. Messrs Chappell and Co.'s dance music contains some special features this season, not the least noticeable being quadrilles, "Lancers," and a Polka, based upon themes from Patience, and named after that popular operetta. In all these Mr Charles d'Albert displays his usual judgment and skill, while each is recommended by a humorous title-page printed in colours and made quite "too-too" by lilies, sunflowers, peacocks' feathers, and other paraphernalia of æstheticism. The Cigarette Polka, by John Coote, jun., if not particularly original, dances well; while the Venetia Waltz, by Caroline Lowthian (dedicated by permission to Lord Beaconsfield), has points of obvious merit, though it cannot be said to reveal any new method of dealing with the now almost exhausted waltz form. Among pianoforte music issued by this firm for the drawing-room are a characteristic piece, Old English Revels, by Oliver Cramer, and a sketch, A Doll's Frolic, by Percy Reeve. The first is lively, pleasant and easy; the second, which might have been called by a thousand other names with equal propriety, will serve a useful purpose as an exercise in the smooth execution of prolonged and flowing diatonic phrases. A song "My Prince," by the composer of this sketch, has an expressive melody, but is disfigured here and there by chromatic harmonies of little significance, and, as treated, of less beauty. The subject of "The Haven of Rest" should have inspired Mr C. H. Marriott with ideas farther removed from commonplace than those the song contains. "True to the Core," by S. Elliott, is a stirring outburst of patriotic feeling, which comes like an echo of the warlike past; and "To Arms," by C. E. Tinney, constitutes a fitting pendant, with its tale of sacrifice in the cause of duty. These songs have little value as music, but their theme affords recommendation sufficient. The publication, with dialogue, stage directions, &c., of Mr. G. Grossmith's operetta, Uncle Samuel, will not be overlooked by those who are arranging for private theatricals at Christmas. As the work was produced at the Opéra Comique in May last, there is no need to enlarge here upon its vivacity and its amusing qualities generally. The music, never difficult, is always light and pretty; only four characters are introduced, the one scene is "a drawing-room," and the piece plays no more than half an hour. These should be recommendations sufficient for the introduction of Uncle Samuel to many a home circle.—D. T.

ALBANI AT BERLIN.

Mdme Albani completed her engagement in the opera here on Friday evening, Jan. 6, by appearing for the third time as Marguerite in Gounod's Faust, her newly-conferred title of "Königliche Kammersängerin," or Royal Court Singer, being added to her name on the bills. The Emperor and his Court were again present, and a full and brilliant house again enthusiastically cheered the "Canadian Nightingale." On Sunday Mdme Albani sang at a morning concert for the benefit of the victims of the Vienna disaster, and then left for London, previous to repairing to Monaco to fulfil an engagement similar to her Berlin one.—"Times" Correspondence.

ANNETTE ESSIPOFF has made a great sensation in Copenhagen. She gave five concerts, and played twice at Court. The Queen presented her with a medallion set with pearls and containing her Majesty's portrait, and the King conferred on her the medal for Art and Science. [The Frou Frou of the piano enchants all nations alike.—DR BLIDGE.]

A MUSICAL society has been instituted at Avignon, under the title of "La Chambre Musicale," with the object of performing works by the "classical" masters. Such institutions, happily, seem to be growing up in a large number of the principal towns and cities of Europe. The more the better just now, for evident reasons; a great deal, nevertheless, depends upon how, and to whose compositions the conventional, if not altogether explicit, term, "classical," is applied.

MR EDWARD SCHUBERTH, the indefatigable director of the Schubert Society, has been playing with success, both in Paris and Lyons, his own fantasia, for the violoncello, on airs from Gounod's Faust; a transcription of Schubert's "Ave Maria"; and a concerto by Goltermann. The press write in most favourable terms of his performances.

MR CHARLES OBERTHÜR has gone to Paris, where he will give an evening concert on Jan. 27th at Erard's rooms, and play his Second Trio, as well as his Concertino for the harp, neither of which has been heard in Paris. He will be assisted by Mdlle Doré Desvignes (who will sing his romance, "Je voudrais être"), MM. Valdec and Hollmann, as well as by M. Hasselmans, who will play, with the composer, Mr Oberthür's duet, for two harps, on Les Huguenots.

Digitized by Google

CONCERTS.

MR NICHOLAS MORI introduced on Jan. 8th, before an audience of connoisseurs, his new compositions, the 137th Psalm, containing a chorus, "By the rivers of Babylon"; an aria, admirably sung by Miss Bertha Foresta; and a trio for female voices, sung by Misses Foresta, Cosford, and O'Brien. Besides which, Miss Foresta rendered with great animation Mr Mori's "Shipwright's Love" (words by Wellington Guernsey); Miss Cosford "Midnight Chimes," (words by Maria X. Hayes), and "The Two Hearts," both by Professor Bergson. Miss O'Brien (pupil of the late M. Roger), a lady endowed with a fine contralto voice, gave Schubert's "Das Mädchen und der Tod," and "The Better World," by Bergson (words by Mrs M. A. Baines). Mdme Napoleone Viarino played, with Mr Ryal, a Sonata for pianoforte and violin, by Fesca, Mr Mori terminating the soirée with a graceful Morceau de Salon, for the violin, of his composition.

MR AGUILAR has commenced his annual series of recitals of pianoforte music, at his residence, Gloucester Crescent, Hyde Park, and as usual has been favoured with large audiences. His programmes are judiciously selected from the works of "classical masters," and interspersed with new and old compositions from his own pen.

MR JOHN CROSS gave a concert in the Holborn New Town Hall, on Monday evening, Jan. 9, in aid of the funds of the St Alban's (Holborn) Parochial Schools. The singers were Mdme Touzeau, Misses Belval, and Clara Myers, Messrs John Cross, Henry Knott, Florian Horner, Auguste Carree, and a small choir; the instrumentalists, Mr Collingwood Banks (organ), Mr Luigi Carozzi (flute), and Mr F. Sewell Southgate, R.A.M. (pianoforte). The programme consisted principally of songs by modern composers, among the most successful being Wilford Morgan's "My sweetheart when a boy" (Mr John Cross), Pontet's "Big Ben" (Mr Auguste Carree), "Meet me by moonlight alone" (Mdme Touzeau). Lucantoni's duet, "Una notte a Venezia" (Mdme Touzeau and Mr John Cross), Leslie's trio, "O Memory" (Mdme Touzeau, Miss Belval, and Mr John Cross), and Mendelssohn's part-song, "Farewell to the forest," Rossini's "Carnaval," and Pinsuti's "Good night, beloved" (by the choir). Mr Collingwood Banks played on the organ Suppé's overture, Poet and Peasant, and Mr Sewell Southgate accompanied the songs like a thorough musician.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.—A large number of persons attended the concert given in the Royal Albert Hall on Saturday afternoon for the benefit of the sufferers by the burning of the Ring Theatre, and, as all concerned gave their services gratuitously, there can be no doubt that the purpose of the undertaking was achieved. This is the main statement we have to make in connection with the affair, since it would be ungracious indeed to treat the performance as matter for criticism. At the same time, to pass over the work of the artists without recognition of its merit and acknowledgment of its generosity would be almost equally improper. Professionals and amateurs, natives and foreigners, were alike represented in the little army of volunteers conducted by Herr Richter, who, as highest in place, made the greatest sacrifice by coming all the way from Vienna for the occasion. The principal vocalists were Mdlle Valleria, Mdme Marie Roze, Mdme Liebhart, Mdme Rose Hersee, and Mdme Patey; Mr Barton M'Guckin, Mr Burgon, Mr Egbert Roberts, and Herr Friedmann; the organist was Dr Stainer; the accompanists announced to appear were Sir J. Benedict, Mr Cowen, Mr Kuhe, and Herr Frantzen; the orchestra numbered 126 instruments, played by, musically speaking, all sorts of people; and a huge chorus, comprising the Philharmonic, Faust, Carter, Hackney, Liederkranz, Deutscher, Turnverein, and Richter Choirs, was drawn from all parts of London. These individuals and associations, no doubt, made up a miscellaneous body, the control of which even Herr Richter might have hesitated to accept; but it was pleasant to see in its variety a proof of the widespread interest excited by the object of the gathering, and of the universal disposition to help so good a cause. The concert began with "God save the Queen," as arranged by the late Vincent Novello, solos by Mdlle Valleria, Miss Wilmers, Mr M'Guckin, and Herr Friedmann; after which the orchestra had the field to itself for some time, playing in succession the sublime Funeral March from the Eroica, and the entire "C minor" of the illustrious musician from whom Vienna derives so much of its artistic glory. The fitness of these selections for the occasion could no more be disputed than the skill with which Herr Richter conducted the performance, or the zeal with which his efforts were supported. The second part began with the Austrian National Hymn, "God preserve and bless our Emperor," specially arranged for chorus, orchestra, and organ by Mr F. H. Cowen. Then Mdme Roze sang "Softly sighs"; Mdme Patey, the "Creation's Hymn" of Beethoven; and Mr M'Guckin, "Deeper and deeper still"; these individual efforts preceding the Prayer ensemble in the combat scene of Lohengrin. Mdlle Valleria next gave Cowen's song, "Who knows?"; Mdme Rose Hersee, the song of Elizabeth in Tannhäuser; Mdme Liebhart, "Sweet spirit, hear my prayer"; and Mr Burgon, "The Lord worketh wonders"; after which the Tannhäuser overture brought the proceedings to an end. The audience, we are bound to say, were somewhat cold, but that is not unusual amid the chilling influences of the vast space in which they gathered. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales and a goodly number of distinguished persons graced the occasion.

——o——

PROVINCIAL.

MANCHESTER.—Mr Edward Lloyd was unable, through hoarseness, to appear at Mr de Jong's "Popular Concert" last week. In his absence, Mr de Jong had secured the services of Mr Abercrombie, whose contributions were "Angels at the window" (Berthold Tours), "Once Again" and "Sweethearts" (Sullivan). Mr Abercrombie has a pleasing tenor voice of moderate power, and a cultivated style which we have before had occasion to commend. He was an acceptable substitute for the popular singer whose place he supplied. At the same concert Signor Foli gave the "Drinking Song," from Der Freischütz, and Stephen Adams' "Vikings," meeting with his usual success; and Miss Hope Glen won applause in Pinsuti's "Shadow Land," and other well-known songs. The band played the overture to Die Felsenmühle (Reissiger), and Martha (Flotow), as well as several popular waltzes and marches, in their well-known efficient manner. The concert, altogether, went off with éclat.

PLAISTOW (Kent).—The first concert of the present season of the Plaistow Choral Society took place at the Town Hall on December 20th, in aid of the funds of the Bromley Cottage Hospital. Although started a comparatively short time ago—says the Bromley Record—the Plaistow Choral Society has taken firm root, and numbering, as it now does, over a hundred members, it bids fair to become by far the best Choral Society in the neighbourhood. The programme consisted of "Hear my Prayer" (Mendelssohn), solo by Miss Jessie Jones. Later on Miss Jones introduced a new song, "The Child's Quire," the composition of the conductor, Mr F. Lewis Thomas, and gained for it a unanimous encore. We believe this was its first time of performance in public, and, judging by the loudly expressed approval of the audience, it is likely to become popular. Mr Parkins sang Gounod's "Guardian Angel" in an artistic manner, and in the second part joined Miss Jones in the duet from The Bride, "Why droops thy head?" Mr Lewis Thomas gave the air "Arm, arm, ye brave," and the celebrated buffo aria, "Non più andrai," in his best manner, the last-named being re-demanded. The second part of the programme consisted mainly of Mackenzie's new cantata, The Bride. Produced last September at the Worcester Festival, this work has received considerable attention from the musical public, and its early introduction into the Plaistow Choral Society shows praiseworthy anxiety on the part of the committee to keep pace with the current of modern musical thought. All the numbers were most admirably given by the choir; each gradation of tone being observed, and, even what is more rare in a chorus, there was a distinct and intelligible dramatic reading of the music. The conductor, in conjunction with his brother, played two duets for two pianos, by Saint-Saëns and Weber. Mr F. W. Partridge and Mr W. Henry Thomas proved themselves most able accompanists, and Mr F. Lewis Thomas conducted with zeal and discretion. It only remains to add that much of the success of the concert was due to the Hon. Sec., Mr Edward Latter, who worked most indefatigably in its behalf.

IPSWICH.—Mr Lindley Nunn acted wisely when he selected the opera of Martha for one of his winter concerts. Miss Gertrude Nunn, who sang the principal soprano part, is the daughter of Mr John Nunn, of Penzance, niece of Mr Lindley Nunn, and younger sister of Miss Henrietta Nunn, who took the part of the Widow in Elijah last year. Miss F. Robertson (contralto), and Mr Bernard Lane are both known to Ipswich audiences, while Mr Albert M'Guckin and other professionals were equal to the occasion. The chorus consisted of 23 basses, 8 tenors, 25 altos, and 53 sopranos. The band numbered 19, including several artistes from London and elsewhere, among whom was Mr John Nunn, of Penzance. The opera was sung throughout in a very satisfactory way. Miss Nunn, in the well-known air, "The last Rose of Summer," was heartily applauded. Mr Bernard Lane acquitted himself admirably in the part of Lionel, his rendering of the opening bars of the quintet, "May heaven above forgive thee," being particularly good. Mr Fletcher (Plunkett) has a fine bass voice, and was quite at home in the well-known "Beer song." The spinning-wheel quartet was given with spirit, and the quartet, "All good angels," with due solemnity. Mr Nunn must be congratulated on the eminently successful way in which the performance was carried out. In conclusion, we may add, that the concert was satisfactorily heard at the residence of Mr E. Packard, jun., at Bramford (a distance of three miles), by means of the Gower-bell telephone. The choruses were heard distinctly, the solos also, the higher notes of Miss Gertrude Nunn making their way to Bramford with marvellous effect. Another part which went splendidly in the estimation of the distant hearers was the quintet and chorus, "Ah, may Heaven above forgive thee." The result of Mr Packard's highly successful and interesting experiment proves that a scarcely dreamed of future awaits the telephone.

Digitized by Google

—o—

LONDON BALLAD CONCERTS.

Mr John Boosey gave the second of his Morning Ballad Concerts on Wednesday, at St. James's Hall, and was again successful in obtaining a large audience. The first part of the programme was devoted to compositions by Mr Arthur Sullivan, rendered by vocalists who have often obtained for them the unanimous approbation of the ballad-loving public, and two new singers, i.e., new to Mr John Boosey's concerts—Mrs Hutchinson (mezzo-soprano) and Mdme Isabel Fassett (contralto). Both made a favourable impression, Mrs Hutchinson in "My dearest heart" and Mdme Fassett in "Golden days" and "Will he come?" In the second part the usual enthusiasm was manifested by the audience after Stephen Adams' "Viking's song" (Signor Foli); Sullivan's "Sweethearts" (Mr Edward Lloyd); "The wedding day," by Blumenthal (Mdme Antoinette Sterling); "The Barkshire Tragedy," by Behrend (Mr Santley); and "The miller and the maid," by Marzials (Miss Mary Davies). Mrs Hutchinson's sympathetic rendering of an Irish melody set to Tom Moore's beautiful words :—

"Come rest in this bosom, my own stricken deer,
Though the herd have fled from thee, thy home is still here;
Here still is the smile that no cloud can o'ercast,
And a heart and a hand all thy own to the last,"

must not be passed over without record. Mr Sydney Naylor, as usual, was a most efficient conductor. Mr Boosey announces a concert of Irish songs and ballads for Wednesday evening next, and for the following Wednesday evening (January 25) "The Burns' annual Birthday Concert."

Mr Walter Macfarren purposes giving, during his series of Orchestral Concerts (the first of which is announced to take place on Saturday evening, Feb. 25th), the following interesting compositions :—Beethoven's Symphony, in C minor (No. 5), and his overture to Leonora (No. 3); Weber's overture to Oberon; Spohr's symphony, Die Weihe der Töne (The Power of Sound), and his Dramatic Concerto for Violin; Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto (Op. 64), his overtures to Ruy Blas and A Midsummer Night's Dream, as well as the Scherzo, Notturno, and Wedding March, from the same work; Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto, in A minor; Sterndale Bennett's Pianoforte Concerto, in C minor; Alfredo Piatti's "Fantasia Romantica," for violoncello (first time in London); G. A. Macfarren's overture to St John the Baptist, and his own Symphony, in B flat (MS.), his Pastoral Overture (MS.), his overtures to Hero and Leander (MS.) and King Henry V. (MS.), first time in London, as well as his Pianoforte Concert-stück, in E. Mr Walter Macfarren has engaged a band of seventy as well as the following artists, who will appear in the course of the series of concerts :—Herr Joachim and M. Sainton (violin), Signor Piatti (violoncello), Misses Cantelo and Margaret Gyde, and Mr Charlton T. Speer (pianoforte). The vocalists will be Miss Mary Davies, Miss Clara Samuell, and Mdme Patey; Mr Edward Lloyd and Mr Santley.

Mr Edward R. Terry, on Wednesday evening last, was presented, by the choir of St Peter's, Paddington, with a handsome testimonial, on his resigning the post of organist and choirmaster at the above church, which he has held for eight and a half years The presentation took the form of a beautifully illuminated address, expressing esteem for him as a friend, and admiration of his talent as a musician. This was accompanied by an ebony and gold cabinet, containing bound volumes of all Handel's and Mendelssohn's oratorios, and works by Bach, Beethoven, Sterndale Bennett, Barnby, Guilmant, H. Smart, Spohr, &c. Mr Terry returned his acknowledgments in an appropriate manner, and the vicar and churchwarden expressed their appreciation of and regret at losing his valuable services.

SCRAPS FROM PARIS.

At the Grand Opera, everyone concerned is actively working away at M. Ambroise Thomas's Françoise de Rimini, which will probably be produced somewhere about the end of February. M. Lalo's new ballet, too, will shortly see the light of the float. It is said that M. Vaucorbeil intends reviving Gluck's Armide for Mad. Krauss, but it is not stated when he will do so.

At the Opéra-Comique, the programme has been agreeably varied by the revival of M. Salomon's Aumônier du Régiment and Adolphe Adam's Toréador. The part of Caroline in the latter work was sustained by Mdlle Merguillier, a young lady who, unknown before the curtain went up, "sang, and found herself famous," to parody a well-used quotation. Whether she is destined to be as successful in other characters is something the Future alone can decide, but at present all Paris is talking of her. She has only lately left the Conservatory, where she studied under MM. Archaimbaut and Mocker. It may be said that she really owes her triumph to Mad. Christine Nilsson, because, but for that lady, her career might not have taken its present course. Having heard her some years since at Cannes, the celebrated Swedish prima donna gave her a letter of warm recommendation to M. Ambroise Thomas, who forthwith received her into the institution over which he presides, and where she remained for four years. In 1880, she carried off the first prize for singing. She possesses a very agreeable voice, a good presence, and decided histrionic talent. The other two parts in Le Toréador were confided to MM. Taskin and Bertin, who acquitted themselves admirably, and, like the new star, were frequently and warmly applauded.

It would be premature to predict a long run for the new three-act opera, La Taverne des Trabans, although the libretto is the joint production of MM. Erckmann-Chatrian and Jules Barbier. It is possible that two gentlemen, like the first two mentioned, may be admirable novelists, and even write a successful piece for the Théâtre-Français, and yet need sufficient knowledge of the stage to make them good librettists. Such has been the case in the present instance. The libretto furnished by MM. Erckmann-Chatrian and set to music by M. Henri Maréchal, was, on being put on the stage, found so weak, that the assistance of M. Jules Barbier was invoked. His long experience and great tact worked comparative wonders, but could not well make much out of nothing, and that is about what the libretto was in its original shape. The public can scarcely be blamed—especially in this age of sensational dramas both on and off the stage—for not taking an all-absorbing interest in the quarrel of two old friends—even though they may be Alsatians—which prevents two fond lovers, the daughter of one friend and the nephew of the other, from becoming man and wife. It is not surprising that the composer has not displayed much inspiration in his score; there was nothing to inspire him. However, he has written some very pleasing numbers, foremost among which may be mentioned the majority of those in the first act and a burlesque symphony in the third. The cast includes Mesdes Nicot-Vauchelet, Vidal, MM. Fugère, Belhomme, Grivot, and Nicot, who sing their music well and exert themselves most conscientiously to stir up the public to enthusiasm—mais à l'impossible nul n'est tenu.

M. Herold, Senator and Prefect of the Seine, is dead. His proudest boast was that he was the son of the gifted composer to whose pen we owe Zampa and the Pré aux Clercs. Though not one himself, he was always doing something to advance the interest of musicians, and his loss will be long and deeply felt by them. Another celebrity in the world of art who has departed this life is M. Jean Chéret, the famous scenic artist. For four days previous to his decease he suffered greatly.

Hamburgh.—A new comic opera, Zwei Wittwen (Two Widows), has been produced with more than ordinary success at the Stadt-theater. The libretto, adapted from the Bohemian original, is by Roderich Fels. The music is from the pen of F. Smetana, concerning whom the Neue Berliner Musikzeitung contains the following information :—

"This composer was born on the 2nd May, 1824, at Leutomischl, and when only six years of age appeared in public as a pianist. His master was J. Proksch. After acting for a long time as conductor of the Philharmonic Concerts in Gothenburg, he was, in 1866, appointed conductor-in-chief at the National Theatre, Prague, and retained the post till compelled to resign, in 1874, by deafness."

Digitized by Google

MUSIC AT THE ANTIPODES.*

(From our own Correspondent.)

The second of a series of concerts to celebrate the opening of a new organ in the Presbyterian Church, Toorak, was held on the 16th ult., under the direction of Mr T. H. Guenett, organist. A chorus of forty voices assisted.

The Catholic Young Men's Societies of St Patrick's, St Kilda, and Emerald Hill gave a concert on the 20th ult., at the Athenæum, in aid of the funds of the Irish National Land League. M. H. Kowalski, the eminent pianist and composer, consented to assist, but, after the programme had been printed, requested his name to be withdrawn, as when he promised to play he was unaware that the Land League possessed any political significance. The promoters assured Kowalski that they never intended he should identify himself with the objects of the League, and consequently struck out the reference to the organization. Kowalski, however, at the last moment, wrote to say that owing to physical incapacity resulting from laborious rehearsal for the production of his lyrical drama, Vercingetorix, he would be unable to attend. This was produced at the Town Hall, in the presence of the Governor, the Marquis of Normanby, and a large audience. The drama is founded on the story of Vercingetorix, the Gallic general and patriot, related by Cæsar in the eighth book of his Commentaries. It was the first occasion of the work being presented in English. The libretto is from the pen of Mr J. Lake, A.B. The various parts were distributed as follows:—Vercingetorix, Signor L. Coy; Luctera, Mdme Gabriella Boema; Ambrokind, Signor Riccardi; Ambiorix, Signor Luisetti; A Country Lass, Mrs Kingsland; A Young Peasant, Mr Thrush; An Old Peasant, Mr Moyle. There was a large and efficient orchestra, with a chorus 250 in number, including the Melbourne Liedertafel and delegates from the Melbourne Philharmonic Society. The "drama," full of martial fire and passion (a love story being interpolated), was thoroughly well represented, and both performers and composer received the hearty plaudits of the audience.

La Fille du Tambour Major was presented on the same evening at the Bijou Theatre, the performers being all juveniles. It is played night after night. The bi-weekly organ recitals by Mr David Lee (City organist) in the Town Hall, continue to be attractive. A concert in aid of the Union Library and Building Fund of All Saints, Church of England, was given in the Town Hall, Prahrom, on the 27th ult. The singers were Misses Kate Thayer and Christian, R.A.M., Mr F. Lineker, and a quartet party consisting of Messrs Simmons, Davies, Lake, and Andrew. Mrs Lupton performed on the harp, and a string quartet was played by Messrs Curtis, Sutch, Jäger, and Gompritch. Mr. Summers acted as conductor.

At the first of a series of six farewell concerts at the Town Hall, given by August Wilhelmj, the eminent violinist, there was a mixed chorus of 150 voices, with an orchestra of fifty, conducted by Herr Max Vogrich. The orchestra performed the overture to Egmont, and pianoforte selections were introduced by Herr Vogrich. Wilhelmj played the concerto of Max Bruch, an air in D by Bach, and his own paraphrase on Walter's "Prize Song" from the Meistersinger von Nurnberg. Miss Marie Conran, an accomplished mezzo-soprano, sang the "Prayer" from Tannhäuser. The second part consisted of selections from Wagner's Flying Dutchman, comprising the overture, "Sailors' Chorus," "Spinning Chorus," "Legend of the Flying Dutchman," and Finale. By general request the same programme was repeated at the second concert. These concerts are under the direction of Mr J. C. Duff.

J. T. L. F.

Melbourne, Oct. 11, 1881.

VIENNA (correspondence).—Thanks to the fact of Pauline Lucca and Bianchi appearing as Valentine and the Queen respectively, the Huguenots has proved more than usually attractive at the Imperial Operahouse. The Beethoven Prize of 500 florins, offered by the Society of the Friends of Music, has been awarded to R. Fuchs for a Pianoforte Concerto in C minor. The adjudicators were Hellmesberger, Richter, Fuchs, Brahms, Goldmark, Gericke, and Krenn.—A morning concert, organized by Pauline Lucca, for those who had relatives killed in the disaster at the Ringtheater, produced 2,044 florins, after payment of all expenses.

* Delayed in transmission.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The third Subscription Orchestral Concert of the season was entirely devoted to compositions by Mendelssohn, presented in chronological order. These began with an "Introduction and Allegro" from Symphony No. 9 (in D), for full orchestra (MS.), written in 1822, at the age of thirteen. Next, came an adagio in E, for "strings," from Symphony No. 10 (C major), also MS., composed in 1823. Both selections were interesting, as showing the wonderful precocity of one who, in late years, fully confirmed the impression made in boyhood, and whose matured productions now rank so high in the estimation of the musical world. The third number was the well-known and universally popular "programme-overture," A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage (1828), to which, it may be taken for granted, Mr Manns and his orchestra brought a reading to satisfy the most critical ear. Next followed the Pianoforte Concerto No. 1, in G minor (1828)—the "Munich Concerto," as it is generally styled—splendidly executed by Marie Krebs. The quantity of tone this young lady produces may not be specially powerful; but there is no mistaking the refined quality and artistic feeling that invariably distinguish her performances. In short, Miss Marie quite "carried away" her audience, and loud and long was the applause at the end of the concerto. Nor must I omit to record the able and careful manner in which the accompaniments were given (at times, to be sure, just loud enough)—but——&c.

The "Scotch Symphony," in A minor (1842), commenced Part II. At one or two points I felt, as it were, a degree of unsteadiness in the otherwise very striking interpretation of this great masterpiece; but we are so accustomed to something not far off perfection from Mr Manns that whenever things do not go absolutely according to the ideal entertained and so frequently realized by the accomplished conductor who has raised up a temple to music in the Crystal Palace, we may safely look out for a grumbler or so. I should add, at the same time, how admirably well the opening Andante con moto was rendered, as well as the truly Orphean adagio, than which nothing could have been more exquisite and satisfying. Marie Krebs chose for her solo displays two Songs without Words and the ever-popular Rondo Capriccioso in E major, again captivating all hearers. The Scherzo and "Wedding March" from A Midsummer Night's Dream (1843) brought this most delightful and memorable concert to a close. During the evening Miss Hope Glenn sang "But the Lord is mindful of His own" (St Paul),* "The First Violet," "By the Cradle," and "In Spring"—all gems, cabinet pictures indeed, and of the most refined.

At the last Saturday Popular Concert the selection included Schubert's Marche Militaire, in D (arranged for orchestra by Mr Manns); Haydn's Symphony in D (No. 2 of the Salomon series); Lachner's Variations and March from Suite No. 1, in D; Rossini's Overture to Robert Bruce; and Gounod's Ballet Airs from La Reine de Saba. Miss Hope Glenn was once more the vocalist of the evening—and once more universally acceptable.

EXIT CLOWN.

(To the Editor of the "Daily Telegraph.")

SIR,—I have read so much recently of the decay of pantomime and the loss to the Christmas stage of what was once recognized as a genuine art, that I am tempted to claim your indulgence on behalf of the members of the time-honoured harlequinade. The question is not whether the art of pantomime has degenerated, but whether the Christmas clown is wanted at all, and will not in a short time cease to exist altogether. Costly extravaganzas, elaborate scenery, interminable processions and ballets, music-hall singers, political songs, and questionable parodies have succeeded in diminishing the harlequinade to a shadow of its former self; the more favoured artists eat up the lion's share of the long hours allotted to the performance, and "Hot Codlins" is never called for by the boys in the gallery. The children—bless them—still laugh, and I believe enjoy the harlequinade as much as ever; but it is difficult to persuade a young clown to study his art or his legitimate business when he is hurried on to the stage close upon midnight amidst a flutter of departing people.—Yours obediently.

AN OLD CLOWN.

* "But the Lord is mindful," &c, should never be publicly sung apart from the oratorio—for reasons no one knows better than Mr Manns.—Dr Blinge.

Digitized by Google

FIRES IN THEATRES.

(To the Editor of the "Times.")

SIR,—The dreadful loss of life caused by the burning of the Ring Theatre, Vienna, has naturally caused great alarm, not only to the frequenters of theatres, but to the community at large. A great deal has in consequence been written of late about the necessity of improving the present modes of exit from our theatres, so as to insure, as far as possible, safety to the public in the event of a fire or panic. Little or nothing, however, has been suggested for the reform of the present unsatisfactory condition of the mode of lighting the stage, dressing-rooms, &c., of theatres, and also to further guard against fire by steeping the scenery and other inflammable materials on the stage in a liquid now used extensively abroad, whereby the material so steeped chars without bursting into a flame when under the action of fire; also to compel theatres to provide proper exits and the same appliances for fire on the stage as in the auditorium.

When the fact is borne in mind that nearly all the fires in theatres have been caused by accidents or negligence on the stage, too much importance cannot be attached to the necessity of a thorough reform in this department. Of course, we who are "behind the scenes" soon get used to the reckless manner in which the gas and lights are used on the stage, but whenever friends come "behind" to see me during a performance, they invariably express their astonishment at the alarming manner in which the lighting is carried out. Candles are frequently used and left burning in dressing-rooms, and matches left lying about anywhere. Then, again, for reasons I never could discover, the stage doors to theatres are of the narrowest and most inconvenient kind, which necessitate "Indian-file" when entering or leaving. The approach to the stage door during a change of scene is often completely blocked up either by scenery or properties, so that in the event of fire during the performance, when the stage is crowded, there is but a slender chance of escape for those on the stage. This being the season for pantomimes and other spectacular performances, when hundreds of people are frequently on the stage grouped in the "transformation scenes" and many girls and children in flimsy petticoats are suspended in mid-air, I hope I shall not be thought an alarmist if I advocate the greatest caution being enforced; as in the case of fire, with so much material of an inflammable nature, with so many people crowded together, with such narrow exits, often blocked up, and with such confusion as would ensue, the loss of life would necessarily be very great. In all the leading cities of Europe (excepting in Great Britain) the most stringent reform is being carried out, resulting in the closing of many theatres until the alterations have been effected. In Rome alone four theatres have been closed—viz., the Apollo, Metastasio, Argentina, and Capranica, the latter theatre being ordered to be entirely rebuilt on account of its exits being deemed by the Government inspector as "irreparably deficient." In Vienna every one knows that the Emperor has been compelling all the theatres to immediately provide additional exits, &c., while in Paris, Berlin, &c., the Police Commissioners have issued the strictest regulations for all public places of amusement.—I have the honour to be, sir, your most obedient servant,

MARIE ROZE MAPLESON.

Hawthorn Lodge, Finchley New Road, N. W.

BALFE'S Painter of Antwerp is announced for early production at Her Majesty's Theatre. The Morning Post in a notice of Mr Carl Rosa's prospectus has the following remarks:—"A special amount of pleasure is in store for the admirers of Balfe's music in the opera The Painter of Antwerp, to be produced for the first time in England. It was written at the best period of his career, and contains a wealth of melody of that peculiar haunting quality for which his music has ever been, and still deservedly continues to be, popular. The present generation of operagoers knows so much that is favourable of the labours of Balfe, even through the medium of isolated ballads, that it is therefore with peculiar fitness that Mr Carl Rosa seeks to make the music-loving world acquainted with an opera which is full of those characteristic attributes which won for the composer so much admiration abroad as well as at home. Balfe was the first Englishman who was commissioned by the directors of the Opéra in Paris to write a work for their theatre. He also was honoured with a like compliment from the managers of the Opéra Comique. In Germany likewise his genius was held in high estimation, as was shown by the production of The Bondman, as well as of versions of The Four Sons of Aymon, and The Bohemian Girl (in the German language); and in Italy he received commissions to write works for the lyric stage, one of which, Pittore e Duca, produced at Trieste, Mr Carl Rosa intends to bring out in its English form as The Painter of Antwerp."

ANNIE LOUISE CARY.

(From the "Boston Post" and "Chicago Times.")

Annie Louise Cary dutifully writes weekly letters to her step-mother and sister in the little town of Durham, Maine. One of the letters came dated at a city in Ohio. She writes that her throat, which has been troubling her of late, is now much better. She occasionally alludes to her approaching marriage with James Lorillard, in New York. The wedding will occur early next fall. The last time she will sing in public will be in June next at City Hall, Portland. The age of Annie Louise is 41 years, and that of the bridegroom elect is 35. They will reside in New York. A Durham gentleman who was one of Miss Cary's neighbours and schoolmates, said recently: "There wasn't a boy or girl in the whole school that could climb a tree or jump over a fence so well as Annie Louise. Bareheaded and bareshouldered, she once took a wild colt to break, and he ran with her to the borders of Auburn before she stopped him. She came back laughing."

[Why did Colonel James Henry Mapleson, the operatic stagyrite and latest initial noviciate in the Eleusynian mysteries of Bayreuth, allow Annie Louise to slip through his fingers?—Dr Blinge.]

WAIFS.

The statement that Mr Charles Hallé intended henceforth to discontinue his pianoforte recitals in St James's Hall is unfounded. So much the better; we cannot just now afford to be deprived of entertainments at the same time so instructive and delightful. The oftener the imperishable models bequeathed to art by the truly great masters are brought before us by so ardent and unflinching an advocate the farther off is that decay of the musical art which pessimists are constantly deploring before it can be fairly said to have begun.—Graphic.

The Pergola, Florence, remains closed this season.

Bees think there is no place like comb (honeycomb).

A new theatrical journal, Ariele, has been started in Naples.

Wagner's Lohengrin has been well received at the Fenice, Venice.

Genée's latest buffo opera, Rosina, has been produced at the Carl-theater, Vienna.

After three performances of La Favorita, the Politeama, Trieste, was suddenly closed.

Orsini's new opera, I Burgravi, was but coldly received at the Teatro Costanzi, Rome.

The Popular Concerts, under the direction of Pedrotti, have been a great success in Turin.

La Juive, with Mdlle Turolla as the heroine, has proved attractive at the San Carlo, Lisbon.

Mr T. B. Whitney, Miss Clara Louise Kellogg's future husband, is a rich widower, aged forty.

Mr Ambrose Austin completes to-day the twenty-fifth year of his management of St James's Hall.

The opera which Mancinelli is now writing will be produced next Carnival at the Apollo, Rome.

The young and much lauded violinist, Teresina Tua, after leaving Milan, has proceeded to Florence.

The Marchese Capranica del Grillo, husband of Mad. Ristori, is recovering from his serious illness.

H. de Ahna, hitherto simply Concertmeister, has been created a "Royal Prussian Court Professor."

Poliuto (Donizetti's) has been a great success in Malaga, with Tamberlik, and Bonetti, the baryton.

The Becker Quartet were recently giving concerts in Milan. They not long since gave a concert in Trieste.

It is rumoured that Italian opera, under the management of Tamberlik, is to be re-established in Paris.

Joseph Wieniawski took part in the second concert of the Association des Artistes Musiciens, Brussels.

Johannes Brahms' Deutsches Requiem was recently performed, under the direction of Pembaur, at Innsbruck.

For the greater security of the public, the authorities of Naples have prohibited the use of fireworks in theatres.

Rubinstein is expected in Berlin to confer with Roderich Fels, who is writing a comic operatic libretto for him.

Ere these lines appear in print, Serrano's opera, Mitridates, will have been produced at the Teatro Real, Madrid.

M. Maurel has been engaged by M. Campocasso for a short round of performances at the Grand-Théâtre, Marseilles.

Digitized by Google

Tidvadar Nachèz, one of the young generation of violinists, has been playing with success in Wiesbaden and Brunswick.

A two weeks' season of German opera, with Mdme Geistinger as the "star," will probably be given in Philadelphia, U.S.

The King of Bavaria is said to have witnessed incognito M. Massenet's Hérodiade at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, Brussels.

The Municipal Council of Königsberg have rejected, by 57 votes to 22, the proposal for granting a subsidy to the Stadttheater.

Paul Geisler, the composer, is engaged by Neumann as second conductor at the Wagner performances in Paris (?) and London.

Sig. D'Avanzo chose the part of Genaro in Lucrezia Borgia for his début at the Teatro Real, Madrid, but created little impression.

Gustav Walter and his daughter, Mina Walter, have been singing as Faust and Margarethe (Gounod's) at the Operahouse, Frankfort-on-the-Maine.

Mr F. H. Cowen and Herr Max Bruch are candidates for the conductors of the Gentlemen's Concerts at Manchester, in place of Mr Charles Hallé, resigned.

The students at the Guildhall School of Music number 1,150. There are upwards of eighty professors, with Mr Weist Hill as principal.—London Figaro.

H. Franz Mannstaedt, of Berlin, being raised to the dignity of professor, will succeed, next September, as Ducal Capellmeister in Meiningen, Büchner, who retires.

Oliver King, who accompanied the Princess Louise as pianist to Canada, has left Ottawa for New York with the intention of producing several of his orchestral works.

The Teatro Regio, Turin, besides being lighted by electricity, is connected with the offices of the Municipality by an automatic telephonic apparatus, for use in case of fire.

According to the Vienna papers the contributions for the benefit of the surviving sufferers by the calamity at the Ringtheater amounted some time since to 1,017,000 florins.

The list of artists at the first concert given this season by the Cercle Musical, Ghent, included Jules de Swert and Mary and Ella Lemmens, daughters of Mdme Lemmens-Sherrington.

The Teatro Comunale, Trieste, has been closed by the Podestà, in order that certain precautions considered necessary for the public safety in case of an outbreak of fire, may be forthwith taken.

One of the first violins in Theodore Thomas's orchestra, New York, has been tried for having six or eight wives, all living. He cannot be classed among musicians who are wedded to art alone.

The Vogls, man and wife, have been refused permission to take part in the Lohengrin performances in Paris, on the ground that their absence would interfere with the arrangements at the Theatre Royal, Munich.

Mr Barton M'Guckin will make his first appearance in opera in London, next Friday, at Her Majesty's Theatre, as Wilhelm Meister, in Mignon, a character he has played successfully during the provincial tour of Mr Carl Rosa's opera company.

—o—

NEW MUSIC.

Messrs Ashdown & Parry may always be depended upon for a good supply of new pianoforte music at Christmas time. Their recent issue of pieces for the ball-room includes an excellent Cavalry Galop by Carlo Volti, having melodies largely based upon bugle calls, and therefore appropriate and characteristic. The same composer's Clar de Lune Waltz and Æsthetic Polka, if less distinctive, are easy to play, of decided rhythm, and recommended by title-pages that, in their way, are works of art. The Polka des Siffleurs of Michael Watson justifies its name by introducing passages to be whistled. Whether this device enhances its merit or not depends upon taste; but the Polka is otherwise a good thing, and likely to win the suffrages of dancers. The Herzenshebe Waltzer, by Joseph Labinski, may be praised almost without reserve. The themes are in nearly every case graceful, and the resources of the waltz rhythm often ingeniously displayed. Of pieces for the drawing-room Messrs Ashdown & Parry offer five by Paul Beaumont. Con Amore is a simple theme variously treated, but not so as to present any difficulty. It will, no doubt, find many admirers. A serenade Sous le Balcon is also simple and easy, a pretty theme, representative of the lover's song, being accompanied by chords and arpeggios, more or less imitative of the guitar. The good taste of this little effusion cannot be questioned. Mr Beaumont's caprice, Souvenir de Seville, strikes a lighter chord; but this, likewise, keeps within the ordinary means of amateurs, who will find it very agreeable both to play and hear. Another composition of the same character, Caprice Espagno, is somewhat more difficult and not quite so grateful, while in his morceau de salon, Sang Froid, the author assumes a bolder and more vigorous tone with considerable success. None of these works, though all are obviously meant for popular use, show a leaning towards vulgarity, and therefore we commend them. A batch of pieces by Victor Delacour next claims attention. Menuet Melodique, if not particularly new in theme or treatment, is graceful and pretty, which may also be said of the pensée musicale, Viens à moi, despite the conventional passages in which it abounds. A caprice, Zephyrs de Mai—the character of which may be inferred from the title—needs true and agile fingers, and provides capital exercise in scales and arpeggios. We can recommend Cœur Joyeux as a drawing-room piece at once unpretentious and pleasing, and with it "Loin de toi" may safely be ranked. An easy "Tyrolienne" and a bluette "Jeunesse d'Amour" are other pieces by the same author deserving mention.

Messrs Ashdown and Parry's latest pianoforte pieces include several things worthy of particular note. A "Tambourine Dance," by Frank Austin, is as bright and spirited as need be, and by no means unadapted for use as an exercise; a gavotte, Air de Ballet, by Lizzie Hartland, may also be commended, as may, for different reasons, Vincent Adler's Styrienne. The last-named is decidedly fantastic, and does credit to its composer's fancy. In his Suite de Pièces, Mr Edwin M. Lott shows that he has made a careful study of the antique. The fugue, à 2 voci, is well written, and flows with ease through its brief course; but the more attractive movements are an Allemande, Courante, and Air avec trois Doubles. These are excellent in their way, and will accord nicely with the rage for everything old-English. Spring Time, a rêverie by Haydn Mellor, will find admirers among the lovers of prettiness per se, nor will the claims of Day Dream, an idyl, by E. Aguilar, be passed over. It is true that these pieces tell an old story in a somewhat familiar way, but of the story and the way amateurs do not easily tire. On the other hand, Mr J. Storer's Nocturne Poètique is scarcely worthy of its name, and Mr A. Klitz's Woodnymph's Revel is a showy piece of the most conventional type. The vocal music of this firm includes a setting by Mr Walter Macfarren, of Longfellow's "O Hemlock Tree," in which we note a good deal worthy of praise. Favourable mention is also deserved by Mr E. M. Lott's "Two White Roses;" Mr J. Storer's "The Flower that smiles to-day;" and Mr W. A. Cruikshank's "My true Love hath my heart" a very commendable, if not entirely adequate, setting of Sir Philip Sydney's well-known lines.

Verviers.—The Municipality of this town, where Vieuxtemps was born, have ordered of the French sculptor, Godebsky, a bronze statue of the celebrated violinist. Godebsky is the sculptor who executed for Halle, another Belgian town, a statue of his father-in-law, Servais, the violoncellist. He also executed Theophile Gautier's monument in Paris.

Brussels.—The Correctional Tribunal has just sentenced a bookseller, for selling scores of Guillaume Tell and Faust smuggled into Belgium, to pay 216 francs to the poor of the town, the cost of the action, and 1,000 francs damages. This sentence is the first of its kind here, and there will, says the Guide Musical, be numerous other actions for infringement on literary property.

Darmstadt.—Carl Brandt, the celebrated stage-machinist, to whom operatic representations in Germany have for some years been so deeply indebted, died here in Christmas week. He had a large share in the mechanical marvels which distinguished the Nibelungen performances at the Bayreuth Festival-Stage-Play-House, and the plans of the machinery and mechanical effects in Wagner's new work, Parsifal, are also his.

Berlin.—Another musical treat was afforded on Saturday, Jan. 7, by Hans von Bülow, who, with his Meiningen orchestra, gave a Mendelssohn concert in the Singakademie, which was attended by the Crown Prince and Crown Princess and others of the Court. The Scotch Symphony was received with much applause, and Mr G. F. Hatton, a young Englishman, elicited warm praise for his capriccio brillante on the pianoforte with orchestral accompaniment. Herr Rubinstein, who was present, was an attentive listener. What between Mdme Albani and Mr Hatton, the musical reputation of England is beginning to find defenders here.—Times Correspondence.

Advertisements.

NEW VOCAL QUARTET.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" Arranged for Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, and Bass by G. B. Allen. Price 4s. London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

The only Gold Medal for Wind Instruments with Keys, in the Paris Universal Exhibition of 1878, was unanimously awarded by the Jury to Messrs P. Goumas & Co., for the fine quality of tone and finish of their Instruments.

SPECIAL MANUFACTORY OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FOR

CLARIONETS, FLUTES, PICCOLOS, OBOES, BASSOONS, COR ANGLAIS, FLAGEOLETS, AND SAXOPHONES.

P. GOUMAS & Co.

(Late Buffet, Crampon & Co.),
Established 1830.

Nine Prize Medals have been awarded to Goumas & Co. for general excellence and improvements in the Manufacture of Wind Instruments with Keys.
Manufacturers of all kinds of Wood Wind Instruments for Military Bands, Musical Instrument Makers to Her Majesty's Army and Navy, and to the Armies, Navies, and Conservatoires of France, Belgium, Italy, Russia, Austria, Spain, America, &c.
Manufactory at Mantes (Seine et Oise), France. Paris: Passage du Grand Cerf, 18 et 20.
LONDON: 39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET.
Price Lists sent free on application.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF

ALL KINDS OF MUSIC STRINGS FOR ALL MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Sole Depôt for Signor Andrea Ruffini's (of Naples) Celebrated Strings for Soloists, manufactured by him on a system invented by Mons. J. B. Vuillaume, of Paris.
Sole Agent for Charles Albert's (of Philadelphia, U.S.) new Patent Improved Chin Rest; also his improved String Gauge.
39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, W.
Price Lists free on application.
All kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner on powerful machines made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S). A Delicious Beverage and Tonic.
Made from Port Wine, Liebig's Extract of Meat, and Extract of Malt; Nutritious, Strengthening, Stimulating, Flesh-forming, Health Restoring, suitable for the Robust in Health as well as the Invalid. Strongly recommended by the Medical Faculty. An Immediate Benefit is experienced after taking it; the Frame is Invigorated, and no ill effects follow.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Testimonials.

Sir,—A short time since I was induced by the novelty of the title to send for a bottle of your Liebig's Extract of Meat and Malt Wine. I was perfectly acquainted with the value of the Extractum Carnis, and not quite a stranger to the invigorating and fortifying properties of malt wine, and therefore felt a natural curiosity to test them when combined. Men who work hard, as I do, not muscular hard work, but that which is quite as exhausting, viz., brain work, very often experience the need of, and have sometimes an almost irresistible craving for, a "pick me up;" and very often the panacea for a time for lassitude, and that state of mind which renders work irksome, are alcoholic stimulants, the use of which must sooner or later end disastrously. The man who can furnish a remedy sure, certain, and harmless, for the lassitude which follows constant brain work is a benefactor of his species, and may be said to have added many years of usefulness to the lives of useful men. Your extract, if a success, and when more generally known, will be used by all toilers of the mind.—Yours faithfully, O. D. RAY.
Thorpe Hamlet, Norwich, February 23rd, 1881.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Queen's Crescent, Haverstock Hill, London, March 5th, 1881.

Dear Sir,—Some time since, being greatly fatigued with over-work and long hours at business, my health (being naturally delicate) became ve y indifferent. I lost all energy, strength, and appetite, and was so weak as to be scarcely able to walk. As you are aware, I sent for a dozen of your Extract of Meat and Malt Wine, which, in a few days, pulled me up marvellously. Three or four glasses of it daily have quite altered and restored me to better health than ever, "without the assistance of a doctor." I am now giving it to my son, twelve years of age, whom we have always thought consumptive, and from a puny, ailing boy, he seems to be fast growing into a strong, healthy lad. Enclosed you have cheque. Please send me two dozen of the "Extract." With thanks for your prompt attention to my last, I am, Sir, yours truly, GEORGE A. TYLER.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Granspound, February 25th, 1881.

Mrs Coulson thanks Mr Coleman for the book and stamps, and she has no doubt but that "the tonic" is a good one. Mrs C. encloses twelve stamps for basket.
Mr Coleman.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Vicarage, Kingsbridge, Devon, January 25th, 1881.

Dear Sir,—We are ten miles from the railway, and have been snowed up, consequently the wine has only just arrived. I enclose a cheque for £2 11s. 6d. I like the wine, and will recommend it.—Yours faithfully,
Mr Coleman, Norwich. A. N. KINGSTON.

Pints, 30s. per dozen: Quarts, 50s. per dozen. Carriage paid to any Railway Station in Great Britain. Sample Bottle sent for 33 stamps.
P. O. Orders to be made payable to
COLEMAN & CO., MUSPOLE STREET, NORWICH.
Cheques crossed "London and Provincial Bank."
Sold by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the United Kingdom, in Bottles, 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. each. Ask for Coleman's Liebig's Extract of Meat and Malt Wine, and "See that you get it."

CHAPPELL'S VOCAL LIBRARY OF PART-SONGS, &c.

		Composed or Arranged by	Price
1.	Dulce Domum. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
2.	Down among the Dead Men. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
3.	The Girl I've left behind me. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
4.	British Grenadiers. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
5.	Long live England's Future Queen. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
6.	My task is ended (Song and Chorus). A.T.B.B.	Balfe	4d.
7.	Thus spake one Summer's Day. S.A.T.B.	Abt	2d.
8.	Soldiers' Chorus. T.T.B.B.	Gounod	4d.
9.	The Kermesse (Scene from Faust)	,,	6d.
10.	Up, quit thy bower. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	4d.
11.	Maidens, never go a-wooing. S.S.T.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
12.	Fagot Binders' Chorus	Gounod	4d.
13.	Sylvan Hours (for Six Female Voices)	Joseph Robinson	6d.
14.	The Gipsy Chorus	Balfe	4d.
15.	Ave Maria	Arcadelt	1d.
16.	Hark! the Herald Angels sing. S.A.T.B.	Mendelssohn	1d.
17.	England Yet (Solo and Chorus). S.A.T.B.	Jules Benedict	2d.
18.	The Shepherd's Sabbath Day. S.A.T.B.	J. L. Hatton	2d.
19.	Thoughts of Childhood. S.A.T.B.	Henry Smart	2d.
20.	Spring's Return. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
21.	An old Church Song. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
22.	Sabbath Bells. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
23.	Serenade. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
24.	Cold Autumn Wind. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
25.	Orpheus with his Lute. S.S.S.	Bennett Gilbert	2d.
26.	Lullaby. S.A.A.	,,	1d.
27.	This is my own, my native land. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
28.	March of the Men of Harlech. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
29.	God save the Queen. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
30.	Rule, Britannia. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
31.	The Retreat. T.T.B.B.	L. de Rille	2d.
32.	Lo! morn is breaking. S.S.S.	Cherubini	2d.
33.	We are Spirits. S.S.S.	G. A. Macfarren	4d.
34.	Market Chorus (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	Auber	4d.
35.	The Prayer (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
36.	The Water Sprites. S.A.T.B.	Kücken	2d.
37.	Eve's glittering Star. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
38.	When first the Primrose. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
39.	O Dewdrop bright. S.A.T.B	,,	1d.
40.	Sanctus from the Messe Solennelle. S.A.T.B.	Rossini	4d.
41.	Nine Kyries, Ancient and Modern	,,	2d.
42.	Sun of my soul. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	2d.
43.	'Twas fancy, and the ocean's spray. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
44.	A Prayer for those at Sea. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
45.	O Thou whose power (Prayer from Mose in Egitto)	Rossini	2d.
46.	The Guard on the Rhine. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
47.	The German Fatherland. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
48.	The Lord is my Shepherd (Quartet). S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
49.	Te Deum in F	Jackson	2d.
50.	Te Deum in F	Nares	2d.
51.	Charity (La Carita). S.S.S.	Rossini	4d.
52.	Cordelia. A.T.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	4d.
53.	I know. S.A.T.B.	Walter Hay	2d.
54.	Chorus of Handmaidens (from Fridolin)	A. Randegger	4d.
55.	The Offertory Sentences	Edmund Rogers	4d.
56.	The Red Cross Knight	Dr. Callcott	2d.
57.	The Chough and the Crow	Sir H. R. Bishop	3d.
58.	The "Carnovale"	Rossini	2d.
59.	Softly falls the moonlight	Edmund Rogers	4d.
60.	Air by Himmel	Henry Leslie	2d.
61.	Offertory Sentences	E. Sauerbrey	4d.
62.	The Resurrection	C. Villiers Stanford	6d.
63.	Our Boys (new Patriotic Song)	H J. Byron and W. M. Lutz	4d.
64.	The Men of Wales	Brinley Richards	2d.
65.	Dame Durden		1d.
66.	A little Farm well tilled	Hook	1d.
67.	There was a simple maiden	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
68.	Fair Hebe	,,	1d.
69.	Once I loved a maiden fair	,,	1d.
70.	The jovial man of Kent	,,	1d.
71.	The oak and the ash	,,	1d.
72.	Heart of Oak	,,	1d.
73.	Come to the sunset tree	W. A. Philpott	4d.
74.	May. S.A.T.B.	W. F. Banks	2d.
75.	Pure, lovely innocence (Il Roi de Lahore—Chorus for Female Voices)	G. Massenet	4d.
76.	A Love Idyl. S.A.T.B.	E. R. Terry	2d.
77.	Hail to the Woods! A.T.T.B.	J. Yarwood	2d.
78.	Near the town of Taunton Dean	Thomas J. Dudeney	2d.
79.	Our merry boys at sea	J. Yarwood	2d.
80.	The Shepherd's Farewell. S.A.T.B.	Berlioz	3d.
81.	When the sun sets o'er the mountains (Il Demonio)	A. Rubinstein	3d.
82.	Hymn of Nature	Beethoven	3d.
83.	Michaelmas Day (Humorous Part Songs, No. 1)	Walter Maynard	4d.
84.	Sporting Notes (Humorous Part Songs, No. 2)	Walter Maynard	4d.
85.	Austrian National Hymn	Haydn	4d.

LONDON:
CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND STREET, W.
City Branch—14 & 15, POULTRY.

Digitized by Google

SYDNEY SMITH'S
FOUR NEW PIECES.

SPERANZA.

ANDANTE ESPRESSIVO.

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

NONCHALANCE.

CAPRICE DE CONCERT.

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

I PIFFERARI.

MUSETTE MODERNE.

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

NABUCO.

GRAND FANTASIA ON THE OPERA OF VERDI.

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

SYDNEY SMITH'S NEW PIANO DUETS.

		s.	d.
SEMIRAMIDE.	Fantasia on Rossini's Opera - - - -	6	0
ROSE LEAVES.	Morceau Élégant - - - - -	5	0
BACCHANALE -	- - - - - - - -	5	0
LE RETOUR DE L'ARMÉE.	Morceau Militaire - - -	5	0

LONDON: ASHDOWN & PARRY, HANOVER SQUARE.

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, & SPALDING, at 3 and 5, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, January 14, 1882.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 60.—No. 3. SATURDAY, JANUARY 21, 1882. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 6d. Stamped.

WEDNESDAY NEXT.

THE BURNS' BIRTHDAY CONCERT.—ST JAMES'S HALL.

THE BURNS' ANNUAL BIRTHDAY CONCERT.—ST JAMES'S HALL, WEDNESDAY Next, at Eight o'clock. Artists: Miss Mary Davies and Miss Edith Santley, Mdme Patey, Mdme Mary Cummings, and Mdme Antoinette Sterling; Mr Edward Lloyd, Mr Frank Boyle, and Mr F. Barrington Foote. The South London Choral Association, under the direction of Mr L. C. Venables. Conductor—Mr SIDNEY NAYLOR. The programme will contain the following Songs, &c., by Burns: "O, wert thou in the cauld blast?" "Mary Morrison," "O, open the door." "Ye banks and braes," "Robin Adair," "Gae, bring to me a pint o' wine," "Afton Water," "A man's a man for a' that," "O' a' the airts the win' can blaw," "Scots wha hae," "Duncan Gray," "Highland Mary," "Green grow the rashes, O!" "There was a lad was born in Kyle," "Auld Lang Syne;" also the following popular Scotch Songs: "Wha'll be King but Charlie?" "An' ye shall walk in silk attire," "We're a' noddin'," "Bonnie Dundee," "Blue Bells of Scotland," "The Land o' the Leal," "The Standard on the Braes o' Mar," "The Lass o' Gowrie," "John Grumlie," "Jock o' Hazledean." Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Area, 4s. and 2s.; Balcony, 3s.; Gallery and Orchestra, 1s.; to be had at Austin's, St James's Hall; the usual Agents; and of Boosey & Co., 295, Regent Street.

MR SIMS REEVES has the honour to announce that his FIRST CONCERT of Operatic, National, and Miscellaneous Music will take place, at ST JAMES'S HALL, on TUESDAY Evening next, January 24th, at Eight o'clock. Mdme Marie Roze, Miss Spenser Jones, Mr Herbert Reeves, Mr Barrington Foote, Mr H. Pyatt, and Mr Sims Reeves. The Anemoic Union (under the direction of Mr Lazarus). Flute—Mr H. Nicholson. Oboe—Mr Malsch. Clarionet—Mr Lazarus. Horn—Mr T. E. Mann. Bassoon—Mr Wotton. Pianoforte—Mr S. Naylor. Messrs Broadwood's grand pianofortes will be used on this occasion. Programmes now ready. Tickets, 10s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 3s.; Admission, One Shilling; at Austin's Office, St James's Hall; and usual Agents.

WALTER MACFARREN'S ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS,

ST JAMES'S HALL, SATURDAY Evenings, Feb. 25th, March 11th, March 25th. Violin—Herr Joachim and M. Sainton. Violoncello—Signor Piatti. Pianoforte—Miss Cantello, Miss Margaret Gyde, and Mr Charlton T. Speer. Vocalists—Miss Mary Davies, Miss Clara Samuell, and Mdme Patey; Mr Edward Lloyd and Mr Santley. Band of 70 performers. Principal Violin—M. Sainton. Conductor—Mr WALTER MACFARREN. Subscription, One Guinea. Sofa Stalls, 7s. 6d., or three for One Guinea; Balcony, 3s.; Admission, One Shilling. Tickets of Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., 84, New Bond Street; of the usual Agents; and at Austin's Ticket Office, St James's Hall.

MDME ISABELLE POWERS has the honour to announce to her patrons that her FIRST GRAND EVENING CONCERT will take place on WEDNESDAY, the 8th of February, at the ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC, Tenterden Street, at Eight o'clock, assisted by the following Artists: Miss Manwel, Mdlle Pellétier, Miss Hipwell, Signor Ria, Mr Walsham, Mr Elwin, Mr Yorke. Harp—Miss Ida Audain. Piano—Signor Li Calsi and his pupil, Miss Alice Ashplant, Mr G. Sumpter, pupil of Herr Lehmeyer. Violin—Miss Brousil and Mr G. Brousil. Conductors—Mr S. LEHMEYER and Mr ARTHUR TRICKETT, F.C.O. Tickets of Mdme ISABELLE POWERS, 2, Hetley Road, Shepherd's Bush.

LONDON CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.—Principal—Mr LANSDOWNE COTTELL.

The Directors invite attention to the recent extension and increased accommodation, residential and otherwise.

Fees from Two Guineas per term, residential from Fourteen Guineas, inclusive of the Musical and Fine Art Lectures.

Free Tuition is awarded to talented young artists unable to pay fees by fund granted for this purpose.

Prospectus (one stamp), Hon. Sec., 6, Tavistock Square.

SCHUBERT SOCIETY. President—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT. Founder and Director—Herr SCHUBERTH. Sixteenth Season, 1882. The SECOND (102nd since the formation of the Society) SOIRÉE MUSICALE of the present Season will take place on WEDNESDAY, Feb. 1st. Full prospectus on application to H. G. HOPPER, Hon. Sec., 244, Regent Street, W.

"THE MESSAGE."

MR EDWARD HALL will sing BLUMENTHAL'S admired Song, "THE MESSAGE," at Kentish Town, on Monday next, January 23rd; and at the Holborn Town Hall, on Tuesday, January 31st.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED COMPOSITIONS BY SIR HERBERT OAKELEY.

TWO SACRED CHORAL QUARTETS, for Mixed Voices.
1. MORNING AND EVENING, ("Comes, at times").
2. PAST AND FUTURE, ("Adown the river").
Sung by Her Majesty's command.
Price respectively, 4d. and 6d. nett.
FORSYTH, BROTHERS, London and Manchester.

CHORAL SONGS for Male Voices.
1. "THE TROUBADOUR" ... ... Price 3d. nett.
2. "OMNIA VINCIT AMOR"... ... ... Price 6d. nett.
CRAMER & Co.

TWELVE NATIONAL MELODIES of SCOTLAND, arranged for Male Chorus. Price 6d. in parts; or 2s. complete.
A MORNING, COMMUNION, and EVENING SERVICE. Price separately, 9d., 1s., and 6d. nett.
NOVELLO & Co.

THE MUSICAL DIRECTORY, ANNUAL, & ALMANACK FOR 1882. THIRTIETH ANNUAL ISSUE. Now Ready. Contents: The Names and Addresses of the Professors of Music, Music Sellers, and Musical Instrument Dealers in the United Kingdom, New Copyright Music published during the Year, Principal Events, &c., &c. Price 3s.; or, in cloth, 4s. Also SIR JULIUS BENEDICT'S PROFESSIONAL POCKET BOOK, giving Spaces for Engagements for every hour in the day. Price, in Roan, 3s.; or, in Russia, 6s. RUDALL, CARTE & Co., 23, Berners Street, W.

THE PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, AND KNIGHTAGE OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE for 1882. By JOSEPH FOSTER.
Early in January. In one or two volumes, royal 8vo, cloth gilt, price 42s. The Peerage or Baronetage separate, each 21s.
The THIRD EDITION, for 1882, containing all new Creations, has been considerably enlarged, and carefully corrected throughout. It is illustrated by upwards of 1,400 Engravings of Arms, &c., and contains fuller pedigrees than any other work.
Westminster: NICHOLS & SONS, 25, Parliament Street.
CHAPMAN & HALL, Limited, 11, Henrietta Street, W.C.

REDUCED PRICE, 2s. 6d.

THE EPIKLEIS, or Musical Domino (POOLEY'S PATENT), an Aid to Pianists for the Slow Shake and other Exercises—entirely a mental aid. Testimonials from the best Pianists and Teachers. By Post, 2s. 6d. Handbook, with Exercises and useful Hints on Playing, 1s.—JOHN POOLEY, 3, The Terrace, Clapham Park Road, London, S.W. Agents Wanted all over the world.

TO THE MUSIC TRADE.

A GENTLEMAN of many years' experience as a London Music Publisher, and who is conversant with every detail of the Trade, is open to accept an ENGAGEMENT as GENERAL MANAGER, or otherwise, in Town or the Provinces. Address—"PUBLISHER," care of Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

TO CONDUCTORS AND OTHERS.

A LADY (Mezzo-Soprano) desires ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts in London, Suburbs, or Country. Address—"ALPHA," 25, Grosvenor Road, Canonbury, N.

FURNISHED APARTMENTS WANTED.

A Professor of Music requires APARTMENTS (DRAWING and BEDROOM, communicating, with Gas), for a permanency in the neighbourhood of Regent Circus and the Marble Arch. Letters, stating Terms, to be addressed—"J. R.," care of Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street.

SUNG BY MISS ANNETTE ALBU.

"A DREAM WISH," Poetry by Mrs M. A. BAINES, Music by MICHAEL BERGSON, is published, price 4s., by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

NEW VOCAL QUARTET.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" Arranged for Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, and Bass by G. B. ALLEN. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

ONE of the most Renowned CONCERT-ORCHESTRAS of Germany (Director, JULIUS LAUBE) is open to ENGAGEMENTS for the Summer Season, from May next, or earlier. For particulars apply to Musik-director JULIUS LAUBE, Wintergarten des Central-Hôtel, Berlin.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" ARRANGED AS A QUARTET.

MR EDWYN FRITH'S CONCERT PARTY will sing ASCHER'S popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" arranged as a Quartet, at Birmingham, January 21st; and at all other Engagements throughout the Season.

NEW SONG BY J. L. HATTON.

THE GOOD SHIP ROVER. Words by JOHN STEWART. Music by J. L. HATTON. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

SUNG BY MISS ALICE FAIRMAN.

"AT MORN I BESEECH THEE." Sacred Song, rapturously encored at Mdme Liebhart's Concert, Words by GABRIEL (12th Century), Music by MICHAEL BERGSON, is published, price 4s., by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

LA POMPA DI FESTA. Grande Marche, pour Piano, à Quatre Mains. Par IGNACE GIBSONE. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"HER VOICE."

"HER VOICE." IGNACE GIBSONE'S popular Song (poetry by "A Soldier's Daughter"), sung by Mdme ENRIQUEZ, is published, price 4s., by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NEW SONG BY F. H. COWEN.

"A FAREWELL." Song. Words by the Author of "John Halifax." Music by FREDERIC H. COWEN. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

MIDNIGHT CHIMES.

(SONG.)

Words by MARIA X. HAYES.

Music by

MICHAEL BERGSON.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

THE OLD HOSTELRY.

Words by HARRY HAYNES.

Music by

W. REES-REES.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

ELISE.

POLKA MAZURKA FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By

W. SHARP.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

DANSE PYRRHIQUE.

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By

BROWNLOW BAKER.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Where may be obtained, Composed by Brownlow Baker, "Bourrée," in E flat, 4s.; "Memory" (Romance), 3s.

Just Published.

UNITY.

A NEW MASONIC SOLO AND QUARTET.

Dedicated by express permission to His Royal Highness PRINCE PATRICK, DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, and all true and accepted Masons.

By

RICHARD F. HARVEY,

Organist of Unity Lodge 238 (Dublin).

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

MENUET DE LULLI.

POUR LE PIANOFORTE.

Par BENTAYOUX.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—The "Menuet de Lulli" can also be played as a Duet for Violin and Violoncello.

THE VOICE AND SINGING.

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING, Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

VOCAL EXERCISES COMPOSED BY FRANK MORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by the late FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

New Edition of "LE PETIT SOLFEGE."

LE PETIT SOLFEGE. Vingt Solfèges pour Voix de Mezzo-Soprano. Par Jos. CURCI. Price 6s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

"This work for educational purposes will be found of inestimable value, since it is one of the very few which confines itself to the cultivation of the middle of the voice; and whilst the phrases are admirably adapted to develop the breathing powers and volume of the voice, the melodies are so exquisitely harmonized that they must prove of great benefit in the improvement of the taste and ear of a student in singing."—Pictorial World.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE.

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdme Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklein, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis, of Basingstoke, says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 3s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

"ON THE GOLDEN SANDS."

JUST PUBLISHED. "ON THE GOLDEN SANDS." Words by MARY MARK-LEMON. Music by ISIDORE DE LARA. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

SONGS BY SUCHET CHAMPION.

"THE TEST." Price 4s.

"A GENTLE WORD." Price 4s.

"OLD ENGLAND, AWAKE." Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

MADEMOISELLE ET MONSIEUR.

POLKA, POUR PIANO.

Par BENTAYOUX.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—The Illustrated Title of "Mademoiselle et Monsieur" is by Alfred Concanen.

THE BICYCLE.

SONATA FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By STANISLAUS ELLIOT.

1. ALLEGRO.—"The First Attempt."
2. ANDANTE.—"Despair and Return."
3. SCHERZO.—"Second Attempt."
4. RONDO.—"Success at last."

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The wedding of humour to music is, perhaps, one of the signs of the age. 'The Bicycle Sonata' is an illustration. At first sight it might seem that no author of standing would attempt to write of our friends the riders. There can be no question of the boldness of the attempt; the delights and vicissitudes of 'wheeling' are interpreted with skill, dramatic power and a sense of humour which raise the work and rescue it from vulgarity."

Digitized by Google

CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.

Mr Carl Rosa showed his usual shrewdness in determining to open the season at Her Majesty's Theatre with Lohengrin. For better or for worse, this is a Wagner year, and, since the later works of the master are to be given under other auspices, it was an excellent idea to promise the earlier ones, thus rounding off the greatest "cyclus" of performances that ever did homage to a living composer's genius. The appearance of the house when the curtain rose on Saturday night favoured a notion that our public are earnestly bent upon availing themselves of a unique opportunity. Although Lohengrin was presented by Mr Rosa last season, and has been familiarized by Mr Gye and Mr Mapleson, amateurs flocked to her Majesty's Theatre with the eagerness of those who seek the gratification of a burning curiosity. The galleries, and, indeed, all the cheaper parts of the house, were crowded, only the stalls showing here and there a vacant place. Moreover, the audience thus gathered was Wagnerian to such an intense degree that we shall not be far wrong in calling it for the most part Teutonic. When Mr Randegger, after acknowledging a cordial reception, raised his bâton amid a hush of expectation, and the curtain rose on the chorus drawn up to sing our national anthem, alien impatience of English loyalty manifested itself in sounds of annoyance and cries of "Shut up!" When, also, there were attempts at applause as the artists entered, and at other times during the progress of the music, a stern mandate from the "gods" quickly restored silence and attention. We care not who teaches English audiences to keep quiet while the composer is speaking. The lesson is a good one, and the sooner it is learned the better. An end was put some time ago to the bad habit of applauding every solo in a concerto, and drowning the tutti in noise. Now, let us take a hint from the new operatic cultus, and perceive that the custom of applauding while the curtain remains up is Philistine enough to be of Gath itself. We shall not waste time and space by a renewed discussion of Lohengrin. In a little while, when examples of Wagner's latest development challenge comparison with his earlier phases, there may be need once more to talk of the most beautiful of his "romantic" works. For the present let us deal only with Saturday night's performance, the main personal interest of which gathered around Herr A. Schott and his embodiment of the hero. The German tenor appeared this time under advantages which were not his on the occasion of his début amongst us; the pitch having been lowered to, presumably, that of the French diapason normal, and he himself having become more familiar with the English language. Undoubtedly the lowering of the pitch was a great gain, and so might have been Herr Schott's philological studies, only, as a matter of fact, it did not obviously appear what language he was using. This, we are bound to add, cannot be said of the tenor alone. Mr Ludwig, as Telramond, spoke with distinctness, and his example was followed by Mr Crotty, as the Herald; but the rest were in most cases so hazy of utterance that no person ignorant of the story could possibly have made it out from what was heard of the dialogue. Artists on the English lyric stage should be reminded, whenever necessary, that the advantages of opera in the vernacular are lost when pains are not taken with enunciation. Reverting to Herr Schott, it can hardly be said that he is an ideal Lohengrin. For that part we want an archangel Michael in silver armour, and Herr Schott is much too burly and hirsute to suggest anything archangelic. But, concerning the Hanoverian tenor's conception and working out of the character, we think—pace Dr von Bülow, who does not love Herr Schott—that dispute is hardly possible. The farewell to the swan, and the whole business of the championship in the first act were excellent, both in a dramatic and musical sense. In bearing, the actor was noble and dignified, and in delivering the music the singer was intelligent and expressive. We do not contend that Herr Schott is a vocalist. Indeed, it is impossible to see how a vocalist can exist on the now representative German stage—a place abandoned to mere declaimers. But, waiving this point, Herr Schott did exceedingly well in the first act, fully deserving a large share of the liberal applause that followed the fall of the curtain. Subsequently he appeared to tire, and in the important bridal-chamber duet, where the best effect should have been made, he fell away very considerably. There may have been special and temporary reasons for this. We only record the fact, adding that the curtain came down amid silence. Herr Schott's effort must, nevertheless, be spoken of as a whole, with great respect. His Lohengrin deserved the honours of a well-considered, poetical, and impressive embodiment. Like her most distinguished colleague, Miss Gaylord (Elsa) was not in full possession of her vocal powers. She sang as though fatigued—which is hardly to be wondered at, looking back upon the work she has recently done in the provinces—and there were times when the calls upon her physical resources were not met to the extent desired. But the charming character of Elsa lost little or none of its proper interest in her hands It was clear that experience of the part had widened and deepened her perception of its dramatic meaning, and if, in the crisis of the third act, some sense of power were wanting, the embodiment as a whole was more than creditable to the young American. Miss Josephine Yorke (Ortrud) made her mark, not only by judicious and, therefore, unobtrusive acting throughout the opera, but by excellent singing in the duet with Telramond, and subsequently with Elsa. The part of Ortrud is, in many respects, so ungracious that specially good qualities are needed in its representative to make it even tolerable. These to a large extent Miss Yorke exhibited. The Telramond of Mr. Ludwig was both picturesque and forcible. Parts of decided character suit this artist, as we shall see to-night (Monday), when he plays the weird skipper of the Flying Dutchman, and the connoisseur must be exigent indeed who, all things considered, demands a better Frederic than Mr Ludwig. The Herald of Mr Leslie Crotty was also good, if only because he sang the music in tune. For this he could be easily forgiven the absence of an heraldic costume. Mr Henry Pope, as the King, completed a cast of very considerable merit, and when we add that the chorus knew their work and did it carefully, and that the stage effects were good, enough has been said to prove a successful opening of the season. Some of the wind instruments in the orchestra were, it is believed, new on account of the lowered pitch, and this had an inevitable effect on the intonation. A graver fault might have been pardoned for the sake of so admirable a reading of the music under Mr Randegger, whose complete acquaintance with the opera, and whose coolness, judgment, and tact could not have been more conspicuously demonstrated.

The revival of Wagner's Flying Dutchman on Monday night was a distinct success, and no other result, assuming an adequate performance, could have been expected. The story so neatly compounded of materials gathered from ancient legend and modern fancy, is one that takes a firm hold upon popular imagination, as much on account of its mysticism as because of the striking individuality of its principal characters; while the music, notwithstanding frequent coarseness, powerfully attracts by its union of new and vigorous or graceful ideas with the old forms which Wagner has since thought proper to discard. All must admit that the Bayreuth poet has given a crowd of masterful figures to the lyric stage, but it is open to doubt whether any of his later creations, or, perhaps we should say, adaptations, transcend in interest the Dutchman and Senta, which stand so close to our humanity. Fiction of the supernatural though he be, none of us fail to comprehend and to sympathise with Vanderdecken, since it is within us to feel, somewhere or other, the power of retribution and the need of a redeeming influence. As for Senta, the representative of woman's saving love, she is but a poetic exemplar of that which every day works for good around us. The "world's grey fathers" would have elevated her to the rank of a deity, and worshipped her as an embodiment of the power which now we symbolise by a cross. As it is, although we do not even stop to think upon the significance of her character, a true and powerful instinct draws us to her, as one who attracts by the radiance of more than earthly light. Only the Dutchman and his redemptress exist in the drama. The rest—Daland, sordid and garrulous; Erik, the every-day lover; and Marie, the house mistress—are but as lay figures, separated from these two by the immeasurable gulf that divides death and life. Let us admit, however, that the man and woman owe much to the dramatic propriety of their surroundings. We may regard the prosiness of Daland, when introducing the stranger to his daughter, as intolerable, but, on the one hand, the wanderer's ship, "built i' the eclipse, and rigged with curses dark;" and, on the other, Daland's home, with its groups of maidens singing while they spin, are representative of the varied dramatic skill which here gives us almost a perfect picture. It may be assumed that, even were the music of the Flying Dutchman by an ordinary hand, the story would keep the opera alive. As it is, Wagner's first recognized work will probably last longer than some of those in which he now takes greater pride.

The Flying Dutchman emulates its successors in laying a heavy load upon the manager who produces it. Not alone are there scenic effects in which the sublime and the ridiculous lie so close together that even a slight slip might bring catastrophe, but the two principal parts are hard to fill. In England, however, we have been somewhat fortunate as regards artists. No one who witnessed the first representation of the work at Drury Lane, in 1870, can have forgotten the remarkable success achieved by Mdlle Ilma di Murska and Mr Santley. Senta has also had excellent representatives in Mdme Albani and Mdlle Torriani, and now it becomes our duty to record that Mr Rosa was fortunate when, on Monday night, he put forward Mdlle Valleria and Mr Ludwig. The lady was expected to make a "hit" as the devoted Norwegian maiden, although she had never sung opera in English before, nor previously essayed the character. Mdlle Valleria's career during the last few years has been marked by so much intelligence, and such artistic feeling, that the public now place confidence in her powers, even when, as last Monday, great issues are at stake. Her Senta justified this attitude more than ever, because, without being specially elaborated, it was thoroughly sweet and sympathetic. The character is one which must be played from the artist's soul, or it had better not be played at all. No amount of "taking thought," no studied application of histrionic resources, can avail without the incommunicable quality which transforms the person representing into the person represented. In a measure this may be said of all characters, but it especially applies to Senta, because the part is not an intellectual creation, but rather a pure embodiment of one form of the spirit of humanity; in other words, a personified feeling, impulse, instinct—call it what you will, from the vocabulary of psychology. Mdlle Valleria was successful because she met the requirements arising out of this. She was in the character, and the character was in her, with a blending that gave us, not perhaps the Senta of technical perfection, which could only be developed on the stage of pure drama, but the far better Senta of the soul. Interesting in the earlier scenes of the second act, and admirable in that of the catastrophe, Mdlle Valleria made her greatest mark where the fullest power was demanded—we refer, of course, to Senta's interview with the man she is destined to redeem. The astonishment of the maiden as the Dutchman appears before her eyes, while her mind is charged with his fate; the fascination his presence exercises over her; the pity his appeal intensifies, and, by a natural sequence, the devotion that would redeem him by any sacrifice—all this was expressed with a simple directness which the audience recognized as true, and applauded as good. Mdlle Valleria's singing of the music seemed a part of her embodiment of the character in its unaffectedness and straitforward purpose. Nothing could have been better, for example, than her delivery of the opening phrases of Senta's part in the great duet, "Dwell I in worlds with wondrous fancies teeming?" or than her utterance of the maiden's supreme resolve, "Then know my woman's feelings call me." In fine, the entire effort was a success, and the audience, by applause and repeated re-calls, celebrated the advent on the English lyric stage of an English-speaking artist capable of doing it honour. Mr Ludwig may be congratulated in large measure upon his embodiment of the Dutchman. The part is a very difficult one, and calls for many qualities not often found united in the same person. Hence, it was no more expected that Mr Ludwig would satisfy every requirement than it is that we shall find in the next representative of Don Giovanni an ideal of that accomplished libertine. Nevertheless, Mr Ludwig did well in many important respects. He conveyed to the eye a striking picture of the man pursued by a remorseless fate, and his singing of all the Dutchman's gloomy music was in admirable taste. On the other hand, we missed in him the tremendous revulsion of feeling which comes with Senta's assurance of devotion. From that moment till he overhears the words of Erik in the last act the Dutchman should appear as a transformed being, and Mr. Ludwig hardly intensified the contrast sufficiently. But, shortcomings notwithstanding, the assumption was worthy of much praise. We rejoice to add that the audience both recognized and met its call upon their favour. The small part of Marie was safe in the hands of Miss Josephine Yorke; Mr. J. W. Turner sang the Steersman's music with acceptance; Mr. Packard, as Erik, obtained considerable applause for his delivery of the pretty cavatina, "Is that fair day no more by thee remembered?" and Mr. Hervet d'Egville, though apparently a novice on the stage, did fair justice to the important musical part of Daland. Little fault could be found with the chorus, while the stage effects, particularly in the first and last acts, showed that a great difficulty had been overcome. Mr. Rosa's ships are capital specimens of marine architecture, as applied to theatrical purposes. The orchestra was good on the whole, but there were slips, for which those who made them could hardly have given sufficient reason to their excellent conductor, Mr. Randegger.

Digitized by Google

A few words will suffice to record the performance, on Tuesday night, of Wallace's Maritana. The English opera proper is not yet out of favour, for the house was full, and the applause enthusiastic as each well-known song or ballad struck the popular ear. For the most part the cast was familiar, Miss Georgina Burns again acting and singing, as Maritana, in sprightly and agreeable fashion; Miss Josephine Warren playing the Marchioness; Mr. Turner, Don Cæsar; Mr. Brooklyn, the Marquis; Mr. Crotty, Don José; and Mr. Snazelle, the King; while Miss La Rue, a lady not unknown on the stage of comic opera, appeared as Lazarillo. Miss La Rue was naturally nervous, but she won an encore for "Alas, those chimes," and, generally speaking, made an impression which will secure for her careful notice in the future. Among the pieces repeated were the trio, "Turn on, old Time," and "Let me like a soldier fall," vigorously sung by Mr. Turner.—D. T.

ARCHDEACON DUNBAR'S SERVICES.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—It has only just been brought to my attention (or I would have written before to your columns) that an announcement appeared in the Musical World, at Mdme Isabel Fassett's request, to the effect that, unknown to her, and "without the slightest authority," I had inserted her name among the list of artists to sing in the services at my church, St Barnabas, Ferndale Road, Brixton. I shall offer no opinion, but merely quote Mdme Fassett's letter.

This lady, writing to the gentleman who made all the engagements (he is at present abroad), says it will give her pleasure to assist in the oratorios, and continues (I quote from Mdme Isabel Fassett's own letter, which lies before me): "I must, however, stipulate that I shall be provided with a brougham for all performances for which I give my services. I shall be prepared to sing any of the oratorios, though, of course, I cannot promise for any without knowing the dates. In case you should use my name in any of your announcements, kindly see that it is printed Madame Isabel Fussett.—I am, yours sincerely (signed), ISABEL FASSETT."

After a very wide and costly advertisement had been given to the name at my expense, Mdme Isabel Fassett wrote, requesting that her name might be taken out of the list, which was done, and appears to have obtained an almost equally wide advertisement without expense, by writing to, it appears, a whole round of papers, to say she was not going to sing, and that I inserted her name unknown to her, and "wholly without the slightest authority." Mdme Isabel Fassett wrote to Society, a paper that had not, I believe, ever announced that she was going to sing at St Barnabas, requesting the paper to state that she was not going to do so.

Madame Isabel Fassett is a great artist, but certainly not greater nor so popular and well known as others who have sung, and promised to sing, at my services. Miss Hope Glenn, for instance, has sung in my services before. Miss Jessie Royd is engaged as permanent soprano soloist at my church. Beyond question neither of these artists are second to Madame Isabel Fassett. They are both more widely known and popular, and certainly not less favourites at the Albert Hall, and other places where they sing. I never heard such applause as that which saluted Miss Hope Glenn one night when I heard her as contralto soloist in the Stabat Mater, at the Albert Hall. Miss Jessie Royd's clear, bright, and youthful voice seems to outshine all sopranos in popularity.

I find that certain persons—even musical persons—seem to think my services theatrical. They cannot have attended them, or they would never think so. True, I have the harp morning and evening (Mr John Cheshire is the harpist); but is not the harp the most religious of all instruments? and is it not a great oversight that in church music it is so seldom heard? In the Jewish Church, and in all representations of Heavenly worship, the harp stands out pre-eminent. I have entered into a permanent engagement with Mr John Cheshire to play at every service; for I feel it is the presence of the harp, as well as style of music, which especially distinguishes that of the sanctum, and that of the theatre or concert room. Gounod's use of the harp adds religious deep devotional feeling to his music. Mr Cheshire holds the same opinion, and expresses it in the most devotional tones on his instrument.

Some persons think an orchestra "theatrical." But what is an organ? An imitation orchestra; a bad imitation if without harp and violins—for those it cannot produce. It has its trumpet, clarionet, flute, trombone, &c., &c., but surely the genuine article must be superior to the imitation. An organ is an apology for an orchestra, just as an harmonium is an apology for an organ.

If any of your readers who consider my services must be "theatrical" will attend St Barnabas on Sunday next, though the music is unusually bright (Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer" in the morning, and Rossini's Stabat Mater in the evening), I think they will quite alter their opinions, and will allow that the services are dignified, solemn, and devotional.

Apologizing for the length of my letter, believe me to be, sir, your obedient servant,

CHARLES E. C. DUNBAR,
Archdeacon.
Incumbent of St Barnabas Church, Ferndale Road, Brixton.

ST PETERSBURGH.—A programme forwarded from this capital to Jules Prével, of the Paris Figaro, runs thus: "Brilliant success yesterday of Le Roi de Lahore at the Italian Operahouse. Irreproachably put on the stage; public in raptures; several calls for the director, Vizentini," &c.

BRUSSELS.—Pierre Benoit, previously corresponding member, has been elected regular member of the Belgian Academy of Fine Arts, in place of the late Henri Vieuxtemps.

Digitized by Google

A FRANTIC GAUL.

(From "L'Express de Paris.")

I do not treat here of the musician whose works I had occasion to discuss in Belgium and Germany. Beyond our frontiers, I could be impartial; in Paris, I cannot. Is it possible that we have become a people so utterly degenerate, and so thoroughly despised by our enemies, that a German should have the audacity to announce the performance here in GERMAN of M. Richard Wagner's works? What! Ten years ago, a third of France felt the heel of the Prussian on it; the territory was not then set free; it was afterwards—but with what sacrifices, and we already think of forgetting and forgiving! In the presence of this weakness, of this enervation of heart, I fancy it would be well to remind people what M. Wagner is and what he has done. From a curious work by M. Tissot, Les Prussiens en Allemagne, I extract what refers to the musician of Bayreuth:

"The defeat of the French armies, together with the bombardment and fall of Paris, naturally threw Wagner into a state of savage jubilation. He saw in the disaster the just chastisement of the Parisians for failing to appreciate his music, and, in his gratitude to him who accomplished the decrees of God, he composed the 'Hymn to the Emperor,' and resolved to celebrate trebly, in prose, in verse, and in music, the capitulation of the modern Babylon. 'About the end of the year 1870, during the bombardment of Paris,' he says in the preface to the ninth volume of his Complete Works, 'I thought our dramatists would be inspired to write popular pieces on the embarrassment of our enemies.' But the inspiration was wanting, and M. Wagner, seeing nothing done, had to set about the job himself. He informs us that he wrote in a few days the 'old style' comedy, A Capitulation, to be found at the commencement of the ninth volume. In the pages of this comedy, he shows himself in a completely new light. Wagner, the comic poet, Wagner, the solemn and wearisome, Wagner, the Luther of music, imitating the light and incisive Aristophanes! A goose running after and endeavouring to fly like a wasp!"

All M. Wagner saw in the heart-rending fall of Paris was the subject of a comedy!

"And what a comedy!—a stupid, brutal farce, without taste, without wit, without spangles, without sparkle. It does not contain even one of the coarse vulgar crackers that young urchins let off on market days between the country people's legs; it is a series of cock-and-bull absurdities, a long medley of French and German words; something so stupid that, instead of feeling angry, we laugh and involuntarily ask ourselves whether Gagne is not greater than the great Wagner himself, as far as extravagance goes. 'Trochu' rhymes with 'parapluie;' 'Turcos' with 'sauce;' and 'MacMahon' with 'Sedan;' such are the poetic licenses in which M. Wagner indulges. He moreover turns Blondin into Blondel, to make it rhyme with 'Gondel' ('Gondola'). This piece of serious extravagance runs to fifty pages, including the versified prologue (to the German Army before Paris) and the preface, which is a regular exposition of Teutomanic belief."

Some years ago M. Pasdeloup conceived the notion of performing fragments of Wagner, but it was not carried out quite smoothly: people were willing enough to listen to the composer, but at each performance they vigorously hissed the Gallophobist. M. Pasdeloup has persevered; thinking, no doubt, he was doing right, and from an absolute want of moral feeling, he has succeeded in causing Wagner's name to be accepted in the programmes of the Popular Concerts. His example has been followed by others, and is now an admitted thing. In pursuing the course adopted by them, our worthy conductors have, unconsciously of course, been guilty of a nasty piece of business. They have placed the artist above the patriot, and thereby justified the reproach brought by the enemies of music against its fervent admirers "of softening men's morals." Ah! how much better national education is understood on the other side the Rhine! Since Jena, all the children have been brought up with a hatred and horror of everything French; no opportunity has been neglected of rendering odious those whom they style the "Erbeund,"* and consequently the Germans had their turn in 1870. Can we possibly have renounced the idea of having ours? Politicians may say we have and statesmen may allow the statement to be believed. That is their business! But, as regards all of us who have to answer only to ourselves for our sentiments and words, we must preserve in our hearts a ferocious and implacable hatred of everyone and everything German. The Germans do not merely disarm, they tyrannise over Alsace and Lorraine; they forbid the use of French there, and close the frontier against our newspapers and books! Let us, then, know how to hate as they do, and let us not allow, in this Paris which they insult every day, which they starved and bombarded, a number of Teutons to acclaim to our face one of themselves.—In the presence of such a scandalous proceeding, of so violent an outrage to the conscience of Frenchmen, everyone must follow, with a difference, the decree dated by our great poet from Jersey.

JULES LERMINA.

* Thus in the French. Query: "Erbfeind," Hereditary Enemy.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERTS.

Mr John Boosey provided on Wednesday evening a treat both "rich and rare" to the lovers of Irish songs and ballads, whose name, we need hardly remark, is "legion!" The whole of the programme was devoted to the glory of the Emerald Isle, and gloriously it came out of the ordeal. With such singers as Misses Mary Davies and Ambler, Mesdames Antoinette Sterling and Isabel Fasset, Messrs Edward Lloyd, Maybrick and Santley, how could it be otherwise? Our readers versed in the beauty of old Ireland's melodies (and Moore's poetry) will say "of course, of course," Mdme Sterling was called upon to repeat, "Shule Aroon" (Is go de tu mo murnin slàn)—the ballad referring to an event in the early part of the eighteenth century, when the flower of the Catholic youth of Ireland were drawn away to recruit the ranks of the Irish Brigade in the service of the King of France—as well as "The meeting of the waters;" that Mrs Hutchinson ought to have repeated "Rich and rare were the gems she wore," so decided was the applause at its conclusion; that Mr Santley repeated "The Harp that once through Tara's halls," as well as the old song, "Father O'Flynn," (indeed so delighted were the audience with the genuine humour Mr Santley exhibited in the last named that roars of laughter burst forth from the audience after each verse;) that a hearty encore was awarded Mr Maybrick for "The low-backed Car," and to the South London Choral Association for their spirited rendering of "St Patrick's Day." We might fairly name with praise every number in the programme and expatiate on the enthusiasm with which each was received, but we wont, recommending instead our readers to go and judge for themselves when Mr John Boosey gives them an opportunity of passing so pleasant an evening with "Erin." Mr Sidney Naylor had a hard night's work, having to accompany nearly every song twice over; he acquitted himself admirably.

COLOUR-HEARING.—This expression has been applied to a phenomenon of which some few people are conscious, viz.: an appearance of certain colours accompanying the perception of notes or noises. In 1873, Nussbaumer described (in a Vienna medical paper) this double perception as he and his brother had it, and Herren Bleuler and Lehmann, in Zurich, have recently made a more systematic study of the subject. The colours associated with particular notes differ in different individuals. As a rule, the higher notes are accompanied by lighter colours; the lower, by darker. Chords either cause the colours which correspond to their notes to appear side by side, or give a mixture of those colours. A thorough musician who was examined perceived a distinct colour with each key—e.g., C major, grey; G flat major, reddish brown; A major, blue; A minor, lead colour; F sharp major, yellow; and so on. The same note in different keys changes in colour according to the colour of the key in which it is found. To many persons, too, the same piece played by different instruments appears in different colours. Noises, again, are generally accompanied with colours, these being generally of a grey or brown hue. Increased intensity of sound affects the colour perceived, and more so in the case of noise than in that of musical notes. In the latter, the intensity of colour is increased; in the former, a transparent effect observed gives way, in some measure, to opacity. The authors pursue their studies into the colours some minds perceive on hearing consonants, vowels, dipthongs, words, &c., some of which cases seem to be explicable by direct "association." By four persons sound was perceived as a result of sensations of light and colour—e.g., a broad, quietly-burning gas flame led to perception of a sound constructed of w and a light vowel like e. When the flame flickered, the sound grew similar to l. In colour-hearing no essential difference between the two sexes has been demonstrated. Of 76 "colour-hearers," 59 per cent. were males and 41 per cent. females. The percentage of "colour-hearers" in 596 individuals examined was only 12·5. The phenomenon is, to a great degree, hereditary.—Times.

Digitized by Google

A JUVENILE AUDIENCE.

(By a Spectator.)

A scene was enacted at Covent Garden Theatre, on Thursday afternoon, January 12, which bears evidence of a generous disposition and a kindly heart. It was an original scene; it had never been done before; it was not adapted from the French, or, indeed, from any language but that of our common nature, and, as it turned out, the one prompt action of a benevolent man gave endless delight to no less than four thousand children. I happened to be passing the great portico of Covent Garden Theatre at the very busiest time of the day, when my attention was not attracted, but riveted, by what, I suppose, was the most curious scene that even London has ever witnessed.

Morning performances at pantomime time are apt to create some little confusion in the neighbourhood of Bow Street; but here was something altogether abnormal, and a merry medley which at once amused and occupied the attention of the active police force. Bow Street was invaded by processions of schools, and thick with miscellaneous vans, greengrocers' carts, and omnibuses. Charity children, in their white caps and prim quaker dresses; boys from the Foundling Hospital, preceded by a brass band; soldier boys, sailor boys, youngsters from the Newport Market Refuge; cripples hobbling gleefully with their crutches from the Euston Road; deaf and dumb children gesticulating and nudging one another with painful vehemence; all sorts and conditions of children, from all sorts and conditions of poor and neglected parishes; children professing every creed in the long category of religions—Protestant children, Nonconformist children, children from the Jewish schools, children from Catholic Brompton, all poured into Bow Street when the clock struck half-past one. When I saw the greengrocers' vans coming along in a merry file with the gladsome urchins cheering on the roof, waving their hats and handkerchiefs, and shouting as only London children can shout, I began to think that the kindly genial weather had been playing one of its accustomed pranks, and that the springtime had come with its envied holiday at Epping Forest or Hampton Court. What could it all mean? Surely the liberal tendency of the age had not induced the authorities of the School Board to include a visit to a Christmas pantomime as one of the elements of a thorough English education, and it was not within the bounds of reason that each individual child had been permitted to expend its pocket-money on a theatrical entertainment. I was quickly enlightened when I studied the programme setting forth the object of this singular festival.

It had occurred to Mr W. H. Ingram, the spirited and kind-hearted proprietor of the Illustrated London News, that it would be the happiest of happy thoughts if he could cram Covent Garden from roof to ceiling with the poor, orphan, neglected, and afflicted children of London who had never seen the inside of a theatre in the whole course of their lives. Sitting one evening at the play during the holiday season, Mr Ingram had noticed how few children after all were there compared to the grown-up folks, and he thought what pleasure he might happily give if he could hire the theatre for an afternoon, employ the artists for one grand and special occasion, and issue invitations to those sad little ones who are passed by and neglected when Christmas time comes round. The idea had no sooner flashed across Mr Ingram's mind than it was instantly put into execution. Volunteers came forward to assist him, the organization of this great children's treat became the fruitful result of many brains, and when the most deserving and miscellaneous schools had been selected, the founder of the feast made only one stipulation, and that was that the children were to be specially chosen, not for their intrinsic worth or excellence alone, but chiefly because they had never seen a theatre or pantomime.

All who have ever visited a theatre at Christmas know the effect of the shrill delighted treble of but one excited child. Magnify that one silvery laugh by three thousand and more, and even then you will not understand the strange sensation caused by this vast congregation of children. It was a scene I shall never forget, for it was a scene that no one ever beheld before. It was not so much the sense of a sea of little faces that struck me as the sense of boundless exhilaration and delight. As far as the eye could travel from the floor to the roof, piled one upon another, tier upon tier, in galleries, circles, pit, boxes, from skylight to basement, I could see nothing but children. There seemed to be a poem in every face, a story in every row of benches. The orphans forgot their sorrow, and the poor cripples their pain, when, during these long and never-to-be-forgotten hours, they were indeed in fairyland, and indulged their imaginations with scenes, pictures, colours, and beauty such as no description can give or story-books can suggest at all. As it happens, the Covent Garden pantomime is essentially one for children. It has children's scenes in abundance, it appeals to the childish fancy, children dance and gambol in the farmyard, they swarm out of the shoe of the little old woman who didn't know what to do; they bolster one another, and play pranks, and steal the school birch and belabour the schoolmistress, and intermingled with the elaborated ballets and processions, somewhat over the heads of a baby audience, are interludes of pure pantomine which I suppose never "went" before in any theatre as they did on Thursday week at Covent Garden. It may naturally be asked what was the impression given to the mind by this sudden revelation to four thousand children sitting at a play and enjoying it, shouting at every song, and recognizing every pantomime jest, not with thunders of applause, but literally with shrieks of delight. The reader will, perhaps, be surprised to hear that the effect was one of very touching and tender significance. There was a note of such supreme pathos in the satisfaction, a suggestion of such relief from pent-up misery and joylessness, that I saw the eyes of some of the women present streaming with tears. How it was that this note of satisfaction and cry of content were so essentially in the minor key, I cannot say; but it is nevertheless true that when the voices mingled the effect was absolutely sad and almost reproachful. Gradually, however, the first impression wore away, the mind became accustomed both to the scene and the sounds, and we were able to observe more closely individual faces and special idiosyncracies.

I happened to be placed near the children of the Deaf and Dumb School, who occupied two or three rows of the stalls, and I was specially interested in noticing the effect of a pantomime upon those sad little ones, who have no language. It was very curious; not hearing a word of what was said on the stage, or of the applause that was so constant and complete, they still clapped their hands at the right moment, at the end of a song, or at some gymnastic feat; but I observed that the attention of these afflicted children flagged at the spectacular portions of the play. In procession and show they were uninterested; and for ballets they had apparently no sympathy, but directly the acting was in dumb show the dumb children woke to intelligence. Those agile artists known as the Girards, whose entertainment is purely pantomimic, delighted the deaf and dumb children more than anything else, and these afflicted little ones were the best possible audience for the harlequinade, seeming to awake from a lethargic slumber. But even here there was an exception, for I retain upon my mind the picture of one little deaf and dumb girl, leaning on the stall in front of her, straining her eyes, and with her little hands occasionally beating her brow, as if to ask for the language to express all that imagination pictured.

The liberality of Mr Ingram and the active co-operation of Mr Bayley, Mr Gibbons, Mr Gwyllym Crowe, Mr William Younge, and others were not allowed, however, to pass without some special feature to mark this memorable and very successful occasion. One good turn invariably deserves another, and when it was whispered about that Mr Ingram had hit upon a Napoleonic idea in the way of amusement for poor children it naturally suggested itself to certain good friends of the little ones to supplement the play with such creature comforts as cakes and oranges, which are not unacceptable between the fairy opening and the harlequinade of a lengthy pantomime. So a generous fruiterer from Covent Garden, a cake-maker of renown not a hundred miles from Oxford Street, and a purveyor of crackers who flourishes in the Strand, sent in good things enough to feed the whole of the 4,000 children, and to crown with success this day of delight. Just before the transformation scene there was a dim suggestion that some new pleasure was in store, for at the head of every row of stalls was stationed an active volunteer with a very business-like look on his face. All was explained when the good fairy, Queen Flora (Miss Trevellyan), came forward and recited some neat, clever, and appropriate verses, written for the occasion by Mr Horace Lennard, and told the children what was coming, promising that, if they were very good, they were all to be invited again next year. No sooner said than done. This pretty fairy Queen—related, so I am told, to the famous family of Brough—who was herself specially remembered in the shower of Christmas gifts for her courtesy and condescension, touched the stage with her wand, and up came such a store of cakes and oranges as to send a cheer round the house that expressed exactly what was felt. In less than a second the bags of provisions were passed to the amateur almoners, and in one second more every child in the theatre seemed divided in opinion as to the relative merits of a Bath bun and a juicy orange; and, as it turned out, the children were decidedly of opinion that the best part of the fun had yet to come.

The old clown who aired a legitimate grievance the other day was perfectly right; for, if I may take the experience of yesterday as proof positive, there is nothing the little ones enjoy so much after all as the harlequinade. There had been sleepy eyes during the dancing, and a hiatus in the applause until the Girards came on; but when the clown belaboured the pantaloon with a cricket-bat, and the policeman was thrust into the big drum, keen attention revived again, and it was with reluctance that Mr Ingram's little guests received their marching orders when the curtain finally fell, and all was really over. The organization for exit was as complete and admirable as for entrance: boys and girls seemed to scramble instinctively to their vans and omnibuses; processions were marshalled and marched forth into the darkness, to the astonishment of the Bow Street cabmen; and, if good Mr Ingram could only have heard the cheers of the children as they drove home, still munching the the treasured remnant of cake and orange, he would be convinced that his happy thought has for one short moment brightened the dark and desolate hours of four thousand little lives.—D. T.

Digitized by Google

CONCERTS.

Albert Hall Choral Society.—The Martyr of Antioch was given by this society on Wednesday evening last, and the attendance, notwithstanding the wintry state of the weather, was by no means inconsiderable. The popularity of Mr Sullivan's "sacred musical drama" is not likely to diminish while opportunities are given, from time to time, for making acquaintance with it; and it is already in the enjoyment of that sort of "request" among choral associations which betokens the probability of unbroken permanency. That its musical pretensions are of unequal value has been pretty well settled by public opinion, which has accorded unequivocal panegyric to the lyrical portions, while lamenting, though condoning, the comparative feebleness of the dramatic. But, taken as a whole, The Martyr of Antioch is a work replete with high and absorbing interest, and will always command the respect of the connoisseur, no less than the admiration of the listener, who derives his pleasure from sensation rather than from knowledge. The cast of solo singers upon the present occasion was sufficiently strong, in all the leading essentials, to render satisfactory justice to the work. Miss Anna Williams was the substitute for Mdme Albani, with whose name the music belonging to Margarita (the Martyr) has hitherto been chiefly associated, and no possible exception could be taken to the intelligently conceived manner in which she delineated the character, so far as she could convey, in the prosaic limitations of the concert-room, the varying emotions incident to a state of spiritual fervour, so supremely ecstatic as to crush all the natural instincts and yearnings of humanity. It need not be said that the weight of the solo-singing fell to her lot and most adequately and charmingly she discharged her responsibilities. Mdme Trebelli, in the small contralto part (Julia), it may easily be assumed, left nothing to be desired, and her delivery of the incidental verse in the Chorus of Sun-worshippers ("The love-sick damsel laid"), and the lovely air, "Io Pœan," in the fourth scene, was in each case an instance of vocalism, to the technical perfection of which no one could be insensible. Mr Frank Boyle, as Olybius, must be credited with all the praise due to a tasteful rendering of the melodic gem, "Come, Margarita, come," and he was fairly entitled to the encore that was awarded him; but, in other respects, the faint and somewhat unpleasing quality of his voice, deprived the Prefect of much of his dramatic significance. The other vocalists were Mr F. King and Mr Brereton, and the subordinate parts fared well in their hands. The choruses were given by Mr Barnby's Choral Society with exemplary precision throughout, especially those emanating from the Pagan element, which prevails so largely in the libretto, and in the conception and construction of which Mr Sullivan has shown an amount of picturesque fancy and dramatic application which few composers have surpassed. Dr Ferdinand Hiller's "Song of Victory" preceded the performance of the Martyr of Antioch, the treble solos of which were consigned to the able hands of Miss Anna Williams.

H.

Miss Bessie Waugh gave her first evening concert on Tuesday, January 17. The singers were Mdme Edith Wynne, Mrs Hutchinson, Miss Hope Glenn, Messrs Bernard Lane, Percy Blandford, Thurley Beale, Arthur Oswald, and Lewis Thomas. The harpist was Mr John Thomas (harpist to Her Majesty the Queen), and the pianist, Miss Bessie Waugh. Miss Bessie Waugh, known as a pianist of exceptional talent and a thorough artist, selected for her first performance two pieces by Raff, a "Lullaby," and a Caprice (Op. 95). So highly were the audience gratified that Miss Waugh was unanimously called upon to repeat the Caprice, and afterwards return and acknowledge the hearty applause awarded her. Miss Waugh also contributed an Entr'acte, and Valse de Concert, by Henry Parker, besides joining Mr John Thomas in a duet for harp and pianoforte, the joint composition of Mr Thomas and Sir Julius Benedict, on themes from Gounod's Faust. These pieces were rendered so satisfactorily that the audience would willingly have heard them again. Mdme Edith Wynne was in capital voice, and gave "She wandered down the mountain side" (F. Clay), and "There be none of Beauty's daughters," one of Mr John Thomas's most elegant songs, in her most engaging manner. Mrs Hutchinson is rapidly gaining public favour. Her singing of "My dearest heart" (Arthur Sullivan) and the Irish melody, "Oft in the stilly night," pleased immensely. Miss Hope Glenn was also "to the fore," singing "The Bailiff's Daughter" admirably. Mr Thurley Beale gave M. Duvivier's "Pirate" (accompanied by the composer) and Barri's new song, "A gallant heart" (encored), with decided effect. The other singers were quite up to the mark, Mr Lewis Thomas winning golden opinions for his delivery of "I'm a roamer" (Mendelssohn) and the old English song, "The Mermaid." The performance of Parish Alvars' characteristic piece for the harp, "The Mandoline," was so much to the satisfaction of the audience that they unanimously called upon Mr John Thomas to repeat it. The accompanists were Mr Lowe and Mr Sidney Naylor, the last named kindly undertaking the duties of Mr Henry Parker, "unavoidably absent." The room was well filled, and the concert gave entire satisfaction.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

Dear Sir,—We have much pleasure to inform you that, besides the series of Symphony Concerts which we have announced for May and June next, Mr Charles Hallé has also kindly consented to undertake the artistic direction and conductorship of the series of Symphony Concerts which we shall give at St. James's Hall on Saturday nights during the winter 1882-83, beginning with the month of October and ending with the month of June. On some occasions, when Mr Hallé will be compelled to be absent owing to his engagements in the country, we intend to invite other conductors of eminence to take his place as guests. Mr Hallé has shown us his book, full of musical treasures, which would be laid open to the public by such an arrangement for permanent Orchestral Concerts of a higher class in London proper, yours faithfully,

Schulz Curtius.

174, New Bond Street, Jan. 17.

TO EPPS OF IPSWICH.

Honoured Sir,—Vultures don't prey upon doves. Moreover, there is a v in vulture, and a v in dove, just as there is a v in moreover (and a v in love). Add to this, the critics (or compositors) of the London press were used, "promiscous," to spell the name of the distinguished conductor of the Worcester Festival—Dove, Dore, and Done; whereas he has neither a v nor an r in his name, which is simply and emphatically Done. Whereby—to his credit be it said—his method of conducting (ask Prospère Sainton, and Mr Halfpenny) is never, at any juncture, either over, or under, done (Happy thought—under Done).—I am, sir, yours humbly,

Thomas Noon Gadd.

Flea and Weather,
Ashby-de-la-Zouch, Jan. 17.

Breslau.—A new comic opera, The Lady of Gretna Green, has been produced at the Stadttheater. Music by Baron Tschiderer.

Cologne.—Der Zug des Dionysos, an orchestral composition by Humperdink, formerly student at the Conservatory, was performed at the last concert of the Musical Society.

Berne.—Dr Mendel, organist at the Cathedral, died on the 22nd ult. He was a friend of Max Schneckenburger, author of "Die Wacht am Rhein," and was the first to set that patriotic song, so popular in 1870 with Carl Wilhelm's music.

Pesth.—Herr Carl Heymann has been giving some highly successful concerts. His playing was greatly admired. Bach, Scarlatti, Beethoven, Spohr, Schubert, Liszt, and others, all contributed something to his programmes. He was much applauded at each concert, the only complaint being that his visit did not last longer.

Cincinnati.—A grand Operatic Festival will be held here next month. The Italian Opera Company, New York, together with members of the Conservatory and Vocal Associations, take part in it. The operas selected for performance are Lohengrin, Fidelio, Die Zauberflöte, L'Africaine, and Guillaume Tell. Minnie Hauk, Campanini, and Galassi, will be the leading singers, and Max Maretzek conductor.—Camille Saint-Saëns and Carl Reinecke having examined the manuscript scores sent in to compete for the Festival Association Prize of 1,000 dollars, have returned them for final judgment to Theodor Thomas, who will not know, until he has given his own decision, to which competitor his foreign colleagues have given the preferences.

Digitized by Google

ST JAMES'S HALL.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS,

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON, 1881-82.

DIRECTOR—MR S. ARTHUR CHAPPELL.

THE TWENTY-FIRST CONCERT OF THE SEASON

WILL TAKE PLACE ON

MONDAY EVENING, JANUARY 23, 1882,

At Eight o'clock precisely.

Programme.

PART I.—Ottet, for four violins, two violas and two violoncellos (Svendsen), first time—MM. Straus, L. Ries, Wiener, A. Gibson, Hollander, Zerbini, Pezze, and Piatti; Song, "Blanche Colombe" (Gounod)—Miss Santley; Lieder ohne Worte, in E major and G major, and Con Moto, in A major, Op. 7 (Mendelssohn)—Mdme Marie Krebs.

PART II.—Sonata, in C minor, for pianoforte and violin (Bach), first time—Mdlle Marie Krebs and Herr Straus; Song, "Orpheus with his lute" (Sullivan)—Miss Santley; Trio, in E minor, Op. 199, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (Spohr)—Mdlle Marie Krebs, MM. Straus, and Piatti.

Accompanist—MR ZERBINI.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 21, 1882,

At Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

Quintet, in G major, Op. 33, No. 2, for two violins, two violas, and violoncello (Spohr)—MM. Straus, L. Ries, Hollander, Zerbini, and Piatti; Song, "Il Monaco" (Meyerbeer)—Mr Barrington Foote; Sonata Pastorale, in D major, Op. 28, for pianoforte alone (Beethoven)—Mdlle Marie Krebs; Stücke im Volkston, Op. 102, for pianoforte and violoncello (Schumann)—Mdlle Marie Krebs and Signor Piatti; Song (Henry Smart)—Mr Barrington Foote; Sextet, in F sharp minor, Op. 8, for pianoforte, two violas, viola, violoncello, and double bass (Bennett)—Mdlle Marie Krebs, MM. Straus, L. Ries, Hollander, White, and Piatti.

Accompanist—MR ZERBINI.

Lines.

Sing of you?—Is this singing time,
When never a sound among the boughs
Will help me to complete the rhyme;
When all is noisy, thick, and foul,
And—look how Heaven's muddy brows
Are being covered, with their scowl,
By winter twilight like a cowl?

Sing?—Wherefore sing?—My heart and brain
Are conscious only of a dull
Yearning to see your eyes again.
Fool's faces pass me everywhere,
Shutting out yours, the beautiful;
Until I hardly seem to care
For anything except despair.

And yet—Because I waited long,
But had at last one moment's glance
Of you ere night; I risk this song,
Weary, and dreary, and out of tune,
(O help me with your countenance)
A smile that is a sigh too soon,
A January dream of June.

Pelham.

BALFE'S Painter of Antwerp is to be produced at Her Majesty's Theatre next week.

DR ARTHUR SULLIVAN is at Cairo; Christine Nilsson is in Paris; Mr F. H. Cowen is at Vienna; and Mr Carl Rosa (without Pauline) is in London.

MDME ALBANI is to sing the principal soprano part in Gounod's new oratorio, The Redemption, written for the Birmingham Festival.

DEATH.

On January 15th, at Oakley Square, N.W., EMMA, wife of JOHN ALLISON, of Wardour Street, aged 51.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

BETOKENED HUMPH.—By no means. We hunger and thirst for more, like the two daughters of the horse-leach, which cried "Give! give!"—Think of the "heavenly length" of Dussek's Plus Ultra, about which Schumann was ignorant, and had he not been ignorant would have been just as ignorant, whatever Ebenezer Prout, C. E. Stephens, or Richard Wagner (whose sonatas are by no means as lengthy, or as heavenly as some of Dussek's), may say.

GUY OF THE GLACIERS.—Read the Chronicles of old Liverpool, and you will find that Lancret the hirsute held Speke. Hence the revered puddlian adage (ask Joe Nightingale) "Lancret held Speke and speech." Does our correspondent remember an Italian tenor hight Carrione? If not, let him ponder. Fancy Hector and Astyanax addressing each other in mystic telephone. Homer could never have imagined, Bacon could hardly have inducted, it. Vive les Mages!

GLASGOW.—Do you remember the interview with the King of Hammer-Music? Whiskey! Whiskey! Whisky! O Gemini! What joy to have been with you! Yule time and our young friend, 1882, explain all. Sympathetic greetings to A. M.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.'S, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). Advertisements not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 21, 1882.

MANAGER.—Well, my good friends and patrons!
PUBLIC (unanimous).—Bravo! Bravissimo!

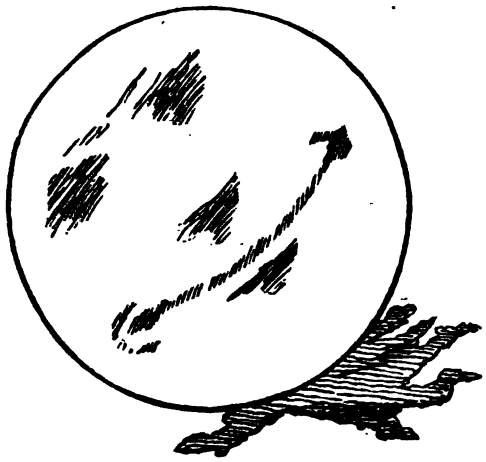
ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.—A meeting was held at Clarence House on Tuesday of the Committee for promoting the establishment of the Royal College of Music. The committee consists of the Duke of Edinburgh, the Duke of Albany, Prince Christian, Lord Charles Bruce, M.P., Sir Henry Thring, K.C.B., Sir Philip Cunliffe Owen, K.C.M.G., Mr George Grove, Mr Charles Hallé, Mr John Slagg, M.P., and Mr Charles Morley. Prince Christian and Mr Slagg were unavoidably absent. The committee decided to recommend to the Prince of Wales the holding of a meeting in the early part of February to consist of representative persons throughout the country, and especially of all branches of music, with a view to aid him in the foundation of the college. The committee came to the important decision that the education of the college should be entirely free.—Times.

Digitized by Google



THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

THE attention of our readers is earnestly invited to the following correspondence, addressed to a contemporary:—

(To the Editor of the "Daily Telegraph.")

SIR,—In the summer of 1875, certain illustrious and distinguished persons, interested in carrying out a design to make South Kensington a great national art centre, brought to the front a proposal for the establishment there of a School of Music. No scheme could have been more influentially recommended at its source; but, unfortunately, when a preliminary meeting was held in Marlborough House, nearly all the dignified speakers, from the Archbishop of Canterbury to the Lord Mayor, had to confess that, though they were present to advocate the subject in hand, they knew little or nothing about it. At that meeting, as some may remember, musicians were conspicuously absent, and an impression seemed to prevail that it had been called to invent a new order of music, or perform some equally striking feat. However, there was little outside disposition to indulge in ridicule. The circumstances were impressive rather than mirth-provoking, and musical people of all sorts and degrees thanked God and took courage because the great and noble of the land, led by Princes of the Blood, seemed bent upon advancing the cause of their favourite art. For a time after the Marlborough House gathering, the cause of the new school prospered, as might have been expected in a country where wealth and position are a real power. Mr Freake generously defrayed the cost of a building contiguous to the Royal Albert Hall; private individuals and corporate bodies founded scholarships for a period of five years; a staff of professors, headed by Mr Arthur Sullivan, was appointed, and, in due course, the "National Training School for Music" entered upon its career under circumstances adapted to secure all the good flowing from brilliant prestige. Five years have elapsed; the scholarships have expired; there is, it appears, no disposition to renew them; and the National Training School for Music—which, by the way, Mr Arthur Sullivan left some time ago—is moribund. So much for one picture; and now, sir, let me show you another.

In the summer of 1822, a meeting of noble and dignified persons took place at the Thatched House Tavern for the very purpose which caused the assembly, on nearly the same spot, fifty-three years later. The Earls of Fife and Belmore, Lords Burghersh and Ravensworth, and several honourables, knights, and esquires, having remarked the entire absence in England of provision for a systematic musical education, determined that this state of things should exist no longer. Out of their councils sprang the Royal Academy of Music, established by Royal Charter, patronized by his Majesty King George IV.—who was graciously pleased to nominate a scholar in the person of the, happily, still living Mr W. H. Holmes—governed by a body of well-born, blue-blooded directors, and having among its professors such men as Crotch (principal), Attwood, Smart, Cramer, Clementi, Dragonetti, Lindley, Loder, and Potter. So far there seems a curious parallel between the genesis of the National Training School for Music and that of the elder institution. Both owe their origin to aristocratic initiative, and were launched upon an active career surrounded by all the advantages that lofty patronage and lusty trumpetings could secure. But the parallelism goes only a little way. The Royal Academy of Music entered upon an unoccupied field of labour. That field was ready for harvest and had no reapers in it, or, at best, only a few individuals working for their own hand, destitute alike of organization and enthusiasm. The National Training School, on the contrary, became one of several candidates for public favour. Especially did it find the Royal Academy still existing, still under Royal patronage, still chartered, capable of indefinite expansion, well-governed, flourishing, and endowed by the state (revenue £80,000,000) with £500 a year. Under these circumstances it must be evident that the respective promoters laboured in somewhat different ways. The one body founded an educational institution where it was wanted; the other set up rivalry and divided interests just on the point where there was not, is not, and never can be, room for two. Here a question naturally arises—Why did not the promoters of the South Kensington School, being animated with a sincere desire for musical good, rally round an institution actively at work, and, after a half-century of chequered existence, enjoying a considerable share of public trust? This pertinent query does not seem to have been put at the Marlborough House meeting. Indeed, it would appear from the remarks of the speakers on that occasion, that the very being of the Royal Academy was unknown to them. The Lord Mayor drew quite a fancy picture of the domestic happiness to flow from the unheard-of operations of the new school. The Archbishop of Canterbury spoke as though the Universities had, up to that time, enjoyed a monopoly of high-class musical teaching, and the Archbishop of York congratulated everybody on the fact that "music will now have a good school in which it might be taught." But if the exalted personages just named illustrated in this particular manner the general ignorance they so frankly confessed, the promoters of the scheme could easily have enlightened them had they chosen. South Kensington, by no means overlooking Tenterden Street, so far recognized it as to open negotiations for an amalgamation of interests. The Training School would gladly have absorbed the Royal Academy, with its charter, its pupils, its professors, its subscription list, and its amazing Government grant. But the Royal Academy wanted something in return, and there was nothing—absolutely nothing, save, indeed, a prospect of sharing the doubtful fortunes of an untried institution. It was asked to sacrifice its identity, abandon an assured position, and incur serious risks for what?—the honour of a residence at South Kensington, and of being directed by high-placed governors during, possibly, a very short period. South Kensington tried upon Tenterden Street a sort of "confidence trick," and when Tenterden Street declined to "hand over," South Kensington said no more, but went its way alone.

Returning to the question of parallelism between the two schools, let me point out that while there was no exact parallelism in their origin, there is none at all in their present condition. The Training School cannot exist without the endowments which nobody seems disposed to renew, and unless help come from some place as yet unknown, it must expire. Whereas, the Royal Academy never flourished as now. Its class-rooms are crowded with students, its professors deem their posts an honourable distinction, and its public concerts have taken rank among the best musical features of the metropolis. How are we to account for this difference—the difference between success and failure, prosperity and ruin? By ascribing it, no doubt, to several causes, but mainly to one which will appear if again we look back upon the past. Not many years have elapsed since the fortunes of the Royal Academy were, to all seeming, as low as now are those of its western rival. Students were few, the treasury was empty, and from the very council-board arose a cry of despair. An offer was even made to return the Royal Charter to its august source, as a first step to dissolution and nothingness. At that crisis, the professors took the tiller into their own hands; the dilettante directors were relegated to purely ornamental functions, and the ship, sailed by men who knew a mainmast from a marlin-spike, weathered the storm. It is the old story. You cannot by however much taking thought make a silk purse out of a sow's ear; neither can an institution of a highly technical character like a school for music be managed by amateurs, since they only bring to the task a partial knowledge and apply it in the intervals of other and personally more important occupations. This, at any rate, is the lesson taught by the history of the Royal Academy, and in its light we can to some extent understand the collapse at South Kensington.

Digitized by Google

I have dwelt upon these incidents of the past for a reason which must be sufficiently obvious. The events of 1875–6 are now repeating themselves in an accentuated form. Once more the South Kensington wire-pullers are at work, and to such purpose that they have presented three Royal Princes on a Manchester platform in the capacity of advocates. I am not surprised at their straining every muscle, because they have to retrieve a failure and, if haply they may, avert confusion of face. Defeat now means final ruin, and they know it. By the way, these astute managers have not been above taking a hint from practices most often met with amid the strain and stress of the commercial world. The collapsed man of business sometimes attributes his fall to lack of daring, and straightway proceeds to make a more brilliant coup. So, the comparatively modest National Training School for Music having come to grief, there rises, phœnix-like, out of its ruins a magnificent scheme for a great national State-endowed College, incorporated by Royal Charter, and governed by an imposing array of dignified and, of course, disinterested friends of the art. Pray understand, sir, that I am not making light of this proposal per se. All of us, amateurs and professionals alike, dream of an English Conservatorium, managed by the wisest musical heads of the country, and wealthy enough to keep its gates always open for the admission of gifted youth. The arguments of Prince Leopold in support of such an institution were as convincing to every reader as they must have been to the Manchester people who were privileged to hear them. That the musical genius of our country deserves ample provision for its culture, that great good would result were the required means forthcoming, and that it behoves the nation to remove a just cause of reproach as quickly as possible, are facts beyond dispute. I, therefore, trust that the Royal Princes will persevere with the work upon which they have entered. The defects in our present machinery for higher musical education require to be known, while the public mind needs to be familiarized with the idea of supporting a great central institution both by private donations and grants from public funds. This work can be accomplished by none better than by the illustrious individuals who spoke at Manchester. They have the ear of the nation, and where they lead thousands are prepared to follow, with eyes shut if need be. It is when the practical part of the question comes up for consideration that the public should exercise caution, and keep their eyes open. There must be no blind confidence here, for we have catastrophe under our very noses as a warning. It seems to me, indeed, that nothing could be plainer than the course marked out at this initial stage by the logic of events. Failure asks to be reinstated with ampler means and a heavier task, but where is the ground for confidence that should accompany the demand? It is not in high rank, or exalted patronage; it is not even in money and good intentions. There must be wisdom in council, experience in management, and, outside, wide-spread confidence. I say frankly that, in musical matters, South Kensington cannot command these essential things. It would be as reasonable for a pilot who has just run his ship on the rocks to expect the reward of skill and judgment as for the managers of the National Training School to demand the control of a great Conservatorium. The marvel is—to those, at least, who look no further—that the ardent lovers of music in the western suburb do not recognize this fact, and, overcoming their predilections for mere locality, rally round the Royal Academy, under the gracious patronage of her Majesty the Queen. It signifies little whether music be fostered next door to the Art's Club or within hail of the Albert Memorial; but it signifies a great deal whether its fortunes be entrusted to those who bring success as their testimonial, or to those who come worse than empty-handed.

The purpose of this letter is served if it suggests a cautious reception of the scheme now being put forward. On another occasion I shall, with your leave, point out the line along which public action should run towards the end of a music school worthy of the nation, and of our place as a music-loving people. Meanwhile, being one whose only interest in the matter arises from an interest in art, I can truthfully subscribe myself

London, Jan. 11. AN AMATEUR.

SIR,—I have no wish to enter into any discussion with your correspondent "Amateur" on the delicate subject of the relations between the supporters of the Royal Academy of Music and the distinguished promoters of the new "Royal College of Music." I merely wish to point out to your readers that the uncomfortable relations which exist between them are entirely owing to the action of the Royal Academy itself; and, also, that the National School of Music has absolutely nothing whatever to do with the question. The real facts of the case, which I defy anyone to gather from "Amateur's" letter, are these: The National School of Music was founded for five years only, and merely as an experiment, while the Royal College was being brought into existence. At the end of the five years the Royal College was not ready; the founders of scholarships were then asked to renew the scholarships for another year, and they did so gladly with scarcely an exception. This year of renewal expires at Easter, and no further request of help is to be made to the founders. It does not require a very large amount of common sense to see that this sort of death, at the close of a definite period of successful work, is a very different thing to the death of failure and ignominy to which "Amateur" suggests that the National School of Music is about to succumb. The tragic attitude of your correspondent would be very amusing if it were not somewhat mischievous; he comes forward and cries look on this picture and on that—the National School of Music is a failure and dying, whereas the rooms of the Royal Academy of Music are crowded with students. If "Amateur" knew a little more about the working of the National School he would find that it has in its short career sent forth a group of singers who are to be heard on every platform where high-class music is to be found, violinists who are beginning to be highly valued as orchestral and solo players, organists who fill very high positions, and many teachers of music in "high schools" and other places of education. The exact numbers of scholars who have thus taken a good position in their profession will be given to him with pleasure by our Registrar, on application. Is this the failure of which so much is said? I can only say that our results will be found to rank higher than any other institution, not excepting the Academy itself, if the returns are limited to the last five years, and the relative number of students in the two places are duly considered, the students at the Academy being numerically four or five to one of those at the National School. Perhaps "Amateur" may not care to be reminded that the late principal of the National School and a large proportion of the professors were and still are among the most successful teachers at the Royal Academy. How very curious that men who are so talented and able when giving lessons in Tenterden Street should prove so utterly imbecile when teaching at Kensington Gore! In conclusion, I will only say that I do think that the public will rightly demand some explanation of the conduct of the Royal Academy of Music in setting itself in opposition to the splendid scheme of musical education now being matured; but I hope "Amateur" will not be angry if I say that he is evidently quite unequal to the task of defending his beloved institution in Tenterden Street, and I shall be much surprised if the public will not at once see that the existence or non-existence of the National School of Music will not in the smallest degree influence the real struggle going on between the Royal Academy and the proposed

Digitized by Google

Royal College. It is a mere ruse thus to point to the "moribund" National School as a justification of the lamentable action of the Royal Academy, or as a proof that that body has acted wisely in declining to form the nucleus of the Royal College. All who can get at facts know better.—Yours, &c.,

JOHN STAINER,
(Principal of the National School for Music.)

SIR,—Dr John Stainer is a distinguished professor, but I can have no personal controversy with him on the basis of the letter which appeared in your columns to-day. For this there are several reasons. In the first place, Dr Stainer evades the gist of the whole question—as far as it is a question of dispute—namely, the "delicate subject" of the "relations," elsewhere termed "uncomfortable relations," between the ordinary folk who are "supporters" of the Royal Academy and the "distinguished promoters" of the new Royal College. It is precisely that which I challenge.

While declining to notice Dr Stainer's sneers at myself, and refusing to treat his letter as a personal communication, I may accept it as an official deliverance from South Kensington, since it is signed by one who describes himself as "Principal of the National School for Music." The major part of the letter is devoted to the past and present of the National Training School, which, we are asked to believe, has lived a flourishing life, and, not only that, but a life longer by one year than was originally intended. As regards the successful career of the School, I have no wish to be ungenerous. Let South Kensington claim and enjoy all the honour of having produced young D'Albert and a few vocalists and instrumentalists of good standing. Indeed, I am disposed to insist upon this, because it strengthens the position it will be my duty to take up by and by—namely, that the best musical talent of the country can only be brought under cultivation by a system of free education. If, as we are now told, the results of the School training "rank higher than any other institution," there is no cause whatever for surprise. The "other institutions" have taken, as a rule, only such students as, inclining to a musical life, could afford to pay for education; whereas South Kensington opened its doors six years ago to pupils chosen by the founders of scholarships on account of proven ability or great promise. That the results in the second case surpass those in the first is not necessarily a consequence of superior teaching. It may more reasonably be regarded as flowing from a better method of selection. Passing from this subject, let us hearken to the cry raised by South Kensington for the purpose of drawing public judgment off the right scent. The National Training School has only three months to live, but it is not dying of disease or inanition. On the contrary, it has survived nine months longer than its founders intended. In their eyes it was never more than a grub destined, after five years, to change into a glorious butterfly. It was the egg out of which was to come the chicken, Royal College of Music, and it was only "an experiment" in cautious recognition of the fact that the most carefully laid ova are liable to addling. All this we are now required to believe; but, sir, I have vainly called upon my memory to corroborate the statement, and I have as vainly looked through the journals of the time for any record of specific and authoritative assertions to the same effect. I find, however, traces of a good deal of tall and vague talk respecting possible future developments, including branch schools in our chief provincial towns at the end of five years, which led a Liverpool paper to observe that meanwhile the Liverpudlians would be subscribing money for the benefit of London lodging-houses. On May 25, 1875, his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales wrote to the Lord Mayor, in terms which certainly did not convey an idea that he was interesting himself on behalf of an "experiment" to be abandoned or continued, according to circumstances, after five years. The Prince said: "Your lordship is doubtless well aware that efforts have been made for some time past by the Society of Arts to establish a National School of Music." In this quotation the italics are mine. After referring to what had been done in the provinces for the purpose of founding scholarships, and expressing a hope that London would emulate the example, his Royal Highness went on to say: "I address myself virtually, in the first instance, to your lordship, to request you to afford me your valuable assistance and experience, so that the Conference may have successful results, and may contribute towards giving to musical talent a free music school worthy of the country, and equal to those which are established in so many parts of the Continent. This was an object in which my father took a great interest, and it is my great desire to help to carry it into effect." We have nothing about an "experiment" here. The Prince, who knows how to express his meaning clearly, had in view an establishment. The matter is not worth arguing further; and I shall speak much more to the purpose if, since I am referred to "Our Registrar," I ask that official to supply me with a list of the individuals and corporate bodies who towards the close of the first term of scholarship showed the slightest disposition to enter upon a second. Is it true or not that, with utter collapse in view, South Kensington begged the founders to subscribe for another year in order that time might be given for starting a fresh scheme? If true, what becomes of the plea that the school was only set going for five years? If not true, what are we to think of managers who, with sixty months before them wherein to prepare for a great change, are, at the end of the sixty-ninth month, only beginning to agitate for means?

Sir, I crave your pardon for dwelling so long upon matters that are simply adjuncts to the main question, and I hasten to point out with what dexterity South Kensington now seeks to hold up the Royal Academy as an offender worthy of punishment. Says Dr Stainer, "I merely wish to point out to your readers that the uncomfortable relations which exist between them (the 'supporters' of the one school, and the 'distinguished promoters' of the other,) are entirely owing to the action of the Royal Academy itself." Again: "In conclusion, I will only say that I do think that the public will rightly demand some explanation of the conduct of the Royal Academy of Music in setting itself in opposition to the splendid scheme of musical education now being matured." Was ever such an example of manifold begging the question? South Kensington, in the first place, points to wickedness which nobody can see, "because 'tis not in sight." I boast no connection with the Royal Academy, and am not in its secrets, but I shrewdly suspect that the managers of that institution would be very glad to have particulars of their criminality made public. Will South Kensington oblige them, just for once? Then how does it appear that the Royal Academy has opposed the "splendid scheme" advanced from the West—unless, indeed, a duck can be said to oppose the institution of dining when it rejects the invitation, "Dilly, dilly come and be killed?" The Royal Academy, as far as I know the circumstances, refused an offer which was deemed unfair and injurious. Will the public demand an explanation of this conduct without first having the particulars laid before them? I trow not.

While squabbling goes on—and it is likely to go on unless by mutual concession a modus vivendi can be established—the country remains without the free conservatorium it so much needs. This is the main fact, standing out bright and clear against a hazy background of controversy. That free conservatorium we want, and must have. The public, let me add, are very likely to "demand an explanation" of its delay. Are those to blame who, for private or local reasons, have resolved that it shall be established in a certain spot and after a certain fashion, or not at all? Is the Royal Academy to blame because of unreasonable susceptibility? Are both to blame because influenced on a great question by little motives? These are the questions music lovers will ask, and these I shall keep before me when, in a third and closing letter, I endeavour to show how all parties may honourably combine towards an end that, without union, can never be reached.

Jan. 13. AN AMATEUR.

SIR,—Surely your correspondent "Amateur" is making an ingenious change of front. His first letter described the miserable failure of the National School for Music, as contrasted with the prestige and success of the Royal Academy, and he marvelled that lovers of music did not rally round the latter institution. He now tardily and ungraciously admits that we have turned out "a few vocalists and instrumentalists of good standing;" and, strangely enough, promises a scheme of his own by which "all parties" can be brought into combination. If this is really what he desires and aims at he will meet with universal sympathy. I cannot, however, in the smallest degree follow his argument that the National School was intended as a permanence and not as an experiment. Corporations and individuals were asked to subscribe for five years; does this mean for ever? I wonder if "Amateur" would take the same poetic view of the length of this term if one of his friends were to borrow a large sum of money from him "for five years." It may be quite true that the promoters of the school hoped that a Government grant might be obtained for its support at the end of this period. But does "Amateur" seriously believe that our admirable professors are responsible for this compulsory stoppage? I only wish we might have this question put to the test by being permitted to carry on the school on our own responsibility with free hands. I think I might safely prophesy, if this were done, that other schools and academies of music would soon be making much more genuine lamentations over our survival than they are now making over our death. Considering the high position of our Kensington teachers, and their close connection with many other important institutions for musical education, it certainly surprised me to find their six years' labour and anxiety described in an offhand way by an anonymous amateur as resulting in a "failure," and I do not think that he has any reason to complain of the tone of my former letter.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

Digitized by Google

JOHN STAINER, Principal.

SIR,—Before coming to the proper subject-matter of this letter, I ask your indulgence while I notice, in few words, the latest communication from South Kensington. The Principal of the National Training School does injustice to his own perceptiveness when he says: "I cannot, however, in the smallest degree follow his (my) argument that the National Training School was intended as a permanence and not as an experiment." Cannot he? Last Thursday, Dr Stainer wrote: "The real facts of the case, which I defy anyone to gather from 'Amateur's' letter, are these: The National School of Music was founded for five years only, and merely as an experiment, while the Royal College of Music was being brought into existence." In his second letter, penned after acquaintance with my "argument," or, as I should prefer to call it, statement of fact, I read: "It may be quite true that the promoters of the school hoped that a Government grant might be obtained for its support at the end of this (the five years) period." Comment is needless. The South Kensington Principal further remarks in his second letter: "Corporations and individuals were asked to subscribe for five years; does this mean for ever? I wonder if 'Amateur' would take the same poetic view of the length of this term if one of his friends were to borrow a large sum of money from him 'for five years.'" Your correspondent will, I hope, permit me to urge that his illustration is most unfortunate. Were one of my friends to come to me and say, "I have 'established' myself as a borrower; lend me so much for five years," I should certainly expect him to repay me at the end of the term, but not to cease business as a borrower. His "established" functions would survive as a matter of course, and he would borrow of someone else, or of me again. The South Kensington borrower, it is now allowed, hoped to dip his hand into the national purse. Dr Stainer appears to be really aggrieved that I should charge the professors of the school with failure. It happens, however, that I never did anything of the kind. If the Principal will read my first letter more carefully, he will see that, while I spoke of the institution as moribund, the character of the teaching was never in question. On the other hand, I devoted a good deal of space to reflections upon dilettante management, which, as was pointed out, had nearly ruined the Royal Academy. Here, indeed, the estimable Principal may accuse himself, with some justice, of inability to follow an argument. Dr Stainer charges me with "making an ingenious change of front." Why, Sir, he did not give me time to put my forces in line of battle. For that, however, I hope you will now afford me space.

Leaving the field of controversy, not again to re-enter it, let me ask those of your readers who take a lively interest in musical matters for their impartial and dispassionate attention. We may have many minds on details, but if we can agree on fundamental principles the great good of harmonious action becomes not only possible but probable. I assume entire agreement as to the need in this country of a conservatorium, analogous in all essential respects to those which have so long done good service on the Continent. In view of this necessity, what are the circumstances affecting the probability of its being met? I answer, that we have two factors already in existence, each essential to the solution of the problem. These factors are the Royal Academy of Music and the great social and artistic influences represented by the term "South Kensington." Neither of these—I am speaking practically, not theoretically—is itself equal to the establishment of a conservatorium. The Royal Academy cannot do it, because it has little, if any, power outside its own walls and beyond the limits of the profession. It would seem, moreover, that the Tenterden Street school does not care to occupy a larger sphere. Like the late Pope, it is ever crying, "Non possumous," and shutting itself up in its Vatican. I am not sure that this is wise policy in the presence of active enemies. The army that always fights on the defensive is virtually beaten before the campaign begins. Now the question arises: Can South Kensington give us a conservatorium? Here the conditions are entirely reversed. South Kensington is a great social power. It sends Royal Princes into the field, and it commands the support of classes who hold wealth in one hand and influence in the other. But South Kensington has scarcely any following among the professionals and amateurs who constitute our great musical public. It is regarded, if not with profound distrust, at any rate with extreme want of confidence, the legitimate and foreseen effect of which appears in the present condition of its musical enterprise. Sir, I contend that no conservatorium is possible in this country apart from the sympathy and support of those who constitute our musical public. Princes and peers, bishops and mayors, are not to be despised, even as fitful helpers of an artistic movement, but they cannot supply the breath of its life. That must come from the sympathy and aid of those to whom art is almost life itself. If I have here set forth facts, it must be evident that we need union between the Royal Academy and South Kensington—each institution being, as regards essential elements, the complement of the other. Surely union is not impossible on the basis of mutual concession, and to work this out let knowledge of actual circumstances determine, first, that which cannot be conceded. We are all perfectly well aware that South Kensington cannot accept the idea of a conservatorium other than as an addition to its own group of art institutions. There are reasons, unnecessary to point out, which definitely place the notion of such a sacrifice among impossibilities. Turning to the Royal Academy, it is no less unreasonable to ask that this institution shall forfeit its name and identity, cut itself loose from a past of sixty years, and become merged in the existence of a new body under a different, untried, and doubtful system of government. The "non possumus" on these points is not, however, an insurmountable barrier to union, provided, of course, there be a desire on each side for the good which union may secure. Does South Kensington really wish for a national conservatorium? Then it will not refuse to ally itself with the Royal Academy for the purpose of developing it into the thing required. Is the Royal Academy of the same mind? Then it will not refuse to go to South Kensington and make whatever reasonable concessions may be necessary, while demanding guarantees in return. Here, then, are the obligations of the case: the place must be South Kensington; the institution must be the Royal Academy of Music under that name, and continuing there the life spent for more than half a century in Tenterden Street. The great difficulty ahead is that of government. South Kensington affects the control of "distinguished" amateurs; the Royal Academy, guided by experience, prefers that of professionals, and neither, perhaps, is likely to yield on a matter so personal to the negotiators. At this point, however, a third factor comes in—the State, which is concerned because it rests with her Majesty in Council to determine whether, if South Kensington, acting independently, press its application for a Royal Charter, the prayer shall be granted. In one contingency, therefore, the State has a potent voice, and in another it is master of the situation, since no national conservatorium can be properly carried on without its aid. I trust that the Government are prepared to take a large view of its duties in this matter. The principle of grants from the public purse in furtherance of musical education was conceded long ago. It enters into the economy of governmental relations with primary schools, and it is illustrated by an annual vote of £500 to the Royal Academy of Music. With the principle admitted, and with a consensus of public opinion as to the need for a great national conservatorium, there is nothing in the way of a liberal annual grant in aid, say, in a certain proportion to the amount subscribed from private sources. Observe how this bears upon the vexed question of governing the amalgam of South Kensington and the Royal Academy. In the representatives of the State overlooking the expenditure of public money we should have a power above the suspicion of cliqueism or of narrow motives, a power to which all might look up, and that would rightfully be paramount because embodying the nation's present and prospective interest in one of its institutions. Taking in the State, I can conceive a form of government for the enlarged Royal Academy that would conciliate all parties—a Board of Professors charged with its artistic direction, and responsible to the Lord President or whoever may act as Minister of Fine Arts; a Council of Directors, upon whom might devolve the control of outward relations, and who might represent the institution before the public; and, lastly, the Minister armed with "constitutional" powers.

Digitized by Google

It may be said, sir, that all this assumes too much—too great a spirit of conciliation on the part of the rival schools, and too great liberality and zeal for art on the side of the State. I know, however, that it does not demand more than must be granted if the Royal Academy for the free training of our musically-gifted youth is to become a reality. The public know this also, and are waiting to see whether the zeal so loudly vaunted in our midst is powerful enough to overcome party, local, and personal feeling. I shall be surprised, also, if they do not treat coldly all mere factional attempts at setting up an institution that, because it is the offspring of a faction, cannot meet a national want. At the same time, they will resent the supineness which simply blocks the way. Thanking you, sir, for the liberality with which you have given so much valuable space to a discussion of this interesting subject, I remain yours, &c.,

AN AMATEUR.

Jan. 16.

Elenchus.

The cost of placing Massenet's Hérodiade on the stage at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, Brussels, is said to have been 80,000 francs!

"Money spent and time as well,
Now, this little book shall tell."

[Read Goethe's Epigrams from Venice. Try the same experiment with time and money upon Rossini's immortal masterpiece, Guillaume Tell, to be given (bear in mind) precisely as Rossini wrote it, with no cuts or "improvements"—but simply Tell, the whole Tell, and nothing but the Tell. Then we shall see what we shall see, and hear what we shall hear. Until that is done the incessant rehearsals of Wagner's operas cannot be taken into account.—Dr Blinge.]

COLOUR-HEARING.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—The Times of the 12th inst. gave room to a paragraph, under the above heading, which provoked the subjoined extra-extraordinary retort from an enthusiastic Wagnerite:—

(To the Editor of the "Times.")

SIR,—I have just read the paragraph on the subject of "colour-hearing" which appeared in The Times of to-day. The discoveries made explain what most people have regarded as a mad eccentricity in the composer, Richard Wagner—that is, his custom, when composing, of sitting in different rooms in which everything is of one colour, and of donning coloured garments on the same occasions. I have not specially investigated the accounts of these habits of his since reading the paragraph, but it seems to me very probable that Wagner selects these colours according to the key in which he is writing. At any rate, I think the fact has an important bearing on the subject of "colour-hearing," and this is my reason for calling your attention to it. I hope that some one more intimate with Wagner's habits than myself—I have only read of them casually—may throw fresh light on this interesting question. I remain, Sir, yours obediently,

W. H. S.

January 12.

An "interesting question," indeed; as if it mattered a farthing candle whether Wagner composed the overture to Tannhäuser in a green suit or a yellow, with a red cap or a black, in a brown room or a blue! If the Prophet of Bayreuth puts on robes "according to the imaginary keys in which he may be casting his inspirations," he ought, like Joseph, to wear a "coat of many colours"—seeing that it is not his fixed habit by any means to stop in one particular key during the space of more than half a minute. He certainly should have a room papered with diminished sevenths, and another papered with tremolandi, with no fire to restore his equilibrium. Are we all in training for Colney Hatch?—Your obedient servant,

LONG.

[Lord Long—not the first time has it been urged in these columns—is a harmless, if not a dangerous, lunatic. Mr T. Duff Short is still on his traces, and will follow him next August, to Parsifal. On quitting Bayreuth, Long, with a ticket for Bamberg, will slope to Frankfort-on-Maine, where he is likely to encounter Dr Cheese and Alderman Doublebody, who have already arrived so far on their foot-walk to the "Festival Stage Play Theatre." Short, who cares nothing about Parsifal, will meet him there—unless the valiant and estimable brothers Drexel, of the magnificent Hotel de Russie, have already given him the tip, and warned him off. Long owes the Drexels a heavy bill; but they are fine fellows, and will not ask him to liquidate. On the contrary, they are more likely to pay his expenses back to London, where Duff Short has been hunting him up these ten years and more. Jolly boys ("Our boys") the Drexels.

Otto Zeard.]

—o—

PROVINCIAL.

PENZANCE.—A concert was given on Friday, January 13th, at which the vocalists were Miss Clara Dowle (student at the Guildhall School of Music, London), Messrs Sampson (tenor), and Wills (baritone); solo violin, Mr Pardew, of Plymouth; organ and pianoforte, Mr R. White, Jun. The concert hall was very crowded. Miss Dowle is an established favourite in the West of England, and her two songs, "The Watchman and the Child" and "It was a dream," were loudly encored and repeated. Mr Sampson gave "Madoline" (Nelson), and "The love of long ago" (Cummings). Mr Wills, "In the cloisters" (Barri), and "The King's Highway." Mr Pardew contributed two violin solos, a barcarolle by Spohr and a tarantelle by Vieuxtemps. Mr White played on the organ Handel's overture to Scipio, a grand offertoire by Batiste on a theme from Beethoven's "Kreutzer" sonata; "In the chapel by the sea," by Barnett, and a grand Festival March by Passmore.—(Communicated.)

PLYMOUTH.—At the Plymouth Guildhall a "popular concert" was given on Saturday, Jan. 14, at which the vocalists were Miss Clara Dowle (of the Guildhall School of Music), Miss Dwelley, and Mr Moon, both of Plymouth. Miss Dowle had previously sung to Plymouth audiences, and had become a great favourite, in consequence the Plymouth Guildhall was crowded. Over 4,000 persons were present, and the doors had to be locked long before the commencement of the concert. Miss Dowle was received with an "ovation" on each time of appearing. She sang "Let me dream again" (Sullivan); "The Watchman and the Child" (Cowen); and the recit. and aria, "Let eternal honours" and "From mighty kings" (Handel), and was enthusiastically encored. For the first she reappeared twice, and bowed her acknowledgments. After "The Watchman and the Child" the applause was so great that she was compelled to return and repeat the last verse. Miss Dwelley was encored in the "Miller and the Maid" (Marzials), and Mr Heard was favourably received in "The little hero" (Adams), "Polly" (Molloy), and "The village blacksmith" (Weiss). Mr Elford played two solos on the cornet, and had to repeat one ("The Lost Chord"). Mr W. H. Hannaford presided at the organ, and gave in an effective manner Rossini's overture to Tancredi and Mendelssohn's "Wedding March." Both musically and financially this concert was the most successful of the series; probably there never were so many people in the hall at any previous concert.—(Communicated.)

Digitized by Google

EDINBURGH.—We read in the Daily Review that the second of five new lectures on "Vocal Culture," by Signor Alberto Bach, was given in the Masonic Hall on Saturday afternoon, Jan. 14, in presence of a large audience. The subjects discussed were "Portamento di Voce," "Legato," "Shakes," and "Recitativo," treated in an interesting and instructive manner, technical monotony being relieved by occasional illustrative reminiscences of great artists. Dr. Moxey, the well-known teacher of elocution, read the lecture on behalf of Signor Bach, and added much to its enjoyableness by his free and masterly delivery; while the first branch of the subject was vocally illustrated in a study for a tenor voice, by Rubini, excellently sung by Mr Stevenson. Miss Helen Hopekirk was also present, and varied the proceedings with a performance of pieces by Schumann and Schubert.

ST LEONARDS-ON-SEA.—A more than usually interesting concert was given here on Tuesday in aid of the organ restoration fund of St Paul's Church. Mdme Rose Hersee and Miss Annie Butterworth were the lady vocalists, the former, though suffering from a sore throat, giving the greatest satisfaction in all her songs and concerted music; the latter gaining a hearty re-call for Berger's sympathetic ballad, "After all." Mr Maybrick sang his own "Little hero" with marked success, and Mr Ernest A. Tietkens in both his songs vindicated his claim to rank as one of our best amateur tenors. The instrumental music was exceptionally fine, including Beethoven's trio in B flat, admirably rendered by Messrs Francesco Berger, Lazarus, and Albert, as well as solos by these well-known artists which were thoroughly appreciated by a fashionable audience. The concert was under the patronage of Her Grace the Duchess of Cleveland, the Marchioness of Abergavenny, the Rt. Hon. Lady Alice Nevill, the Viscountess Combermere, the Lady Anne Murray, the Ladies Mary and Anne Marsham, &c. The whole of the programme was conducted with his usual taste and judgment by Herr Francesco Berger, and you will be glad to learn that it was financially as well as musically "a success."—(From a Correspondent).

WAIFS.

Verdi's Aïda has been produced in Geneva.

A new theatre has been opened at Cherbourg.

Joseffy, the pianist, has returned to New York.

It is proposed to erect a large concert-hall in Milan.

Mad. Geistinger will visit San Francisco in February.

Adelina Patti's two concerts in Philadelphia were a triumphant success.

Herr Feld has been appointed chief conductor at the Stadttheater, Breslau.

Mdme Marie Roze is engaged for the ensuing Birmingham Festival.

Tati, manager of the Teatro Apollo, Rome, has been seriously indisposed.

Gayarre has been singing at Valencia in La Favorita, L'Africaine, and Lucia.

Mr Joseph Bennett is writing a new cantata for Mr A. C. Mackenzie.

The Fisher Operahouse, West Bay City, Michigan, U.S., has been burnt down.

Le Tribut de Zamora, of Gounod, is in rehearsal at the Teatro Regio, Turin.

Mad. Gerster's first appearance in New Orleans (in Lucia) was a great success.

Galli-Marié is fulfilling a successful engagement at the Grand-Théâtre, Lyons.

Rheinthaler's Kätchen von Heilbronn has been given in Brunswick and Hamburgh.

Mr A. C. Mackenzie's cantata, Jason, is to be given at the Bristol Festival this year.

Lohengrin, under the direction of Usiglio, has been well received at the Fenice, Venice.

Stigelli, the tenor, was lately in Milan engaging an operatic company for Monte Video.

H. Ordenstein is appointed teacher of the piano in Kullak's New Academy of Music, Berlin.

Orfeo Livi is appointed extra professor of the pianoforte at the Academy of St Cecilia, Rome.

Mdme St Germaine has been appointed one of the teachers of singing at the Guildhall School of Music.

The spring programme of the Sociedad de Conciertos, Madrid, will include Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Mdlle Bianca Bianchi is re-engaged for three years, with increased salary, at the Imperial Operahouse, Vienna.

Wagner's Tristan und Isolde was recently performed, for the first time, at the Stadttheater, Leipsic, and well received.

The annual Eisteddfod was held on the 30th ult. at Chickering Hall, New York, by the Welsh residents in that city.

L. Massenet, brother of the composer of Roi de Lahore, is getting up a joint-stock company to give buffo opera in Buenos Ayres.

August Cauthal, a once popular flautist, afterwards conductor and composer at Hamburgh, has died in that town, aged seventy-five.

Owing to the illness of the tenor, Stagno, the performances of Les Huguenots at the Teatro San Carlo, Naples, have been temporarily suspended.

The Preston Guild Festival (held at intervals of twenty years) is to be given this autumn, and, we hear, is to be conducted by Sir Michael Costa.

Mrs. Benton, daughter of Joseph Bonaparte, whilom king of Spain, is now teaching music at Watertown, in the State of New York.—Graphic.

Molinari has become the lessee of the Teatro del Fondo, Naples, for five years, while Sig. Frascione has taken the Teatro Nuovo for a stipulated period.

August Wilhelmj, will, it is expected, return to Germany from the Antipodes in the summer, taking China, India, Egypt, Greece, and Italy on his way.

During the present carnival season in Italy, La Forza del Destino will have been played at 11 different theatres; Faust, at 7; L'Africaine, at 5; Aïda and Ruy Blas, at 4 each.

Carl Gramman has added a second finale to his Thusnelda. It was introduced for the first time when the opera was revived (on the 1st inst.) at the Theatre Royal Dresden.

Vera-Lorini, once well known as a seconda donna at our Royal Italian Opera, died at Leghorn on the 8th inst. She made her first appearance in 1845, at the Théâtre Italien, Paris, as Adina in Donizetti's Elisir d'Amore.

About half an hour previous to the performance in the large room of the Kurhaus, Aix-la-Chapelle, on New Year's Eve, the centre chandelier fell; but, as it happened, luckily, no one was injured—no one having arrived in time for that distinction.

Count Karolyi, the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador, has apportioned the half of the proceeds of the concert given at the Albert Hall on January 7th, on behalf of the sufferers by the Vienna catastrophe, in three equal shares of £91 14s. 10d. each, to the Brompton Hospital for Consumption, the Hospital for Sick Children, and the Hospital of St John of Jerusalem and St Elizabeth, both in Great Ormond Street.—Charity Record.

BERLIN.—People are still talking with rapture of Mad. Albani. It almost seems as though they will continue to do so till next year, when she will return and sing several of her characters in German.—A great feature of the last two concerts given by Hans von Bülow and the Ducal Orchestra from Meiningen was the appearance of Johannes Brahms as pianist and conductor. In the first capacity, he played his new Pianoforte Concerto, as he intends doing shortly in Holland as well as at Kiel and Hamburgh.—It is proposed to hold here, in 1883, an International Exhibition of Musical Instruments, and a committee for carrying out the scheme has been formed.—Mad. Paul Taglioni, née Amélie Golster, formerly danseuse at the Royal Operahouse, and sister-in-law of the celebrated Marie Taglioni, died a short time since, aged 78.

Digitized by Google

The only Gold Medal for Wind Instruments with Keys, in the Paris Universal Exhibition of 1878, was unanimously awarded by the Jury to Messrs P. Goumas & Co., for the fine quality of tone and finish of their Instruments.

SPECIAL MANUFACTORY OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FOR

CLARIONETS, FLUTES, PICCOLOS, OBOES, BASSOONS, COR ANGLAIS, FLAGEOLETS, AND SAXOPHONES.

P. GOUMAS & Co.

(Late Buffet, Crampon & Co.),
Established 1830.

Nine Prize Medals have been awarded to Goumas & Co. for general excellence and improvements in the Manufacture of Wind Instruments with Keys.

Manufacturers of all kinds of Wood Wind Instruments for Military Bands, Musical Instrument Makers to Her Majesty's Army and Navy, and to the Armies, Navies, and Conservatoires of France, Belgium, Italy, Russia, Austria, Spain, America, &c.

Manufactory at Mantes (Seine et Oise), France. Paris: Passage du Grand Cerf, 18 et 20.

LONDON: 39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET.
Price Lists sent free on application.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF

ALL KINDS OF MUSIC-STRINGS FOR ALL MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Sole Depôt for Signor Andrea Ruffini's (of Naples) Celebrated Strings for Soloists, manufactured by him on a system invented by Mons. J. B. Vuillaume, of Paris.

Sole Agent for Charles Albert's (of Philadelphia, U.S.) new Patent Improved Chin Rest; also his improved String Gauge.

39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, W.
Price Lists free on application.

All kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner on powerful machines made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S). A Delicious Beverage and Tonic.

Made from Port Wine, Liebig's Extract of Meat, and Extract of Malt; Nutritious, Strengthening, Stimulating, Flesh-forming, Health Restoring, suitable for the Robust in Health as well as the Invalid. Strongly recommended by the Medical Faculty. An Immediate Benefit is experienced after taking it; the Frame is Invigorated, and no ill effects follow.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).

TESTIMONIALS.

Sir,—A short time since I was induced by the novelty of the title to send for a bottle of your Liebig's Extract of Meat and Malt Wine. I was perfectly acquainted with the value of the Extractum Carnis, and not quite a stranger to the invigorating and fortifying properties of malt wine, and therefore felt a natural curiosity to test them when combined. Men who work hard, as I do, not muscular hard work, but that which is quite as exhausting, viz., brain work, very often experience the need of, and have sometimes an almost irresistible craving for, a "pick me up;" and very often the panacea for a time for lassitude, and that state of mind which renders work irksome, are alcoholic stimulants, the use of which must sooner or later end disastrously. The man who can furnish a remedy sure, certain, and harmless, for the lassitude which follows constant brain work is a benefactor of his species, and may be said to have added many years of usefulness to the lives of useful men. Your extract, if a success, and when more generally known, will be used by all toilers of the mind.—Yours faithfully,
O. D. RAY.
Thorpe Hamlet, Norwich, February 23rd, 1881.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Queen's Crescent, Haverstock Hill, London, March 5th, 1881.

Dear Sir,—Some time since, being greatly fatigued with over-work and long hours at business, my health (being naturally delicate) became very indifferent. I lost all energy, strength, and appetite, and was so weak as to be scarcely able to walk. As you are aware, I sent for a dozen of your Extract of Meat and Malt Wine, which, in a few days, pulled me up marvellously. Three or four glasses of it daily have quite altered and restored me to better health than ever, "without the assistance of a doctor." I am now giving it to my son, twelve years of age, whom we have always thought consumptive, and from a puny, ailing boy, he seems to be fast growing into a strong, healthy lad. Enclosed you have cheque. Please send me two dozen of the "Extract." With thanks for your prompt attention to my last, I am, Sir, yours truly,
GEORGE A. TYLER.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Granspound, February 25th, 1881.

Mrs Coulson thanks Mr Coleman for the book and stamps, and she has no doubt but that "the tonic" is a good one. Mrs C. encloses twelve stamps for basket.
Mr Coleman.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Vicarage, Kingsbridge, Devon, January 25th, 1881.

Dear Sir,—We are ten miles from the railway, and have been snowed up, consequently the wine has only just arrived. I enclose a cheque for £2 11s. 6d. I like the wine, and will recommend it.—Yours faithfully,
Mr Coleman, Norwich. A. N. KINGSTON.

Pints, 30s. per dozen: Quarts, 50s. per dozen. Carriage paid to any Railway Station in Great Britain. Sample Bottle sent for 33 stamps.

P. O. Orders to be made payable to

COLEMAN & CO., MUSPOLE STREET, NORWICH.

Cheques crossed "London and Provincial Bank."

Sold by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the United Kingdom, in Bottles, 1s. 9d. and 2s. 6d. each. Ask for Coleman's Liebig's Extract of Meat and Malt Wine, and "See that you get it."

CHAPPELL'S VOCAL LIBRARY OF PART-SONGS, &c.

		Composed or Arranged by	Price
1.	Dulce Domum. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
2.	Down among the Dead Men. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
3.	The Girl I've left behind me. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
4.	British Grenadiers. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
5.	Long live England's Future Queen. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
6.	My task is ended (Song and Chorus). A.T.B.B.	... Balfe	4d.
7.	Thus spake one Summer's Day. S.A.T.B.	... Abt	2d.
8.	Soldiers' Chorus. T.T.B.B.	Gounod	4d.
9.	The Kermesse (Scene from Faust)	,,	6d.
10.	Up, quit thy bower. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	4d.
11.	Maidens, never go a-wooing. S.S.T.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
12.	Fagot Binders' Chorus	Gounod	4d.
13.	Sylvan Hours (for Six Female Voices)	Joseph Robinson	6d.
14.	The Gipsy Chorus	Balfe	4d.
15.	Ave Maria	Arcadelt	1d.
16.	Hark! the Herald Angels sing. S.A.T.B.	Mendelssohn	1d.
17.	England Yet (Solo and Chorus). S.A.T.B.	Jules Benedict	2d.
18.	The Shepherd's Sabbath Day. S.A.T.B.	J. L. Hatton	2d.
19.	Thoughts of Childhood. S.A.T.B.	Henry Smart	2d.
20.	Spring's Return. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
21.	An old Church Song. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
22.	Sabbath Bells. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
23.	Serenade. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
24.	Cold Autumn Wind. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
25.	Orpheus with his Lute. S.S.S.	Bennett Gilbert	2d.
26.	Lullaby. S.A.A.	,,	1d.
27.	This is my own, my native land. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
28.	March of the Men of Harlech. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
29.	God save the Queen. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
30.	Rule, Britannia. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
31.	The Retreat. T.T.B.B.	L. de Rille	2d.
32.	Lo! morn is breaking. S.S.S.	Cherubini	2d.
33.	We are Spirits. S.S.S.	G. A. Macfarren	4d.
34.	Market Chorus (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	Auber	4d.
35.	The Prayer (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
36.	The Water Sprites. S.A.T.B.	Kücken	2d.
37.	Eve's glittering Star. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
38.	When first the Primrose. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
39.	O Dewdrop bright. S.A.T.B	,,	1d.
40.	Sanctus from the Messe Solennelle. S.A.T.B.	Rossini	4d.
41.	Nine Kyries, Ancient and Modern	,,	2d.
42.	Sun of my soul. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	2d.
43.	'Twas fancy, and the ocean's spray. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
44.	A Prayer for those at Sea. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
45.	O Thou whose power (Prayer from Mose in Egitto)	Rossini	2d.
46.	The Guard on the Rhine. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
47.	The German Fatherland. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
48.	The Lord is my Shepherd (Quartet). S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
49.	Te Deum in F	Jackson	2d.
50.	Te Deum in F	Nares	2d.
51.	Charity (La Carita). S.S.S.	Rossini	4d.
52.	Cordelia. A.T.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	4d.
53.	I know. S.A.T.B.	Walter Hay	2d.
54.	Chorus of Handmaidens (from Fridolin)	A. Randegger	4d.
55.	The Offertory Sentences	Edmund Rogers	4d.
56.	The Red Cross Knight	Dr. Callcott	2d.
57.	The Chough and the Crow	Sir H. R. Bishop	3d.
58.	The "Carnovale"	Rossini	2d.
59.	Softly falls the moonlight	Edmund Rogers	4d.
60.	Air by Himmel	Henry Leslie	2d.
61.	Offertory Sentences	E. Sauerbrey	4d.
62.	The Resurrection	C. Villiers Stanford	6d.
63.	Our Boys (new Patriotic Song)	H. J. Byron and W. M. Lutz	4d.
64.	The Men of Wales	Brinley Richards	2d.
65.	Dame Durden		1d.
66.	A little Farm well tilled	Hook	1d.
67.	There was a simple maiden	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
68.	Fair Hebe	,,	1d.
69.	Once I loved a maiden fair	,,	1d.
70.	The jovial man of Kent	,,	1d.
71.	The oak and the ash	,,	1d.
72.	Heart of Oak	,,	1d.
73.	Come to the sunset tree	W. A. Philpott	4d.
74.	May. S.A.T.B.	W. F. Banks	2d.
75.	Pure, lovely innocence (Il Roi de Lahore—Chorus for Female Voices)	G. Massenet	4d.
76.	A Love Idyl. S.A.T.B.	E. R. Terry	2d.
77.	Hail to the Woods! A.T.T.B.	J. Yarwood	2d.
78.	Near the town of Taunton Dean	Thomas J. Dudeney	2d.
79.	Our merry boys at sea	J. Yarwood	2d.
80.	The Shepherd's Farewell. S.A.T.B.	Berlioz	3d.
81.	When the sun sets o'er the mountains (Il Demonio)	A. Rubinstein	3d.
82.	Hymn of Nature	Beethoven	3d.
83.	Michaelmas Day (Humorous Part Songs, No. 1)	Walter Maynard	4d.
84.	Sporting Notes (Humorous Part Songs, No. 2)	Walter Maynard	4d.
85.	Austrian National Hymn	Haydn	4d.

LONDON:

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND STREET, W.

City Branch—14 & 15, Poultry.

Digitized by Google

NEW VOLUMES of the ROYAL SERIES.

THE SONGS OF SCANDINAVIA
AND NORTHERN EUROPE.
EIGHTY-THREE NATIONAL AND POPULAR SONGS.

THE SONGS OF EASTERN EUROPE.
ONE HUNDRED VOLKSLIEDER OF AUSTRIA, HUNGARY, BOHEMIA, SERVIA, &c.

WITH ENGLISH WORDS BY CLARA KAPPEY.

EDITED BY

J. A. KAPPEY.

Price 2s. 6d. each, paper covers; 4s. cloth.

"Messrs Boosey & Co. have done good service not only to amateurs but to art, by including in their series of volumes of national melodies 'The Songs of Scandinavia' and 'The Songs of Eastern Europe.' The first-named contains eighty-three examples; and the second, a hundred. We need not insist upon the importance of collections like these, whatever the country they represent; but we must say that no musical library is complete without the songs of Scandinavia and Eastern Europe. The editor, Mr J. A. Kappey, has taken great pains to secure melodies of a genuinely representative character, and at a time when attention is becoming more and more directed to folk-tunes as a source of new thematic ideas, the volumes in question are of peculiar value. They have our most hearty commendation, the 'Songs of Eastern Europe' more especially, since the volume contains, besides examples of Liszt, Chopin, and other masters, a very valuable collection of volkslieder from the hitherto untouched wealth of the Austrian provinces."—Daily Telegraph.

"Messrs Boosey & Co. have published two additional volumes of their National Songs, which appear likely to be the most interesting of the series. We know little of the rich repertory of Scandinavian Songs, and Mr and Miss Kappey, the editors of these books, are to be thanked for introducing some of the best specimens to public notice. Five of the Russian songs are so old as to be traditional; and in the series are to be found a beautiful Cossack lullaby by one Bachmetieff, a gipsy song by Lvoff, and several songs by Warlamoff. These and the Polish songs (all of which are traditional) may be considered among the most interesting items of a small but acceptable collection. Two ancient Lithuanian songs, a couple of Finnish, and four ancient Norwegian melodies, will likewise be found in the book. The majority of the Swedish songs are by Lindblad, that prolific song writer, who died in 1864. Tradition says that the old melody of 'The Beggar Boy' was once sung in the days when she was a poor child by the distinguished artist now known as Mdme Christine Nilsson. Included in the Danish songs is the traditional 'Dannebrog,' the music of which is attributed to one 'Bay.' It would be interesting to inquire the foundation for this statement, as the origin of the Danish National Anthem was generally understood to be unknown. The tradition of the 'Dannebrog Banner,' which, in 1719, fell down from heaven to bring victory to the Danish arms, is duly recorded in a footnote. Most of the Dutch songs given date back to the sixteenth century; and there are besides three songs by W. F. G. Nicolai, and one Flemish song. Altogether eighty-three of the national songs of northern Europe are included in this valuable and interesting book. In future editions a larger preface or more footnotes, giving further particulars of the old songs whose history is known, would be welcome. Equally interesting are the songs of Eastern Europe, recently issued by Messrs Boosey, and likewise edited by Mr and Miss Kappey. Among the thirty-four Austrian songs, the large majority are volkslieder, and they include Tyrolean, Styrian, and Polish songs, two of them by Chopin. These are followed by twenty-three characteristic specimens of Hungarian songs, giving a very fair idea of the peculiarities of Hungarian music, and comprising modern songs by Liszt, and some traditional songs of Bosnia, Moravia, and Dalmatia. The first of the Bohemian songs is the 'War-song of the Hussites,' once, it is believed, the national song of the country. A few specimens of Servian, Swiss, Greek, and even Turkish melodies. The last are very peculiar; and he peculiar intervals common to this and other Eastern music are claimed by some to have been handed down direct from the music of the ancient Hebrews."—Figaro.

LONDON: BOOSEY & CO., 295, REGENT STREET.

Digitized by Google

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, & SPALDING, at 3 and 5, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, January 21, 1882.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 60.—No. 4. SATURDAY, JANUARY 28, 1882. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.

MONDAY, January 30th, "FLYING DUTCHMAN." TUESDAY, January 31st, "CARMEN." WEDNESDAY, February 1st, "LOHENGRIN." THURSDAY, February 2nd, BALFE'S "PAINTER OF ANTWERP." FRIDAY, February 3rd, "MIGNON."
Doors open at 7.30. Opera at 8.
MORNING PERFORMANCE EVERY SATURDAY AT TWO.
For full particulars see Daily Papers. Box Office open from 10 till 5 daily.

WEDNESDAY NEXT.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERT.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERT, ST JAMES'S HALL, WEDNESDAY Next, at Eight o'clock. Artists: Mdme Sherrington and Miss Mary Davies, Mdme Antoinette Sterling and Miss Damian; Mr Edward Lloyd and Mr Santley, Mr Maybrick and Mr Oswald. The South London Choral Association, under the direction of Mr L. C. Venables. Conductor—Mr SIDNEY NAYLOR. The programme will contain the following Songs, &c.: "Woodland Song" and "Great Grandmother" (Mdme Sherrington); "The Miller and the Maid," "The Little Match Girl," and "Come to me, O ye children" (Miss Mary Davies); "Sunshine and Rain," "The Abbess," and "The Three Fishers" (Mdme Antoinette Sterling); "The Old Barge" and "Looking Back" (Miss Damian); "Far away where angels dwell," "Serenade," and "Good night, beloved" (Mr Edward Lloyd); "To Althea, from Prison," "Gipsy John," and "Father O'Flynn" (Mr Santley); "The Little Hero" (Mr Maybrick); "My Love is come" and "When Vulcan forged" (Mr Oswald). Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Area, 4s. and 2s.; Balcony, 3s.; Gallery and Orchestra, 1s.; Family and School Tickets to admit Six to Stalls, £2; to be had at Austin's, St James's Hall; the usual Agents; and of Boosey & Co., 295, Regent Street.

"THE ABBESS."

HENRY SMART'S admired Song, "THE ABBESS," will be sung by Madame ANTOINETTE STERLING at Mr John Boosey's London Ballad Concert, at St James's Hall, Wednesday evening next, February 1st.

MDME ISABELLE POWERS has the honour to announce to her patrons that her FIRST GRAND EVENING CONCERT will take place on WEDNESDAY, the 8th of February, at the ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC, Tenterden Street, at Eight o'clock, assisted by the following Artists: Miss Manwel, Mdlle Pellétier, Miss Hipwell, Signor Ria, Mr Walsham, Mr Elwin, Mr Yorke. Harp—Miss Ida Audain. Piano—Signor Li Calsi and his pupil, Miss Alice Ashplant, Mr G. Sumpter, pupil of Herr Lehmeyer. Violin—Miss Brousil and Mr G. Brousil. Conductors—Mr S. LEHMEYER and Mr ARTHUR TRICKETT, F.C.O. Tickets of Mdme ISABELLE POWERS, 2, Hetley Road, Shepherd's Bush.

LONDON CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.—
Principal—Mr LANSDOWNE COTTELL.
The Directors invite attention to the recent extension and increased accommodation, residential and otherwise.
Fees from Two Guineas per term, residential from Fourteen Guineas, inclusive of the Musical and Fine Art Lectures.
Free Tuition is awarded to talented young artists unable to pay fees by fund granted for this purpose.
Prospectus (one stamp), Hon. Sec., 6, Tavistock Square.

SCHUBERT SOCIETY. President—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT. Founder and Director—Herr SCHUBERTH. Sixteenth Season, 1882. The SECOND (102nd since the formation of the Society) SOIRÉE MUSICALE of the present Season will take place on WEDNESDAY next, Feb. 1st. Full prospectus on application to H. G. HOPPER, Hon. Sec., 244, Regent Street, W.

MDME EMMA GARDNER (Mezzo-Soprano) desires ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, Town or Country. All communications to be addressed to 25, Grosvenor Road, Highbury New Park, N.

TO THE MUSIC TRADE.

A GENTLEMAN of many years' experience as a London Music Publisher, and who is conversant with every detail of the Trade, is open to accept an ENGAGEMENT as GENERAL MANAGER, or otherwise, in Town or the Provinces. Address—"PUBLISHER," care of Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"PARADISE LOST." An Oratorio. Composed by ANTON RUBINSTEIN, on the Poem of MILTON. The English version of the words by JOSIAH PITTMAN. Paris: GÉRARD, 2, Rue Scribe.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR DANKERTON will sing (by desire) ASCHER'S popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" at Mr Wm. Maklin's Concert, Corn Exchange, Horncastle, on Tuesday evening next.

BENEDICT'S "CARNAVAL DE VENISE."

MISS BEATA FRANCIS will sing BENEDICT'S Variations on the "CARNAVAL DE VENISE," at Onslow Hall, Jan. 29th; and Chelsea Vestry Hall, Feb. 13th (evening).

"THE MESSAGE."

MR HIRWEN JONES will sing BLUMENTHAL'S admired Song, "THE MESSAGE," at the Fourteenth Saturday Promenade Concerts, Montpellier Rotunda, Cheltenham, This (Saturday) Afternoon, January 28th.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" ARRANGED AS A QUARTET.

MR EDWYN FRITH'S CONCERT PARTY will sing ASCHER'S popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" arranged as a Quartet, at all their Engagements throughout the Season.

REDUCED PRICE, 2s. 6d.

THE EPIKLEIS, or Musical Domino (POOLEY'S PATENT), an Aid to Pianists for the Slow Shake and other Exercises—entirely a mental aid. Testimonials from the best Pianists and Teachers. By Post, 2s. 6d. Handbook, with Exercises and useful Hints on Playing, 1s.—JOHN POOLEY, 3, The Terrace, Clapham Park Road, London, S.W. Agents Wanted all over the world.

THE MUSICAL DIRECTORY, ANNUAL, & ALMANACK FOR 1882. THIRTIETH ANNUAL ISSUE. Now Ready. Contents: The Names and Addresses of the Professors of Music, Music Sellers, and Musical Instrument Dealers in the United Kingdom, New Copyright Music published during the Year, Principal Events, &c., &c. Price 3s.; or, in cloth, 4s. Also SIR JULIUS BENEDICT'S PROFESSIONAL POCKET BOOK, giving Spaces for Engagements for every hour in the day. Price, in Roan, 3s.; or, in Russia, 6s. RUDALL, CARTE & Co., 23, Berners Street, W.

THE PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, AND KNIGHTAGE OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE for 1882. By JOSEPH FOSTER.
Early in January. In one or two volumes, royal 8vo, cloth gilt, price 42s. The Peerage or Baronetage separate, each 21s.
The THIRD EDITION, for 1882, containing all new Creations, has been considerably enlarged, and carefully corrected throughout. It is illustrated by upwards of 1,400 Engravings of Arms, &c., and contains fuller pedigrees than any other work.
Westminster: NICHOLS & SONS, 25, Parliament Street.
CHAPMAN & HALL, Limited, 11, Henrietta Street, W.C.

FURNISHED APARTMENTS WANTED.

A Professor of Music requires APARTMENTS (DRAWING and BEDROOM, communicating, with Gas), for a permanency in the neighbourhood of Regent Circus and the Marble Arch. Letters, stating Terms, to be addressed—"J. R.," care of Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street.

Just Published.

THE BETTER WORLD.

Words by Mrs. M. A. BAINES.
Music by
MICHAEL BERGSON.
Composed expressly for and sung by Mdme MARIE ROZE; sung also by Miss JESSICA O'BRIEN.
Price 4s.
London: STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

SUNG BY MISS ANNETTE ALBU.

"A DREAM WISH," Poetry by Mrs M. A. BAINES, Music by MICHAEL BERGSON, is published, price 4s., by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

NEW VOCAL QUARTET.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" Arranged for Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, and Bass by G. B. ALLEN. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

NEW SONG BY J. L. HATTON.

THE GOOD SHIP ROVER. Words by JOHN STEWART. Music by J. L. HATTON. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

SUNG BY MISS ALICE FAIRMAN.

"AT MORN I BESEECH THEE." Sacred Song, rapturously encored at Mdme Liebhart's Concert, Words by GABRIEL (13th Century), Music by MICHAEL BERGSON, is published, price 4s., by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

LA POMPA DI FESTA. Grande Marche, pour Piano, à Quatre Mains. Par IGNACE GIBSONE. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"HER VOICE."

"HER VOICE." IGNACE GIBSONE'S popular Song (poetry by "A Soldier's Daughter"), sung by Mdme ENRIQUEZ, is published, price 4s., by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NEW SONG BY F. H. COWEN.

"A FAREWELL." Song. Words by the Author of "John Halifax." Music by FREDERIC H. COWEN. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"'TIS ALL THAT I CAN SAY" ("I LOVE THEE, I LOVE THEE"), Song. Words by TOM HOOD. Music by HOPE TEMPLE. Sung with distinguished success by Mr Isidore de Lara. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"This song is already tolerably well known and proportionately admired, thanks, in a great measure, to Mr Isidore de Lara, to whom it is dedicated, for whom it was composed, and by whom it is sung. Miss Hope Temple has caught the spirit as well as the rhythm of Hood's half tender, half passionate lines, and the simple expressive melody to which she has set them cannot, once heard, be easily forgotten."—Punch.

Just Published.

MIDNIGHT CHIMES.

(SONG.)

Words by MARIA X. HAYES.

Music by

MICHAEL BERGSON.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

THE OLD HOSTELRY.

Words by HARRY HAYNES.

Music by

W. REES-REES.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

ELISE.

POLKA MAZURKA FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By

W. SHARP.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

DANSE PYRRHIQUE.

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By

BROWNLOW BAKER.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Where may be obtained, Composed by Brownlow Baker, "Bourrée," in E flat, 4s.; "Memory" (Romance), 3s.

Just Published.

UNITY.

A NEW MASONIC SOLO AND QUARTET.

Dedicated by express permission to His Royal Highness PRINCE PATRICK, DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, and all true and accepted Masons.

By

RICHARD F. HARVEY,

Organist of Unity Lodge 238 (Dublin).

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

MENUET DE LULLI.

POUR LE PIANOFORTE.

Par BENTAYOUX.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—The "Menuet de Lulli" can also be played as a Duet for Violin and Violoncello.

THE VOICE AND SINGING.

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

VOCAL EXERCISES COMPOSED BY FRANK MORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by the late FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

New Edition of "LE PETIT SOLFEGE."

LE PETIT SOLFEGE. Vingt Solfèges pour Voix de Mezzo-Soprano. Par Jos. CURCI. Price 6s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

"This work for educational purposes will be found of inestimable value, since it is one of the very few which confines itself to the cultivation of the middle of the voice; and whilst the phrases are admirably adapted to develop the breathing powers and volume of the voice, the melodies are so exquisitely harmonised that they must prove of great benefit in the improvement of the taste and ear of a student in singing."—Pictorial World.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE.

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdme Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklein, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis, of Basingstoke, says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

"ON THE GOLDEN SANDS."

JUST PUBLISHED. "ON THE GOLDEN SANDS." Words by MARY MARK-LEMON. Music by ISIDORE DE LARA. Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

SONGS BY SUCHET CHAMPION.

"THE TEST." Price 4s.

"A GENTLE WORD." Price 4s.

"OLD ENGLAND, AWAKE." Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

MADEMOISELLE ET MONSIEUR.

POLKA, POUR PIANO.

Par BENTAYOUX.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—The Illustrated Title of "Mademoiselle et Monsieur" is by Alfred Concanen.

THE BICYCLE.

SONATA FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By STANISLAUS ELLIOT.

1. ALLEGRO.—"The First Attempt."
2. ANDANTE.—"Despair and Return."
3. SCHERZO.—"Second Attempt."
4. RONDO.—"Success at last."

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The wedding of humour to music is, perhaps, one of the signs of the age. 'The Bicycle Sonata' is an illustration. At first sight it might seem that no author of standing would attempt to write of our friends the riders. There can be no question of the boldness of the attempt; the delights and vicissitudes of 'wheeling' are interpreted with skill, dramatic power and a sense of humour which raise the work and rescue it from vulgarity."

Digitized by Google

CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.

A better all-round performance of Mignon than that given on Friday night has never been witnessed in this country. We say so deliberately, and with a full knowledge of all that the statement involves. Something excellent was, of course, anticipated. Mignon, in the English shape corresponding to the opéra comique of France, plays exceedingly well; lending itself graciously to occasional dialogue, and at the same time deriving brightness therefrom. Besides this, Mr Rosa's people have so frequently performed it in the country that, as well as feeling at home in their respective characters, they act up to each other in a manner essential to a good ensemble. Artists individually less able, but with the same knowledge and discipline, could not have failed in securing a good result. How much more those actually concerned in a representation which had every part well filled! The effect upon such of the audience as care at all about an English lyric stage must have been very encouraging. Here was the performance of a high-class opera, entrusted wholly to English-speaking artists, and able to challenge victorious comparison with the same work as given with the means and appliances of our Italian houses. If this can be done once, it can be done again and again—it can be made the rule, and so demonstrate to the most prejudiced believer in foreign excellence and native demerit that we are able to set up a lyric stage for ourselves.

Miss Gaylord, an artist of bright intelligence, has much improved her Mignon since last she played it in London; and now it is hard to say what the embodiment lacks of that which all agree as necessary to excellence. The interesting heroine of MM. Carré and Barbier—she belongs more to the French dramatists than to Goethe—has had some admirable representatives in this country; witness Mdme Christine Nilsson and Mdme Albani, the light of whose creations is not likely soon to be eclipsed. But with all due recognition of previous efforts, we doubt if the best has presented a Mignon of greater pathos and charm than the Mignon of Friday night. Miss Gaylord looked the character to more advantage than most of her predecessors, and played it with a delicacy of touch and a nice gradation of shading which were altogether a surprise. The child's fear of her cruel master; her instinctive clinging to Wilhelm at first purely for the unaccustomed warmth of human sympathy; the dawning of love; and the power of jealousy over an untrained nature, were all shown with a refinement of manner and truth of expression that cannot be too warmly praised. In Miss Gaylord's singing there was an occasional lack of power, but in the more tender and pathetic passages she gave great satisfaction. It suffices to indicate, by way of example, her delivery of "Knowest thou that dear land?" and of the prayer which, in the final scene, Mignon recalls from the past of her earliest years. We need scarcely add that the young lady's success with the audience was decided throughout. Abundant honours fell also to Miss Georgina Burns, who entered thoroughly into the spirit of Filina's character, and made the conquest of Wilhelm by that professional coquette seem not only natural, but inevitable. Miss Burns sang always with fluency, rising to absolute brilliancy in the polonaise, "I am Titania," which had to be repeated. On her part, Miss La Rue was a handsome Frederic, and something more. By many a touch she showed that the comedy of the scene was not lost upon her, while her singing had the merit of neatness and point. The Wilhelm of the evening claimed the attention which is always the right of a débutant. It will be remembered that Mr Barton M'Guckin joined Mr Rosa's company some months ago, but months under a year count little towards making a stage artist. Hence it was probably expected that Mr M'Guckin would show more or less of the rawness of a novice. But, as a matter of fact, the Irish tenor semed quite at home with his work. Signs of experience were, of course, wanting. On the other hand, Mr M'Guckin carried himself so well and entered so easily into the business of the various scenes that his new line of artistic work appeared to be also his vocation, in the true meaning of the word. Added to this was singing marked by real ability. The famous "Adieu, Mignon"—one of the most tasteful of French romances—lost nothing in Mr M'Guckin's hands, and was sung twice by general desire, while the other important tenor numbers were so given as to suggest that the artist possesses genuine dramatic feeling. In short, the début was a decided success. Mr Leslie Crotty's Lothario took a somewhat novel form. We have seen Lothario ever pushing himself to the front in loud self-assertion, but that of Mr Crotty was self-restrained and quiet, obviously bearing the burden of some great sorrow. The music of the part proved none the less effective because given without boisterousness. Mr Lyall's Laertes, an impersonation finished to the last degree, amused the house as much as ever. Yet there was no trace of exaggeration in the part, and herein lies the value of Mr Lyall's talent. He knows how to make the most of nature without overstepping its bounds. Mr Brooklyn played Antonio, and Giarno fell to Mr Betjemann, the Admirable Crichton of the company, who is conductor one night, stage villain the next, and stage manager always. The chorus did their work well, while the orchestra, very ably presided over by Mr Pew, seemed to revel in the delicate and delightful orchestration of the French composer. There was hardly a fault in its playing which may stand, therefore, as representing a general performance of singularly high merit.

The public's very old friend, Balfe's Bohemian Girl, occupied the stage on Saturday night—how, and with what results, can be imagined without word from us, and was repeated on Wednesday (in place of The Painter of Antwerp), when Mr Ben Davis made a very favourable début as Thaddeus, Balfe's new opera being postponed till this (Saturday) evening.

MR SIMS REEVES'S CONCERT.

There was a very large number of people gathered together on Tuesday night in St James's Hall, attracted by the announcement that Mr Sims Reeves would appear, and take part in the first of a proposed series of concerts of operatic, national, and miscellaneous music. The expectations of many were at first chilled by the papers distributed through the room, announcing that the great singer was "unable entirely to fulfil his duties," in consequence of the recent trying weather. But the confidence of the assembly was restored when it was explained that Mr Reeves, in claiming the kind indulgence of his patrons and friends, only proposed to omit the first song set down for him. When he did appear upon the platform, a most enthusiastic demonstration awaited him, and when he had sung Bishop's song, "My pretty Jane," in his own most perfect style, the plaudits were repeated again and again, and acknowledged, but the encore was not given, as the majority hoped it would have been. The extraordinary hold the great artist possesses upon the judgment and the affections of his countrymen was easily explained by his unapproachable vocalization, his power of expression, and the grace and artistic polish with which he sings, and which makes him the model which younger men may imitate, but can never surpass. His admirable vocalization was not the only pleasure offered on this occasion. There was a programme of unusual variety, remarkably well rendered by the talented band of artists associated with Mr Reeves. The first part of the programme included a selection from Weber's Der Freischütz, in which Mdme Marie Roze sang the great scena, "Softly sighs," with great dramatic power, as she did also later in the evening the selected pieces from Sir Henry Bishop's compositions. Miss Spencer Jones, a young lady, a comparative stranger to London, exhibited a beautiful, sympathetic voice of mezzo-soprano quality and a good style of singing. Mr Herbert Reeves, by his excellent and artistic delivery of "Sigh no more, ladies" (Stevens), delighted his hearers; and Mr Barrington Foote, with Mr Pyatt, contributed greatly to the enjoyment of the evening. A novel and distinctive feature was contributed by the Anemonic Union, a small band of players upon wind-instruments—whence their fanciful title—composed of some of the best known players in London, namely, Mr Nicholson, flute; Mr Malsch, oboe; Mr T. E. Mann, horn; and Mr Wotton, bassoon; the whole body being under the direction of Mr Henry Lazarus, perhaps the best, certainly the most highly esteemed, performer upon the clarinet. These artists, with Mr Sydney Naylor as accompanist hors ligne, "discoursed most excellent music," and helped to make the concert additionally noteworthy. Mr Sims Reeves promises for his next concert a selection from Macfarren's opera, Robin Hood, with Mdme Sherrington and himself to sing certain of the pieces in that opera, which helped its wide and permanent popularity.—Home Journal.

MILAN.—Marzagora's new ballet, Daï-Natha, despite the large sums expended on the scenery, dresses, and decorations, and despite the excellence of the corps de ballet, hangs fire somewhat at the Scala.

NICE.—A Massenet Festival was to be given yesterday at the Cercle de la Mediterrannée, when Ève, the overture to Phèdre, and various smaller works from the same pen were to be performed. Massenet had consented to conduct Ève himself. There were to be a hundred and thirty executants, the vocal solos being sung by Mdme Brunet-Lafleur, MM. Bosquin, and Giraud. There is some talk of another Festival, to be devoted to La Tempête by Duvernoy. (Juste ciel! What next?—Dr Blitz.)

CINCINNATI.—The prize of 1,000 dollars offered by the Musical Festival Association for the best original choral and orchestral composition, to be performed at the Grand Festival next May, has been awarded to the setting of the "Forty-Sixth Psalm," by Mr Gilchrist, of Philadelphia. The judges were Carl Reinecke, of Leipsic; Saint-Saëns, of Paris; and Theodor Thomas, of New York. The competition was open to all citizens of the United States, irrespective of birthplace, and there were nineteen competitors.

Digitized by Google

FORM OR DESIGN IN VOCAL MUSIC.

(Continued from page 23.)

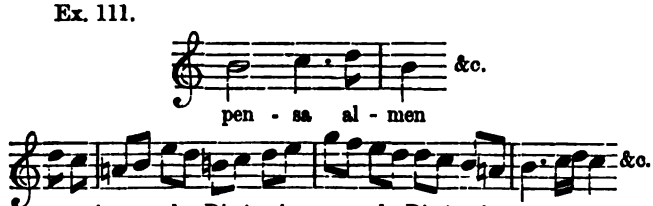
In this movement* the rapid agitated music of the episodes is an expression of horror at the perfidy of the lover, the slow entreating music of the main subject is expressive of yearning for the renewal of his love; and the whole is a struggle for mastery between the two feelings. Now horror is foremost, now love, and yet again love is foremost, but mingled with the tumultuousness which horror has brought to it, as in the coda. The episodes always end with a half-close, the main subjects always with a full; thus suggesting the greater strength of the love than of that which disturbs it but yet cannot undo it.

Mozart's "Non temer," the setting for soprano with pianoforte obbligato, which was written, as his private list says, "for Mdlle Storace and me," is a rondo of somewhat extended and free form. Both the slow and quick movements are included in the plan of one rondo. The slow part contains a principal subject, in E flat:

Ex. 110.

an episode, in B flat:

Ex. 111.



followed by the principal subject again, in E flat, and a second episode in mixed keys:

Ex. 112.

This closes the slow part with the dominant of E flat, and thus brings round the original key, E flat, with a new idea in quick time as principal subject and as commencement of the quick movement:

Ex. 113.

Following this is a short episode, in B flat:

Ex. 114.

and the second principal subject again. After this is the second episode of the quick movement, which is long, with a good deal of modulation and many ideas:

Ex. 115.

* Finale of Beethoven's "Ah perfido."

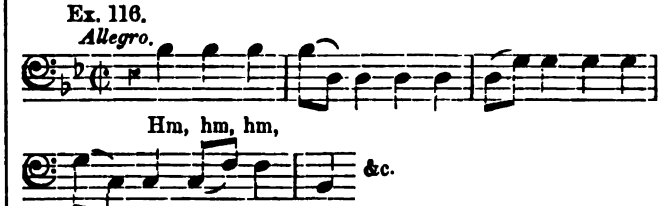
falling again into the second principal subject. The music following this is chiefly in E flat, and of the nature of coda; its tonic pedals, transient modulations to sub-dominant, alternations of tonic and dominant chords, and of tonic, dominant, sub-mediant and super-tonic, all pointing onwards to the end.

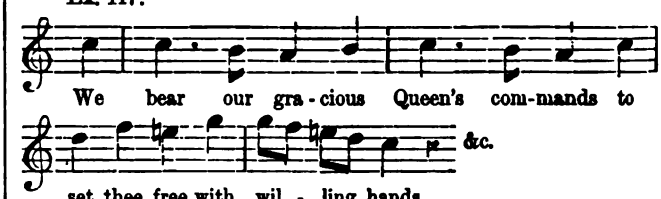
The quintet in the Magic Flute, between the three ladies, Tamino, and Papageno, is a rondo in its key form but not in its ideas, either poetical or musical. In point of idea it follows the madrigal plan, for each idea is completed before the next is touched. This is in harmony with the constant change of ideas in the words, which, when said, are not alluded to again in the course of the piece, and do not touch any deep emotion which may be interpreted as recurring in the minds of the speakers again and again. Musical consistency is attained by the rondo form in which the keys are laid out; the first idea is in B flat, the second in F, the third is in B flat, the fourth goes abroad again, the fifth is B flat, and the sixth B flat, as a sort of coda. It will be felt that the constant return of the main key joins the different ideas together as separate links in a chain, as in far grander style did the singleness of key of the "Hallelujah Chorus." The appropriatness of thus linking the ideas together is apparent, for though distinct, they are of the same tendency, and carry on the events of but one situation in the plot. 1st, Papageno sings with locked lips, and Tamino pities him:

Ex. 116.



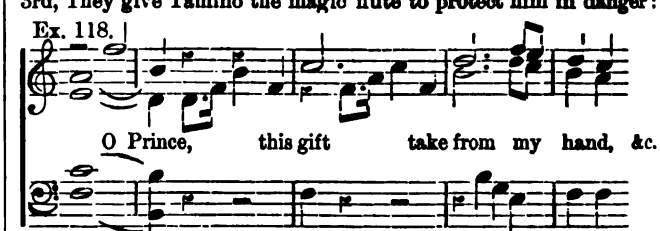
2nd, The three ladies say that this locking of his lips was done for his good, and proceed to unlock them, telling him to beware of malice and lying:

Ex. 117.



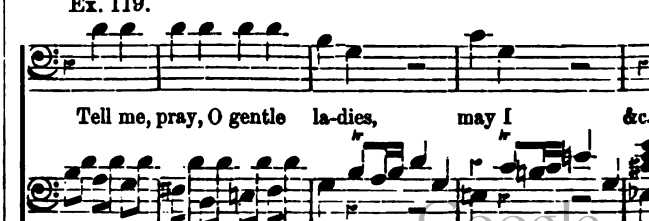
3rd, They give Tamino the magic flute to protect him in danger:

Ex. 118.



4th, Papageno receives a command to go with Tamino to Sarastro, and demurs because Sarastro is a tiger:

Ex. 119.



Digitized by Google

5th, The magic bells are given to Papageno for his protection:

Ex. 120.

6th, Tamino and Papageno are told of the three spirits who will always be at hand to help them:

Ex. 121.

Andante.

The plan of the keys is carried out to such perfection, in this movement, that each separate idea is in complete form of some kind; the first, second, fifth, and sixth are miniature sonatas, the third and fourth, rondos, with sometimes a passage to connect one idea with the next. By this treatment, the whole is made like some statue, of which not only the large outlines, but every feature and every detail has been finished with the utmost care and minuteness by the master's hand.

OLIVERIA PRESCOTT.

(To be continued.)

RUSSIAN PERSECUTION OF THE JEWS.

O Son of Man, by lying tongues adored,
By murderous hands of slaves with feet red-shod
In carnage deep as ever Christian trod;
Profaned with prayer and sacrifice abhorred
And incense from the trembling tyrant's horde,
Brute worshippers or wielders of the rod,
Most murderous even of all that call thee God,
Most treacherous even that ever called thee Lord;
Face loved of little children long ago,
Head hated of the priests and rulers then,
If thou see this, or hear these hounds of thine
Run ravening as the Gadarean swine,
Say, was not this thy Passion, to foreknow
In thy death's hour the works of Christian men?

Jan. 23, 1882. A. C. SWINBURNE.

(To the Editor of the "Daily Telegraph.")

SIR,—I am one of many persons who are moved by your denunciation of the lawless cruelties perpetrated on the Jews in Russia, and the apparent connivance or apathy of the varnished savages who misgovern those barbarians. If the latter persist in that course and so make that a national crime which might otherwise remain the crime of numerous individuals, some great calamity will fall on them, or history is a blind guide; and by the same rule you give friendly advice when you urge our Government and people to protest and wash their hands before God and man of this terrible crime. I fear, however, that a mere Government protest will be slighted or evaded by Russian mendacity. Fortunately, our nation can speak and act by other organs besides our Government, and now is the time to show ourselves men, and men whose hearts are horrified at the cowardly cruelty of this Tartar tribe to God's ancient people.

Let us take a wide view of this situation, since it is so great and so new in our day; for wholesale persecution of the Jews is not of this epoch, but "a reversion" to the dark ages. One of the signs that distinguishes a true Christian from a sham one is that the former studies the Greek and Hebrew Scriptures with care and reverence, and there learns the debt his heart, soul, and understanding owe to historians, poets, philosophers, prophets, preachers, and teachers, some writing Greek, some Hebrew, but every one of them Jews; and also learns to pity and respect the Jewish nation, though under a cloud, and to hope for the time when they will resume their ancient territory, which is so evidently kept waiting for them. This, the hope of every Christian, is the burning and longing desire of many for another reason—because the prophecies we receive, though obscure in matters of detail, are clear as day on two points: That the Jews are to repossess Palestine, and, indeed, to rule from Lebanon to Euphrates; and that this event is to be the first of a great series of changes, leading to a vast improvement in the condition of poor suffering mankind and of creation in general. Now we have here in prospect a glorious event as sure as that the sun will rise to-morrow. The only difference is that the sun will rise at a certain hour, and the Jews will occupy Syria and resume their national glory at an uncertain day.

No doubt it is the foible of mankind to assume that an uncertain date must be a distant one. But that is unreasonable. Surely it is the duty of wise and sober men not to run before the Almighty in this thing; but, on the other hand, to watch precursory signs and lend our humble co-operation, should so great a privilege be accorded to us. This sudden persecution of the Jews in the very nation where they are most numerous—may it not be a precursory sign and a reminder from Providence that their abiding city is not in European Tartary? I almost think some such reminder was needed; for when I was a boy the pious Jews still longed for the Holy Land. They prayed, like Daniel, with their windows open towards Jerusalem. Yet, now that the broken and impoverished Saracen would cede them territory at one-tenth of its agricultural and commercial value, a cold indifference seems to have come over them. I often wonder at this change of sentiment about so great a matter and in so short a period, comparatively speaking, and puzzle myself as to the reason. Two solutions occur to me: 1, Dispersed in various nations, whose average inhabitants are inferior in intelligence and forethought to themselves, they thrive as individual aliens more than they may think so great a multitude of Jews would thrive in a land of their own, where blockheads would be scarce. 2, They have for centuries contracted their abilities to a limited number of peaceful arts and trades; they may distrust their power to diversify their abilities, and be suddenly a complete nation, with soldiers, sailors, merchants, husbandmen, as well as financiers and artists.

If I should happen to be anywhere near the mark in these suggestions, let me offer a word in reply to both objections. In the first place, they both prove too much, for they would keep the Jews dispersed for ever. It is certain, therefore, they will have to be got over some day, and therefore the sooner the better. As to objection one, it is now proved that sojourning among inferior nations has more drawbacks than living at home. True, the Russian yokel has for years been selling to the Jews his summer labour in winter, and at a heavy discount. But the silly, improvident brute has turned like a wild beast upon them, and, outwitted lawfully, has massacred them contrary to law; and truly Solomon had warned them there is no animal more dangerous than a fool and a brute beast without understanding. Besides, they need not evacuate other countries in a hurry and before the resources of their own land are developed. Dimidium facti qui bene cœpit, habet. Palestine can be colonized effectually from Russia alone, where there are 3,000,000 Jews trembling for life and property; and the rest would follow. As to the second objection. History is a looking-glass at our backs. Turn round and look into it with your head as well as your eyes, and you shall see the future. Whatever Jews have done Jews may do. They are a people of genius, and genius is not confined by Nature, but by will, by habit, or by accident. To omit to try is not to fail. What have this people tried heartily and failed in? Warriors, writers, builders, merchants, law-givers, husbandmen, and supreme in all!

When they will consent to rise to their destiny I know not, but this I do know, that, whenever they do, not excessive calculations, but some faith, will be expected from them, as it always has been, as a condition of their triumphs, and they will prove equal to the occasion, and be great in the arts of peace and war, and their enemies melt away before them like snow off a dyke. Should they seem to require help at starting from any other nation, blessed will be the nation that proffers it; and the nation that persecutes them will be made an example of in some way or other. Therefore, if by any chance this recent outrage should decide the Jewish leaders to colonize Palestine from Russia, let us freely offer ships, seamen, money—whatever we are asked for. It will be a better national investment than Egyptian, Brazilian, or Peruvian bonds. Meantime, I implore our divines to separate themselves, and all the souls under their charge, in all the churches and chapels of the land, from the crime of those picture-worshipping idolators and cowardly murderers, by public disavowal and prayerful humiliation, since the monsters call themselves Christians.—Yours faithfully,

Digitized by Google

CHARLES READE.

3, Bloomfield Villas, Uxbridge Road.

THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

These concerts pursue the even tenour of their way, and for some little time past have found their interest in presenting to a crowd of faithful patrons the masterpieces which become more welcome as they are better known. On the last occasion, however, the programme contained an important novelty—to wit, an Ottet in A major, for strings, by Mr Svendsen, a Swedish composer whose abilities do not now require to be proclaimed as wanting recognition. In his very admirable analysis of the ottet, Mr J. W. Davison informed the audience that it is one of Mr Svendsen's earliest efforts. Internal evidence speaks loudly in support of this statement. The work exemplifies what Mr Davison calls the "irrepressible impulse to create something" so characteristic of youthful composers nowadays, and hence it has a style, a method, and to some extent a form of its own. This would alone serve for interest, since the most conservative amateur must look with approval upon an "irrepressible impulse," which, while it may create something beautiful, is willing to accept the responsibility of an exactly opposite effect. Our young musicians do well to give their impulse free play when once, as Professor Macfarren lately counselled, they have ballasted themselves with knowledge of what the masters did before them. Ignorant impulse is worthless. In music it only spoils paper, spreads irritation, and gives an opportunity of looking foolish to a lot of silly people, who think to show themselves wise by acclaiming whatever is new and strange. Mr Svendsen's ottet is not a product of ignorant impulse, but the work of a man who knew what he did and why he did it. Hence, for all its "independence of accepted models," it deserves respectful consideration. The opening allegro is, to our mind, much the best movement, not because it most nearly approximates to classic form—though that is an advantage—but on account of its intrinsic merits as an expression of musical thought and an evidence of technical skill. It is long, but not diffuse, in the sense that the composer has a great deal to say of an irrelevant nature. Indeed we hardly know where to find among modern works an example of greater economy of theme. Having lighted upon two good subjects, Mr Svendsen has here treated them with inexhaustible ingenuity and uniformly good effect. He shows what a master of his craft can do in the way of exposition, and how little need there is for him to be dragging in episode after episode to spin out the required length. Such work undoubtedly demands the highest talent—which is why we see so little of it—and should the art of doing it vanish in course of the growing revulsion against old fashions, true music will receive a heavy blow. The harmonic structure of the movement is decidedly free, but exceedingly rich, while in dexterous use of the resources furnished by his eight instruments Mr Svendsen leaves nothing to desire. Though marked by great variety, the prevailing character of the scherzo is fancifulness carried almost to exaggeration. In a scherzo, that which is bizarre finds a natural place, but the force of eccentricity can go too far, and we are by no means sure that examples are wanting here. It would, however, be rash to speak positively after a single hearing. The slow movement is less interesting and scarcely worthy of the work. Not so the finale, a movement constructed upon themes distinctive enough to be suspected of a "national" origin. Here Mr Svendsen is heard at his best, both ear and mind being gratified, the one by pleasant melodies and ever-varying harmonic effects, the other by a perception of natural development and symmetry. To sum up, the ottet in A is a welcome addition to Mr Chappell's repertory, and will remain, unless we be greatly mistaken, on the "active list." It was capitally played by Messrs Straus, Ries, Wiener, Gibson, Hollander, Zerbini, Pezze, and Piatti. Another novelty proceeded from the exhaustless store of Sebastian Bach, Miss Marie Krebs and Herr Straus introducing the old master's Sonata in C for piano and violin—one of a set of six, of which two had previously been heard at these concerts. The two allegro movements were played to perfection, and much appreciated for their ingenuity and ceaseless flow of melodic figures. Miss Krebs' solos were the Lieder ohne Worte in E major (Book 6) and in G major (Book 5), together with the Study in A by the composer of those beautiful "songs." Her playing of the study was a masterpiece of execution, the ever-rushing semi-quavers continuing without a single fault to the end. No wonder that the audience acclaimed so fine an example of real virtuosity. Spohr's trio in E minor (Op. 119) ended the concert, which derived interest also from Miss Santley's very charming singing of songs by Sullivan, Gounod, and Schubert, Mr Zerbini ably accompanying.—D. T.

TWO FRENCH TENORS.*

DUPREZ AND ROGER.

II.

(Continued from page 14.)

It was by a strange accident that Roger first came to play Raoul in Les Huguenots. That opera was announced in London for Mad. Viardot's benefit. At noon, Mario sent word to say he was hoarse and could not appear. The manager entreated Roger to undertake the character. But Roger had never played or even rehearsed it—though, it is true, he knew the opera by heart. He was aware he was staking his future. If he were unsuccessful he jeopardised his position at the Paris Grand Opera before he entered on it; if he succeeded he should achieve a triumph. He closed his eyes like a man going to jump into the water, and—consented. The only stipulation he made, that he should sing in French instead of Italian, was conceded, and the bold venture was most fortunate. The result of the general admiration gained by the extemporised Raoul was that Meyerbeer, always hesitating and always seeking, resolved on entrusting Roger with the part of John of Leyden in Le Prophète. The colossal work was studied and rehearsed from December, 1848, to April, 1849. Roger and Mad. Viardot obtained in it their greatest triumph. In 1849 Roger visited Germany professionally for the first time. He learned his parts in German, a feat his countrymen thought impossible. He discovered he had a talent for foreign languages, and asserted, not without good grounds, that every musician with a proper organization must possess the same. He mentions several little expedients for helping the learner, and warns the latter above everything not to be frightened by the printed characters, "the pointed Gothic ends of which are always running into one's eyes." The first visit to Germany was soon followed by a second, third, and fourth. Roger was in raptures with the warm appreciation he found in Berlin, Dresden, Frankfort, and Hamburgh. He was as pleased as a child with any mark offered him of respect and enthusiasm. The mania of the Germans for albums, however, was hateful to him. In Dresden he received from an unknown—but, naturally, female—hand, a nosegay with a long high-flown poem. He took the trouble to translate the latter into French. He really turned it into very neat verse; then he became a little ashamed of such vanity, and at last comforted himself with the charming remark, "Mais bah! On n'est pas ténor pour rien!"

In May, 1854, Roger, as Fernand in La Favorite, appeared for the last time at the Paris Grand Opera. The diary does not clearly explain the cause of his leaving, but, celebrated and spoilt, he appears, like so many of his colleagues, to have claimed more money and laurels than should fall to the lot of any artist, even the best, if permanently engaged. He preferred, at any rate, wandering about from theatre to theatre abroad. "Je suis mon maître!" he says with proud satisfaction.

"After the Day's Shooting," is the inscription at the head of the last chapter in the diary. The day's shooting in question is that when his gun unfortunately went off by accident, shattering his right arm. He behaved with marvellous firmness and courage under the calamity. The maimed limb was amputated, and an artificial one had to take its place. A few months only after the operation he wrote in his diary, "Do not let us think any more of the lost arm," and started to fulfil fresh starring engagements in Germany. Though possessing only half the proper number of arms, and only half a voice, he still delighted his hearers with the warmth and delicacy of his singing and the charm of his acting. When, at length, the remains of his voice failed him, he devoted himself with thorough zealousness to teaching others, and, during the ten years he was connected with the Paris Conservatory, formed many a sterling singer. He was ailing only a short time and awaited death with composure. He died in Paris on the 12th September, 1879. In him dramatic vocal art lost one of its greatest and most amiable masters.

As a pendant to Roger's book, though somewhat more slender in bulk and purport, we have the autobiography of Duprez. It will doubtless be greeted by his numerous admirers as a welcome gift. Nevertheless it is very far from possessing the charm of Roger's work. Behind the account of the writer's joys and sorrows, behind the narrative of what he did, and what he did not, do, we do not find so exciting, clever, and cheery an individuality as Roger's. Duprez calls his book Souvenirs d'un Chanteur. But what reminiscences can be more important and dearer to a singer than those of his theatrical triumphs? So Duprez delights in telling them, though with a simple good nature with which we cannot be angry. But his Souvenirs will find a full response only in the breast of those readers who have themselves heard the celebrated tenor and contribute valuable recollections of their own. I unfortunately have not been so lucky; I have seen and spoken to, but never heard him. I met him in 1867, the year of the Exhibition, at a brilliant party given by August Wolff, head of the first piano-manufactory in Paris, when he was in vain besieged with requests to sing some trifle or other. The hoarseness with which he apologised for his refusal was no empty excuse, for the old gentleman was fond of hearing, in a friendly circle, his own voice and the applause of the company, both echoes, as it were, of former happy days. But he would, he said, give us something else in the musically-dramatic line: he would exhibit a Marionette Theatre, which, originally conceived and carried out for his own children, had gradually obtained an astounding celebrity in Paris. In a recess of the saloon, Duprez's son, Léon, and his daughter, that admirable singer, Caroline Duprez-Vandenheuvel, set up a little show with scenery and three or four movable puppets which they worked very skilfully from above by means of strings. On the evening in question they selected the fourth act of Donizetti's Favorite; Fernand and Leonore executed the most diverting gestures, strictly in keeping with the words, while the brother and sister behind the scenes performed their part of the exhibition in a vein of delicate parody. Nothing could possibly be more droll; the most jaded faces brightened up with merriment, and the most solemn backs were bent with laughter. The joke thus carried out with incredible talent, though at first represented only among most intimate friends, soon got so much talked about, that the Duprez family had to perform it before Napoleon III. and his Court. Papa Duprez, who had retired even from this smallest of lyric theatres, witnessesed the entertainment with much satisfaction from his easy chair—a short, thick-set man with blackish-grey curly hair, a low forehead, and a broad mouth; an individual so uninteresting and homely in appearance, that we should have taken him for a wine-shop keeper who had made money, or a cheesemonger. He himself told us good humoredly how a celebrated danseuse of the Grand Opera called out after him at the general rehearsal of Guillaume Tell: "What! is that the new tenor engaged on such high terms instead of Nourrit? A toad like that? Impossible!" I myself on first seeing him could hardly believe that so insignificant an individual with so thoroughly prosaic a face, could, as Raoul, Edgar, or Fernand, have completely carried away his public, a public, be it remembered, accustomed to an artist of such poetic appearance as Nourrit. Yet we know that he did completely carry them away. Let us hear what Roger—certainly not a person likely to be over-partial—writes of Duprez as Othello, the last year Duprez was on the lyric stage (1849): "This evening, Duprez electrified all of us. What boldness! What a great soul! A terrible old lion! How he hurls his very entrails into the face of the public. What we hear is no longer notes but something like the explosion of a human breast crushed beneath the feet of an elephant; it is his blood, his own life, which he lavishes to extort from the public one of those shouts of applause with which the Romans used to greet their dying gladiators. It reminded me of a picture of the Spanish torture, frightful and sublime. Yes, sublime! for, despite the inequalities of a voice corroded by passion rather than time, he still shows he belongs to a great school and finds, even in his shortcomings, the means of preserving a grand style. When he has disappeared—the world will hear no one like him. I was really amused in the saloon by the art-critics and little musicians. They are of opinion that he drags too much, that he opens his mouth too much, and Heaven knows what else. Suppose he does? It is, at any rate, molten bronze that he pours into his widely-extended rhythms, and, if he opens his mouth too much, he at least shows us a heart."

* From the Neue freie Presse.

Digitized by Google

Gilbert Duprez was born in Paris in 1816. Exhibiting as a boy precocious musical aptitude, he was lucky enough to have lessons of Choron, the celebrated director of the Institute for Religious Music, who received him into his own house and predicted a great career for him. This career was, however, not destined to be achieved as speedily as was imagined. Gilbert fell in love and became involved in all sorts of ideas about marrying; that he might fling them off, he was sent by his father for some months to Italy. But the desired result was not attained, and, scarcely had the young man returned, than, to enable him to marry, he accepted a wretched engagement at the Odéon, where, at the time, opera used to be performed. At the age of nineteen, he made his first appearance in Rossini's Barbiere (1825). The first criticism (by Charles Meurice) written on him, stated that anyone wishing to hear his voice must sit in the prompter's box, and that all who look edat him through their opera-glasses fancied at first they must have turned the latter the wrong way. The manager was soon afterwards a bankrupt, and Duprez, who had married in the interim, was left, with a wife and child, without bread. He gave concerts in provincial towns, but they scarcely paid their expenses. At last he obtained an engagement at the Opéra-Comique. On his losing this position likewise, he went to Italy, where, after waiting a long time, he was engaged by Merelli for second parts. His wife, also, sang second parts, but did not subsequently rise to first ones. The mighty Pasta, as prima donna, looked like a giantess by the side of the little tenor. This fair and popular artist, whose dramatic talents Duprez rated far higher than her vocal proficiency, never had a word of encouragement for the indefatigable young artist. It was in small towns such as Como, Varese, and Bergamo, where he was allowed to sing first parts, that he began to attract more attention. In Bergamo, he became acquainted with Donizetti, who was helping his old master, Simon Mayer, to get up one of his earlier works again. This was L'Amour conjugal, the libretto of which is exactly the same as that of Beethoven's Fidelio. Concerning the good Bavarian Italian, Simon Mayer, whom we always imagined to be a highly staid personage, we learn from Duprez that he came regularly much the worse for liquor to rehearsal and that he was faithfully imitated in his virtuous course by the other musicians, the result always being a "spectacle burlesque."

(To be continued.)

VIENNA.—The Philharmonic Concert given on the 14th, at the large hall of the Conservatoire of Music offered an unusual attraction. For the first time the work of an English composer was to be performed before the eminently fastidious dilletanti of Vienna. Hans Richter, after acclimatizing Wagner's music in England, has introduced Mr F. H. Cowen to the Viennese. Indifferent to the rooted prejudice—existing here as all over the Continent—that nothing really artistic can be produced by an Englishman, Richter put Mr Cowen's "Scandinavian Symphony" before the orchestra of the Philharmonic Society. The custom is to ballot any composition submitted to them, and Mr Cowen's symphony was accepted by a unanimous vote, an exceptional case with the music of composers not well known to the public of Vienna. The programme consisted of the overture of The Bride of Messina, by Schumann, Fuch's "Serenade," and Mr Cowen's "Scandinavian Symphony." It was evident after the first movement (allegro moderato) that our compatriot had won the sympathy of the audience. But when the orchestra had played the molto adagio ("Summer evening on the Fjord,") Mr Cowen was the object of an ovation, and, led by Hans Richter, was called four times before the conductor's desk, personally to acknowledge the applause. "It might have been written with a swan's quill, on lace," said my neighbour, the musical critic of one of the great journals of Vienna. It was clear that Mr Cowen had not only scored a success, but a complete triumph. He was again repeatedly called before the audience after the last two movements, and when the concert was over the whole orchestra applauded with the public. Mr Cowen had won the day. The execution, under Richter, was faultless.

GENERAL BATAILLE.—The unexpected death of this valiant officer, struck down by apoplexy, has painfully affected not only the military world, of which he was so justly considered one of the glories, but likewise the amateur and artistic world with which he was connected through his wife, one of the greatest artists of the day. The deceased, like Generals de Sparre, Millinet, Cambriels, Parmentier, and numerous others, really worshipped music. The ovations paid his wife in the drawing-rooms of Paris touched him doubly. He liked to listen to her and to hear her applauded. He took a great interest, also, in our large musical gatherings, though he was not a musician. Affable and kindly towards artists, he made real friends in the world of art, where his wife shone brightly as much for his sake as her own. A very large number attended his funeral. Marshal de McMahon headed the representatives of the army, and Faure those of art.—Le Ménestrel.

Digitized by Google

ST JAMES'S HALL.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS,

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON, 1881-82.

DIRECTOR—MR S. ARTHUR CHAPPELL.

THE TWENTY-THIRD CONCERT OF THE SEASON

WILL TAKE PLACE ON

MONDAY EVENING, JANUARY 30, 1882,

At Eight o'clock precisely.

Programme.

PART I.—Sextet, in G major, Op. 36, for two violins, two violas, and two violoncellos (Brahms)—Mdme Norman-Néruda, MM. L. Ries, Hollander, Zerbini, Pezze, and Piatti; Song, "In questa tomba" (Beethoven)—Miss Spenser Jones; Nocturne, in D flat, Op. 27, No. 2, and Scherzo, in B minor, for pianoforte alone (Chopin)—Miss Agnes Zimmermann.

PART II.—Prelude, Romance, and Scherzo, from Suite, Op. 27, for violin, with pianoforte accompaniment (Franz Ries), first time—Mdme Norman-Néruda; Song, "Adina" (Schubert)—Miss Spenser Jones; Trio, in B flat, Op. 5, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (Davenport)—Miss Agnes Zimmermann, Mdme Norman-Néruda, and Signor Piatti.

Accompanist—MR ZERBINI.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 28, 1882,

At Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

Quintet, in B flat Op. 87, for two violins, two violas, and violoncello (Mendelssohn)—Mdme Norman-Néruda, MM. L. Ries, Hollander, Zerbini, and Piatti; Song, "Suspicious terrors, vanish" (Handel)—Miss Carlotta Elliot; Sonata, in D major, Op. 10, No. 3, for pianoforte alone (Beethoven)—Miss Emma Barnett; Sonata, in D minor, for violin, with pianoforte accompaniment (Rüst)—Mdme Norman-Néruda; Songs, "Der lenge Tag" (Halfden Kjerulf), and "Die Lerche" (Rubinstein)—Miss Carlotta Elliot; Serenade Trio, in D major, Op. 8, for violin, viola, and violoncello (Beethoven), by desire—Mdme Norman-Néruda, MM. Hollander and Piatti.

Accompanist—MR ZERBINI.

Down the muddy, noisy street
Came little pale-face
Looking wonderful and sweet:
But her quickly pacing feet
Took her out of sight so soon,
At the end of afternoon.

Aoi.

And the wretched human river,
Shivering and shaking,
With its everlasting fever,
Towards a sea it dreams of never!
And the miserable skies!
And the dreary day that dies!

Aoi.

And the branch without a bird,
Winter or Summer!
And the brain that finds no word!
And the heart that isn't heard!
And the night about to come!
And the midnight, dull and dumb!

Aoi.

Polkaw.

MDME NORMAN-NÉRUDA is to play at the Popular Concert on Monday. Hoch!

ALBANI AT BERLIN.—On the day before her departure for London, the Emperor sent his portrait to Mdme Albani, with his autograph underneath, a mark of high and rare consideration on his part.

MDME CHRISTINE NILSSON'S husband, M. Rouzaud, has been so affected by the financial excitement of the past week, in France, that it has been found necessary to remove him to a private asylum. He had recently bought a share in a stock-broking business, which, however, it is understood, has not been injured by the panic.—Daily Telegraph.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

EDAX RERUM.—Yes; but, unfortunately, the infuriate London Wagnerites only attend the first performance of Wagner's operas, and then tyrannize over the rest of the house. Their despotic verdict thus asserted, they leave subsequent performances to their inferiors—the public in general, who, perhaps, not quite convinced, are forthwith ignominiously anathematized. When will this pompous twaddle cease? Mr Carl Rosa, after all the labour and money he has expended, can hardly be satisfied with one paying house for Lohengrin—especially remembering that on Saturday in the same week, "Th' old Girl," as Balfe used familiarly to style his Bohemian, brought just as crammed a house as that which assembled on the first night of Lohengrin—a fuller house than on the second occasion; and again, again, a fuller than on the first night of the Flying Dutchman. Be chesm!

CORK CITIZEN.—Next week. Please only write on one side of the paper.

A HATER OF SET FORMS.—Ask your grandmother to ask Liszt to re-write the overtures to The Caliph of Bagdad and Ma Tante Aurore, and see if he can make them better. Ask the Prophet to compose a quartet like No. 1 of "Papa Haydn," or No. 1 of "The infantile Mozart."

GLASGOW.—Again too late; but shall appear next week. Remember that the editor is not within a thousand miles of London, and that thus a day is lost in transmission. Also take pity on our fagged compositors.

SITÔT.—Cito.

BIRTH.

On Jan. 20th, at 5, Blomfield Crescent, Westbourne Terrace, W., the wife of MARMADUKE H. ST JOHN ROBINSON, of a daughter.

DEATH.

On Jan. 20th, at 13, Coverdale Road, Shepherd's Bush, J. H. NIGHTINGALE, Esq., late of Liverpool, in his 55th year.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.'S, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). Advertisements not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 28, 1882.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

THE stream of eloquence flows on from either source; but apparently without bringing conviction. We must, therefore, entreat our readers to follow the argument with us, and, if agreeable, help us now and then with opinions of their own. Here are more letters, addressed to the same contemporary:—

SIR,—The visit of the Royal princes to Manchester has, it may be hoped, inaugurated a new era in English music. Hitherto music as an art has been practically monopolized by the rich. Here and there sporadic efforts have been made to raise the standard of the divine art among the people, but no attempt has been made to nationalize it or to render the English what we are told by the best of all authorities, Mr Hullah, we are capable of being made—a musical people. Again, music occupies amongst the arts of England a lower place than its importance demands. Look at her sister, Painting! What institution has Music which can be named in the same day with the Royal Academy? What office can it show to compare with the chair so ably filled by Sir Frederick Leighton? Go to Paris, and all is changed. If painting be represented by the Museum of Painting, music has its conservatoire, its Government grant, its Government director. Nor is this confined to Paris alone. Take Vienna, take Berlin, take Dresden; in all these cities you will find a conservatoire worthy of the nation, and deriving assistance from the Government—even in little Stuttgart there will be found a conservatoire, an orchestra, an organized system of musical education, aided by Government, and representing, so to speak, the people to which it belongs. In England excellent schools exist for music; the Royal Academy has a great number of pupils, but its funds will not allow of any extended gratis education, and its influence may fairly be said to be confined to its former pupils and its present teachers. Surely, then, this comparison shames us, since England is wealthier, more artistic, and more really musical than any other country. All it requires is to have the ball set rolling, to be shown how beneficially to do what is wanted, how to foster art in the best manner. Abroad, every movement begins with the Government. Monsieur the Minister of Agriculture teaches farming, and Monsieur the Minister of Arts does likewise for painting, &c. Happily, the reverse is the case in England. The people move the Government, and not the Government the people. For this we have no less than archiepiscopal authority, for the Archbishop of York said at Manchester: "If the inhabitants of this country said they thought the time had come when musical education should be carried higher, the Government would assist in carrying it higher. We," added his Grace, "are the Government of this country, we, the people of this country—that is to say, enlightened sober public opinion governs this country, and not the Prime Minister and his colleagues alone." And now to the important subject connected with these remarks. A plan has been formed for the establishment of a Royal College of Music. Its object is the creation of an institution on a wider and more extended basis than any one now existing. It proposes to give free education, and in many cases, it is hoped, maintenance, wholly or in part, to a number of scholars, the scholars to be in every case elected by competition. The Prince of Wales is at its head; its supporters number many of the most eminent in music, as well as those who command social power. What the Prince of Wales seeks, I venture to affirm, is a declaration by the country that it cares for music, and will stand by those who have its true interests at heart. To elicit such a declaration he proposes to call a meeting, on Feb. 14, of representatives from every county and important place in the United Kingdom. An opportunity will thus be offered to the country to express its opinion on the promotion of music, and all persons who wish to extend the best, the purest, the most civilizing of arts, should aid in the effort about to be made.

Digitized by Google

The resources at the disposition of the Prince of Wales are in themselves very great. He is Chairman of the Commissioners for the Exhibition of 1851, and the commissioners have under their control a site unrivalled for a college which is to educate and maintain a number of young persons. The requisites of such a site are space, pure air, and ready access. Space is the great desideratum in London, where the price of a square yard of ground is measured by the number of sovereigns which would cover that area with gold. This space is to be found in the site of the commissioners, and nowhere else. They have the Albert Hall, the Horticultural Gardens, and the vacant annexes. Let the commissioners for once be generous. Let them grant the corridors of the Albert Hall for dining rooms, for recreation rooms, let them give the gardens for exercise, let them concede a site for the additional buildings required by the side of the Conservatoire. Grant that this would amount to a gift in value of £20,000 or £30,000; but how can the site be better applied? Add to this, the building so munificently erected by Mr Freake, and we will challenge Europe to show a site in a crowded city equal to the one here suggested for the college. The means of communication are railways present and railways expected, besides the ordinary facilities afforded by the spot abutting on all the great routes of communication.

Everything, then, favours this public-spirited effort; and the one thing which will ensure success is cordial support on every side by those who teach, by those who hear, and by that large mass of people who wish to extend throughout the kingdom the influence of music. Let all sincere lovers of music pledge themselves to support by every effort in their power so grand a movement, and call upon all friends to assist us. Away with private interests, away with "cliqueism," away with jealousies. Let all give a vigorous and united aid to the generous Prince who presides over the effort, and to the gentlemen who have devoted so much time and so much labour in promoting an institution from which they can derive no advantage but the reflection that to the utmost of their power they are serving their country and the beneficent and civilizing art of music.—I am, sir, yours &c.,

TREU UND FEST.

SIR,—Dr Stainer's letter affords a striking illustration of the unfair way in which the supporters of the proposed college endeavour to hoodwink the public. Dr Stainer confidently asserts the superiority of the South Kensington School over the Royal Academy of Music, because a group of singers from the former have attained to prominent places in public performances; but he forgot to say that the Kensington School received the pick of the musical youth of the kingdom, who, as such, were admitted to free scholarships. I submit that, considering the superior natural musical capabilities of the pupils selected by the Kensington School, the wonder is not that a few have distinguished themselves, but that the majority have failed to achieve anything approaching a prominent position. If the Royal Academy had enjoyed advantages similar to those hitherto exclusively held by South Kensington, namely, a large money endowment extending over five years, the test proposed by Dr Stainer would be possible, but up to the present time South Kensington has had a monopoly of wealth, whilst the Academy has been permitted to exist in decent poverty.—Yours, &c.,

Jan. 13. OBSERVER.

SIR,—As one of the professors of the National Training School of Music, I can speak from my own experience as to the advantages of the system upon which that institution was founded. At the commencement of the school, nearly six years ago, every student was admitted through having passed a competitive examination, whereby the average standard of talent was necessarily higher than would have been the case by any other mode of admission. The scholarships by which this was effected being dispersed all over the kingdom, and being moreover free of expense or unnecessary restrictions to the scholar, the advantages they offered were within the reach of any one possessing the requisite musical talent. As these scholarships were for five years, the students who had gained them undertook to serve what might be described as a musical apprenticeship for that period. At the end of the five years, with few exceptions, the list of students was the same as when the school commenced its labours. In the history of musical education in this country, the fact of nearly 100 students, selected by competition, studying together during the space of five years, is without parallel.

The advantages of such a system must at once be evident. When the professors of the National School commenced their classes at the opening of the institution, they knew that the pupils placed under them would remain for certain during the space of several years. Hence they were able to unfold the principles of the art to those entrusted to their care in a more systematic manner than would have been possible had the pupils had the liberty of entering for a few terms and leaving when they thought fit. To these causes is no doubt due the fact of the school having been so successful in adding to the list of well-known artists in the musical world. As the system I have described will, in the main, form one of the principal features of the proposed College of Music, it is satisfactory to know it has worked so well, and, moreover, justifies the most sanguine expectations as to what may be done with the resources that a Royal College of Music would have at its command.

JOHN FRANCIS BARNETT.

January 14.

SIR,—Your able correspondent, "An Amateur," has rendered good service to the public by his lucid statement of the facts connected with the movement for a "Royal College of Music." To-day, however, I see an announcement that the committee of the new college have arrived at a most important decision, namely, that the whole of the education at the Royal College will be free. Now, if this be so, I am inclined to think that no existing institution will be unfavourably affected by the new scheme. The Royal Academy of Music provides for one class of students, Trinity College, London, for another, the Guildhall School of Music for a third. All three institutions are well attended, and neither has suffered from the success of the other. Therefore, if the proposed Royal College should, by the establishment of a system of entirely gratuitous instruction to persons of exceptional promise complete the economy of musical education in this hitherto musically-neglected land, much of the difficulty naturally experienced by your correspondent, and by others with him, would disappear. But the real promoters of the embryo college must change their attitude towards existing institutions if they would wish to disabuse them of the suspicion that the new scheme really means a monopoly for a few professional men. When we find one of these promoters speaking of the Royal Academy as a mere "association of professors," we cannot but deplore the spirit in which he has advocated the new scheme.

Digitized by Google

I await with much interest the further communication of "An Amateur." I trust his remarks will have the effect of promoting a little more kindliness and unity of feeling in the musical world, as well as a better understanding between already existing corporations. Such a result, sir, would be greatly beneficial, not only to the musical profession, but also to many ANOTHER AMATEUR.

IAMBLICHUS.—Well?
DEMOCRITUS.—Well?
IAMBLICHUS.—We have got thus far. Now let us go further.
DEMOCRITUS.—Cancriz'ans.
IAMBLICHUS.—You're a sceptic.
DEMOCRITUS.—Il en faut. [Exeunt severally.

Allegorical.

I see an ugly, sallow, haggard face
Craned forth, stock-still and speechless,—into gloom,
For nothing now is left to it for eyes
(Thine are so infinitely beautiful)
But two things shrivelled up. The woman's blind;
And sits upon the chilly stone and begs;
And suckles a baby (what strange destiny);
And holds, in the hand left free, the little can
For passers-by to drop their pennies in.
Money gets food, and food brings milk to the breast.
That woman, then, is like a poet I know:
That child, a poem written from his heart:
And Charity is Thou, O mine adored.

Polkau.

Robert Stœpel, brother to Helen Stœpel (Mrs Vincent Wallace), having returned to America, after an absence of about eight years, is now conductor at Daly's Theatre, New York.

Only two new operas will be given this Carnival season in Italy: Bianca di Cervia, by Smareglia, at the Scala, Milan, and La Contessa di Chatillon, by Nicola Massa, at Reggio (Emilia).

DRESDEN.—A new opera, Hagbar und Signe, music by Mihalovich, book by Dr Adolf Stern, is in preparation at the Theatre Royal. The composer, Edmund von Mihalovich, a Sclavonian by birth, studied in 1864 under Hauptmann at Leipsic, and then under Hans von Bülow at Munich. Compositions from his pen have already been performed on various occasions.

LOHENGRIN NOT IN PARIS.

The following is translated from a Berlin art-paper of high consideration:—

"The projected performances of Lohengrin at the Théâtre des Nations, Paris, will not be held. The Intendant of the Theatres Royal, Munich, has refused the three artists selected" (The couple, Vogl and Reichmann), "the leave of absence solicited, and Antony Neumann has not been able to find others capable of replacing them. The most interesting feature in the matter was the difficulty experienced in getting them to renounce the idea of going to Paris to play in a German piece. Advice has been received from high personages. Even Prince von Hohenlohe, the German Ambassador in Paris, has declared himself unable to prevent a disturbance and protect the artists against a theatrical cabal."

To the foregoing sensible remarks, the fiercest and most polemic of Paris musical hebdomadals retorts, fiercely and polemically:—

"This news, which all the daily press of Paris has reproduced, does not require any comment. It is evident that the Germans of Munich appreciated the situation better than Herr Neumann and the French Wagnerites. We beg to offer our very best compliments to the said worthy Germans of Munich who, in this case, have shown themselves more reasonable than the Germans of Paris, which, by the way, was not enormously difficult, judging by what has taken place for some years."

[Quels enfans de la patrie!—Dr Blidge.]

CONCERT.

Mr Aguilar, at his third and last recital on (Jan. 18), played Wagner's "Album Sonata" in A flat, dedicated to a "Frau M. W." This piece is a curiosity of its kind, Wagner affecting to despise the pianoforte as a conveyer of musical ideas. Mr Aguilar also introduced three dance movements from Sacchini's opera, Le Cid, (given at Versailles and Paris, 1783-84), his own sonata in A minor and several "fugitive pieces" which greatly pleased the audience.

PROVINCIAL.

GLOUCESTER.—Mrs Ellicott, wife of the Bishop of Gloucester, is known as a patroness of art, and a distinguished vocalist at the classical concerts of Cambridge; for Cambridge, unlike Oxford, cultivates music con amore. The "Gloucestershire Philharmonic Society" was founded by Mrs Ellicott, and at the first concert of the season, held at the Shire Hall, Gloucester, on Jan. 17th, the Bishop's lady sang two charming German Lieder, composed by her accomplished daughter, Miss Ellicott, both of which, but for the lateness of the hour, would have been repeated. Miss Ellicott also sustained the leading soprano part in Sir Julius Benedict's cantata, St Cecilia, which occupied the first part of the concert. Sir Julius conducted, and his reception by the good Gloucester folks may be reported as enthusiastic. Mr A. Barnett led the band, and Mr C. H. Lloyd officiated as organist and conductor of the second part of the concert. Miss Ellicott sang the trying music of St Cecilia so well as thoroughly to satisfy a critical audience. Excerpts from Lohengrin tested the quality of a capital band. The Hall, well known to visitors at the Triennial Festival, was crammed. —Communicated.

BERLIN.—W. Taubert, Royal Prussian Oberkapellmeister, who has acted since Hitzig's death as Vice-President of the Royal Academy, has been appointed President of that institution.—Mdlle Tagliana, whose engagement expired on the 31st December, has consented to remain at the Royal Operahouse till the 1st April. Pauline Lucca will fulfil an engagement in April at the same theatre.—Johann Strauss has been here, superintending the rehearsals of his new buffo opera, Der lustige Krieg.—There is a report that Marianne Brandt, the favourite contralto, intends throwing up her engagement at the Royal Operahouse. Commenting on this report, the Neue Berliner Musikzeitung remarks: "Let us hope it may not be true, for, if it were, the Royal Opera would lose one of its most distinguished members. With the dearth of contraltos now existing on the German stage, the loss of Marianne Brandt, whose original impersonations of Leah, Ortrud, Fides, Amneris, &c., cannot be excelled, would be irreparable."—The Victoria Theatre reverts to Herr Emil Hahn, the present manager, Herr Ernst, having exhausted his resources. Herr Hahn intends opening his season with Italian opera at the commencement of February.

Digitized by Google

SOUVENIRS D'UN MUSICIEN.

PANSERON.

DR BLIDGE—SIR,—You probably knew in Paris the late Panseron, Professor at the Conservatoire, who was so celebrated for his famous "Vocalises" as for the smallnes of his nose. One day Heinrich Heine said to him—"My dear friend, how I envy you?" "Why?" —(Parceque Votre femme ne peut pas Vous mener par le nez Vous n'en avez pas!)—(Try dear Dr to translate, I find it impossible!)

This very Panseron met a few days afterwards Rossini, who was an intimate friend of his, since his sojourn as a "Grand Prix de Rome," where both lived togheter. Rossini who had just finished the revised edition of his Stabat Mater for the publisher Troupenas and was very tired of having scored more than 400 pages in a few days said to him: "How much I envy you?—"Tu quoque Brutus, You also my friend You envy me for the smallness of my nose? No, dear Panseron, but for the smallness of your Compositions, You are never obliged to turn the page! (Tu n'es jamais obligé de tourner la page?) Allusion to the then famous Romanze-Composer Panseron's little Songs, published on one Sheet (of two open pages as used by the french publishers in that Time.

Panseron was also very amusing when after a good dinner having eaten well and drunk still better he related to his friends (one of whom I had the honour of being) he related his famous anecdotes of which the following is a Specimen.

"My friend Meissonier, who as You all know, Gentlemen (is so great it's the SMALL) one day received the visit of the Menager of a provincial theatre, who came to ask him the price of a Scene-painting, a new background for the Lac des Fées by Auber which he intended to have mounted (Not Auber, but the Lac des Fées, dear Dr). Meissonier surprised at the simplicity of the provincial Menager reflected a moment and asked him "How many yards of scene-painting do you want for the Theatre of Angers?" Well, 180 or 185 yards will be sufficient. Meissonier took out his pocket-book and became absorbed in a complicated arithmetical calculation, then turning to the good man, slily said to him: Sir, as I charge from 80 to 100,000 frcs. one foot of my painting You will have to pay me the Bagatelle of 122,361,960 frcs.! (Don't trouble your learned head, dear Dr, it makes in figures: One hunedert twenty tree millions free hundert sixdy one fausend 9 hundert 60 frcs. allhogeter!

The poor manager in a fright ran away as fast as his legs could carry him—He is running still. M——L B——N.

[There was a frontispiece to an edition of Panseron's chansons, in which his portrait was surrounded and mixed up, any how, with their various titles. This was in the foyer of the late Opera-house. Looking at the frontispiece, I said to Berlioz—"Hein!—voilà Panseron sauté dans ses propres œuvres." Berlioz smiled, as always—grimly. (F. C. B. was hardly born then; it was in the winter of 1847). Vivier, chuckling as he was wont to chuckle, when a right-minded son of the people, told it to Auber, who was talking to Arethusa Natalie, with whom he liked to talk, dear old boy (he was an old boy then—of 65), who smiled serenely (as he was wont to smile). But none of them caught the gist (geist) of it until Auber told Rossini, who promptly said—"Ah!—oui—ce Blidge farceur s'il en fut."—Dr Blidge.

—o—

THE CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.

If it were not for the enterprise and perseverance of Mr Carl Rosa, "operas in English" might at the present day be but a recollection and a dream. Satisfied that the public will patronize meritorious performances, this gentleman has created (more particularly in the provinces) a taste for operatic music in our own language, and attracted an audience in every place he has visited. It used to be a bye-word that Manchester loved music but Liverpool only patronized it, and I don't think that later years have seen much increased enthusiasm, but Mr Carl Rosa can always depend upon having crowded houses there, and, indeed, the box sheet is filled before the evening arrives. I have personal experience of the attendances at concerts at St. George's Hall, and have been present at a Saturday afternoon's organ recital by Mr W. T. Best, when out of a scanty audience no less than nine visitors were fast asleep, but a hearty welcome is given the London Opera Company in most provincial towns. This success has been the result of years of conscientious work meriting a recognition in the metropolis, and whatever may be said to the contrary, I emphatically assert that operas in English will have their permanent home in London, and that before long. The experiment has been tried at the Opera Comique and at the Savoy, and it will be followed sooner or later in a higher branch of art at another house. The attempt has only to be made efficiently and the chances are not remote. It has been the fashion of late years to speak of English opera as a total failure, but success attended Mr Bunn at Drury Lane, when he merited it. Mr Maddox realized a fortune by operas in English. Jullien was hopelessly involved before he took Drury Lane, and English opera is not to be blamed for losses resulting from speculations in other quarters. Even Mr Harrison, though he ended life a ruined man, made money as long as he contented himself with small houses and moderate companies. To speak of such attempts as that of the Limited Opera Company at Covent Garden is simply to record the fact that the expenses were greater than full houses could make profitable; but at the Crystal Palace and elsewhere English opera has received its fair share of patronage. I hope, at no distant day, to be able to record the permanent establishment of a house devoted to opera in our own language, and if Mr Carl Rosa is at the head of such an undertaking, so much the better for the public, who will have no cause to find fault either with the principals, the orchestra, or the production.—PHOSPHOR (Brighton Guardian.)

—o—

THE GUILDHALL ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY.

No hearer of the performance given by the above society in the Egyptian Hall at the Mansion House last Saturday afternoon, could have any reasonable doubt left in his mind as to the actual cause of the sudden rise and spread of the laudable institution sprung into life under the splendid patronage of the City, and called "The Guildhall School of Music." To those with an intimate knowledge of amateur struggles and amateur studies, the interpretation of works such as the Eroica Symphony, and Mendelssohn's overture (Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage), by the 100 amateurs trained and directed by Mr Weist Hill, seemed little short of a miracle. The Guildhall amateur orchestra is unlike other orchestras that are composed of paid players. While lacking the routine and habit upon which salaried, and oftentimes badly remunerated, professionals come to depend—players whose love for art has been not seldom killed by the actual unkindness to them of the mistress they adopted—these executants, who work and exhibit their work with equal enthusiasm, endue whatever they undertake with a fervour, a passionate strength which rouses and satisfies the hearer as no effort of the jaded and worn-out could possibly do. In tone they could vie with even the much to be regretted orchestra of the Alexandra Palace; probably because each man plays as he has been told to play, and, because, in most cases, the instruments are of a better quality than those ordinarily used in orchestras. Tone and enthusiasm are explicable. But the unity, the nicety of effect, the spontaneity of the sudden chords are matters inexplicable. How these effects came about, Mr Weist Hill would doubtless be as unable to explain as the critic is unable to guess. For no one is more astonished at a work of inspiration than its progenitor.

Reflecting that the society is in its infancy, it may be confidently predicted that the time is not far distant when admission to the city concerts will be as eagerly sought for by ardent amateurs (and as unattainable) as were the tickets for the famous concerts of the late eccentric Niçois, who kept an orchestra on his premises. As it is, the audience, composed of the privileged invited, is too large for the limited space.

After the symphony (1st movement) and Mendelssohn's overture, the orchestra distinguished itself in a largo (Handel), a gavotte by Bourgault-Ducoudray, and the delicate "Sérénade de Mandolins" (Desormes). Miss Marie Schumann, a young violinist for whom a bright artistic future may be safely predicted, played the violin concerto of Mendelssohn, particularly distinguishing herself in the slow movement. Young, and of an extremely delicate physique, patience will be needed for her executive development, and she should be cautioned against the overstudy which defeats its own object—the overstudy which has wrecked many a gifted artist.

The vocal portion of the programme was satisfactorily supplied by the Misses Isabelle Stone and Ellen Marchant, and the Messrs Chilley, Henderson, Blower, and Pierpoint. Mr Henry Blower has a magnificent bass voice, and his delivery of "O ruddier than the cherry" was worthy of an experienced artist. In the song "Phyllis is my only joy," Mr Dalgetty Henderson delighted the audience with as sweet and sympathetic a vocal organ as they perhaps have ever heard. Little more need be said, except that soloists shared with the orchestra in inducing the impression that there is a stronger, more vigorous life in the city music than anywhere else in the amateur world of musical London. Time will prove. ASTUR.

Smetana's stringed quartet, "Aus meinem Leben," received with favour at the Musicians' Association, Magdeburgh, will shortly be given by the Musicians' Union, Dresden.

Digitized by Google

CHERUBINI.*

His Life, his Works, and the Part played by him in Art.

While certain musicians become greater after their death, and assume in the estimation of their compatriots a place refused them during their lifetime—and of this we have a striking and recent proof in the person of Berlioz, and in the prodigious re-action which has taken place in his favour during the last ten years—others, on the contrary, find themselves the objects of inexplicable neglect and oblivion, which the grandeur of their works, the power of their genius, and the great part they once played is incapable of conjuring. Many instances might be cited of this injustice of fate. One of the most prominent is indisputably that furnished by Cherubini whose influence was, for half a century, so powerful and so legitimate on French art; who enjoyed till his death such high renown, and yet whose works are at the present day so disdained in the countries where they first saw the light, that, whether it be from the theatre, the church, or the concert-room, they have disappeared in the most complete and absolute manner.

Singular fact! The memory of Cherubini, still deep-rooted and radiant in Germany and England, where he appeared only at rare intervals of short duration, has almost died out in his real native land, Italy, and in his adopted country, France, which latter witnessed the most brilliant and longest portion of his career. And while his two greatest dramatic works, Médée and Les deux Journées, have never ceased to be stock pieces of the great theatres in Germany, and of the Italian operahouses in London; while his finest sacred compositions are performed every year in the countries on the other side of the Rhine and on the other side of the Straits of Dover, France seems to have forgotten the very name of the eminent master, on whom she once showered glory with full hands. In a country where Cherubini held a sort of artistic regal sway, where his great natural powers took their highest flights, and where for twenty years he was at the head of a musical school which is the first in the world, his genius is unappreciated to such an extent that not one of our theatres performs any of his virile masterpieces, and there is not one of our temples the roof of which resounds with the noble strains of his sacred music. This is far from all: the Society of the Conservatory Concerts, which ought to keep up the reverence of such a reputation, which ought jealously to preserve the memory of the great artist, by whom it was at the beginning so powerfully assisted, and which ought not, moreover, to forget the lustre that for so long, thanks to his skilful guidance, he cast on the school of which it is proud to bear the name—this very Society appears deliberately to neglect the works of one to whom it partly owes its existence, since it was he who obtained for it the use of the room where, for more than half a century, it holds its incomparable gatherings.

The moment appears to have arrived for rising up against such regrettable indifference, for repairing so flagrant a denial of justice, for once more bringing forward a noble physiognomy, too soon overtaken by unmerited oblivion. Such is the aim of the present essay. Cherubini now belongs to history, and history is bound to avenge him for the silence which has gathered round his name, as well as for the small account in which his works seem to be held. This great artist has, it is true, been, on various occasions, in France, Germany, England, and Italy, the subject of a certain number of biographical essays, but most of them have been very cursory and brief, and all of them incomplete, so that, despite the real interest to be derived from some of them, they do not harmonize with the importance belonging to the life and career of the master whose manly form they were meant to endow with new life. One only of the publications concerning Cherubini, that of Mr Edward Bellasis,† is conceived in proportions which render the frame worthy of the portrait. But it came out in England, and the reader will experience no difficulty in believing that it must be very imperfect, despite the research and care it displays on the part of the author. It will, indeed, easily be conceived that a complete biographical study of the author of Medée and Lodoïska could not possibly be produced except in France, because it was there the composer accomplished his militant career, and there that he achieved his genuine successes, and that, consequently, it was only there that the elements necessary for reconstructing his artistic existence could be found and collected.

In the series of articles—which, if possessing no other recommendation, is very complete—now offered to the public, I have endeavoured to render Cherubini more intimately known, to trace his life with a greater number of details than has ever been done before, to increase the respect due to an austere life entirely devoted to labour and honour, as well as to a collection of works meriting both sympathy and admiration. Patient research has enabled me to bring to light a number of facts previously unknown, while important unpublished documents, and highly interesting letters, kindly communicated by the family, have put it in my power to bring a greater amount of certainty to various phases in the Master's career. It was not, I confess, without some apprehension that I undertook so difficult a task—that I endeavoured, by disposing of various ridiculous legends, to revive the physiognomy of a great artist, of whom Italy and France are justly proud. But I have reason to hope that the kindness, which never failed to encourage me in my preceding labours, will be extended to me on this occasion likewise. It is this kindness that I invoke, at the outset of my narrative, which, I trust, by the way, will not fail to offer some interesting details connected with the general history of music in France.

I.

Cherubini's Birth. Indecision and Obscurity respecting it.—First Studies with his Father.—He is then placed under the direction of several distinguished masters: the two Felici, Pietro Bizzri, and Giuseppe Castrucci.—Empiricism and Barbarism of the Methods of Musical Instruction at that Period in Italy. Juvenile Compositions of Cherubini. Their Success.—The Patronage of the Grand-Duke of Tuscany enables the young Artist to enter for Improvement Sarti's School at Bologna, whither he goes accordingly.

In the very centre and heart of Florence, not far from the Cathedral Square, there is a small street called the Via Fiesolana; on a house of modest appearance, now numbered 22 in this street, the following inscription may be read:

HERE WAS BORN ON THE XIV SEPTEMBER MDCCLX
LUIGI CHERUBINI
WHO FAMOUS IN THE SCIENCE OF HARMONY
CREATOR OF SUBLIME RELIGIOUS MELODIES
REFORMED EVERY KIND OF MUSICAL STYLE
AND IN THE REGIONS OF ART
PRESERVED INTACT AMONG FOREIGNERS THE GLORY OF ITALIAN SUPREMACY.*

It was in Florence, the cradle of the Italian Renaissance, which the memory of Michael Angelo and so many other incomparable artists still envelops as if in a luminous cloud; it was in the noble city which makes those who have been fortunate enough to behold it once only regret that they cannot look upon it always; it was in this city, valiant, intelligent, and magnificent among all cities, that Cherubini was born. But, strange to say, it is not very long that people have agreed (if, indeed, they have done so definitively even now) as to the exact and precise date. The Italians, as we see, make it the 14th September, 1760, but for a considerable period it was, through Cherubini himself, believed to be the 8th September. The two Italians who have more particularly devoted their attention to their celebrated fellow country-

* By Arthur Pougin. From the Ménestrel.

† Cherubini; Memorials illustrative of his Life. By Edward Bellasis. London: Burns and Oates, 1874; 8vo.

* The little Via Fiesolana, lying nearly equi-distant from the Piazza d'Azeglio on the right and the Piazza Sancta Maria Nuova on the left, runs from the Via Pietra Piana to the Via de' Pilastri. Florence has bestowed the name of Cherubini on another street, situated at the southern extremity of the town, not far from the Piazza Cavour and the Barriera del Ponte Rosso. This street extends from the Via Michele to the Viale (Avenue) Principe Amedeo. These streets are not all that his native town has consecrated to the illustrious master, to whom it feels proud of having given birth. In 1869 a monument was erected in the beautiful church of Santa Croce to the memory of the composer of Médée, Les Deux Journées, and Lodoïska. Of handsome appearance and considerable size, it is the work of a highly distinguished artist, Sig. Fantacchiotti, and is near the Bardi Chapel. I must not forget to say that the house in which Cherubini was born, and which is now No. 22 of the Via Fiesolana, was, in 1842, when he died, No. 6886.

Digitized by Google

man, Luigi Picchianti,* in the first place, and afterwards M. Baldassare Gamucci,† have reproached the French biographers, their predecessors, for choosing the latter date, and for the reason assigned by them for so doing. In their Dictionnaire historique des Musiciens, Choron and Fayolle state that Cherubini was born on the 8th September. So do Raoul Rochette, Miel, and Denne-Baron, in their notices of him, and the two latter, when stating that he was not baptized before the 15th, affirm, as a justification for the delay, that the ceremony was postponed from prudential considerations suggested by the extremely delicate state of the child when he came into the world and his parents' fear that they should not be able to rear him. Now, if the French biographers have committed an error, I must state in my turn that, as I have just said, the error is due to Cherubini himself. Fétis asserts, in his Biographie universelle des Musiciens, that Choron and Fayolle's notice was based on a communication from Cherubini himself, who, there can be no doubt, believed for a very long period that he was born on the 8th September. Among the papers obligingly placed at my disposal by the composer's relatives to assist me in my present task are two manuscript notes about him: the first, written by him in his memorandum-book has, it is true, the date of September 14th, but it is easy to see that this date was written after a former one had been erased by scratching; the second dictated by Cherubini to his Secretary (Notice biographique sur M. Cherubini, écrite sous sa dictée par M. de Beauchesne, son secrétaire, en 1831) admits of no misinterpretation. It commences with the words: "Cherubini (Louis Charles Zenobi Salvador Marie) musical composer, was born at Florence (Tuscany) on the 8th September, 1760." The number 8 was subsequently scratched out but not effaced, and the number 14 substituted in the space above it. This is not all; the notice continues thus: "He was so weak when he came into the world that his life was despaired of; but his condition improved in a few days and rendered it possible for him to be baptized on the 14th September of the same year in the church of St John, where the General Baptistery is, opposite the Cathedral." We see how very precise this is. It proves, too, that down to the year 1831, when he dictated the Notice, that is, when he was actually seventy-one, Cherubini believed that the 8th September was the date of his birth. By what fact, in what manner, and when was he undeceived and led to adopt the 14th as the proper date? I have been unable to find the slightest thing bearing on this in his papers. At all events, it now seems clearly proved that the 14th is the correct date, and the evidence published on this important point by Luigi Picchianti, and M. Baldassare Gamucci scarcely leave any room for doubt.

(To be continued.)

* Notizie sulla Vita e sulle Opere di Luigi Cherubini, raccolta da Luigi Picchianti. Milano, Ricordi, 1843; 8*vo*, 80*pp*.

† Intorno alla Vita ed alle Opere di Luigi Cherubini, Fiorentino, ed al Monumento ad esso innalzato in Santa Croce, Cenni di Baldassare Gamucci. —Firenze, Barbera, 1869; 8*vo*, 60*pp*.

* I confess, however, that as regards myself the matter is not absolutely certain. It is true that Picchianti and M. Gamucci have each published an attestation derived from the baptismal registers of Santa Maria del Fiore, but this double attestation, while giving the 15th of September as the date of the baptism—about which there cannot be any doubt—appears to fix on the 14th as the date of the birth only by natural induction, and the general custom which requires children to be baptised on the day they are born or the day after. Now the tradition so clearly set afloat by Cherubini himself and preserved by him in the notice dictated to de Beauchesne, can hardly have sprung up spontaneously in his mind; it must have been based on family report—on the assertion of his father, or something of the kind—and I cannot help asking myself why and how it was that Cherubini subsequently abandoned it. I will, however, cite here, as documentary evidence and in the original version, the attestation published by M. Baldassare Gamucci:

Opera di Santa Maria del Fiore,
Firenze, li 30, Giugno, 1869.

Fede per me Ministro nell' Uffizio dell' opera suddetta qualmente in Registri dei Battezzati nell' Insigne Basilica di San Giovan Battista di questo citta che si conservano in questo Uffizio; apparisce essere stato battezzato a quel Fonte il di 15 Settembre milleseitte centososs essanta un Bambino figlio del Sincre Bartolommeo (figlio) di Marco Cherubini, e della Signora Verdiani (figlia), di Filippo Bosi, nato il di di 14 Settembre, dello 1760, al primo minuto della mattina nel Popolo di San Pier Maggiore, a chi sono stati imposti i nomi di Luigi Carlo Zanobi Salvadore Maria.

Il Ministro, L. Bocci.

BURNS' NIGHT AT ST JAMES'S HALL.

The annual Burns' Birthday Concert at St James's Hall, on Wednesday night, was a comparative success, under the circumstances. As the hour approached for "the gathering of the clans" so dense was the fog, total eclipse seemed to predict total failure. Omnibuses, cabs, and broughams, in the suburbs, were not to be had for love or money; but, one way or another, the enthusiastic Northerners found their way to St James's Hall through the thick darkness. A noticeable feature of the "canny Scot" is, it seems, that he comes money in hand—the exact money—whereas upon the ordinary Ballad Concert nights much gold is presented, and, as a consequence, much time is occupied in giving change. On Wednesday, we are assured, only one sovereign was presented! That may, however, be accounted for upon this especial occasion. Thick as was the fog, the countrymen of Burns no doubt refused to find in it both "meat and drink," so, possibly, changed their gold on the way for sundry wee draps o' "Scotch." One thing is certain, the audience was in good "speerits". Encores and re-calls were, as usual, the order of the night. "I cannot sing the old songs" is never dreamt of upon such occasions. Mdme Patey sang, as upon many previous Scotch nights, "The land o' the leal" and "Scots wha hae" (the same melody, by the way, differently barred), and, in response to enthusiastic encores, "My boy Tammie" and "The Laird o' Cockpen." Mdme Sterling deserves credit for having added one more to her accustomed Scotch ditties in "We're a' noddin'," and so well was it rendered that, in response to hearty applause, she gave "Here's to the year that's awa'." She was no less successful in "A man's a man for a' that," which was encored as a matter of course, when Sir Walter Scott's lullaby, "Hush thee, my baby," was given. A welcome addition to the artists on the "Burns night" was our popular favourite, Miss Mary Davies. Surpassingly beautiful was her rendering of "And ye shall walk in silk attire" (encored and repeated) and "Robin Adair" (followed by "Comin' thro' the Rye"). This artist was equally successful in "Duncan Gray," which she was called upon to sing again. The rising contralto, Miss Hope Glenn, was no less fortunate in "Logie o' Buchan," and in the duet, "O wert thou in the cauld blast," with Miss Santley, and "Ye banks and braes" was so sweetly rendered by the latter lady as to be re-demanded. Miss Santley also created a very favourable impression in "Jock o' Hazeldean." How well Mr Edward Lloyd can sing "Mary Morison," "Oh, open the door," and "O' a' the airts the wind can blaw," every amateur knows. The same may also be said of Mr Frank Boyle in "Highland Mary." Mr Boyle was deservedly re-called for his faithful rendering of "Afton Water." To Mr Barrington Foote was allotted "Bonnie Dundee," "Gae bring to me a pint o' wine," and "Green grow the rashes, O," in all of which Mr Foote was so successful as to be called upon to repeat them. It only remains to mention the South London Choral Association under Mr L. C. Venables. Various popular part-songs were given by the choir in a spirited and expressive manner, more especially "John Grumlie," which was re-demanded. Mr Sidney Naylor was the conductor.

—o—

A GRIEVOUS PLAINT.

To the Editor of the "Brighton Guardian."

Dear Sir,—Although it is undoubtedly the first duty of every newspaper proprietor to support those places of amusement established in their own locality, yet some account of the proceedings of our Metropolitan theatres, and other places of entertainment, is very interesting even to those living away from London. Your contributor, "Scribbler," has called attention to the invariable correctness of the local critic in his reviews of passing musical and theatrical events, and I have no doubt that the managers of such places of amusement give him every opportunity of judging of the character of these performances. The London critic, as a contributor to the Provincial papers, meets with no such consideration, although, in many instances, these papers circulate also in the metropolis. The place where the paper is issued may, by its connecting rail, be but a suburb of London, and its residents can run up to town frequently. Still, considered as a country paper, these metropolitan managers (with few exceptions) look coldly upon the correspondents' efforts, and seldom seek his good opinion or criticism. When contrasted with the favour shown to the smallest print issued by the Metropolitan Press, their position is one that discourages them in their efforts to give publicity to that which they consider worthy of favourable comment and support.

It may, perhaps, interest some of your readers to learn how London places of entertainment have been treated in the Brighton Guardian during the past year by your correspondent "Phosphor," and he thinks that these figures will prove that their interests have not been neglected. Ninety-seven notices have been written about twenty-four theatres, and eighty-four criticisms of concerts, including those at the Crystal Palace, the Philharmonic, the Richter concerts, and many of these notices have been of considerable length. Twenty-three articles have also appeared on subjects more or less connected with music and the drama, so that in all 204 original reviews have been published, many of which have found their way into other papers in London and the provinces. After these figures comment is hardly needed, as they fully illustrate the task undertaken by your correspondent.

Digitized by Google

"PHOSPHOR."

7, Montague Place, Russell Square.

—o—

WAIFS.

Romeo and Juliet is in active rehearsal at the Lyceum Theatre, and Messrs Hawes, Craven, Telbin, Walter Hann, and Cuthbert are adding the finishing touches to the scenes—more than twenty in number, and comprising some singularly beautiful specimens of scenic art—which are in themselves destined to render this revival memorable. That Mr Irving will play Romeo and Miss Ellen Terry Juliet has long been known. The play has been arranged by Mr Irving from the text of Shakspere specially for this revival.

The performances by Mr Toole and his company at Sandringham were of an impromptu character—the popular comedian who happened to be at Bury St. Edmunds, receiving the invitation of the Prince of Wales only the day before; while the bijou theatre was being fitted up so privately that not even the Princess of Wales, it is believed, was in the secret of the preparations. The performances, consisting of The Steeplechase, Our Clerks, Ici on Parle Français, commenced about ten, and terminated a little after midnight. In the second of these Miss Roland Phillips played Ned, it being her last appearance prior to leaving for Australia. After each piece there were loud calls for Mr Toole, and at the conclusion the entire company were called before the curtain. About two hundred spectators were present, among whom were the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Princesses Louise, Victoria, and Maud of Wales. The general arrangements were under the able direction of Mr George Loveday. The company were entertained at supper by the Prince of Wales, who himself proposed the health of Mr Toole.

Mad. Wilt is singing with success in Bucharest.

The Jean Becker Quartet are making a concert-tour in Holland.

A lady "serialist" in America has adopted the name of "Aïda."

Pandolfini is engaged by Mr Gye for next season at Covent Garden.

Cäsarine, by Max Wolf, has been successful at the Gärtnerplatz-Theater, Munich.

Luigi Mancinelli has been appointed President of the Quartet Society, Bologna.

It is said that Anton Rubinstein intends to give up public playing.—(Oh!—Dr Bl[illegible]ge.)

The composer Romualdo Marenco has been created Knight of the Order of the Crown of Italy.

Paladilhe's Suzanne has been put in rehearsal at the theatres of Tournai, Bruges, and Verviers.

Freudenberg's Cleopatra was produced for the first time on 12th inst., at the Stadttheater, Magdeburgh.

Pedrotti's Ruy Blas, with French libretto, is announced for production at the Grand-Théâtre, Marseilles.

Angelo Ferrari, manager of the Italian-opera companies in Buenos Ayres and Rio Janeiro, was lately in Milan.

The concert of the Brussels Conservatory, with Gluck's Armide, is postponed in consequence of a Court mourning.

Beethoven's Ninth Symphony was performed on the 11th inst. in Brünn for the first time. Better late than never.

The National Academy, Paris, has presented its large silver medal to Ernst Kaps, of Dresden, for the manufacture of pianos.

Gilbert and Sullivan's Patience reached its one hundredth performance at the Standard Theatre, New York, on the 5th inst.

Mdlle Elly Warnots, who sang so successfully last year in Brussels, is engaged as "chanteuse légère" at the Grand-Théâtre, Lyons.

Should Massenet's Hérodiade be performed at the Milan Scala, Turolla (Mr Gye's discovery) would probably enact the heroine.

A fire broke out recently at the Grand Theatre, Bucharest, but was fortunately extinguished without doing any serious damage.

Pasini, manager of the Italian operahouses at Bahia, Pernambuco, and Parà, has been to Milan for the purpose of engaging a company.

A joint-stock company opens the Teatro Costanzi, Rome, in the spring, with a first-rate operatic troupe, and Bottesini as conductor.

The dramatic soprano, De Cepeda (once with Mr Gye), has made a highly successful début at the San Carlo, Lisbon, as Valentine in Les Huguenots.

At a recent performance of Handel's Messiah in Cincinnati, U.S., the solo singers were Mad. Adelina Patti, Miss Annie Louise Cary, Messrs Theodore Toedt, and M. W. Whitney.

The year just past was not a very productive one, from a musical point of view, in France. The following is the list of new works: at the Grand Opera, Le Tribut de Zamora; at the Opéra-Comique, Les Contes d'Hoffmann, Les Pantins, and La Taverne des Trabans; at the Bouffes, La Mascotte and Re-Mascotte; at the Renaissance, Janot and Le Sais; at the Folies Dramatiques, Les Poupées de l'Infante and Les deux Roses; at the Nouveautés, Le Jour et la Nuit.

The number of Italian operatic companies now performing in foreign countries is, according to the Gazzetta Musicale, 29. The following are the places where they are located: Agram, Bucharest, Caracas, Corfu, Cephalonia, United States (company on tour), South America (ditto), Australia and India (ditto), Las Palmas (Canary Islands), Helsingfors, Lisbon, Malaga, Mexico, Madrid, Malta, Monte Carlo (from the 1st February), Nice, St. Petersburgh, Patras, Palma (Majorca), Shanghai, Sira, Trieste, Valencia, Valladolid, Zante, and Corunna.

A German musical contemporary publishes an anecdote, the humour of which will be specially appreciated by tenor singers on the look-out for transatlantic engagements. Five singers engaged by a well-known operatic impresario for a tour through South America, met on board the ocean steamer in which their berths had been taken and made the discovery, greatly to their surprise, that they were all tenors and members of the same company. Unable to conjecture what the impresario could have had in view in providing five tenors, they went to his cabin, und demanded an explanation. "Don't trouble yourselves, gentlemen, about my arrangements," replied the manager; "I know what I am about. I shall want you all five. Soon after you get across, three, if not four, of you will die of fever, and I shall be dependent upon the survivor for all my first tenor parts. Experience in tropical and sub-tropical tours has taught me the necessity of providing against accidents. Consider what a splendid professional prospect I am opening out to at least one of your number. Good morning, Gentlemen."

GOOD-NIGHT, BELOVÈD, GOOD-NIGHT.

(NEW SONG.)

Oh, love, my own love, must we part once more?
See, the silver moonbeams play on your door!
You will enter, and then all the world will be
But a starless, a desolate night to me.
For you are my glory, my star, my light;
Good-night, belovèd, good-night, good-night!

Ah, dearest, are not we twain as one,
Like streams that each into each have run?
And has not God bent from His throne on high,
To link our hearts with a holy tie?
My spirit to yours shall in dreams take flight;
Good-night, belovèd, good-night, good-night!

One kiss, which a seraph himself might see,
The parting pledge of our truth shall be!
And soon may that morning of gladness shine
When the world shall know that my love is thine.
Smile on me again, through your blushes bright;
Good-night, belovèd, good-night, good-night!

* Copyright. SARAH ANN STOWE.

MR VERNON RIGBY is engaged to sing at the Paisley Musical Festival next week.

THE Royal Academy of Music has been presented with £50 (third donation), by the Goldsmith's Company.

BRUSSELS.—La Dame Blanche has been revived at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, and, alternately with Die Zauberflöte, is played on the off-nights of Hérodiade, which still continues to draw. Albert Grisar's fairy opera, Les Amours du Diable, is in rehearsal. There is some talk of Oberon and Jean de Nivelle to finish the season.—The already rich collection of musical instruments of all ages and nations at the Conservatory has been considerably augmented by the addition of a complete collection of Chinese instruments, sent by the Belgian Consul in China.

Digitized by Google

The only Gold Medal for Wind Instruments with Keys, in the Paris Universal Exhibition of 1878, was unanimously awarded by the Jury to Messrs P. Goumas & Co., for the fine quality of tone and finish of their Instruments.

SPECIAL MANUFACTORY OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS
FOR
CLARIONETS, FLUTES, PICCOLOS, OBOES, BASSOONS, COR ANGLAIS, FLAGEOLETS, AND SAXOPHONES.

P. GOUMAS & Co.
(Late Buffet, Crampon & Co.),
Established 1830.

Nine Prize Medals have been awarded to Goumas & Co. for general excellence and improvements in the Manufacture of Wind Instruments with Keys.

Manufacturers of all kinds of Wood Wind Instruments for Military Bands, Musical Instrument Makers to Her Majesty's Army and Navy, and to the Armies, Navies, and Conservatoires of France, Belgium, Italy, Russia, Austria, Spain, America, &c.

Manufactory at Mantes (Seine et Oise), France. Paris: Passage du Grand Cerf, 18 et 20.

LONDON: 39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET.
Price Lists sent free on application.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,
MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF
ALL KINDS OF MUSIC STRINGS FOR ALL MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Sole Depôt for Signor Andrea Ruffini's (of Naples) Celebrated Strings for Soloists, manufactured by him on a system invented by Mons. J. B. Vuillaume, of Paris.

Sole Agent for Charles Albert's (of Philadelphia, U.S.) new Patent Improved Chin Rest; also his improved String Gauge.

39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, W.
Price Lists free on application.

All kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner on powerful machines made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE
(COLEMAN'S). A Delicious Beverage and Tonic.

Made from Port Wine, Liebig's Extract of Meat, and Extract of Malt; Nutritious, Strengthening, Stimulating, Flesh-forming, Health Restoring, suitable for the Robust in Health as well as the Invalid. Strongly recommended by the Medical Faculty. An Immediate Benefit is experienced after taking it; the Frame is Invigorated, and no ill effects follow.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Testimonials.

Sir,—A short time since I was induced by the novelty of the title to send for a bottle of your Liebig's Extract of Meat and Malt Wine. I was perfectly acquainted with the value of the Extractum Carnis, and not quite a stranger to the invigorating and fortifying properties of malt wine, and therefore felt a natural curiosity to test them when combined. Men who work hard, as I do, not muscular hard work, but that which is quite as exhausting, viz., brain work, very often experience the need of, and have sometimes an almost irresistible craving for, a "pick me up;" and very often the panacea for a time for lassitude, and that state of mind which renders work irksome, are alcoholic stimulants, the use of which must sooner or later end disastrously. The man who can furnish a remedy sure, certain, and harmless, for the lassitude which follows constant brain work is a benefactor of his species, and may be said to have added many years of usefulness to the lives of useful men. Your extract, if a success, and when more generally known, will be used by all toilers of the mind.—Yours faithfully,
O. D. RAY.
Thorpe Hamlet, Norwich, February 23rd, 1881.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Queen's Crescent, Haverstock Hill, London, March 5th, 1881.

Dear Sir,—Some time since, being greatly fatigued with over-work and long hours at business, my health (being naturally delicate) became very indifferent. I lost all energy, strength, and appetite, and was so weak as to be scarcely able to walk. As you are aware, I sent for a dozen of your Extract of Meat and Malt Wine, which, in a few days, pulled me up marvellously. Three or four glasses of it daily have quite altered and restored me to better health than ever, "without the assistance of a doctor." I am now giving it to my son, twelve years of age, whom we have always thought consumptive, and from a puny, ailing boy, he seems to be fast growing into a strong, healthy lad. Enclosed you have cheque. Please send me two dozen of the "Extract." With thanks for your prompt attention to my last, I am, Sir, yours truly,
GEORGE A. TYLER.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Granspound, February 25th, 1881.

Mrs Coulson thanks Mr Coleman for the book and stamps, and she has no doubt but that "the tonic" is a good one. Mrs C. encloses twelve stamps for basket.
Mr Coleman.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Vicarage, Kingsbridge, Devon, January 25th, 1881.

Dear Sir,—We are ten miles from the railway, and have been snowed up, consequently the wine has only just arrived. I enclose a cheque for £2 11s. 6d. I like the wine, and will recommend it.—Yours faithfully,
A. N. KINGSTON.
Mr Coleman, Norwich.

Pints, 30s. per dozen: Quarts, 50s. per dozen. Carriage paid to any Railway Station in Great Britain. Sample Bottle sent for 33 stamps.
P. O. Orders to be made payable to
COLEMAN & CO., MUSPOLE STREET, NORWICH.
Cheques crossed "London and Provincial Bank."

Sold by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the United Kingdom, in Bottles, 9d. and 1s. 6d. each. Ask for Coleman's Liebig's Extract of Meat and Malt Wine, and "See that you get it."

CHAPPELL'S
VOCAL LIBRARY
OF
PART-SONGS, &c.

		Composed or Arranged by	Price
1.	Dulce Domum. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
2.	Down among the Dead Men. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
3.	The Girl I've left behind me. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
4.	British Grenadiers. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
5.	Long live England's Future Queen. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
6.	My task is ended (Song and Chorus). A.T.B.B.	Balfe	4d.
7.	Thus spake one Summer's Day. S.A.T.B.	Abt	2d.
8.	Soldiers' Chorus. T.T.B.B.	Gounod	4d.
9.	The Kermesse (Scene from Faust)	,,	6d.
10.	Up, quit thy bower. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	4d.
11.	Maidens, never go a-wooing. S.S.T.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
12.	Fagot Binders' Chorus	Gounod	4d.
13.	Sylvan Hours (for Six Female Voices)	Joseph Robinson	6d.
14.	The Gipsy Chorus	Balfe	4d.
15.	Ave Maria	Arcadelt	1d.
16.	Hark! the Herald Angels sing. S.A.T.B.	Mendelssohn	1d.
17.	England Yet (Solo and Chorus). S.A.T.B.	Jules Benedict	3d.
18.	The Shepherd's Sabbath Day. S.A.T.B.	J. L. Hatton	2d.
19.	Thoughts of Childhood. S.A.T.B.	Henry Smart	2d.
20.	Spring's Return. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
21.	An old Church Song. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
22.	Sabbath Bells. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
23.	Serenade. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
24.	Cold Autumn Wind. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
25.	Orpheus with his Lute. S.S.S.	Bennett Gilbert	2d.
26.	Lullaby. S.A.A.	,,	1d.
27.	This is my own, my native land. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
28.	March of the Men of Harlech. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
29.	God save the Queen. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
30.	Rule, Britannia. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
31.	The Retreat. T.T.B.B.	L. de Rille	2d.
32.	Lo! morn is breaking. S.S.S.	Cherubini	2d.
33.	We are Spirits. S.S.S.	G. A. Macfarren	4d.
34.	Market Chorus (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	Auber	4d.
35.	The Prayer (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
36.	The Water Sprites. S.A.T.B.	Kücken	2d.
37.	Eve's glittering Star. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
38.	When first the Primrose. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
39.	O Dewdrop bright. S.A.T.B	,,	1d.
40.	Sanctus from the Messe Solennelle. S.A.T.B.	Rossini	4d.
41.	Nine Kyries, Ancient and Modern	,,	2d.
42.	Sun of my soul. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	2d.
43.	'Twas fancy, and the ocean's spray. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
44.	A Prayer for those at Sea. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
45.	O Thou whose power (Prayer from Mose in Egitto)	Rossini	2d.
46.	The Guard on the Rhine. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
47.	The German Fatherland. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
48.	The Lord is my Shepherd (Quartet). S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
49.	Te Deum in F	Jackson	2d.
50.	Te Deum in F	Nares	2d.
51.	Charity (La Carita). S.S.S.	Rossini	4d.
52.	Cordelia. A.T.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	4d.
53.	I know. S.A.T.B.	Walter Hay	2d.
54.	Chorus of Handmaidens (from Fridolin)	A. Randegger	4d.
55.	The Offertory Sentences	Edmund Rogers	4d.
56.	The Red Cross Knight	Dr. Callcott	2d.
57.	The Chough and the Crow	Sir H. R. Bishop	3d.
58.	The "Carnovale"	Rossini	2d.
59.	Softly falls the moonlight	Edmund Rogers	4d.
60.	Air by Himmel	Henry Leslie	2d.
61.	Offertory Sentences	E. Sauerbrey	4d.
62.	The Resurrection	C. Villiers Stanford	6d.
63.	Our Boys (new Patriotic Song) H. J. Byron and W. M. Lutz		4d.
64.	The Men of Wales	Brinley Richards	2d.
65.	Dame Durden		1d.
66.	A little Farm well tilled	Hook	1d.
67.	There was a simple maiden	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
68.	Fair Hebe	,,	1d.
69.	Once I loved a maiden fair	,,	1d.
70.	The jovial man of Kent	,,	1d.
71.	The oak and the ash	,,	1d.
72.	Heart of Oak	,,	1d.
73.	Come to the sunset tree	W. A. Philpott	4d.
74.	May. S.A.T.B.	W. F. Banks	2d.
75.	Pure, lovely innocence (Il Roi de Lahore—Chorus for Female Voices)	G. Massenet	4d.
76.	A Love Idyl. S.A.T.B.	E. R. Terry	2d.
77.	Hail to the Woods! A.T.T.B.	J. Yarwood	2d.
78.	Near the town of Taunton Dean	Thomas J. Dudeney	2d.
79.	Our merry boys at sea	J. Yarwood	2d.
80.	The Shepherd's Farewell. S.A.T.B.	Berlioz	3d.
81.	When the sun sets o'er the mountains (Il Demonio)	A. Rubinstein	3d.
82.	Hymn of Nature	Beethoven	3d.
83.	Michaelmas Day (Humorous Part Songs, No. 1)	Walter Maynard	4d.
84.	Sporting Notes (Humorous Part Songs, No. 2)	Walter Maynard	4d.
85.	Austrian National Hymn	Haydn	4d.

LONDON:
CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND STREET, W.
City Branch—14 & 15, Poultry.

Digitized by Google

SYDNEY SMITH'S
FOUR NEW PIECES.

SPERANZA.

ANDANTE ESPRESSIVO.

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

NONCHALANCE.

CAPRICE DE CONCERT.

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

I PIFFERARI.

MUSETTE MODERNE.

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

NABUCO.

GRAND FANTASIA ON THE OPERA OF VERDI.

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

SYDNEY SMITH'S NEW PIANO DUETS.

		s.	d.
SEMIRAMIDE.	Fantasia on Rossini's Opera - - - -	6	0
ROSE LEAVES.	Morceau Élégant - - - - -	5	0
BACCHANALE -	- - - - - - - - -	5	0
LE RETOUR DE L'ARMÉE.	Morceau Militaire - - -	5	0

LONDON: ASHDOWN & PARRY, HANOVER SQUARE.

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, & SPALDING, at 3 and 5, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, January 28, 1882.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 60.—No. 5. SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1882. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.

February 4th, Morning Performance at Two, WAGNER'S "FLYING DUTCHMAN;" Evening, "MARITANA." MONDAY, Feb. 6th, BALFE'S "MORO." TUESDAY, Feb. 7th, LAST EVENING REPRESENTATION OF "LOHENGRIN." WEDNESDAY, Feb. 8th, WAGNER'S "FLYING DUTCHMAN."

For further particulars see Daily Papers. Box Office open Daily from 10 till 5.

WEDNESDAY NEXT.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERT.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERT, ST JAMES'S HALL, WEDNESDAY Next, at Eight o'clock. Artists: Miss Mary Davies and Miss De Fonblanque, Mdme Antoinette Sterling and Miss Damian; Mr Edward Lloyd and Mr Frank Boyle, Mr Santley and Mr F. Barrington Foote. The South London Choral Association, under the direction of Mr L. C. Venables. Conductor—Mr SIDNEY NAYLOR. The programme will contain the following Songs, &c.: "Oh that we two were maying," "Good Night," and "The Summer Shower" (Miss Mary Davies); "When daisies pied" and "In a quaint old village" (Miss De Fonblanque); "Sunshine and Rain," "The Better Land," and "The Cluster of Roses" (Mdme Antoinette Sterling); "Regret" and "The Lights o' London" (Miss Damian); "My Queen," "Good Company," and "Once and Once only" (Mr Edward Lloyd); "Love's Request" and "My Darling of Old" (Mr Frank Boyle); "Marching along" (with Chorus), "Erl King," and "Father O'Flynn" (Mr Santley); "The Diver" and "Leaving, yet Loving" (Mr F. Barrington Foote). Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Area, 4s. and 2s.; Balcony, 3s.; Gallery and Orchestra, 1s.; Family and School Tickets to admit Six to Stalls, £2; to be had at Austin's, St James's Hall; the usual Agents; and of Boosey & Co., 295, Regent Street.

MR SIMS REEVES has the honour to announce that his SECOND CONCERT of Operatic, National, and Miscellaneous Music will take place, at ST JAMES'S HALL, TUESDAY next, February 7th, Eight o'clock, on which occasion he will give a selection from "ROBIN HOOD," by G. A. MACFARREN. Maid Marian, Mdme Sherrington (her original character); Robin Hood, Mr Sims Reeves (his original character). Mdme Sherrington, Miss Spenser Jones, Miss Edith Santley,: Mr Herbert Reeves, Mr Barrington Foote, Mr Henry Pyatt, and Mr Sims Reeves. Conductor—Mr SIDNEY NAYLOR. The Anemoic Union (under the direction of Mr Lazarus). Flute—Mr H. Nicholson. Oboe—Mr Malsch. Clarionet—Mr Lazarus. Horn—Mr T. E. Mann. Bassoon—Mr Wotton. Pianoforte—Mr Sidney Naylor. Tickets, 10s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 3s., and 1s., at Austin's Ticket Office, St James's Hall, and usual Agents.

MDME ISABELLE POWERS has the honour to announce to her patrons that her FIRST GRAND EVENING CONCERT will take place on WEDNESDAY, the 8th of February, at the ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC, Tenterden Street, at Eight o'clock, assisted by the following Artists: Miss Manwel, Mdlle Pellétier, Miss Hipwell, Signor Ria, Mr Walsham, Mr Elwin, Mr Yorke. Harp—Miss Ida Audain. Piano—Signor Li Calsi and his pupil, Miss Alice Ashplant, Mr G. Sumpter, pupil of Herr Lehmeyer. Violin—Miss Brousil and Mr G. Brousil. Conductors—Mr S. LEHMEYER and Mr ARTHUR TRICKETT, F.C.O. Tickets of Mdme ISABELLE POWERS, 2, Hetley Road, Shepherd's Bush.

SCHUBERT SOCIETY. President—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT. Founder and Director—Herr SCHUBERTH. Sixteenth Season, 1882. The FIRST CONCERT (F Schubert's Compositions forming the first part of the programme) will take place at the LANGHAM HALL, Great Portland Street, on TUESDAY, 28th February, 1882, to commence at eight o'clock precisely. The next SOIRÉE MUSICALE is fixed for WEDNESDAY 15th February. Full prospectus on application to H. G. HOPPER, Hon. Sec., 244, Regent Street, W.

LONDON CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.—Principal—Mr LANSDOWNE COTTELL.
The Directors invite attention to the recent extension and increased accommodation, residential and otherwise.
Fees from Two Guineas per term, residential from Fourteen Guineas, inclusive of the Musical and Fine Art Lectures.
Free Tuition is awarded to talented young artists unable to pay fees by fund granted for this purpose.
Prospectus (one stamp), Hon, Sec., 6, Tavistock Square.

"PARADISE LOST." An Oratorio. Composed by ANTON RUBINSTEIN, on the Poem of MILTON. The English version of the words by JOSIAH PITTMAN. Paris: GÉRARD, 2, Rue Scribe.

MR W. DORRELL begs to inform his Friends and Pupils that he has RETURNED to Town for the Season.
34, Baker Street, Portman Square.

MISS FRANCESCO J. FERRARI begs to announce her RETURN to Town for the Season.
20, Langham Street, Portland Place, W.

TO THE MUSIC TRADE.

A GENTLEMAN of many years' experience as a London Music Publisher, and who is conversant with every detail of the Trade, is open to accept an ENGAGEMENT as GENERAL MANAGER, or otherwise, in Town or the Provinces. Address—"PUBLISHER," care of Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

BENEDICT'S "CARNAVAL DE VENISE."

MISS BEATA FRANCIS will sing BENEDICT'S Variations on the "CARNAVAL DE VENISE," at Chelsea Vestry Hall, Feb. 13th (evening).

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR J. TWINNING will sing ASCHER'S popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" at the Fifteenth Saturday Promenade Concert, Montpellier Rotunda, Cheltenham, This Day (Saturday), Feb. 4th.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" ARRANGED AS A QUARTET.

MR EDWYN FRITH'S CONCERT PARTY will sing ASCHER'S popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" arranged as a Quartet, at all their Engagements throughout the Season.

REDUCED PRICE, 2s. 6d.

THE EPIKLEIS, or Musical Domino (POOLEY'S PATENT), an Aid to Pianists for the Slow Shake and other Exercises—entirely a mental aid. Testimonials from the best Pianists and Teachers. By Post, 2s. 6d. Handbook, with Exercises and useful Hints on Playing, 1s.—JOHN POOLEY, 3, The Terrace, Clapham Park Road, London, S.W. Agents Wanted all over the world.

THE MUSICAL DIRECTORY, ANNUAL, & ALMANACK FOR 1882. THIRTIETH ANNUAL ISSUE. Now Ready. Contents: The Names and Addresses of the Professors of Music, Music Sellers, and Musical Instrument Dealers in the United Kingdom, New Copyright Music published during the Year, Principal Events, &c., &c. Price 3s.; or, in cloth, 4s. Also SIR JULIUS BENEDICT'S PROFESSIONAL POCKET BOOK, giving Spaces for Engagements for every hour in the day. Price, in Roan, 3s.; or, in Russia, 6s. RUDALL, CARTE & Co., 23, Berners Street, W.

THE PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, AND KNIGHTAGE OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE for 1882. By JOSEPH FOSTER.
Early in January. In one or two volumes, royal 8vo, cloth gilt, price 42s. The Peerage or Baronetage separate, each 21s.
The THIRD EDITION, for 1882, containing all new Creations, has been considerably enlarged, and carefully corrected throughout. It is illustrated by upwards of 1,400 Engravings of Arms, &c., and contains fuller pedigrees than any other work.
Westminster: NICHOLS & SONS, 25, Parliament Street.
CHAPMAN & HALL, Limited, 11, Henrietta Street, W.C.

PARIS UNIVERSAL EXHIBITION, 1878, CLASS XIII.
Gold and Silver Medals, Paris, 1878. Gold Medal, Paris, 1879.
Gold Medal, Rome, 1880, and two Diplomas.

ARTISTIC HOUSE,
PARIS—10, RUE DU FAUBOURG-POISSONNIÈRE, 10—PARIS.

CH. J. B. COLLIN-MÉZIN,
Stringed Instrument Maker.

The celebrated VIOLINS and VIOLONCELLOS for SOLOISTS, which, since the adoption of the new system, are the only approved, recommended and played by the greatest Masters; among others, Messrs Sivori, Marsik, Hollmann, Léonard, Armingaud, Miss Marie Tayau, &c., &c.; Messrs Massart, Sauzay, Dancla, Franchomme, Maurin, Chevillard, Jacquard, &c., Professors at the Conservatoire of Music, Paris.

PRICES:—
Violin, £12; Tenor, £14; Violoncello, £20.
BOW in Pernambuco, Silver Mounted, first class, £1 4s.; Collin-Mézin, £1 12s.
Catalogues and Testimonials post free on application.

Digitized by Google

SYDNEY SMITH'S
FOUR NEW PIECES.

SPERANZA.

ANDANTE ESPRESSIVO.

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

NONCHALANCE.

CAPRICE DE CONCERT.

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

I PIFFERARI.

MUSETTE MODERNE.

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

NABUCO.

GRAND FANTASIA ON THE OPERA OF VERDI.

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

SYDNEY SMITH'S NEW PIANO DUETS.

		s.	d.
SEMIRAMIDE.	Fantasia on Rossini's Opera - - - -	6	0
ROSE LEAVES.	Morceau Élégant - - - - -	5	0
BACCHANALE -	- - - - - - - -	5	0
LE RETOUR DE L'ARMÉE.	Morceau Militaire - - -	5	0

LONDON: ASHDOWN & PARRY, HANOVER SQUARE.

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, & SPALDING, at 3 and 5, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, January 28, 1882.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 60.—No. 5. SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1882. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.

February 4th, Morning Performance at Two, WAGNER'S "FLYING DUTCHMAN;" Evening, "MARITANA." MONDAY, Feb. 6th, BALFE'S "MORO." TUESDAY, Feb. 7th, LAST EVENING REPRESENTATION OF "LOHENGRIN." WEDNESDAY, Feb. 8th, WAGNER'S "FLYING DUTCHMAN."

For further particulars see Daily Papers. Box Office open Daily from 10 till 5.

WEDNESDAY NEXT.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERT.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERT, ST JAMES'S HALL, WEDNESDAY Next, at Eight o'clock. Artists: Miss Mary Davies and Miss De Fonblanque, Mdme Antoinette Sterling and Miss Damian; Mr Edward Lloyd and Mr Frank Boyle, Mr Santley and Mr F. Barrington Foote. The South London Choral Association, under the direction of Mr L. C. Venables. Conductor—Mr SIDNEY NAYLOR. The programme will contain the following Songs, &c.: "Oh that we two were maying," "Good Night," and "The Summer Shower" (Miss Mary Davies); "When daisies pied" and "In a quaint old village" (Miss De Fonblanque); "Sunshine and Rain," "The Better Land," and "The Cluster of Roses" (Mdme Antoinette Sterling); "Regret" and "The Lights o' London" (Miss Damian); "My Queen," "Good Company," and "Once and Once only" (Mr Edward Lloyd); "Love's Request" and "My Darling of Old" (Mr Frank Boyle); "Marching along" (with Chorus), "Erl King," and "Father O'Flynn" (Mr Santley); "The Diver" and "Leaving, yet Loving" (Mr F. Barrington Foote). Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Area, 4s. and 2s.; Balcony, 3s.; Gallery and Orchestra, 1s.; Family and School Tickets to admit Six to Stalls, £2; to be had at Austin's, St James's Hall; the usual Agents; and of Boosey & Co., 295, Regent Street.

MR SIMS REEVES has the honour to announce that his SECOND CONCERT of Operatic, National, and Miscellaneous Music will take place, at ST JAMES'S HALL, TUESDAY next, February 7th, Eight o'clock, on which occasion he will give a selection from "ROBIN HOOD," by G. A. MACFARREN. Maid Marian, Mdme Sherrington (her original character); Robin Hood, Mr Sims Reeves (his original character). Mdme Sherrington, Miss Spenser Jones, Miss Edith Santley,: Mr Herbert Reeves, Mr Barrington Foote, Mr Henry Pyatt, and Mr Sims Reeves. Conductor—Mr SIDNEY NAYLOR. The Anemoic Union (under the direction of Mr Lazarus). Flute—Mr H. Nicholson. Oboe—Mr Malsch. Clarionet—Mr Lazarus. Horn—Mr T. E. Mann. Bassoon—Mr Wotton. Pianoforte—Mr Sidney Naylor. Tickets, 10s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 3s., and 1s., at Austin's Ticket Office, St James's Hall, and usual Agents.

MDME ISABELLE POWERS has the honour to announce to her patrons that her FIRST GRAND EVENING CONCERT will take place on WEDNESDAY, the 8th of February, at the ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC, Tenterden Street, at Eight o'clock, assisted by the following Artists: Miss Manwel, Mdlle Pellétier, Miss Hipwell, Signor Ria, Mr Walsham, Mr Elwin, Mr Yorke. Harp—Miss Ida Audain. Piano—Signor Li Calsi and his pupil, Miss Alice Ashplant, Mr G. Sumpter, pupil of Herr Lehmeyer. Violin—Miss Brousil and Mr G. Brousil. Conductors—Mr S. LEHMEYER and Mr ARTHUR TRICKETT, F.C.O. Tickets of Mdme ISABELLE POWERS, 2, Hetley Road, Shepherd's Bush.

SCHUBERT SOCIETY. President—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT. Founder and Director—Herr SCHUBERTH. Sixteenth Season, 1882. The FIRST CONCERT (Of Schubert's Compositions forming the first part of the programme) will take place at the LANGHAM HALL, Great Portland Street, on TUESDAY, 28th February, 1882, to commence at eight o'clock precisely. The next SOIRÉE MUSICALE is fixed for WEDNESDAY 15th February. Full prospectus on application to H. G. HOPPER, Hon. Sec., 244, Regent Street, W.

LONDON CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.—Principal—Mr LANSDOWNE COTTELL.

The Directors invite attention to the recent extension and increased accommodation, residential and otherwise.

Fees from Two Guineas per term, residential from Fourteen Guineas, inclusive of the Musical and Fine Art Lectures.

Free Tuition is awarded to talented young artists unable to pay fees by fund granted for this purpose.

Prospectus (one stamp), Hon, Sec., 6, Tavistock Square.

"PARADISE LOST." An Oratorio. Composed by ANTON RUBINSTEIN, on the Poem of MILTON. The English version of the words by JOSIAH PITTMAN. Paris: GÉRARD, 2, Rue Scribe.

MR W. DORRELL begs to inform his Friends and Pupils that he has RETURNED to Town for the Season.
34, Baker Street, Portman Square.

MISS FRANCESCO J. FERRARI begs to announce her RETURN to Town for the Season.
20, Langham Street, Portland Place, W.

TO THE MUSIC TRADE.

A GENTLEMAN of many years' experience as a London Music Publisher, and who is conversant with every detail of the Trade, is open to accept an ENGAGEMENT as GENERAL MANAGER, or otherwise, in Town or the Provinces. Address—"PUBLISHER," care of Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

BENEDICT'S "CARNAVAL DE VENISE."

MISS BEATA FRANCIS will sing BENEDICT'S Variations on the "CARNAVAL DE VENISE," at Chelsea Vestry Hall, Feb. 13th (evening).

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR J. TWINNING will sing ASCHER'S popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" at the Fifteenth Saturday Promenade Concert, Montpellier Rotunda, Cheltenham, This Day (Saturday), Feb. 4th.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" ARRANGED AS A QUARTET.

MR EDWYN FRITH'S CONCERT PARTY will sing ASCHER'S popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" arranged as a Quartet, at all their Engagements throughout the Season.

REDUCED PRICE, 2s. 6d.

THE EPIKLEIS, or Musical Domino (POOLEY'S PATENT), an Aid to Pianists for the Slow Shake and other Exercises—entirely a mental aid. Testimonials from the best Pianists and Teachers. By Post, 2s. 6d. Handbook, with Exercises and useful Hints on Playing, 1s.—JOHN POOLEY, 3, The Terrace, Clapham Park Road, London, S.W. Agents Wanted all over the world.

THE MUSICAL DIRECTORY, ANNUAL, & ALMANACK FOR 1882. THIRTIETH ANNUAL ISSUE. Now Ready. Contents: The Names and Addresses of the Professors of Music, Music Sellers, and Musical Instrument Dealers in the United Kingdom, New Copyright Music published during the Year, Principal Events, &c., &c. Price 3s.; or, in cloth, 4s. Also SIR JULIUS BENEDICT'S PROFESSIONAL POCKET BOOK, giving Spaces for Engagements for every hour in the day. Price, in Roan, 3s.; or, in Russia, 6s. RUDALL, CARTE & Co., 23, Berners Street, W.

THE PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, AND KNIGHTAGE OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE for 1882. By JOSEPH FOSTER.

Early in January. In one or two volumes, royal 8vo, cloth gilt, price 42s. The Peerage or Baronetage separate, each 21s.

The THIRD EDITION, for 1882, containing all new Creations, has been considerably enlarged, and carefully corrected throughout. It is illustrated by upwards of 1,400 Engravings of Arms, &c., and contains fuller pedigrees than any other work.

Westminster: NICHOLS & SONS, 25, Parliament Street.
CHAPMAN & HALL, Limited, 11, Henrietta Street, W.C.

PARIS UNIVERSAL EXHIBITION, 1878, CLASS XIII.

Gold and Silver Medals, Paris, 1878. Gold Medal, Paris, 1879. Gold Medal, Rome, 1880, and two Diplomas.

ARTISTIC HOUSE,

PARIS—10, RUE DU FAUBOURG-POISSONNIÈRE, 10—PARIS.

CH. J. B. COLLIN-MÉZIN,

Stringed Instrument Maker.

The celebrated VIOLINS and VIOLONCELLOS for SOLOISTS, which, since the adoption of the new system, are the only approved, recommended and played by the greatest Masters; among others, Messrs Sivori, Marsik, Hollmann, Léonard, Armingaud, Miss Marie Tayau, &c., &c.; Messrs Massart, Sauzay, Dancla, Franchomme, Maurin, Chevillard, Jacquard, &c., Professors at the Conservatoire of Music, Paris.

PRICES:—

Violin, £12; Tenor, £14; Violoncello, £20.

BOW in Pernambuco, Silver Mounted, first class, £1 4s.; Collin-Mézin, £1 12s.

Catalogues and Testimonials post free on application.

Google

FURNISHED APARTMENTS WANTED.

A Professor of Music requires APARTMENTS (DRAWING and BEDROOM, communicating, with Gas), for a permanency in the neighbourhood of Regent Circus and the Marble Arch. Letters, stating Terms, to be addressed—"J. R.," care of Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street.

Just Published.

THE BETTER WORLD.

Words by Mrs. M. A. BAINES.

Music by

MICHAEL BERGSON.

Composed expressly for and sung by Mdme MARIE ROZE; sung also by Miss JESSICA O'BRIEN.

Price 4s.

London: STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

Published This Day.

THE LOVERS' WALTZ

(L'AMANTE).

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By

G. MURATORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Published This Day.

L'AMANTE.

VALZER, PER VOCE DI MEZZO-SOPRANO.

Musica di

G. MURATORI

(The English Version of the words by MARIA X. HAYES).

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Published This Day.

AMELIA.

CANZONE POPOLARE.

Parole e Musica di

G. MURATORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

MIDNIGHT CHIMES.

(SONG.)

Words by MARIA X. HAYES.

Music by

MICHAEL BERGSON.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

DANSE PYRRHIQUE.

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By

BROWNLOW BAKER.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Where may be obtained, Composed by Brownlow Baker, "Bourrée," in E flat, 4s.; "Memory" (Romance), 3s.

THE VOICE AND SINGING.

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

VOCAL EXERCISES COMPOSED BY FRANK MORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by the late FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

New Edition of "LE PETIT SOLFEGE."

LE PETIT SOLFEGE. Vingt Solfèges pour Voix de Mezzo-Soprano. Par JOS. CURCI. Price 6s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

"This work for educational purposes will be found of inestimable value, since it is one of the very few which confines itself to the cultivation of the middle of the voice; and whilst the phrases are admirably adapted to develop the breathing powers and volume of the voice, the melodies are so exquisitely harmonized that they must prove of great benefit in the improvement of the taste and ear of a student in singing."—Pictorial World.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE.

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdme Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklein, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis, of Basingstoke, says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

NEW SONG BY J. L. HATTON.

THE GOOD SHIP ROVER. Words by JOHN STEWART. Music by J. L. HATTON. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

LA POMPA DI FESTA. Grande Marche, pour Piano, à Quatre Mains. Par IGNACE GIBSONE. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"HER VOICE."

"HER VOICE." IGNACE GIBSONE'S popular Song (poetry by "A Soldier's Daughter"), sung by Mdme ENRIQUEZ, is published, price 4s., by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

UNITY.

A NEW MASONIC SOLO AND QUARTET.

Dedicated by express permission to His Royal Highness PRINCE PATRICK, DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, and all true and accepted Masons.

By

RICHARD F. HARVEY,

Organist of Unity Lodge 238 (Dublin).

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

MENUET DE LULLI.

POUR LE PIANOFORTE.

Par BENTAYOUX.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—The "Menuet de Lulli" can also be played as a Duet for Violin and Violoncello.

Digitized by Google

CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.

Balfe's twenty-first opera, Pittore e Duca, called Moro in the English version of Mr W. Alex. Barrett, was produced at Her Majesty's Theatre on Saturday night before a crowded house, and, although twenty-six years old, for the first time in England. Concerning the author of the story, history is silent—silent absolutely, refusing even to mention his name. But as Balfe, after superintending the performance in Italian of his Bohemian Girl, at Trieste, settled down on the shores of Lake Como to compose Pittore e Duca for the same city of "Italy unredeemed," it is likely that he associated himself with one or other of the many dramatists who in that country enjoy such a large experience and write with such fatal facility. Concerning the literary merit of the original libretto this is no place to speak, since the question does not arise. We must give a word, however, to the structure of the plot and its incidents, and that word must be one of praise. It is almost amusing to note with what ease the librettist has contrived to link together a series of events and scenes more or less familiar as subjects for operatic treatment. Pompous ceremonials, feeble virtue in the grasp of vicious power, religious hymns, popular festivities, combats, and love episodes follow each other in uninterrupted succession. We have witnessed them all before, but not in this order and under these circumstances, nor does their familiarity affect the interest which they call forth as the story unfolds itself. It should be observed, on the other hand, that only a portion of the actual chain of events is brought forward. A good deal is supposed to have taken place when the curtain rises and the audience are assumed to have made themselves acquainted with it. This last is an excellent arrangement. In opera we are happily spared the two chairs in front and the words of terrible import, "It is now some twenty years ago," &c. The exemption, it is true, may not last long, for is there not in Wagner's Nibelungen Wotan, the "All-Father" of long-windedness, for ever going about like a mythological Ancient Mariner in search of a Wedding Guest? Let us show, as briefly as possible, how matters stand when the action of Moro begins. The Duke of Alba, coming from Spain to rule the Netherlands, had brought with him a young painter, Antonio Moro. This Moro fell in love with Olivia Campana, daughter of a powerful noble, and found his passion returned. But the course of their true love ran in the usual rough channel. The father of Olivia became a rebel, and was driven into exile, while the hand of his daughter was bestowed upon a certain Count Aremberga. To escape the misery of this union, Olivia obtained permission to retire into a convent, whence she caused reports to be spread of her death. Meanwhile Aremberga, having fallen into disgrace, died in exile, and so, as the old chroniclers say, "he goeth out of the story." At this point the curtain rises upon a prologue, the main object of which seems to be the spectacle of laying a foundation stone and glorifying the Duke of Alba. Only a single incident belongs to the drama, and it is this: Moro is sketching the scene, when a veiled lady hands him a letter, and whispers of a friend whose days were shortened by hopeless love and grief. Moro demands, "What means this fateful pressage?" but the lady goes off, and the painter, neglecting his work, goes after her, leaving the crowd to sing, "Long live our bold commander," till the curtain falls. At the beginning of Act I. we hear Moro read the letter, which contains the news of Olivia's death and an assurance of her devotion to the end. Being in his studio, he forthwith uncovers a portrait of the supposed departed one, sings to it, and "throws himself on a couch," where he is found by a band of students, who hail him Court Painter. Moro is surprised, as well he might, after running away from his work, but he is not elated, and exclaiming, "Ah! evermore are dead the fair hopes which bright joys might restore," he departs hastily. The scene here changes to Olivia's convent, at a time when the Superioress demands her guest's motive for giving herself out as dead. In response the lady reveals her enforced marriage and her love for Moro. Trouble forthwith descends upon the peaceful retreat. Alba's soldiers surround the house, and the nuns counsel flight, since, as they timorously observe, "No ruthful contrition moves his heart, nor his mind will deploy." It is too late, however. The Duke comes down like a wolf on the fold, and makes prisoners of all the flock on suspicion of treason. But with Olivia he incontinently falls in love, talks significantly of the "headsman's knife," and implores "In this fair land, in love to dwell, give me thy heart so tender." Olivia spurns the suit, going off undauntedly with her fellow prisoners, and then the act ends. The curtain rises once more upon Moro's studio, while he is thinking of his dead mistress and consoling himself as best he may with his living art. To him comes the terrible Duke, apparently for the purpose of singing a song, "Bold knight his armour wearing, his prowess proud enhances." Moro, listening with respect, gathers that some lady despises Alba's love, and he is naturally astonished thereat, taking occasion to say as much in the course of a duet which may, perhaps, be best described as the martial "Suoni la tromba" in mufti. The Duke then bids Moro take the implements of his craft and follow him to the "Grand Hall of Judgment," which is next shown. By the way, a suspicion of humour attaches to Moro in the course of the duet. "Tell me, Prince," says the painter, "is the maid of noble lineage?" "Yes, truly." "Of gentle mien and beauteous image?" "Yes." "Mind duly ordered of cultured fashion?" "What then?" naturally demands the catechized, upon which the catechizer simply remarks, "Forego unwilling passion." One would expect the Duke to roar "Off with his head" after such a sequitur, but he is satisfied to protest, "Thy sentence said, inflamed does my heart beat more firmly." In the Hall of Judgment we presently see Olivia and the nuns confronting their accusers, while Moro sits at his easel ready to sketch the features of the principal victim. At first the painter does not recognize Olivia, but when lights are brought to enable him to execute his task he does so, and appeals for mercy. After a long and stormy scene the Duke, who vaguely hints at a sinister purpose, pardons all the culprits; while the judges are very much disgusted, and the rest exclaim, "Each spirit free from sadness, with joyful accent rings." So ends the second act. Act the third opens in the port of Antwerp upon the songs and dances of sailors and people, with whom Moro, who has escorted Olivia to a neighbouring inn, presently fraternizes, ignorant of the fact that Vargas, a servant of the Duke, is at his heels. Nor is the Duke himself far off, for he obtains an interview with Olivia, and renews his vows of love. In the nick of time Moro enters—there is a quarrel, swords are drawn and about to be used, when messengers appear, and hand "a parchment" to the Duke. The "parchment" settles everything. Olivia is free to marry; Moro may accept an offer from Queen Elizabeth of employment in England—by the way, the Virgin Monarch sends two banners and a detachment of Beefeaters as escort—the Duke "bows with dignity and retires," while the people, mistaken as usual, sing "Long live Alba, who has righted lovers parted, now united." Here, naturally, is an end of the story.

With reference to the music written by Balfe for this drama, we should not forget that the composer had in view an Italian audience, for, in a musical sense, Trieste still belongs to what the librettist calls the "land of the sonnet and the song." Balfe, who had taken the measure of his public when producing The Bohemian Girl, did his best to fit them. In such matters he was of an accommodating disposition, while his talent was hardly less elastic. He would probably have written in opera in the style of Wagner had occasion called for it, and have done so with the chances in his favour of succeeding quite as well as most of the people who, looking anxiously emulative on the giant of Bayreuth, are illustrating the proverb of the frog and the ox. At any rate, Balfe determined to be as Italian as possible in Pittore e Duca. Hence a crowd of musical characteristics for which, at the present time, and even in England—so long under the domination of Italian opera—there is little public sympathy. Upon those characteristics we do not propose to waste words. They belong to the old order which changeth, and giveth place to new. Sentence of death has been passed upon them, and they sit, like the gods in Walhalla, waiting for the torch that shall kindle the funeral pile. But while Balfe's music in Moro illustrates a fashion which is passing away, it exemplifies, not less but even more, that which cannot vary while nature continues to operate as now. It is with our art as with the great ocean, whose upper waters change their aspect as light and shade and blowing winds pass over them, but whose depths are eternally the same. In the higher regions of music we shall always see new theories advanced and made the bases of new practices, and it is well that this should be, since, though much may deserve rejection, much may prove of value. On the other hand, the day will never come when a simple and gracious melody shall lose its power, or when the expression of a poetic thought through the medium of natural and unforced song shall fail to move the heart. To say that Balfe had no command of these abiding resources is to utter pure nonsense. Much more reasonably might the same be predicated of some composers who make far greater pretensions, and are better known in the sublimated regions where incoherence often passes as a kind of divine communication. The question, therefore, is whether in Moro we have music—none the less true because intelligible—that goes by a direct natural channel to the public soul. The question is answerable by reference to some of the numbers in nearly every act. The first act proper, for example, contains a song, "Is it then in vain I've waited?" illustrative of Balfe's purest melodic style, as well as of the ease with which, when in proper mood, he could ably wed the tone to the word. With this may be bracketed Olivia's air in the convent scene, "As by the river straying," despite certain passages wherein the singer is studied more than truth of expression. Portions of the duet for Olivia and Alba are marked by strong dramatic purpose, even where the means employed are conventional; but it must be confessed that the first act is far from the best in the work. It drags considerably, and would gain by a free use of the knife. The musical interest of the second act fairly begins with Moro's song, "Farewell thoughts of joy and gladness." Here the well-known Balfe melody asserts itself, and the audience on Saturday night gave it all the welcome implied by a vociferous encore. A like reception awaited the Duke's air, "Bold knight, his armour wearing," which is also in the composer's best vein; nor did the somewhat noisy duet for the personages just named pass without a cordial recognition of obvious merit. In the third act attention is challenged by some capital concerted pieces for the sailors and the people, and by charming dance music of a Spanish character. In agreeable sequence comes a duet for the lovers, opening with a slow movement only to be described as, in its way, a gem; but the attraction of the duet is surpassed by the real beauty of Moro's barcarolle. "On my gondola so lonely." No number, perhaps, has a better chance of taking first honours than this song, which, with its lively choral refrain, appeals irresistibly to all who have any soul for fresh and spontaneous tune. Finally, there is a bravura air for Olivia, "Joy fills my heart," most happily expressive of the sentiment of the text. If we pass over the rest of the music without specific notice it is not because notice is altogether undeserved. Much in the opera is rococo, much must have been lingering in Balfe's memory, and a good deal bespeaks blameworthy haste or carelessness. At the same time hardly a number lacks indications of talent equal to greater things had it been allowed fair play. We cannot rank Moro among Balfe's best works, but it contains a good deal of music that the public will gladly hear, and that has a right to live.

Digitized by Google

For the manner in which Mr Rosa has placed this opera on the stage we have nothing but praise. The scenes are elaborate, and the accessories many; but no expense or trouble has been spared. Indeed, each "set" is a masterpiece of arrangement and colour, while in the last act Mr Emden's view of Antwerp, with its cathedral and shipping, belongs to the triumphs of scene-painting. The stage management, we may add, is careful and efficient, reflecting much credit upon Mr Betjemann; and, generally, the most fanatical zeal for an English operatic enterprise cannot but be satisfied. This might be said with almost equal emphasis regarding the performance of the music, which Mr Rosa, who was received with tremendous applause, conducted in first-rate style. Mr Barton M'Guckin, as Moro, followed up the success he made in Mignon, and won new laurels by the excellence of his singing and the propriety of his bearing. Having to "create" the part, he was not so fully at his ease as in M. Thomas's work, while we need not insist that his dramatic education is as yet incomplete. But Mr M'Guckin seems to have an instinct that guards from serious mishaps. He plays his part modestly, and even where he satisfies least he does not offend. His singing, especially of the songs in the first and second acts, was quite acceptable. We must also praise Mr Leslie Crotty's Duke—a vigorous conception carried out in a corresponding manner, but at no time overstepping the bounds of good taste. The part is an arduous one, yet it cannot fairly be said that Mr Crotty comes short of its requirements, though there are passages, both dramatic and musical, which give opportunities not yet fully comprehended by this clever artist. Miss Julia Warwick (Donna Ines), Mr Dudley Thomas (Vargas), and Mr D'Egville (Orsini) filled their parts sufficiently well, and so did—to speak last of that which should be first—the accomplished lady (Madame Valleria) who assumed the trying rôle of Olivia. An apology was made at the beginning of the evening for Madame Valleria on the ground of cold and hoarseness, which at one time, we believe, threatened to cause a postponement of the performance. Her indisposition was occasionally obvious, and enlisted sympathy for her state, as well as commanded admiration for her "pluck," but she fairly conquered circumstances, and achieved a triumph. Her impersonation of the character was interesting from first to last. By means the most simple and direct she contrived to express in look, movement, and bearing, all the heroine's changing emotions, while her singing of music capable of trying an artist in the best health was distinguished by vocal and expressional merit of a high order. Madame Valleria will do better still, when in full possession of her means, but her effort on Saturday night confirmed—assuming confirmation to have been required—the impression that Mr Rosa has in her a prima donna fitted to sustain and augment the reputation of his enterprise. We have only to add that the general performance deserved all the applause bestowed upon it by an obviously well-pleased audience.—D. T.

Moro, or the Painter of Antwerp, produced for the first time in England on Saturday night by the Carl Rosa Opera Company, was written by Balfe at the request of the famous house of Ricordi in Milan, and was originally performed at Trieste in 1856, under the title of Pittore e Duca. The libretto was written by Piave, the author of Rigoletto, Il Trovatore, and other operas, and the finale was, like that of most of Piave's books, a sad and melancholy one. This finale, as altered by Balfe after the first representations of the opera, is now adopted in the English translation by Mr W. A. Barrett. Some misunderstanding between Balfe and the house of Ricordi stood in the way of the publication of the music, so that it was not until after the death of Balfe, and also of that of the chief representative of the publishing firm, that a copy of the score was obtained, and this being shown to Mr. Carl Rosa, he, recognizing its merits and its likelihood of winning popular favour, determined to produce the work during this present season. This he has done on a scale of magnificence which betokens his own appreciation of the work, and his desire to serve the interests of his friends and patrons—the British public. How far his foresight was correct the reception accorded to the opera bears ample testimony. The grace and beauty of the melodies, their freshness, and spontaneity of character show Balfe in his happiest mood. The scoring for the orchestra is admirable for the skill and judgment displayed, and the dramatic expression of many of the numbers fits the situations, creating a series of good impressions in the minds of the spectators. The opera having been written for the Italian stage is Italian in style. It is provided with recitatives in the places where otherwise the action would be maintained by ordinary speech. These recitatives are in no way modelled after old conventional forms, but are marked by the like originality and vigour which distinguishes many of the other numbers. The music is full of those characteristic qualities of melody which made Balfe the idol of the British public, and it has also much of that sterling artistic value which secured for his works a welcome in every European country. It should be remembered that it was written more than a quarter of a century ago, and must be judged after the standard of taste accepted at that time. Had Balfe been alive now he might possibly have seen reason for making certain other alterations to fit it to modern fancy; but taken as it is, the opera of The Painter of Antwerp has many excellent points, not the least being the number of fascinating and catching melodies in which it abounds. It may not be written upon the plan which connoisseurs of the present would dictate, but it was written for the public, and, judging from its reception, the public is willing to accept and give it a hearty welcome.—Morning Post.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The following is the programme of music given at the fortnightly meeting of professors and students, on Saturday evening, January 28th:—

Introduction and Fugue, from Sonata in G minor, No. 2, organ (Gustav Merkel)—Mr Rowland Briant, pupil of Dr Steggall; Canzonet, "Fidelity" (Haydn)—(accompanist, Miss Ethel Munster)—Miss Ada Morris, pupil of Mr F. R. Cox; Lieder ohne Worte, Book I., Nos. 1 and 3, and Book VI., No. 4, pianoforte (Mendelssohn)—Miss Elson, pupil of Mr F. B. Jewson; Aria, "Ah rendimi quel core," Mitrane (Luigi Rossi)—(accompanist, Master Septimus Webb)—Miss Lilla Reynolds, pupil of Mr W. H. Cummings; Characteristic Suite, MS., "All's well that ends well," pianoforte (W. H. Holmes)—Mr Courteney Woods, pupil of W. H. Holmes; Song, MS., "The Reaper and the Flowers" (Annie Cantelo, student)—(accompanist, Miss Cantelo)—Miss Hilda Wilson, Westmoreland scholar, pupil of Dr Steggall and Mr Shakespeare; Lied ohne Worte, Book VI., No. 6 (Mendelssohn), and Second Scherzo, pianoforte (Walter Macfarren)—Miss Marian Davis, pupil of Mr Walter Macfarren; Etude de Concert, in D flat, pianoforte (Liszt)—Miss Cox, pupil of Sir Julius Benedict; Duetto, "Qual Anelante" (Benedetto Marcello)—(accompanist, Mr Alfred Izard)—Miss Florence Norman and Miss Charlotte Thudichum, Parepa-Rosa scholar, pupils of Mr Garcia; Phantasiestücke, Op. 12, pianoforte (Schumann)—Miss Balfour, pupil of Mr F. Westlake; Aria, "Una voce poco fa," Il Barbiere di Siviglia (Rossini)—(accompanist, Mr Ernest O. Kiver)—Miss Warburton, pupil of Mr Goldberg; Scherzo—Canzonetta (F. W. Hird), and Finale, from Sonata in C sharp minor, Op. 27, pianoforte (Beethoven)—Miss Ellen Jacobs, pupil of Mr O'Leary; Recitative and Air, "Behold at last" and "Ah! when the wanderer," The Building of the Ship (John Francis Barnett)—(accompanist, Mr R. H. Cummings)—Miss Hilda Wilson, Westmoreland scholar, pupil of Mr Shakespeare; Three Musical Sketches, "The Lake," "The Millstream," and "The Fountain," Op. 10, pianoforte (Sterndale Bennett)—Miss Burghess, pupil of Mr Wingham; Quartet, "All good angels," Martha (Flotow)—(accompanist, Mr Alfred Izard)—Mrs Buntine, Miss Augusta Arnold, Mr Hulbert H. Fulkerson, and Mr A. H. Jarratt, pupils of Mr Fiori.

The second fortnightly meeting takes place this (Saturday) evening.

Digitized by Google

FORM, OR DESIGN, IN VOCAL MUSIC.

The Glee.

(Continued from page 53.)

The word glee is derived from the Saxon gleo, or gligg—music; and its first application, in gleemen, or music-men—the singers and players of Saxon times—has already been described in these pages. They were the musicians who performed rather than those who composed, and, in consequence, the gleemen took rather the lighter side of the matter—the amusing rather than the instructive. We find the word glee used for mirth, joy, and merriment, in general from very early times, and kindred words in other languages have similar meaning. In Piers Plowman, Chaucer, and, later, in Spenser, the word is used with this signification, as well as applied to the gleeman or singer of merry songs.

The first application of the word to a special musical composition is in Playford's publications in the time of the Commonwealth, from 1652 onwards. These are short compositions for two or more voices, of the same class as those of Ravenscroft's publications of an earlier date (1609, &c.), "King Henry's (VII.) Mirth or Freemen's Songs."

The earliest of Playford's glees, which is in his "Select Musical Ayres and Dialogues" of 1652, edited by Hilton, has an independent accompaniment for the theorbo-lute or for the bass viol; the former instrument a lute of large compass, both high and low, played with the fingers after the fashion of the guitar. This glee, "To Bacchus," begins with chorus for three voices, followed by a verse for a solo voice, under which the bass accompaniment is written:

Ex. 122.

Cantus, Tenor, and Bassus.

To Bac-chus, To Bac-chus, we to Bac - chus sing; with wine and mirth with wine and mirth . . . . . we'll con - jure, we'll con - jure him, we'll con - jure we'll we'll him, with wine and mirth we'll con - jure him.

The same chorus is repeated after this verse, and after each of the succeeding verses, which are sung by the same solo voice with a slight variation in the music.

In Playford's "Catch that Catch Can, or Musical Companion," of 1667, there are several glees. These have no written accompaniment, though there is nothing said in contradiction of the then usual custom of playing voice parts on an instrument. The words are on very homely subjects mostly, as in "To Bacchus," on the delights of eating or drinking, and, without exception, merry and careless; a Glee in praise of sack: "Now we are met let's merry be"; "Fly, boy, to the cellar's bottom"; "Diogenes was merry in his tub, and so let us be at our club"; "The Tinker," and the pleasures of his free life; a Glee to the Cook—"Bring the cold chine," with an account of various delicacies, and the cold chine is superior to all. In the latter glee, as in "To Bacchus," there are solo verses interspersed with chorus, and the time varies between common and triple; but in this the solos are taken by different voices in turn.

About the middle or end of the eighteenth century the glee was largely developed as a musical form by means of social glee-clubs; though the subjects of the glees then written—Greek mythological personages, fairies, elves, crusaders, friars, and even sacred subjects—can have had but a fictitious interest at the social entertainments of a generation who, as our fathers tell us, felt themselves bound in hospitality to place their gentlemen (?) guests, at the end of a meal, where now we place our knees and our pet four-footed beasts—under the table.

As composers, Arnold, Calcott, Horsley, and Webbe were the great promoters of the glee. The forms of their glees and of those of their followers seem to include the ballet, the part-song, or ballad in parts, and even fairly elaborate sonata and rondo, as well as the form peculiar to the glee; in fact, everything but the real, unrhythmical madrigal. This somewhat justifies the irregular practice of the present day, which names nearly every piece of English vocal concerted music written in Elizabeth's or James the First's time, a madrigal, and the rest, coupled with all those written subsequently, a glee; and even an edition of German part-songs put to English words is called a collection of glees or vocal quartets.

Calcott's "Red Cross Knight" is a glee in one movement in a sort of rondo form, the chief characteristic of which is the narrative and dialogue, which approach in kind, though not in strength, to the old ballad narratives. The clearness of the story is much weakened by the way in which the words of even the same character are given sometimes to one singer, sometimes to another, sometimes to two, and sometimes to three; so that we are tempted to wish for the simple repetitions of a ballad tune, which, at any rate, do not interfere with the sense.

Stevens' "Ye spotted snakes" is in sonata form (Dr Hullah, in the Dictionary of Music), with second part, and without recapitulation of the first subject.

Digitized by Google

The form peculiar to the glee of the last century consists of a chain of short movements of different time and measure. It is intended for solo voices, each voice having its own part. Sometimes one voice sings alone for a few bars; sometimes two or three out of the whole number. The music is rhythmical, and in that differs entirely from the madrigal, although imitation is frequently used in the conduct of the music.

OLIVERIA PRESCOTT.

(To be continued.)

—o—

TWO FRENCH TENORS.*

DUPREZ AND ROGER.

II.

(Concluded from page 55.)

What gave Duprez a sudden lift as he was laboriously fighting his way upwards was Rossini's Guillaume Tell. Hitherto he had appeared only as a tenorino, and never been cast for strong, heroic characters. Suddenly there was spread about Italy the fame of Rossini's Tell, which, brought out at Paris in 1820, was far from having been crowned with the success which people expected, and which it deserved. The impresario Lanari, however, had it translated into Italian so that he might give it at Lucca during the grand bathing-season. He entertained the extravagant idea of engaging Mad. Pisaroni, a contralto for the part of Arnold, a plan which, as a matter of course, would have been equivalent to a barbarous mutilation of the character in question as well as of the entire work. Mad. Pisaroni was very ugly and had experienced difficulty in getting her great talent properly appreciated in Paris. She made her first appearance in Semiramide, and when, after her opening phrase: "Eccomi al fine in Babilonia," (which she sang with her back to the audience) she turned round, a murmur of horror ran through the whole house. It was only as the opera progressed that her art triumphed over the first impression produced by her repellant features. Not meeting in Milan, however, the appreciation she expected, she cancelled her engagement with Lanari, and he, being placed in a serious dilemma, entrusted the part of Arnold to his tenorino, Duprez. The first act lay completely in the latter's range and style but he felt that the passionate accents in the great trio of the third act, and the heroic air of the fourth, were not to be given, without becoming ridiculous, with small vocal resources. "It required," writes Duprez, "the concentration of all my power of will—of all my physical and moral strength. Well, I said to myself, I may ruin my resources but I will attain my end. And it was thus that I found even my high C, afterwards such a success in Paris." The Florence Pergola was the first large theatre where Duprez played a grand dramatic part—the part already mentioned of Arnold in Tell—and from the moment he took to the grand style in large theatres, his voice increased in power and compass. Assuming an artist possesses vigorous health, singing in large, roomy theatres, Duprez maintains, is advantageous, because it demands and develops a broad, vigorous style. Duprez is unable to praise highly enough the colleague-like friendship and amiability of Caroline Ungher, with whom he sang for two years in Donizetti's popular Anna Bolena in all the towns of Italy, and who, in 1832, stood godmother to his daughter Caroline. Duprez's success in the above opera bound the singer and the composer together by the closest ties of friendship. It was expressly for Duprez that Donizetti wrote in Naples the part of Edgar in Lucia, asking and following Duprez's advice on many passages in the opera. Edgar's great dying scene, for instance, was originally intended to finish like any other operatic air; following Duprez's suggestion, Donizetti made the violoncellos again take up the principal theme, and Edgar's mournful accents die away in sob-like, broken tones. Of various droll incidents in the theatrical profession, we will here mention one, as depictive of what often occurs secretly on the stage, when the public in front are melting with emotion. Duprez sang a love duet and farewell in Donizetti's Parisina with Caroline Ungher. He had to beg for her handkerchief as a tender memento. Parisina gave it him; he pressed it impetuously to his lips—horror! The lady had spat in it. Some such exclamation as: "You filthy thing!" escaped his lips, and the two went on warbling rapturously in the most sentimental thirds.

After singing successfully in Italy for several years—his last appearance being in 1836, at Naples, with Mdme Malibran—he returned, full of confidence, to Paris, where, supported by Halévy and Rossini, he soon obtained a highly advantageous engagement at the Grand Opera. The distribution of parts, however, occasioned some difficulties in the drawing up of the engagement. Nourrit, the then favourite tenor, was in exclusive possession of the fine repertory he had "created." Two operas only in it, though but a few years old, were nearly forgotten: La Muette de Portici and Guillaume Tell. Duprez was willing to content himself at first with these two, merely stipulating that all great tenor parts in new operas should, for the future, be equally and fairly divided between Nourrit and himself. Hereupon, Nourrit announced his intention of leaving the theatre. He gave his farewell performances, and directly afterwards Duprez made his first appearance, as Arnold in Tell. He did so on the 17th April, 1837. Singers, musicians, and members of the chorus, all looked at him askant. His anxious wife, dissolved in tears, said, as he took leave of her: "Go, go to the slaughterhouse!" Duprez himself, who never knew fear in Italy, did not feel at all easy in his mind. He had no friends in the house, and, directly he stepped on the stage, he excited universal merriment by the enormously high heels he wore to add something to his stature. His anxiety in the earlier scenes did not permit him to know whether he had pleased or not. But, after the passage, "O Mathilde," sung with great fire, a storm of applause delivered him from all doubt. At Meyerbeer's wish, he studied Les Huguenots; the performance in which he sang Raoul, for the first time, was the sixtieth. "Do you think," enquired Meyerbeer mistrustfully, "that Les Huguenots can be run up to eighty nights?" "No doubt it can," replied Duprez. "It meets with general favour and draws a great deal of money." "For all that," returned Meyerbeer, "I will lay a wager it does not run so long." And he betted Duprez his composer's dues for the twenty nights. Of course, Duprez won the bet, and pocketed a tidy sum. He relates the anecdote as characteristic of Meyerbeer's great tact in stimulating the zeal of the artists employed in his operas, and of how little he spared his purse on such occasions.

At the beginning of 1838 came the report of Nourrit's tragic death. He had flung himself from his lodgings, on the third floor of a house, in Naples. Some marks of disapprobation among the public which caused him to entertain doubts of his art and future, drove him, excitable and ambitious as he was, to take the dreadful step. To explain this, people have mixed up Duprez's name in the matter, on the plea that Nourrit considered Duprez had supplanted him in the favour of the Parisians. Who shall say what passed at last through Nourrit's heart, when it was wrought up to a pitch of passionate excitement! But that Duprez's conduct towards Nourrit was thoroughly loyal and blameless is proved irrefutably by the honest gentleman's memoirs.

Verdi's Jérusalem (the French version of I Lombardi alla prima Crociata) was the last new work in which Duprez sang. After belonging to it for twelve years, he left the Grand Opera in 1840. He felt offended that Meyerbeer, about to bring out the Prophète, should seek for a "new" attraction, and select for the title-part a younger man, Roger. Yet Duprez confesses, intelligently enough, that he himself felt that the freshness of his voice, and the flexibility the latter had possessed for twenty years, were diminishing; that of the qualities of his youth his power alone was left, with a more limited, heavier, and less brilliant organ. He thought the moment had arrived when he could with honour leave the stage, and when he ought to do so. He determined thenceforth that he would devote himself to training young talent, and, above all, to his "irresistible love of composing." With regard to his operas, of which he speaks with passionate and sorrowful circumstantiality, the subject is a very unfortunate one, always leading up to the assertion that such and such an opera among them failed because it was badly performed, or that another, despite its merit, was not even accepted. He has been more fortunate with his pupils than with his compositions. It is true that his services were not in request at the Conservatory either under Cherubini's direction or Auber's. He seems to have found subordination difficult; he frequently went travelling about without leave, and felt deeply offended when one day the Minister sought to stop such irregularities by a general regulation. Duprez resigned his post, feeling "yet too young and too active to sacrifice his liberty." He established a singing-school of his own and gave operatic performances with his pupils in the country. His most eminent pupil is, in addition to his daughter Caroline, Mdme Miolan Carvalho, who made her first appearance in Paris in 1849, and is still singing there Marguerite, Julia, Ophelia, and other juvenile parts. Of course, Duprez himself sang in the country performances above mentioned, his favourite part being Edgar to his daughter's Lucia. Theatrical nostalgia is a truly sad disease of once popular vocalists, and is to be cured neither by time nor misfortune. As age was drawing on, Duprez spent some happy years at his country place in Valmondois, where the inhabitants actually selected him mayor. But he has not been spared the bitter truth of Goethe's words: "Lange leben heisst Viele überleben." He has seen his best friends, his beloved wife, and his gifted daughter Caroline, snatched away rapidly one after the other by death.

* From the Neue freie Presse.

Digitized by Google

Gilbert Duprez, who has attained his seventy-fourth year, now lives in the strictest retirement at Neuilly, near Paris. It was in this rural solitude, though surrounded by the pictures of a happy past, that he arranged and wrote his reminiscences. Forming, as they do, a chord of pleasing gratitude and modest self-respect, they are agreeable reading. "Small as my fortune now is, and simple as is my mode of life," he says when concluding his book, "I feel happy with my lot on earth, and thank heaven for allowing me to be born at a period when I was enabled to gain, in proportion to my capabilities, a name which the world bears in friendly remembrance."

—o—

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Now that Mr Manns has had some weeks in which to drill his orchestra and let them clearly understand the effects he desires, Glasgow is enjoying performances of the highest order, performances, indeed, which I firmly believe are equal to any of the kind in Europe. Mr Manns, delighted with his orchestra, says that he never met with a body of instrumentalists who played with more fire and enthusiasm. This he ascribes in great part to the fact that, with two exceptions, the members of the band are under middle age, and throw their whole energies into their work. Be that as it may, the result is most gratifying. I have already said that the executants have been carefully selected from the London orchestras. Since my last, we have had one or two charming concerts. At the fourth ("orchestral"), the first part was devoted to Beethoven's overture and incidental music for Egmont—never heard before in Glasgow. This, as your readers know, consists of the overture; Clara's two songs, four entr'actes, music to Clara's death, and to Egmont's sleep in prison, with finale, comprising andante, allegro, and allegro con brio. The vocal pieces were sung by Miss Isabella Stone, the reader being Mr Henry Forrester. Take it as a whole, the execution was highly commendable, the Entr'acte IV. and the music to Clara's death especially.

The second part opened with Weber's Concertstück—pianoforte, Mr Oscar Beringer. The rendering of this famous piece calls for no criticism; but I must premise that opinions in musical circles regarding Mr Beringer's share of the work were varied. Later on the same artist gave Chopin's Ballade in A flat, the concert ending with a spirited performance of Smetana's "Symphonic Poem," L'ltava—a singular production, in my opinion, overrunning legitimate bounds. The illustrated notes of the programme, signed "A. M.," says "this piece is the second of two symphonic poems by this composer, in which he has endeavoured, like a patriotic Bohemian, to depict his beloved fatherland in music." Then follows a description, written by the composer, of what the music intends to represent, which begins thus: "In the depth of the Bohemia forest two fountains arise; the one warm and eager, the other cool and quiet." These two fountains soon meet, and getting mixed up, have naturally a very lively time of it, which ends thus: "Rocks strive to hem it in, and prevent its further progress, but it bursts in cataracts through them, and in broad majestic currents sweeps past Prague and the ancient and noble fortress of the Vyschrad, and then disappears from the mind's eye of the poet." The fifth section, "the rapids," contains what I would call ridiculous music, and as the programme says, in the words of "A. M.": "The orchestral colouring reaches at this point a height of picturesqueness to which a parallel can scarcely be found in any of the works by the leading masters of this school—Wagner, Liszt, Berlioz—although they introduced such extraordinary tone-paintings as Der Walküren Ritt, Mazeppa, and Faust's Ride down the Abyss." Just so, Mr "A. M.," all the same, I cannot well share your enthusiasm for such outré music. In justice, it should be added that the performance of the work was masterly, and that its many difficulties were, under Mr Manns, given with marvellous ease and precision.

The third Choral Concert of the same series, conducted by Mr Manns, and under the management of the Glasgow Choral Union, was one of unusual interest and of unusual length; indeed, quite too long for the tastes of the Glasgow amateurs. The first part was entirely devoted to Spohr's Last Judgment, and the second to Beethoven's Choral Symphony, and, of course, not one single bar was omitted; so you can fancy that for one night we turned our backs on the St Andrew's Halls with, to say the least of it, precious little regret. But, one word as to the performance. The solo vocalists were Miss Robertson, Mr Harper Kearton, and Mr Frederic King, aided by members of the Choral Union. In the oratorio, the instrumental portions were, in most respects, exquisitely played; the chorus was respectable; but, I fear, the solo vocalists were not quite at ease in the discharge of their duties. As to the rendering of the Choral Symphony, these estimates may be pretty well considered as quite appropriate. The orchestra was again playing à merveille; the solo vocalists got through their music as best they could; while the tone of the lady choristers towards the close was by no means satisfactory—whatever it was, it was not music.

The fifth Saturday Popular Concert proved one of unusual interest, chiefly on account of the crowded hall, to hear Berlioz's Symphonie Fantastique, An Episode in the Life of an Artist. The rest of the programme was good, but every item was subservient to the blazing attraction of the evening—the production of one of poor Berlioz's most characteristic conceptions. Regarding the performance of the symphony, I intend, by another week, to give you a few lines as to the marvellous effect it produced on the audience; it was very great, so much so that many applications have been received by the directors for its reproduction, that it re-appears in this week's programmes. The rest of the selection demands no special mention, except to add that the enormous audience was evidently delighted with everything done. Miss Isabella Stone was the solo vocalist, and M. Victor Buziau solo violinist.

—o—

Pips from "Punch."

"On Saturday was produced Balfe's Moro, which will be given again To-Moro."

[Excruciating! But———No-Mor(e)-O! Dr Blidge.]

—o—

DID MENDELSSOHN WRITE SONGS?

(To Dr Blidge.)

Sir,—In a review of some recently published compositions of the late Prince Consort, I read:—

"The high development given to the German Lied, by Schubert, Schumann, Robert Franz, Liszt (!), and others," &c.

May I ask you of your courtesy to inform me whether Mendelssohn ever composed songs. Your obedient servant,

Yaxton Last.

[We have heard that he composed two or three Lieder; but none in a manner worth speaking of. Besides, it is not customary for the "advanced" to utter the name "Mendelssohn"—knowing, as they well know, that had he lived up to the present time their ravings would have met with scant sympathy.—Blidge.]

IMPROMPTU.

There was an Æsthete, Oscar Wild(e),
Who the Yankees would fain have beguil'd.
But, although they were civil,
They didn't like drivel,
Whereat the poor frothling was ril'd.

X.

Digitized by Google

ST JAMES'S HALL.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS,

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON, 1881-82.

DIRECTOR—MR S. ARTHUR CHAPPELL.

MADAME NORMAN-NÉRUDA'S LAST APPEARANCE

AT THE EVENING CONCERTS THIS SEASON, ON

MONDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 6, 1882,

At Eight o'clock precisely.

Programme.

PART I.—Quartet, in A minor, Op. 29, for two violins, viola, and violoncello (Schubert)—Mdme Norman-Néruda, MM. L. Ries, Straus, and Piatti; Song, "Deep and true" (Tours)—Mr Oswald; Larghetto and Allegretto, for violoncello, with pianoforte accompaniment (Mackenzie), first time—Signor Piatti; Chromatic Fantasia, for pianoforte alone (Bach)—Mdlle Marie Krebs.

PART II.—Prelude, Romance, and Scherzo, from Suite, Op. 27, for violin, with pianoforte accompaniment (Franz Ries), by desire—Mdme Norman-Néruda; Songs, "To Chloe" (Bennett) and "The fountain mingles with the river" (Gounod)—Mr Oswald; Sonata, in F major, Op. 24, for pianoforte and violin (Beethoven)—Mdlle Marie Krebs and Mdme Norman-Néruda.

Accompanist—Mr ZERBINI.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 4, 1882,

At Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

Quintet, in G minor, No. 6, for two violins, two violas, and violoncello (Mozart)—Mdme Norman-Néruda, MM. L. Ries, Straus, Zerbini, and Piatti; Song, "O ruddier than the cherry" (Handel), by desire—Mr Santley; "The Rivulet" and Prelude and Fugue, for pianoforte alone (Mendelssohn)—Miss Agnes Zimmermann; Larghetto (Nardini) and Scherzo, in D (Spohr), for violin, with pianoforte accompaniment—Mdme Norman-Néruda; Song, "Le nom de Marie" (Gounod)—Mr Santley; Quartet, in G minor, Op. 25, for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello (Brahms)—Miss Agnes Zimmermann, Mdme Norman-Néruda, MM. Straus and Piatti.

Accompanist—Mr ZERBINI.

Day.

Merely you; merely a moment's glance
At such a beautiful strange countenance,
A countenance quite perfect in my eyes:
And, like a man that sees the sun at last
Smile through the tedious spell of gloomy skies,
I felt the world was changing while you passed.

Night.

She's sleeping there, behind those shutter bars:
And just a few tired melancholy stars
Are waiting still—for what?—She's sleeping there;
She's breathing somewhere there. 'Tis well to know
She is no further, for she is so fair.
And I have got a long way home to go.

Polkau.

SIR MICHAEL COSTA.

The first intelligence of Sir Michael Costa's illness was alarming; but, happily, the illustrious conductor's robust constitution seems to have gained the mastery, and he is now fairly on the road to complete recovery—a fact which, to amateurs and musicians alike, will bring deep satisfaction. Such a man, just now, cannot be spared. May he live long, and labour, as he has always done, in the course of legitimate art!

—o—

JOSEPH JOACHIM.

The Magician of the Fiddle is on his way to England.

Nunc est bibendum!

MR W. T. BEST, the celebrated organist of the Liverpool Town Hall, lately gave an organ recital in the American Church, Via Nazionale, Rome. The British, German, and Belgian ministers, as well as all the musical notabilities in the "Eternal" city, were present.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

PIETRO ARETINO.—Rogers of the Wells, of course. Who else could understand your Letters to Henry VIII., or your Raggionamenti?—"Barbagriggia," as you are! Don't come to Malvern, or Morris of the Link will be down upon you.

DILETTANTE.—No, Grétry first broached the idea—not Wagner—nor Gluck either. Please don't write "Glück" again.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.'S, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). Advertisements not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1882.

Achilles and Patroclus.

(Cabalistic Amphigouri.)

Fyall.

PATROCLUS.—So you won't fight for the Greeks?

ACHILLES.—No. I've given up fighting, and remain in my tent.

PATROCLUS.—Without Briseis?

ACHILLES.—I have got a Demon.

PATROCLUS.—Perhaps you are right. Your fighting power is on the decline. Your spear don't hit home. Remember your last encounter with old C. M. W., who was laughing at you in Polacca. Every throw missed.

ACHILLES.—I was angry with L. van B.

PATROCLUS.—You fought with him at "moonlight," and shook timorously at his "sharp"-shots.

ACHILLES.—Well, I fight no more.

PATROCLUS.—Not even for Briseis Essipoff, who is of your kith and kin?

ACHILLES.—She is absorbed, and taken away. Consorts with Lionshill and Joan of Arc.

PATROCLUS.—Are you afraid of Hector?

ACHILLES.—No.

PATROCLUS.—Why then did you shy at Richard, the issue of Hector's loins?

ACHILLES.—I did not shy. The Niblungs are not my gospel. My gospel is Nero, and Maccabees, and Deluge, and Demon.

PATROCLUS.—Shall I fight in your place?

ACHILLES.—No——well, yes, if you like.

PATROCLUS.—Lend me your harness and accoutrements.

(Pages with harness and accoutrements. Achilles helps to put them on.)

ACHILLES.—Go forth, my brother! Kill Hector first and I will deal with Richard.

[Exit Patroclus, armed and accoutred.

Digitized by Google

ACHILLES.—I'm alone. Should he be slain, then am I chap-fallen! And yet he is of Richard!

(The body of Patroclus brought in stretched upon a bier.)

ACHILLES (incoherently).—Ha! Ha!—A horse, a horse! I will go forth myself. What ho! My harness, knaves!

(Harness brought in.)

ACHILLES.—My spear; my helm! Now to the contest. I defy the world. Aoi! my heel, my heel! [Exit raving.

Schluss Folgt.

—o—

OSCAR WILDE AND MUSIC IN NEW YORK.

(From our Correspondent.)

THE chief topic in the conversation of all sorts of people for the last ten days has been Oscar Wilde—his sayings, doings, and appearance. Notwithstanding that with one voice the best newspapers have pronounced him a by no means deep young man, whose audacity in posing as the chief patron, exponent, apostle, and model of a worthy movement upon which he has only brought endless ridicule, amounts to supreme impertinence, "Society" has run after him, and gazes at him open-mouthed as he stands in the most æsthetic room in the house, and utters "platitudes in stained-glass attitudes," which puzzle the men and equally puzzle, but wholly delight, the women. There is no doubt whatever about the success of Wilde's long hair, knee-breeches, lace-edged cuffs, and inane gabble about art, beauty, Helen of Troy, Goethe, Napoleon, Swinburne, Keats, Wordsworth, and only Wilde knows what besides. He got here two weeks ago, and already the edition of his poems reprinted last summer is exhausted, after having remained on the book-shop shelf for six months. The literary censors here have pronounced his poems bosh; but what does "society" care for the literary censors? If he stuffs his lines with asphodel, jacinth, pomegranates, mooney pearls, oozy gold, argent foreheads, sapphire, violet, vermilion, azure, manlihood, passionate lustihood, high-tuniced limbs, Arcady, amorous pleasaunce, kisses on the mouth, the unvintageable sea, swinked shepherds, and paints a lily in every second stanza; if the archaic nouns and improper sentiments jingle together nicely, "society" will be delighted and pronounce them precious lines. Already the women seem to consider him a sort of hero. He has so much to say about the "sweet sad sins" to which he has surrendered himself, and about the "joys that kill." He does not explain exactly what he means by all this, or by declaring that he will "———walk from fire unto fire,

From passionate pain to deadlier delight," but he would not have missed these joys for anything. He is desperately wicked, in an amorous way, and he thinks it is more than probable that he has lost his soul, which makes him still more interesting, and cannot matter much to one who can console himself with a lily. In a word, Wilde is the lion of the hour, and has twenty invitations to one that he can accept.

When he had been here a week he gave a lecture. Long before the day came every seat in the hall had been sold at four shillings a seat, and the few tickets in the hands of speculators commanded fabulously high prices—I am ashamed to say how high. His appearance on the stage was greeted by the crowded house with a mixture of laughter and applause which Wilde received calmly, confident in the power of his long hair, knee-breeches, and his incomprehensible parody of Ruskin's Fors Clavigera to make a favourable impression. He launched out boldly, and, to hear him talk, one might have thought there would be no sort of pre-Raphaelite movement had there been no Oscar Wilde. The superb complacency with which he told how "we" did this or that, meaning by "we" himself and Ruskin, Holman Hunt, Rossetti, Morris, Swinburne, and a dozen other gentlemen—who would have been, I am sure, anything but flattered at the liberties he took with their names—had its effect.

You have not, I believe, had the pleasure of hearing Wilde lecture in London, and you never will hear such a lecture as he gave us. Well, you are not to be pitied, for it can be called nothing but an extravaganza upon pre-Raphaelitism, presenting not one new idea. It was fair sort of decorative work, just as Wilde himself and his poems are bits of decorative work which pass muster with the devotees of fashionable culture. Since the lecture we have heard less of Wilde, "society" having satisfied its curiosity somewhat, and being ready for the next nine days' wonder. But the turn of the other cities is to come, and the reports are to the effect that the advance sale of seats for his lectures in Boston, Philadelphia, and other large towns is better than for any entertainment since Sarah Bernhardt was here. Some people have lost their tempers over this demonstration. The Times, in a savage article, calls him a "poor booby," and says that he would be better employed as a green-grocer's boy; but Mr Oscar Wilde can afford it. His first lecture paid him £200, and as much more to his manager, Mr D'Oyly Carte, who first shows people Bunthorne and then Wilde. His profits from Patience now amount to fully £600 a week.

Mr Mapleson and his company are in Philadelphia just now. The two weeks season in Boston was only moderately successful, Boston having a mind of its own about opera, and but little ready money. The Bostonians asked for Fidelio, Tannhäuser, and Die Meistersinger, while Mapleson offered them Lucia, Il Barbière, Martha, and other trifles of the sort. Lohengrin, Carmen, and The Huguenots drew good houses, but out of fourteen Boston performances I am informed that only five really paid expenses. In Philadelphia matters have gone a little better. In Cincinnati the report is that Patti is to sing once or twice with Mapleson's company during the week of opera which the Cincinnati people buy every year from Mapleson, paying £4,000 for seven performances. Patti, herself, denies that she is going to sing with Mapleson's company, coupling the denial with the remark that she would not sing with his company "for a million dollars." She ascribes her misfortunes in this country wholly to Mapleson's enmity. Since my last letter to you Mdme Patti has been going around the country, her grievances being many, but her success in the way of getting dollars going far to console her. She was indignant at the treatment she received when she sang in The Messiah at Cincinnati during Christmas week, and says that the Chicago orchestra persisted in playing sharp whenever Signor Nicolini sang! When she sang in The Messiah Theodore Thomas took the time too fast for her, that Miss Cary filled the chair she ought to have had, and that her bouquet was not so big as Miss Cary's, while no one offered her a glass of wine in the dressing-room, and no one introduced her to the audience, &c., &c. Altogether she had an unpleasant time of it so far. I believe that in only one city her concerts have failed to pay expenses. As a rule she has made about £100 a night clear profit, and Abbey, her manager, as much more.

Strakosch, who is not doing well in New Orleans with Gerster, talks of giving the money back to his subscribers, and trying new fields. The New Orleans people say they want either Wagner or Offenbach—nothing between the two. Gerster has given them Lucia, La Sonnambula, and I Puritani until they can stand it no longer, and disaster threatens the enterprise. A deputation of New Orleans citizens waited on Gerster last week, and begged her to give them a few opera-bouffe performances, with herself as la belle Helène or Serpolette. She replied that she would consider the matter.

New York, January, 18th, 1882. HAVEY.

MAD. NORMAN-NÉRUDA.—This consummate artist makes her last appearance for the season at an evening "Popular" concert on Monday night. Let every amateur, who may have time at disposal (he should make it), go and hear her in Schubert's A minor quartet—a dream in itself, and interpreted by the enchanting Moravian like one who dreams that he is dreaming. We cannot imagine more complete poetical abstraction. Schubert would have gazed at her with wondering eyes, and listened to her with wondering ears—just as Pygmalion contemplated his own creation of an ideal womanly perfection, the offspring of his fancy, the art-work of his hands—yet never quite within his intellectual reach. Who would not be Pygmalion for sake of such a Galatea! Poor Schubert would, thenceforth, have never composed anything but A minor quartets.

Digitized by Google

To Polkaw.

SIR,—Lend me your ear (I wish it were mine). A poet has written :—

"The Fairy's flame was slight, slight as some cloud
That catches but the palest tinge of day
When evening yields to night."——

Name him, and believe in the unrequited sympathy of yours,

PAUL MOIST.

P.S.—Herewith, lest you should have forgotten me, is my carte de visite :—

CONCERTS.

A concert was given on Saturday afternoon, Jan. 28, in the Steinway Hall, in aid of the funds of the Alexandra Hospital. The mere statement that the arrangements were under the direction of Mdme Sainton-Dolby is sufficient to carry conviction that the entertainment was worthy of the noble charity it intended to benefit. The musical and benevolent public—and the two qualities are not seldom united and exemplified in the same persons—certainly felt reliance could be placed upon the lady-artist entrusted with the programme, and testified confidence by attending in numbers sufficient to fill the hall. The opening chorus, canon in three parts for female voices, "Fior di Aprile," Cherubini, sung by a choir of charming youthful soprani and contralti, afforded a foretaste of the many good things to follow. The popular Meditation, "Ave Maria," by J. S. Bach-Gounod, was pleasantly rendered. The dainty voice and simple style of Miss Hilda Coward—daughter of the late respected organist of the Crystal Palace—gave a rare charm to the vocal part, whilst Miss Pedley, in the violin obbligato, showed both purity of tone and grace of expression. The young lady has evidently profited by the tuition of her master, M. Sainton, and further experience will doubtless bring full mastery over the difficult instrument of her adoption. But the young artist appears to have taken up the violin as a second study, for later in the afternoon she showed excellent capacity as a vocalist in the ballad "Toujours fidèle" by Mdme Sainton-Dolby. To a voice of wide range, sufficient power, and sweet tone, she adds artistic training and mental qualities, that cannot fail to secure the sympathies of hearers. Miss Woodhatch again displayed a pretty voice and attractive style; and Miss Adela Vernon revelled amongst the much coveted high soprano notes. Mr Abercrombie's songs were excellent in character and execution, Handel's air "Where'er you walk" showed his command over the vocal technicalities distinguishing the school of the greatest master of oratorio, and Blumenthal's ballad, "Thinking of thee," his ready response to the calls of sentimentality. Mr Arthur Oswald also imparted interest to the concert by his bright talents. Mr John Payne played a solo by Ernst; Mr Leipold presided at the pianoforte, and the skill and geniality of Mr Sainton were, as ever, conspicuous.—PENCERDD GWFFYN.

THE first of two evening concerts was given by Mr E. H. Thorne, in the concert-room of the Royal Academy, on Monday evening, the object being to introduce sundry new works of pretension to importance. These were three in number, headed by a Trio in C minor, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, written by Mr Thorne himself. Even after a single hearing, and with many points imperfectly understood, this trio imposes upon us the agreeable duty of congratulating its author. How humiliating it is that in our country one is dependent upon chance for a knowledge of talent that anywhere else would, as a matter of course, be familiar! Mr Thorne has fairly succeeded in one of the most difficult tasks to which a composer could address himself, yet, had he not run the risks of concert-giving on his own account, we should have known nothing of it. Surely this state of things calls loudly for amendment in some form or other, and may profitably engage the attention of those who are now lifting up their voices for native talent. The first movement of the trio is well constructed upon the orthodox model, and worked out with a clearness and facility suggestive of large experience or uncommon aptitude. Its themes are in capital contrast, and the harmonic characteristics of their treatment, while never pedantic, do not offend by over much daring or by eccentricity. The andante seems to us less striking—it is always the slow movement in these works that most tries the composer's mettle—but the scherzo is an admirable realization of a musical "joke." Save in the trio, which, as usual, touches a more serious chord, the movement is instinct with humour, sometimes expanding into broad fun. It cannot be heard without pleasure. As for the finale, Mr Thorne might have done better had he avoided a repetition of the sombre passionateness of the opening movement. The old masters, we may depend upon it, were wise when, as a rule, they finished up with a movement of comparatively slight texture. However, the trio is an excellent example of what English musicians can do, and of what they have the heart to achieve even in the cold shade to which circumstances condemn them. The work was performed by Mr Thorne, Mr Henry Holmes, and a violoncellist acting for Signor Pezze, and very well received. Later in the evening a young Englishman, hitherto unknown amongst us, introduced, with the help of Mr Henry Holmes, a sonata in D major for pianoforte and violin. Mr Algernon Ashton was once, we believe, a chorister at Durham Cathedral, but early removed with his family to Leipsic, receiving his musical education at the famous Conservatorium in which Mendelssohn took such pride. He has now come back to his native land almost as a stranger, but with credentials which should secure for him a gracious reception. The sonata played on Monday night is a favourable specimen of his powers in one of the highest branches of art. We cannot, of course, pronounce it faultless, but its shortcomings are those incidental to the undisciplined fancy, exuberant expression, and frequent rashness of youth. Wise men expect all this when the composer is barely out of his "teens"; and, putting it aside, look beneath for indications of more solid and abiding qualities. In the present instance there is no need to look far or long. The first movement of the sonata—an allegro of high merit and distinction from beginning to end—shows that Mr Ashton has something to say worth hearing, and that he has so profited by his training as to be able to say it well. Moreover, the allegro contains features of decided novelty, in which respect the andante claims to be bracketed with it. Here, indeed, we have evidence of that valuable form of distinctiveness which keeps within the bounds of classic art. The finale is, perhaps, the least important of the three movements, but it detracts nothing from the value of the work, as proof that in Mr Ashton we have a young fellow-countryman well worthy of the encouragement which, to artists just beginning their career, is as the breath of life. Mr Ashton played the pianoforte part of his sonata with facility and expression, ably supported by Mr Holmes, and obtained for it gratifying signs of sympathy and approval. The vocal music in the programme was sung by Signor Luigi Conti and his pupil, Signorina Scalzi, who charmed the audience by her rendering of a Venetian canzonet, "Non giova il sospirar."—D. T.

Digitized by Google

KENSINGTON POPULAR CONCERTS.—The sixth of these concerts was given on Tuesday evening last, and attracted an audience that filled the new Town Hall as abundantly as could be desired. The selection was similar to those which have gone before, Mr Plater's Glee Union—which is always acceptable—being in frequent requisition, relieved by homely and sentimental ballads, which never fail to secure the popular vote. The better facts of the programme were, of course, few and far between. These consisted simply of the Kreutzer Sonata, of Beethoven, which Mr Ridley Prentice, in order not to unduly weary the inexperienced tastes of the cheaper members of his audience, divided into two parts, one of Schumann's minor pianoforte pieces, and a violin "Ballade," composed by the late Alfred Holmes, the tender dreaminess of which was rendered with so much effect by his brother Henry, as to touch both gentle and simple alike and provoke an encore on all sides. The sonata was played by Mr Ridley Prentice and Mr Henry Holmes, and the former gentleman—to whom the Kensingtonians are so much indebted for these agreeable and inexpensive réunions—interested all the connoisseurs who happened to be present, both by his facility as an executant and his intellectuality as an artist. The principal singer was Miss Anna Williams, who sang a pair of songs, respectively entitled "When the heart is young" and "Golden Love," by composers named Dudley Buck and Milton Wellings, her chief success, so far as the popular verdict was concerned, being Roeckel's pleasant setting of the apophthegm, "A bird in hand," the domestic humour of which was no less grimly understood by one portion of the listeners than enjoyed to merriment by the other. The other incidental vocalisms were contributed by Mrs Tuer, who sang with charming effect songs by Cowen and Mdme Sainton-Dolby; Mr Horscroft, encored in the semi-pathetic sea ditty, "The Powder-Monkey;" and Mr Coates, whose finished style was made amply manifest in the well-known serenade from Don Pasquale. Mr J. A. Fuller Maitland was the chief accompanist of the vocal music. The next concert is announced to take place on the 14th inst.—H.

PROFESSOR MICHAEL BERGSON gave his first soirée musicale this season on Saturday, Jan. 21st, when he introduced one of his earliest compositions—a trio in D major for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (Op. 5). Mr N. Mori played the violin and Herr Carl Ryal the violoncello part (on the alto), the composer being at the pianoforte. The impression of this work, full of youthful ideas, was very favourable. Besides the trio Professor Bergson played some of his new pianoforte pieces. A "Brindisi" from his opera Salvator Rosa; the "Serenade Moresque" from the same opera (arranged for the pianoforte by Yungman); and several other pieces, including his "Danse des paysans polonais," his "Souvenir," and his effective descriptive piece, "Un Orage dans les lagunes" (encored). Miss Jessica O'Brien (a pupil of the late famous tenor, Roger) sang Professor Bergson's new song, "Midnight Chimes," his sacred song, "Ah, Morn, I beseech thee" (words by Gabriel, of the twelfth century), and his "Better World" (words by Mrs M. A. Baines)—the violin obbligato part of the "Better World" being capitally played by Mr N. Mori. These songs, each so different in character, were much admired. Miss Jessica O'Brien possesses a very fine contralto voice, and there is no doubt, after being heard in public, she will attain a high position in the musical world. Miss Lavinia O'Brien, her sister, (pupil of Stephen Heller,) played Chopin's nocturne in D flat, and an arrangement by Stephen Heller of the Saltarello from Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony, with a warmth and brio which took the audience by storm. Mdme Napoleone Vearino (Pianist to H. M. the Queen of the Belgians) gave, with Mr N. Mori and Herr Ryal, Fesca's trio in E flat (Op. 45), and won golden opinions. Professor Bergson terminated the soirée by playing a "Minuet favourit de Louis XIV." and a brilliant caprice, both of his own composition.—J. F.

PROVINCIAL.

EDINBURGH.—The Music Class-Room was uncomfortably crowded on Thursday afternoon, Jan. 26, at Sir Herbert Oakeley's "recital," though the audience were apparently too delighted with the performance to complain. It being the anniversary of Mozart's birth a feature in the programme was the "Kyrie," "Gloria," &c., from his 12th Mass. Among the other appreciated compositions was Sir Herbert Oakeley's exquisite setting of Tennyson's "Break, break," allotted to a student, the possessor of a really fine baritone voice. The same gentleman gave Tito Mattei's "Non è ver." Spohr's Larghetto, from his fourth symphony, and a Postlude by Rinck, well played by a student, and a selection from Mozart's Idomeneo completed an interesting programme.

BLACKHEATH.—Mendelssohn's Antigone was given on Monday last under the direction of Mr Charles E. Tinney. The choruses were effectively rendered by 100 male voices, the solo part being entrusted to Mr E. Wharton. The quartet, "O Eros," was admirably given by Messrs A. James, A. Thompson, R. De Lacy, and A. Hubbard. An abridged version of the drama was recited by Mr Charles Fry, who was warmly applauded after several of the scenes. Mdme Worrell, Miss Constance Herring, Messrs H. Lindsey and Arthur Oswald, as well as the before named artists, assisted in the second part of the concert, in which a new and effective part-song for male voices, "The night chimes," by Mr C. A. Tinney, was a special feature.

SANDRINGHAM.—By request of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales Mr H. Kingston Rudd, of Norwich, attended Sandringham House, on Friday, Jan. 20th, for the purpose of giving a pianoforte recital. H.R.H. the Princess of Wales was also present, with about twenty-five guests, including Prince Leiningen, the Very Rev. the Dean of Westminster, &c. A list of pieces was submitted to their Royal Highnesses who selected the following for performance:—Two Gavottes, in G minor and G major (J. S. Bach); Grande Valse Brillante, in E flat major, Op. 18 (Chopin); Andante, from the Concerto, Op. 89 (Sir Julius Benedict); "Le Réveil des Fées," Op. 41 (Emile Prudent). At the conclusion of the performance H.R.H. the Princess of Wales congratulated Mr Rudd in the most gratifying terms upon his playing, and especially remarked upon his masterly rendering of Prudent's "Le Réveil des Fées." The Princess also expressed a hope that Mr Rudd might be heard in London. As Mr Rudd was about to withdraw. the Prince asked him if he could play from memory Beethoven's "Funeral March" (from the Grand Sonata in A flat major, Op. 26). Mr Rudd immediately complied with the wish of his Royal Highness. By the special invitation of the Prince Mr Rudd was present at an amateur theatrical performance which subsequently took place.—Norwich Paper.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—"It is an excellent sign of the improved popular taste," writes the Newcastle Daily Journal, "when we find concerts of purely instrumental music such as those given by the 'Chamber Music Society,' attended by large and appreciative audiences." The programme of the concert given on Thursday evening, Jan. 19, consisted of Mendelssohn's Sonata in D for pianoforte and violoncello, Beethoven's Sonata in A, Op. 101 for pianoforte alone, Niels W. Gade's Fantaisiestücke, for clarinet and pianoforte, Beethoven's trio for pianoforte, clarinet and violoncello, and solos by Liszt and Schumann. The executants were Mr Walter Bache (pianoforte), Signor Pezze (violoncello) and Mr Lazarus (clarinet). The vocalist was Miss Burnett, who gave Sullivan's "Orpheus with his lute," and Stradella's "Pieta Signore." About the performers the Daily Journal writes approvingly, and especially praises Mr Lazarus, "who comes to us with a reputation gained in the highest musical circles; indeed, it is doubtful whether his equal is to be found in this or any other country. The beauty of his tone and his finished execution can certainly not be surpassed." Mr Marshall Bell, who as usual, acted as conductor, together with the committee of the Chamber Music Society, deserve the warmest encouragement in their enterprise; they are certainly doing good work for the cause of musical art progress.

STRATFORD.—At the third serial subscription concert of the Stratford (Essex) Society, held in the Town Hall on Thursday evening, Jan, 26, Mr Wilhelm Ganz, who was cordially received, played with Mr Viotti Collins, Benedict and De Beriot's grand duet on airs from La Sonnambula. A young lady from the Southern States of America, Miss Lella Blandy, must be congratulated on a very successful début as vocalist, and if she pursue her musical studies, is thought likely to be an acquisition to the concert-room. Miss Blandy made less impression in the romance from Guillaume Tell, "Sombres Fôrets," where she forced her higher notes, than in Mr F. Clay's song, "She wandered down the mountain side," for which a deserved encore was demanded, but "Auld Robin Gray" substituted. Miss Blandy also led the quartet from Marta, "Mezza Notte." Miss A. Williams, Miss H. D'Alton, Messrs Albert M'Guckin and Bernard Lane sang in the course of the evening.—(Communicated.)

CHOIR BENEVOLENT FUND.—The annual general meeting of the Choir Benevolent Fund was held on Tuesday last at the Chapel House, St Paul's Cathedral, when a large number of members attended. A very satisfactory report and balance sheet were passed, and the usual election of officers took place. We are glad to learn that the names of Sir George Elvey, Dr Stainer, Dr Bridge, Mr W. A. Barrett, and other gentlemen of influence are now on the committee; also that the Dean of Westminster has accepted the trusteeship vacant by the death of the late Dean.

The Auber "Centenary" in Paris has passed off well; but much more might, and ought to have been done. We shall have more to say about it in our next.

Digitized by Google

JOACHIM IN ST. PETERSBURGH.*

This year's concert-season has up to now, as though by special arrangement beforehand, served to bring together the first violinists of the age, who have come to put, as it were, the enthusiasm of the music-loving public to a hard test, and compete with each other for the palm. First there was Sarasate, then Sauret, and then Sarasate again. Now there is Joachim. He did well to come, if only for a short time, seeing there was a large number of the public who had forgotten the magic of his playing, and for whom the light of his star seemed to be setting—but only seemed! Joachim, however, really does not require to compete any more for the prize because he carried it off long ago, and the appearance of any number of youthful artists could not injure him, because he occupies a perfectly exceptional and firmly-rooted position in the musical history of modern times, and no rival can diminish the esteem in which he is held, so worthily has it been won and so firmly is it based—not on mere show and deception, but always on the noblest and purest artistic truth. Joachim is simply a star of the first order in the heaven of art whom the rise even of other equal stars could not obscure; he is among his colleagues what Jupiter is among the planets, because his light fascinates us most by its pureness, clearness, and durability. Modest as he is, he will perhaps deprecate this comparison, but impartial judges will decide in what sense it is to be interpreted, so as to be indisputably true. Durability! Yes, truly. Every one who has not seen Joachim for a long time is above all things astounded that the Master does not appear the least changed, but is exactly what he used be, as regards bearing and play, though he has passed his fiftieth year. He does not look, however, as if this were so; and we may found upon the fact a hope that the Star may long continue to shed his steady light. Vigorous, sturdy health is innate in his constitution, and is what constitutes the determining principle of his playing; there is nothing unhealthy, flickering, or dazzling; nothing which could lead him from the path of pure art. This is admitted even by his opponents, who do not dispute the purity and clearness of his tone, the repose of his bowing, and his perfect technical skill; but they fancy they detract from these qualities by adding:—"All this is so German and solid; so classical; and so incapable of carrying the hearer away." The solidity would not be correct were not the sense in every case most accurately rendered—that is, what is sweet, sweetly; what is overpowering, overpoweringly; and what is wild, wildly. But it is precisely in this nice discrimination of the feelings and their direct congruent rendering in his play—that is, in passionate expression at the proper time, in being completely penetrated by the inward value of each composition, and in merging himself in it, that Joachim is greatest. This is probably why he so dislikes playing shallow compositions; for he would necessarily consider it an artistic antithesis to give them with deep feeling. But if this principle in art be once conceded as classical—that is, as invariably determinant, no one can deny that Joachim is its truest exponent; moreover, who, provided he does not bind up his ears, can deny that, in addition to grandeur of tone and depth of conception, Joachim exhibits the most fervent and melting tenderness, pleasant humour, and overpowering fire, quite apart from mechanical execution, in which he knows no difficulties? It was, therefore, a good notion of him to begin with Beethoven's violin-concerto, accompanied by the orchestra under his old pupil, Auer, who conducted with evident care and devotion to his task. We heard this composition last year performed by another master of the violin, who executed the whole with perfect correctness, including the difficult cadence, into which he infused, and yet seemed to miss the deeper meaning of the grand work. But the Concerto is one of the few of its kind which is not something for the violin alone, when the orchestra provides the soloist with various welcome opportunities for resting; rather is it a genuine symphonic work, in which the orchestra plays a great part, and in which the soloist has often carefully to keep within the artistic limits of the whole; in the first movement especially there appears one of those powerfully pulsating ideas of fate which run through Beethoven's greatest works, and only the grandest conception can do it justice. . . . The second piece selected by Herr Joachim was Schumann's "Fantasia for Violin and Orchestra," an exciting and effective composition of a romantic colour; and the third the adagio from Spohr's Seventh Violin Concerto, a movement of marvellous transparency and clearness, the rendering, also, being marvellously transparent and clear. For a genuine lover of art it is always a real joy to hear once more anything by Spohr, whom the present generation, it appears, very unjustly desires to forget, yet without success, for his compositions are so neatly finished as regards the workmanship, and breathe such a spirit of fancy and romance, that they will exist long after many of our modern celebrities have grown antiquated. Joseph Joachim is specially qualified to render becomingly Spohr's compositions—and otherwise, indeed, than worthily they ought not, and cannot be rendered—because his master, David, was probably Spohr's last pupil, and because there is no one, now living at least, who comes so near Spohr's broad, powerful, and expressive style of execution as Joachim. To wind up, the concert-giver played an expressive romance of his own, a Capriccio of Paganini's, well calculated to exhibit vividly his bold and daring style of execution, and the well-known "Hungarian Dances" (Brahms-Joachim, Books 3 and 4). How the familiar melodies and rhythms are transformed under the master-hand into an exceptionally well thought-out and peculiarly articulated system of rhythmics which it is not every one who can imitate. . . . . In conclusion, we must express a wish that Joseph Joachim, whom unfortunately we shall have the satisfaction of hearing only once again—at the Quartet Evening—will make these visits of his to St. Petersburgh, even though they must be as short as the present one, a regular thing every year, for the tremendous applause, lasting several minutes, which greeted him on his first appearance, and continued at intervals with undiminished strength to the end, must have convinced him that he has here a large public in whose sympathies he reigns with strong and certain sway.

DR ALEXANDER PETRICK.

* From the Petersburger Herold.

CHORAL CLASSES FOR THE POOR.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—Will you kindly allow me, as one of the Executive Committee of the Kyrle Society, to bring to the notice of such of your readers as are interested in the varied work and aims of this society the following proposals for the foundation and working of choral classes among the poorer citizens throughout the metropolis? These classes are to be known as the Kyrle Society Choral Classes, and will be open, after inquiry as to respectability, and with certain restrictions as to age, and on the payment of a purely nominal fee, to all comers, men and women. There will be three classes in every district, viz.:—Elementary, Remove, and Advanced, the members of the last-named class becoming eligible after fit preparation for election to the public performing Kyrle Choir, the entrance to which as members being free of any charge. The district division of the City with regard to the different places of practice will be made on the Parliamentary borough principle. A circular letter has already been addressed to clergymen and others, asking for aid and sympathy in the work in the way of placing school-rooms and halls free of charge at the disposal of the committee, and I am glad to say that the numerous responses from at least eight of the districts addressed have been as generous and cordial as possible. As the entire control, direction, appointment of teachers, &c., and the consequent expense will devolve on the Kyrle Society, it is hoped that those interested in the dissemination of the knowledge of good music among the poor will not be backward in aiding by subscription or otherwise, this very worthy work. Subscriptions may be sent to the Honorary Treasurer of the Kyrle Society, Miss Octavia Hill, at 14, Nottingham Place, W. I may add, in conclusion, that if conductors of any existant choirs, wishing to co-operate or affiliate their own classes with this undertaking, will address the Honorary Secretary, 14, Nottingham Place, W., every information as to the ways and means thereto will be readily afforded them.—I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

MALCOLM LAWSON.

Arts Club, Hanover Square, Oct. 29.

THE GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.—The "Lady Jenkinson Prize," competed for by eighteen students of the Guildhall School of Music, has been awarded to Miss Mary Ann Gritton; Mr W. J. Barton was specially, Misses Meadows and Hailstone highly commended. Misses Nettlefield, Watson, and Frame were each commended for the ability displayed by them in the execution of the test-work—Mozart's Pianoforte Concerto in D minor.

Digitized by Google

TO "GUY OF THE GLACIERS."

SIR,—Quite true about Algernon's line in particular, and Algernon's Sonnet as a whole. But how about Percy Byssshe?—who sings:—

"As some lone man who in a desert hears
The music of his home."——

I fear we are shelving our Byssshe, as, amid the prevalent Babel of tongues, we are shelving our Wolfgang, Ludwig and Felix. Woe to us, should that be so. Perish the thought!—Your admirer, Greker Reeres.

BERLIOZ, HIS WIFE AND HIS SON.

M. Arthur Pougin while analysing in La Musique populaire (number for 22nd December, 1881), the work just published by M. Adolphe Jullien under the title: Hector Berlioz; la Vie et le Combat, animadverts on two allegations made by the author with regard to Berlioz's wife and son: the intemperate habits of the former and the misconduct of the second. M. Arthur Pougin expresses himself in these terms:—

"I do not know where M. Jullien discovered that Miss Smithson 'drank,' as he says; as far as I am concerned, it is the first time I have heard of it, and it strikes me that an accusation of this kind should not be lightly directed against a woman who, after all, proved she possessed a certain nobleness of sentiment and passion. It also strikes me that the writer employs an infelicitous expression when he speaks of her 'good taste' in dying and freeing her husband, with whom she certainly had no reason to be over-satisfied. As for Louis Berlioz, it likewise strikes me that M. Jullien despatches him in rather an offhand manner when, speaking of Berlioz's love for him, he declares without circumlocution that the son was a 'worthless fellow who did scarcely anything but cause his father annoyance.' Now I know the son and father sometimes disagreed, but I also know, and so does M. Jullien, that in the Correspondance inédite as well as in the Lettres intimes, we find flowing from Berlioz's pen high praise of his son whose death caused him the greatest and most profound grief he ever experienced in his life. The two allegations struck me as being of sufficient gravity to justify the observations I have made on them."

In a letter published in La Musique populaire for the 5th January, M. Jullien replies in the following terms to the two points in M. Arthur Pougin's criticism:—

". . . You reproach me for not citing my authorities when I said that Miss Smithson was intemperate, and her son, Louis Berlioz, but a sorry wight. To speak frankly, I did not think this double revelation calculated to move the public so deeply; but, since you ask me in a friendly spirit for my reasons, I will give them. Politeness ought always to command an answer. It was from M. Louis Brandus, Berlioz's publisher and friend, that I heard of Miss Smithson's weakness, and I did so when inquiring whether there had been any act of infidelity on her part to justify Berlioz's marked dislike of his home. After all, it was better to state the fact openly than to encourage vague suspicion. * * * * With regard to Louis Berlioz, I must inform you that my family is connected, on the maternal side, with the Amusat family, the members of which always took a great interest in Berlioz.* It was in their house that, when a very young man, I met Berlioz; it was there that I frequently heard mention made of the grave wrongs committed by Louis Berlioz against his father and the anguish he caused him; wrongs and anguish which Berlioz forgave with inexhaustible indulgence, but which were always repeated. It is true that Berlioz does not say much about them in his letters, but was it not natural that he should seek to deceive himself as to the facts, since he always forgave?"

[Mr Adolphe Jullien was evidently non compos when he penned this rubbish.—Dr Blinge.]

HAMBURGH.—The Senate have unanimously voted an annual grant of 30,000 marks to the Stadttheater for three years, and 75,000 marks have been privately subscribed to cover deficit.

* Amusat, the famous surgeon, whose course of lectures Berlioz attended on first going to Paris, and who died in 1836, always continued one of the composer's best friends and greatest admirers.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERTS.

Mr John Boosey gave his eighth concert of the present (the sixteenth) season at St James's Hall. The singers were Mdmes Lemmens-Sherrington and Antoinette Sterling, Misses Mary Davies and Damian, Messrs Edward Lloyd, Oswald, Maybrick, and Santley. The new songs were Blumenthal's "Sunshine and Rain" (Mdme Sterling), Goring Thomas's "Serenade" (Mr Edward Lloyd), Miss Macirone's "Come to me, O ye children" (Miss Mary Davies), Behrend's "Old Barge" (Miss Damian), Marzials' "My love is come" (Mr Oswald), and "The Abbey," by Henry Smart (Mdme Sterling). The usual success attended each, and the singers were unanimously called upon to sing them again. Among the well-known songs that had to be repeated were Stephen Adams' "Little Hero" (Mr Maybrick), Taubert's "Woodland Song" (Mdme Sherrington—who substituted "The Kerry Dance")—F. Clay's "Gipsy John" (Mr Santley, who, in reply, gave the "Boatswain's Song,") Blumenthal's "Far Away, where angels dwell," (Mr Edward Lloyd), Molloy's "Little Match Girl," (Miss Mary Davies), and the old Irish song, "Father O'Flynn," (Mr Santley). The South London Choral Society, under the direction of Mr L. C. Venables sang Hatton's "Ripe Strawberries," Pinsuti's "In this hour of softened splendour," Eaton Faning's "Song of the Vikings," Coward's "Take thy banner," Edwardes' "In going to my lonely bed," and Pierson's "Ye mariners of England," obtaining genuine applause after each. Mr Sidney Naylor, facile princeps of accompanists, was at his post, and the concert altogether was heartily enjoyed by an audience that quite filled the room. The ninth concert is announced for Wednesday next, February 8.

AFTER completing her tour in Italy during the present month and March, Sarah Bernhardt proceeds from Naples to Barcelona. She will probably make her first appearance in Madrid on the 9th April.

VIENNA.—The method invented by Gautsch and Professor von Sommeruga for rendering textile fabrics, from the coarsest canvas to the finest gauze, uninflammable, has been proved by experiment so effective that the authorities have ordered it to be adopted in all Austrian theatres.

BERLIN.—Auber's charming work, La Part du Diable, here entitled Carlo Broschi, has been revived, after a long absence from the boards, at the Royal Operahouse.—Johann Strauss's buffo opera, Der lustige Krieg, has achieved a success at the Friedrich-Wilhelmstädtisches Theater. The composer himself conducted the first performance.—The attraction at the second concert of the Singakademie was Alarich, "a poem" (Dichtung) "in three parts," by Arthur Fitger, with music for vocal soloists, chorus, and orchestra, by Georg Vierling. The following, briefly stated, is the plot: the Goths have marched to Rome; Alarich, struck by the majesty of the grand city, determines to spare it, despite the evil promptings of the Demon, who would fain see it destroyed. The rise of the Germans is contrasted with the decadence of the Empire; Clytia's nascent love for Alarich is introduced episodically. The score shows the hand of an accomplished musician, but wants, we are told, dramatic sharpness. Mdlle Breidenstein was Clytia; Mdlle Finkelstein, the Sibyl; and Herr Betz, Alarich. The work was well received.—The Meiningen Ducal Orchestra, under the conductorship of Herr Hans von Bülow, gave their third "Cycle," three Beethoven concerts, on the 16th, 17th, and 18th inst., in the Central Skating Rink, which was filled at each concert by an audience of some 2,000 persons. The programme of the first concert comprised: Ouverture zur Namensfeier; Symphony in C major; Overture to Fidelio, and the Pastoral Symphony. That of the second: Overture to König Stephan; Pianoforte Concerto in E flat major; Rondino in E flat major (from the year 1797), for wind instruments; Overture to Prometheus; and Eighth Symphony in F major. The programme of the third concert was selected by the public themselves in this wise: Everyone on purchasing his ticket beforehand, at the pay-place, had a paper presented him on which he indicated the two overtures and two symphonies he preferred. Several hundred papers were filled in. Of the overtures, that to Die Ruinen von Athen obtained the fewest votes, 4, 179 being given to the third Leonore overture, while that to Egmont commanded 190. Of the symphonies, that in D major, with 13 votes, was at the bottom of the poll, which was headed by the Symphony in A major and the Symphony in C minor, with 145 and 147 votes, respectively. Herr von Bülow has announced his intention of soon returning with his orchestra and paying this capital another visit, when he will include in his programme the Ninth Symphony, which the want of a chorus has prevented him from giving on the present occasion.

Digitized by Google

MUSIC AT BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.

(From our own Correspondent.)

I have such a long list of theatrical representations, concerts, &c., since last I wrote to you, that I hardly know how to begin. I think I will, though at the wrong end, and record the success of the first concert of the season given by the Philharmonic Society, on Monday last, at the Etablissement des Bains, "avec le concours de Mdme Carlotta Patti," M. Dethurens (barytone), M. de Munck (violoncellist), and that of the members of the Society. I need hardly say that Mdme Patti interpreted three songs, an air from Rigoletto, "Les Echos Suisse" (Eckert), and a chanson espagnole, "Calezera" (Yradier), with her usual charming voice and graceful style, and met with deserved applause. M. Dethurens gave an air from Le Pardon de Ploërmel, the "Romance de l'Etoile" (Tannhäuser), and Gounod's "Le Soir," while M. de Munck delighted all by selections from the works of Dunkler, Schumann, Popper, Chopin, as well as one of his own compositions. "The Chœur Chinois" (Joncières) and "Les Nymphes des Bois" (Délibes), under the able direction of M. Picard, were well rendered by the amateurs of the Society. The overture to L'Etoile du Nord and a "fragment" from a symphony of Beethoven by the orchestra, made up the programme. There was not a single hitch during the evening, and all went well (in spite of the regretted absence of Herr Reichardt, the President), thanks to the excellent arrangements of M. Henri Mory, assisted by M. Dié, the newly appointed director of the Etablissement.

Apropos of concerts, on Sunday last a matinée musicale took place at the Etablissement, organized by the "Société du Drapeau des Ecoles Laïques," with the assistance of Mdlle E. St Georges, M. Bonelly, and others. There was a very large audience. More next week. X. T. R.

Boulogne-sur-Mer, Feb. 1, 1882.

WAIFS.

It is rumoured in New York that Edwin Booth has secured the Grand Operahouse in Eighth Avenue, and that Henry Irving, accompanied by Ellen Terry, will appear there in the autumn. (Very much "Query."—Dr Blidge.)

Bottesini has nearly completed a new comic opera, Babele.

Aïda was recently performed for the first time in Strassburgh.

Théodore Jouret is created officer of the Belgian Order of Leopold.

The electric light has been successfully adopted at the Teatro Real, Malta.

Georg Henschel and his wife (Lilian Bailey) are still in vogue at Boston, U.S.

An International Musical Competition will be held on the 15th March at Mentone.

Marie Vanzandt is at Monte Carlo, where she will appear in Mignon and Dinorah.

A one-act opera, Il Progettista, music by Scontrino, is accepted at the Teatro Argentina, Rome.

Hofmann's long-expected Wilhelm von Oranien has been brought out at the Stadttheater, Hamburgh.

Sophie Menter, who has been playing in Copenhagen, returns to Paris about the beginning of March.

Bianca Donadio, having concluded her engagement in Lisbon, will give a series of performances at Genoa.

Angelo Neumann says that, though postponed, the projected Lohengrin performances will still take place in Paris.

A new opera, Donna Nicolosa, words by Kadler, music by Suppé, will shortly be represented at the Karl-Theater, Vienna.

The Hungarian violinist, Tivador Nachez, made a favourable impression at the last Museum Concert, Frankfort-on-the-Maine.

Professor Parisini is appointed librarian of the Museo Musicale, Bologna, and created Knight of the Order of the Crown of Italy.

A new Orchestral Union, numbering fifty performers, under the direction of Dr E. J. Kimball, has been established in Washington, U.S.

Dr Jacob Bradford has accepted the post of Honorary Secretary to the "Musical Artists' Society" vacant by the resignation of Mr E. H. Thorne.

The Cheltenham Musical Society will give, at its next concert, a selection from Handel's Semele, followed by Mr W. H. Cummings' Fairy Ring.

Carlotta Patti and her husband, De Munck, the violoncellist, took part in the annual concert of the Society for the Protection of Children, Rheims.

Hector Berlioz's Damnation de Faust was lately performed at the Grand Theatre, Prague, and proved so successful that it was repeated the following day.

The once popular French actor, Gil Perez, formerly of the Palais Royal, died on Monday in a lunatic asylum, in which he has been confined for two years.

Massenet's Hérodiade will, it is said, be performed at the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, with Mdme Albani as Salomè. (Don't believe it.—Dr Blidge.)

Another theatre—that at Owensburg, U.S.—has been burnt down. Fortunately, it was empty and no lives were lost. The disaster was due to the over-heating of a stove.

Serrano's new opera, Mitridate, has been produced at the Teatro Real, Madrid. Galli-Marié will probably be engaged by Rovira to sing in Mignon at the Teatro Real.

The Willems Genootschap are organizing for the 11th inst. in Ghent a Musical Festival, at which the programme will include three important works by Peter Benoit.

Mdlle Bianca Bianchi, of the Imperial Operahouse, Vienna, will sing in March at the Milan Scala, and four or five times during Lent at the Fenice, Venice, the opera being Lucia.

A Magnificat, by Mr W. F. Taylor, has been given at the Sardinian Church every Sunday during the past month, and the same composer's Mass in C major is to be sung at Easter.

A series of concerts of Classical and Modern Music has been organized at Nice by Borelli. The programme of the first included, among other things, symphonies by Haydn and Beethoven (No. 1 —in C).

"A contemporary says: 'Pennsylvania Dutch girls make good preserves,' but it does not say," remarks Kunkel's Musical Review, "how much sugar you take to a pound of Dutch girl, or how long you let 'em boil."

Abbate Franz Liszt has returned to Pesth after about a year's absence, accompanied by Mdlle Daniela von Bülow, his granddaughter, who tended him all through his recent illness. His cantata, Elisabeth, is in preparation by the new Musical Society, Brussels.

The Municipality of Milan have determined to connect telephonically the Scala and Canobbiana Theatres and the Town Hall with the Firemen's Barracks.—According to report, the Teatro Giacinta Pezzana will shortly open for opera, the first work selected being Il Trovatore.

Mdme Alice Barth, Miss Kate Leipold, Messrs Faulkner Leigh, Eric Lewis, and Theodore Distin are to be the attractions at the Brighton Aquarium matinée, when Mr Corder's new operetta is given with "new scenery, dresses, decorations," and a full orchestra, conducted by the composer.

Mdme Trebelli's concert party, consisting of Mdme Trebelli, Miss Samuell, Messrs Vizzani, Ghilberti, Musin, and Bisaccia, has visited Greenock, Sunderland, Newcastle, Nottingham, and Manchester, attracting very large audiences at each town. This afternoon they are to give a special concert at Great Malvern, under the able direction of the always enterprising Mr Haynes.

Antonio Leonardi has produced at the Philharmonic Academy, Rome, a new work, founded on the subject already selected by Schumann, and entitled The Peri.—Donizetti's posthumous opera, Il Duca d'Alba, has been in rehearsal some time at the Teatro Apollo.—The Teatro Costanzi will probably re-open on the 31st March with Les Huguenots.—The artists and others belonging to the Theatres of Rome are organizing a Mutual Aid Society.

Advertisements.

THE BICYCLE.

SONATA FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By STANISLAUS ELLIOT.

1. Allegro.—"The First Attempt."
2. Andante.—"Despair and Return."
3. Scherzo.—"Second Attempt."
4. Rondo.—"Success at last."

Price 4s.

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The wedding of humour to music is, perhaps, one of the signs of the age. 'The Bicycle Sonata' is an illustration. At first sight it might seem that no author of standing would attempt to write of our friends the riders. There can be no question of the boldness of the attempt; the delights and vicissitudes of 'wheeling' are interpreted with skill, dramatic power and a sense of humour which raise the work and rescue it from vulgarity."

Digitized by Google

The only Gold Medal for Wind Instruments with Keys, in the Paris Universal Exhibition of 1878, was unanimously awarded by the Jury to Messrs P. Goumas & Co., for the fine quality of tone and finish of their Instruments.

SPECIAL MANUFACTORY OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS
FOR
CLARIONETS, FLUTES, PICCOLOS, OBOES, BASSOONS, COR ANGLAIS, FLAGEOLETS, AND SAXOPHONES.

P. GOUMAS & Co.
(Late Buffet, Crampon & Co.),
Established 1830.

Nine Prize Medals have been awarded to Goumas & Co. for general excellence and improvements in the Manufacture of Wind Instruments with Keys.
Manufacturers of all kinds of Wood Wind Instruments for Military Bands, Musical Instrument Makers to Her Majesty's Army and Navy, and to the Armies, Navies, and Conservatoires of France, Belgium, Italy, Russia, Austria, Spain, America, &c.
Manufactory at Mantes (Seine et Oise), France. Paris: Passage du Grand Cerf, 18 et 20.
LONDON: 39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET.
Price Lists sent free on application.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,
MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF
ALL KINDS OF MUSIC STRINGS FOR ALL MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Sole Depôt for Signor Andrea Ruffini's (of Naples) Celebrated Strings for Soloists, manufactured by him on a system invented by Mons. J. B. Vuillaume, of Paris.
Sole Agent for Charles Albert's (of Philadelphia, U.S.) new Patent Improved Chin Rest; also his improved String Gauge.
39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, W.
Price Lists free on application.
All kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner on powerful machines made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE
(COLEMAN'S). A Delicious Beverage and Tonic.
Made from Port Wine, Liebig's Extract of Meat, and Extract of Malt; Nutritious, Strengthening, Stimulating, Flesh-forming, Health Restoring, suitable for the Robust in Health as well as the Invalid. Strongly recommended by the Medical Faculty. An Immediate Benefit is experienced after taking it; the Frame is Invigorated, and no ill effects follow.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
TESTIMONIALS.

Sir,—A short time since I was induced by the novelty of the title to send for a bottle of your Liebig's Extract of Meat and Malt Wine. I was perfectly acquainted with the value of the Extractum Carnis, and not quite a stranger to the invigorating and fortifying properties of malt wine, and therefore felt a natural curiosity to test them when combined. Men who work hard, as I do, not muscular hard work, but that which is quite as exhausting, viz., brain work, very often experience the need of, and have sometimes an almost irresistible craving for, a "pick me up;" and very often the panacea for a time for lassitude, and that state of mind which renders work irksome, are alcoholic stimulants, the use of which must sooner or later end disastrously. The man who can furnish a remedy sure, certain, and harmless, for the lassitude which follows constant brain work is a benefactor of his species, and may be said to have added many years of usefulness to the lives of useful men. Your extract, if a success, and when more generally known, will be used by all toilers of the mind.—Yours faithfully, O. D. RAY.
Thorpe Hamlet, Norwich, February 23rd, 1881.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Queen's Crescent, Haverstock Hill, London, March 5th, 1881.

Dear Sir,—Some time since, being greatly fatigued with over-work and long hours at business, my health (being naturally delicate) became very indifferent. I lost all energy, strength, and appetite, and was so weak as to be scarcely able to walk. As you are aware, I sent for a dozen of your Extract of Meat and Malt Wine, which, in a few days, pulled me up marvellously. Three or four glasses of it daily have quite altered and restored me to better health than ever, "without the assistance of a doctor." I am now giving it to my son, twelve years of age, whom we have always thought consumptive, and from a puny, ailing boy, he seems to be fast growing into a strong, healthy lad. Enclosed you have cheque. Please send me two dozen of the "Extract." With thanks for your prompt attention to my last, I am, Sir, yours truly, GEORGE A. TYLER.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Granspound, February 25th, 1881.

Mrs Coulson thanks Mr Coleman for the book and stamps, and she has no doubt but that "the tonic" is a good one. Mrs C. encloses twelve stamps for basket.
Mr Coleman.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Vicarage, Kingsbridge, Devon, January 25th, 1881.

Dear Sir,—We are ten miles from the railway, and have been snowed up, consequently the wine has only just arrived. I enclose a cheque for £2 11s. 6d. I like the wine, and will recommend it.—Yours faithfully,
Mr Coleman, Norwich. A. N. KINGSTON.

Pints, 30s. per dozen: Quarts, 50s. per dozen. Carriage paid to any Railway Station in Great Britain. Sample Bottle sent for 33 stamps.
P. O. Orders to be made payable to
COLEMAN & CO., MUSPOLE STREET, NORWICH.
Cheques crossed "London and Provincial Bank."
Sold by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the United Kingdom, in Bottles, 1s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. each. Ask for Coleman's Liebig's Extract of Meat and Malt Wine, and "See that you get it."

CHAPPELL'S
VOCAL LIBRARY
OF
PART-SONGS, &c.

		Composed or Arranged by	Price
1.	Dulce Domum. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
2.	Down among the Dead Men. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
3.	The Girl I've left behind me. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
4.	British Grenadiers. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
5.	Long live England's Future Queen. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
6.	My task is ended (Song and Chorus). A.T.B.B.	... Balfe	4d.
7.	Thus spake one Summer's Day. S.A.T.B.	... Abt	2d.
8.	Soldiers' Chorus. T.T.B.B.	Gounod	4d.
9.	The Kermesse (Scene from Faust)	,,	6d.
10.	Up, quit thy bower. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	4d.
11.	Maidens, never go a-wooing. S.S.T.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
12.	Fagot Binders' Chorus	Gounod	4d.
13.	Sylvan Hours (for Six Female Voices)	Joseph Robinson	6d.
14.	The Gipsy Chorus	... Balfe	4d.
15.	Ave Maria	Arcadelt	1d.
16.	Hark! the Herald Angels sing. S.A.T.B.	Mendelssohn	1d.
17.	England Yet (Solo and Chorus). S.A.T.B.	Jules Benedict	2d.
18.	The Shepherd's Sabbath Day. S.A.T.B.	J. L. Hatton	2d.
19.	Thoughts of Childhood. S.A.T.B.	Henry Smart	2d.
20.	Spring's Return. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
21.	An old Church Song. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
22.	Sabbath Bells. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
23.	Serenade. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
24.	Cold Autumn Wind. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
25.	Orpheus with his Lute. S.S.S.	Bennett Gilbert	2d.
26.	Lullaby. S.A.A.	,,	1d.
27.	This is my own, my native land. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
28.	March of the Men of Harlech. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
29.	God save the Queen. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
30.	Rule, Britannia. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
31.	The Retreat. T.T.B.B.	L. de Rille	2d.
32.	Lo! morn is breaking. S.S.S.	Cherubini	2d.
33.	We are Spirits. S.S.S.	G. A. Macfarren	4d.
34.	Market Chorus (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	Auber	4d.
35.	The Prayer (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
36.	The Water Sprites. S.A.T.B.	Kücken	2d.
37.	Eve's glittering Star. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
38.	When first the Primrose. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
39.	O Dewdrop bright. S.A.T.B	,,	1d.
40.	Sanctus from the Messe Solennelle. S.A.T.B.	Rossini	4d.
41.	Nine Kyries, Ancient and Modern	,,	2d.
42.	Sun of my soul. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	2d.
43.	'Twas fancy, and the ocean's spray. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
44.	A Prayer for those at Sea. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
45.	O Thou whose power (Prayer from Mose in Egitto)	Rossini	2d.
46.	The Guard on the Rhine. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
47.	The German Fatherland. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
48.	The Lord is my Shepherd (Quartet). S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
49.	Te Deum in F	Jackson	2d.
50.	Te Deum in F	Nares	2d.
51.	Charity (La Carita). S.S.S.	Rossini	4d.
52.	Cordelia. A.T.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	4d.
53.	I know. S.A.T.B.	Walter Hay	2d.
54.	Chorus of Handmaidens (from Fridolin)	A. Randegger	4d.
55.	The Offertory Sentences	Edmund Rogers	4d.
56.	The Red Cross Knight	Dr. Callcott	2d.
57.	The Chough and the Crow	Sir H. R. Bishop	3d.
58.	The "Carnovale"	Rossini	2d.
59.	Softly falls the moonlight	Edmund Rogers	4d.
60.	Air by Himmel	Henry Leslie	2d.
61.	Offertory Sentences	E. Sauerbrey	4d.
62.	The Resurrection	C. Villiers Stanford	6d.
63.	Our Boys (new Patriotic Song)	H. J. Byron and W. M. Lutz	4d.
64.	The Men of Wales	Brinley Richards	2d.
65.	Dame Durden		1d.
66.	A little Farm well tilled	Hook	1d.
67.	There was a simple maiden	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
68.	Fair Hebe	,,	1d.
69.	Once I loved a maiden fair	,,	1d.
70.	The jovial man of Kent	,,	1d.
71.	The oak and the ash	,,	1d.
72.	Heart of Oak	,,	1d.
73.	Come to the sunset tree	W. A. Philpott	4d.
74.	May. S.A.T.B.	W. F. Banks	2d.
75.	Pure, lovely innocence (Il Roi de Lahore—Chorus for Female Voices)	G. Massenet	4d.
76.	A Love Idyl. S.A.T.B.	E. R. Terry	2d.
77.	Hail to the Woods! A.T.T.B.	J. Yarwood	2d.
78.	Near the town of Taunton Dean	Thomas J. Dudeney	2d.
79.	Our merry boys at sea	J. Yarwood	2d.
80.	The Shepherd's Farewell. S.A.T.B.	Berlioz	3d.
81.	When the sun sets o'er the mountains (Il Demonio)	A. Rubinstein	3d.
82.	Hymn of Nature	Beethoven	3d.
83.	Michaelmas Day (Humorous Part Songs, No. 1)	Walter Maynard	4d.
84.	Sporting Notes (Humorous Part Songs, No. 2)	Walter Maynard	4d.
85.	Austrian National Hymn	Haydn	4d.

LONDON:
CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND STREET, W.
City Branch—14 & 15, POULTRY.

Digitized by Google

NEW VOLUMES of the ROYAL SERIES.

THE SONGS OF SCANDINAVIA
AND NORTHERN EUROPE.
EIGHTY-THREE NATIONAL AND POPULAR SONGS.

THE SONGS OF EASTERN EUROPE.
ONE HUNDRED VOLKSLIEDER OF AUSTRIA, HUNGARY, BOHEMIA, SERVIA, &c.

WITH ENGLISH WORDS BY CLARA KAPPEY.

EDITED BY

J. A. KAPPEY.

Price 2s. 6d. each, paper covers; 4s. cloth.

"Messrs Boosey & Co. have done good service not only to amateurs but to art, by including in their series of volumes of national melodies 'The Songs of Scandinavia' and 'The Songs of Eastern Europe.' The first-named contains eighty-three examples; and the second, a hundred. We need not insist upon the importance of collections like these, whatever the country they represent; but we must say that no musical library is complete without the songs of Scandinavia and Eastern Europe. The editor, Mr J. A. Kappey, has taken great pains to secure melodies of a genuinely representative character, and at a time when attention is becoming more and more directed to folk-tunes as a source of new thematic ideas, the volumes in question are of peculiar value. They have our most hearty commendation, the 'Songs of Eastern Europe' more especially, since the volume contains, besides examples of Liszt, Chopin, and other masters, a very valuable collection of volkslieder from the hitherto untouched wealth of the Austrian provinces."—Daily Telegraph.

"Messrs Boosey & Co. have published two additional volumes of their National Songs, which appear likely to be the most interesting of the series. We know little of the rich repertory of Scandinavian Songs, and Mr and Miss Kappey, the editors of these books, are to be thanked for introducing some of the best specimens to public notice. Five of the Russian songs are so old as to be traditional; and in the series are to be found a beautiful Cossack lullaby by one Bachmetieff, a gipsy song by Lvoff, and several songs by Warlamoff. These and the Polish songs (all of which are traditional) may be considered among the most interesting items of a small but acceptable collection. Two ancient Lithuanian songs, a couple of Finnish, and four ancient Norwegian melodies, will likewise be found in the book. The majority of the Swedish songs are by Lindblad, that prolific song writer, who died in 1864. Tradition says that the old melody of 'The Beggar Boy' was once sung in the days when she was a poor child by the distinguished artist now known as Mdme Christine Nilsson. Included in the Danish songs is the traditional 'Dannebrog,' the music of which is attributed to one 'Bay.' It would be interesting to inquire the foundation for this statement, as the origin of the Danish National Anthem was generally understood to be unknown. The tradition of the 'Dannebrog Banner,' which, in 1719, fell down from heaven to bring victory to the Danish arms, is duly recorded in a footnote. Most of the Dutch songs given date back to the sixteenth century; and there are besides three songs by W. F. G. Nicolai, and one Flemish song. Altogether eighty-three of the national songs of northern Europe are included in this valuable and interesting book. In future editions a larger preface or more footnotes, giving further particulars of the old songs whose history is known, would be welcome. Equally interesting are the songs of Eastern Europe, recently issued by Messrs Boosey, and likewise edited by Mr and Miss Kappey. Among the thirty-four Austrian songs, the large majority are volkslieder, and they include Tyrolean, Styrian, and Polish songs, two of them by Chopin. These are followed by twenty-three characteristic specimens of Hungarian songs, giving a very fair idea of the peculiarities of Hungarian music, and comprising modern songs by Liszt, and some traditional songs of Bosnia, Moravia, and Dalmatia. The first of the Bohemian songs is the 'War-song of the Hussites,' once, it is believed, the national song of the country. A few specimens of Servian, Swiss, Greek, and even Turkish melodies. The last are very peculiar; and he peculiar intervals common to this and other Eastern music are claimed by some to have been handed down direct from the music of the ancient Hebrews."—Figaro.

LONDON: BOOSEY & CO., 295, REGENT STREET.

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, & SPALDING, at 3 and 5, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, February 4, 1882.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 60.—No. 6. SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1882. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.

MONDAY, Feb. 13, "CARMEN." TUESDAY, Feb. 14, Production of WAGNER'S "TANNHÄUSER," with entirely New Scenery, Costumes, and Properties. WEDNESDAY, Feb. 15, BALFE'S "MORO." THURSDAY, Feb. 16, Only Time of Sir JULIUS BENEDICT'S "LILY OF KILLARNEY." FRIDAY, Feb. 17, "TANNHÄUSER." SATURDAY Morning, Feb. 18, at Two, "MIGNON." SATURDAY Evening, Feb. 18, at Eight, GOUNOD'S "FAUST."

POPULAR PRICES.

Box Office open Daily from 10 till 5.

WEDNESDAY NEXT.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERT.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERT, ST JAMES'S HALL, WEDNESDAY Next, at Eight o'clock. Artists: Miss Mary Davies and Miss De Fonblanque, Mdme Antoinette Sterling and Mdme Fassett; Mr Edward Lloyd, Mr Santley, Signor Foli, and Mr Maybrick. The South London Choral Association, under the direction of Mr L. C. Venables. Conductor—Mr SIDNEY NAYLOR. The programme will contain the following Popular Ballads, Favourite Operatic Songs, &c.: "I'm alone," "Rose softly blooming," and "In Arcady" (Miss Mary Davies); "When all was young" and "In a quaint old village" (Miss De Fonblanque); "O, Fatima," "When the tide comes in," and "The Long Avenue" (Mdme Antoinette Sterling); "By the sad sea waves" and "The Sailor's Story" (Mdme Isabel Fassett); "Lend me your aid," "When other lips," "Once and once only" (Mr Edward Lloyd); "O live, or let me die," "O ruddier than the cherry," and "Montrose's Love Song" (Mr Santley); "The Drinking Song" from Der Freischütz and "I fear no foe" (Signor Foli); "Loving Smile" and "The Midshipmite" (Mr Maybrick). The South London Choral Association will sing the following Operatic Choruses: "Rataplan," from La Figlia del Reggimento; "The Bridal Chorus" from Lohengrin; "Gipsies' Chorus" from Il Trovatore; and "Gallant Hearts," March from Norma. Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Family and School Tickets to admit Six to Stalls, £2; Area, 4s. and 3s.; Balcony, 3s.; Gallery and Orchestra, 1s.; to be had at Austin's, St James's Hall; the usual Agents; and of Boosey & Co., 295, Regent Street.

MR SIMS REEVES has the honour to announce that his THIRD CONCERT of Operatic, National, and Miscellaneous Music will take place, at ST JAMES'S HALL, on TUESDAY Evening next, February 14th, at Eight o'clock, on which occasion he will give a selection from "LUCIA DI LAMMERMOOR." Artists: Mdme Marie Roze, Miss Spenser Jones, and Miss Carlotta Elliot: Mr Herbert Reeves, Mr Barrington Foote, Mr Henry Pyatt, and Mr Sims Reeves. Solo Violoncello—Signor Piatti. Conductor—Mr SIDNEY NAYLOR. The Anemoic Union (under the direction of Mr Lazarus). Flute—Mr H. Nicholson. Oboe—Mr Malsch. Clarionet—Mr Lazarus. Horn—Mr T. E. Mann. Bassoon—Mr Wotton. Pianoforte—Mr Sidney Naylor. Tickets, 10s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 3s., and 1s., at Austin's Ticket Office, St James's Hall, and usual Agents.

WALTER MACFARREN'S ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS,

ST JAMES'S HALL.—FIRST CONCERT, SATURDAY Evening, Feb. 25. The Programme will include Beethoven's Symphony in C minor, Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, Walter Macfarren's Pianoforte Concertstück, and Overtures: Mozart's Zauberflöte, Weber's Oberon, and Walter Macfarren's King Henry V. (first time in London). Executants—Miss Mary Davies and Mr Santley, Miss Margaret Gyde (her first appearance), and M. Sainton. Band of Seventy. Conductor—Mr WALTER MACFARREN. Subscription to the Series, One Guinea. Sofa Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Balcony, 3s.; Admission, One Shilling. Programmes and Tickets of Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., 84, New Bond Street; usual Agents; and Austin's Ticket Office, 28, Piccadilly.

"PEACEFULLY SLUMBER."

MISS MARIAN McKENZIE will sing RANDEGGER'S "PEACEFULLY SLUMBER" at the Cambridge Musical Society's Concert, on Tuesday next, Feb. 14th.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR ARTHUR HOOPER will sing (by desire) ASCHER'S popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" on March 6th, at Mr John Cheshire's Concert at Hammersmith.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Under the immediate patronage of
Her Most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN and the Royal Family.
President—The Right Hon. the Earl of DUDLEY.
Principal—Professor MACFARREN, Mus. D., Cantab.

The next STUDENTS' CONCERT, open to Subscribers, Members, Associates, and Licentiates, will take place at this INSTITUTION, on SATURDAY Evening, the 18th inst., at Eight o'clock. Conductor—Mr WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

Tickets (which may be purchased at the doors):—Balcony, 2s. 6d.; Stalls, 5s. each.

By order, JOHN GILL, Secretary.

Royal Academy of Music,
Tenterden Street, Hanover Square, W.

SCHUBERT SOCIETY. President—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT. Founder and Director—Herr SCHUBERTH. Sixteenth Season, 1882. The FIRST CONCERT (F. Schubert's Compositions forming the first part of the programme) will take place at the LANGHAM HALL, Great Portland Street, on TUESDAY, 28th February, 1882, to commence at eight o'clock precisely. The next SOIRÉE MUSICALE is fixed for WEDNESDAY 15th February. Full prospectus on application to H. G. HOPPER, Hon. Sec., 244, Regent Street, W.

LONDON CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.—Principal—Mr LANSDOWNE COTTELL.

The Directors invite attention to the recent extension and increased accommodation, residential and otherwise.

Fees from Two Guineas per term, residential from Fourteen Guineas, inclusive of the Musical and Fine Art Lectures.

Free Tuition is awarded to talented young artists unable to pay fees by fund granted for this purpose.

Prospectus (one stamp), Hon, Sec., 6, Tavistock Square.

MR and Mdme BODDA'S (Miss LOUISA PYNE) ACADEMY FOR SINGING, Operatic and Miscellaneous. "BONALLY," 85 and 87, Cambridge Gardens, Notting Hill. Professional and Amateur. In and Out-Door Students. Studies—Singing (Private Lessons), Elocution, Piano, Deportment, Choral Practice, Italian. Prospectuses as above, or Mr STEDMAN, 13, Berners Street.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR GEORGE COX will sing ASCHER'S popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" at Mr Wm. Carter's Concert at the Albert Hall, on March 1st.

BENEDICT'S "CARNAVAL DE VENISE."

MISS BEATA FRANCIS will sing BENEDICT'S Variations on the "CARNAVAL DE VENISE," at Chelsea Vestry Hall, Feb. 13th (evening).

MISS FRANCESCA J. FERRARI begs to announce her RETURN to Town for the Season.
20, Langham Street, Portland Place, W.

CONDUCTOR WANTED.

SCARBOROUGH CLIFF BRIDGE COMPANY.

The Committee of the above Company are prepared to receive applications for the CONDUCTORSHIP of their BAND for the Season, commencing in June next. Full particulars may be obtained from the undersigned, to whom all applications, accompanied with copies of Testimonials and stating Salary required, must be addressed on or before the 24th inst. Silence polite negative.

FRAS. GOODRICKE,
Feb. 3rd, 1882. Secretary and General Manager.

WANTED, a good MODERN ORGAN, Second-hand, for a Country Church. Apply, stating price and particulars, to "VICAR," Raglan, Monmouthshire.

MRS KENDAL'S NEW SONG, "TIME PASSES ON," the Words by Mrs KENDAL, the Music by WALTER MAYNARD, post free for 24 Stamps.—LAMBORN COCK, 23, Holles Street, Oxford Street, London, W.

"PARADISE LOST." An Oratorio. Composed by ANTON RUBINSTEIN, on the Poem of MILTON. The English version of the words by JOSIAH PITTMAN. Paris: GÉRARD, 2, Rue Scribe.

Digitized by Google

REDUCED PRICE, 2s. 6d.

THE EPIKLEIS, or Musical Domino (POOLEY'S PATENT), an Aid to Pianists for the Slow Shake and other Exercises—entirely a mental aid. Testimonials from the best Pianists and Teachers. By Post, 2s. 6d. Handbook, with Exercises and useful Hints on Playing, 1s.—JOHN POOLEY, 3, The Terrace, Clapham Park Road, London, S.W. Agents Wanted all over the world.

THE PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, AND KNIGHTAGE OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE for 1882. By JOSEPH FOSTER.
Early in January. In one or two volumes, royal 8vo, cloth gilt, price 42s. The Peerage or Baronetage separate, each 21s.
The THIRD EDITION, for 1882, containing all new Creations, has been considerably enlarged, and carefully corrected throughout. It is illustrated by upwards of 1,400 Engravings of Arms, &c., and contains fuller pedigrees than any other work.
Westminster: NICHOLS & SONS, 25, Parliament Street.
CHAPMAN & HALL, Limited, 11, Henrietta Street, W.C.

NEW SONG BY J. L. HATTON.

THE GOOD SHIP ROVER. Words by JOHN STEWART. Music by J. L. HATTON. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

THE BETTER WORLD.
Words by Mrs. M. A. BAINES.
Music by
MICHAEL BERGSON.
Composed expressly for and sung by Mdme MARIE ROZE; sung also by Miss JESSICA O'BRIEN.
Price 4s.
London: STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

Published This Day.

THE LOVERS' WALTZ
(L'AMANTE).
FOR THE PIANOFORTE.
By
G. MURATORI.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Published This Day.

L'AMANTE.
VALZER, PER VOCE DI MEZZO-SOPRANO.
Musica di
G. MURATORI
(The English Version of the words by MARIA X. HAYES).
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Published This Day.

AMELIA.
CANZONE POPOLARE.
Parole e Musica di
G. MURATORI.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

MIDNIGHT CHIMES.
(SONG.)
Words by MARIA X. HAYES.
Music by
MICHAEL BERGSON.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

DANSE PYRRHIQUE.
FOR THE PIANOFORTE.
By
BROWNLOW BAKER.
Price 3s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.
Where may be obtained, Composed by Brownlow Baker, "Bourrée," in E flat, 4s.; "Memory" (Romance), 3s.

Just Published.

UNITY.
A NEW MASONIC SOLO AND QUARTET.
Dedicated by express permission to His Royal Highness PRINCE PATRICK, DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, and all true and accepted Masons.
By
RICHARD F. HARVEY,
Organist of Unity Lodge 238 (Dublin).
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

THE VOICE AND SINGING.
BY
ADOLFO FERRARI.
THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.
Price 12s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.
"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

VOCAL EXERCISES COMPOSED BY FRANK MORI.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.
N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by the late FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

New Edition of "LE PETIT SOLFEGE."

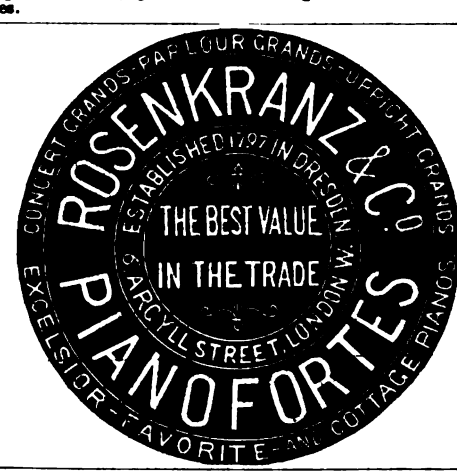
LE PETIT SOLFEGE. Vingt Solfèges pour Voix de Mezzo-Soprano. Par JOS. CURCI. Price 6s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.
"This work for educational purposes will be found of inestimable value, since it is one of the very few which confines itself to the cultivation of the middle of the voice; and whilst the phrases are admirably adapted to develop the breathing powers and volume of the voice, the melodies are so exquisitely harmonised that they must prove of great benefit in the improvement of the taste and ear of a student in singing."—Pictorial World.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of
A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR
THE VOICE.
By T. A. WALLWORTH.
A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdme Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklein, and other successful Vocalists.
Full Music Size, price 7s.
London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.
For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis, of Basingstoke, says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.



LA POMPA DI FESTA. Grande Marche, pour Piano, à Quatre Mains. Par IGNACE GIBSONE. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"HER VOICE."

"HER VOICE." IGNACE GIBSONE'S popular Song (poetry by "A Soldier's Daughter"), sung by Mdme ENRIQUEZ, is published, price 4s., by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NEW VOCAL QUARTET.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" Arranged for Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, and Bass by G. B. ALLEN. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

MICHAEL WILLIAM (SALVATOR ROSA) BALFE'S NEW OPERA.

Balfe's hitherto (to English audiences) unknown opera, Pittore e Duca, was produced on Saturday night, at Her Majesty's Theatre, before a densely crowded audience; and, if repeated applause may be accepted as criterion, with decided success. Having on more than one occasion referred to this work by the popular Irish musician; its libretto, from the laboratory of Signor Piave (who furnished Verdi with Il Trovatore, Rigoletto, and other dismal tragedies); its production, at Trieste, in 1856; and its withdrawal, after two or three performances, in consequence of some misunderstanding never intelligibly explained, little remains to be added under these heads. Enough that, in our opinion, the alteration made in the original design of Piave (abroad, be it understood) is by no means an improvement, and that the sudden recall of the Duc d'Alva, just on the point of gratifying his revenge, accompanied by the unexpected summons of the Painter to the Court of Queen Elizabeth, in no way atones for what must have been the intention of the Italian librettist. We might as well, for sake of the stereotyped "happy ending," illustrated by a vocal display for the prima donna, change the dénoûment of Ernani, the Trovatore, the Traviata, Rigoletto, or, indeed, any of Verdi's operas, from the earliest, to Don Carlos, La Forza del Destino, Louisa Miller, and Aida. What, indeed, would become of Wagner's operas ("dramas"—we beg pardon), from Rienzi to the Götterdämmerung, if all were allowed to "end happily?" Nevertheless, Mr Barrett has taken honestly what came to his hand. His English version, under the name of Moro, the Painter of Antwerp, exhibits both literary and dramatic skill, and the book, as we have it, is more than acceptable. True, the duel between the Duke and the Painter—rivals for the affection of the heroine, Olivia Campano—is suddenly arrested; but we doubt if the majority of spectators, where a Balfe opera is in question, would prefer a more exciting climax. With regard to the music if may be said at once that very much of it is in the composer's happiest vein. In the concerted pieces we have that light off-handedness which, with him, as with so many Italian and French composers, answers every purpose, where more studied elaboration might fail to hit the mark; and to this may be added the consoling fact that we are never brought near to the verge of dulness. Moreover Balfe possessed the secret of writing well for voices and accommodating them to the end he had in view; while his orchestration is as clear and bright as it is consistently unpretentious—the scope and character of the instruments (on several of which, by the way, he was a proficient) being within his knowledge and at easy command. About his talent and productivity as a writer of songs and ballads there can be no dispute. The faculty of tune was inherent in him; and the day is far distant, whatever the zealous advocates of rhythmical tunelessness may urge, when the striking manifestation of this faculty shall cease to attract the attention and enchant the ears of the un-"advanced" multitude. We cannot speak in detail of the various numbers comprised in the score of Moro; but it may be added without further preamble that it contains not a few examples of the fertile invention possessed by a musician who has given to the world so many melodies from "The Light of Other Days," to the "Rose Song" (Il Talismano), destined to outlive new fashions, however eloquently advocated. These, nearly without exception, are pure "Balfe," and by no means less welcome on that account; for Balfe, in this particular sphere, had a style essentially his own, no matter to what extent he may have adopted, in accordance with his immediate humour, the Italian and French schools, as types for his overtures and concerted pieces. (Moro, by the way, has no regular overture—the greater the pity). Among the songs likely to win general popularity may be cited a romance, "Is it, then, in vain I've waited" (Act I.), sung by Antonio Moro, while contemplating the portrait of his beloved Olivia (Balfe's "Caro immagine")—a canzonet with the true melodious "ring;" another song for Moro, "Farewell, ye thoughts of joy and gladness;" a romance for the Duc d'Alva, "Bold knight his armour wearing;" and, perhaps, best of all, Moro's barcarolle, "On my gondola so lonely" (Act II.)—each of which, the last especially, is a felicitous example of Balfe at his best, and how grateful to the audience was shown in the loud encores elicited by three out of the four, the honours in the first and last falling to Mr M'Guckin, in the third, to Mr Crotty. There is also in Act II. a charmingly expressive duet between Olivia and Moro, the opening of which may be counted among the gems of the opera, besides some characteristic dance music of the unadulterated Spanish flavour. The performance generally may be praised with little reserve. Mdme Valleria, in spite of a cold, for which indulgence was asked, and which occasionally incapacitated her from doing justice to the vocal requirements of her part (Olivia, as a matter of course), contrived to win the unanimous sympathies of the house by the earnest intelligence of her delineation and the poetic meaning imparted to the music where true expression signifies more than all the rest. Mr Leslie Crotty is a thoroughly capable representative of the Duke, the music of which is quite suited to his voice; but he will do still more or we are greatly mistaken, to achieve corresponding results for the dramatic realization of the character. In this particular, too, Mr M'Guckin has some difficulties to overcome, though his success as a vocalist, absolute and undeniable, has raised him more than a step higher in public esteem, and encourages hopes that only remain for the young tenor himself to justify. The other parts are efficiently supported by Miss Giulia (why not Julia?) Warwick; Messrs Dudley Thomas and Herbert d'Egville (a cousin by the way of Georges Bizet). The opera is admirably put upon the stage, each scene, the last in particular, (a view of Antwerp, by Mr Emden) being a veritable picture. The costumes, too, from designs by Mr Charles Lyall, evince both artistic taste and acquaintance with the historical period of the story. The performance was conducted by Mr Carl Rosa himself, whose enthusiastic reception proved the high esteem in which he is held; and what pains the orchestra took with the music of Balfe, a compatriot of so many of them, need hardly be stated.—Graphic, Jan. 28.

—o—

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Subjoined is the programme of the music given at the fortnightly meeting of professors and students, on Saturday evening, February 4th:—

Sonata, in B flat, Op. 65, No. 4, organ (Mendelssohn)—Mr A. Lake, pupil of Dr Steggall; Aria, "O Fatima," Abu Hassan (C. Weber)—(accompanist, Mr Alfred Izard)—Miss Ida Iggulden, pupil of Mr Fiori; Two Impromptus, in A flat, Op. 142, and E flat, Op. 90, No. 2, pianoforte (Schubert)—Miss Amy Chidley, pupil of Mr F. B. Jewson; Song, "If with all your hearts," Elijah (Mendelssohn)—(accompanist, Mr Ernest Ford)—Mr J. G. Robertson, pupil of Mr Randegger; Sonata in G, violin, with pianoforte accompaniment by Ferdinand David (Nicolo Porpora)—(accompanist, Miss Annie Vale)—Miss Kathleen Watts, pupil of Mr Sainton; Song, "May dew" (Sterndale Bennett)—(accompanist, Miss Annie Daymond)—Miss Rose Burchell, pupil of Mr Wallworth; Prelude, Romanza and Fuga, from Suite in E minor, Op. 72, pianoforte (Raff)—Mr H. Lake, pupil of Mr H. R. Eyers; Song, "Orpheus with his lute" (Arthur Seymour Sullivan)—(accompanist, Miss Dinah Shapley)—Miss Doig, pupil of Mr Benson; Dix-Sept Variations Sérieuses, in D minor, Op. 54, pianoforte (Mendelssohn) — Mr Macpherson, Sterndale Bennett scholar, pupil of Mr Walter Macfarren; Duet, "In His hands," 95th Psalm (Mendelssohn)—(accompanist, Mr Ernest O. Kiver)—Miss Mackway and Miss Annie Vale, pupils of Mr Walker; Gavotte and Variations, in A minor, pianoforte (Rameau)—Miss Moseley, pupil of Mr Harold Thomas; Song, "To Chloe in sickness" (Sterndale Bennett)—(accompanist, Miss Lilian Munster)—Miss Etheridge, pupil of Mr F. R. Cox; Two Studies, L'Amabile and L'Appassionata, pianoforte (Sterndale Bennett)—Miss Rose Evans, pupil of Mr F. Westlake.

The third fortnightly meeting will be on Saturday next, February 11.

Now that the Premier and the Leader of the Opposition are marshalling their hosts again, it may not be out of place to suggest that some honourable gentleman would do well to make it his business to ascertain in the form of a Parliamentary return something of the histories and mysteries of the choral staffs of our cathedral churches. A curious return of the kind was obtained a session or two back by Mr Neville Grenville, and printed in due course, which forms an apt illustration of the kind of information we want to get at. It showed the number of lay vicars or clerks in each cathedral or collegiate church in England, and it gave their salaries, the number of their absences from duty, and various other particulars. The first thing noticeable was the difference in the salaries. In some of the cathedrals the singing gentlemen get only about £40 or £50 a-year, while in others they get £200 or £300. With regard to absences, some of the gentlemen appeared to have a very easy time of it, and to be almost as often away as present, while in one or two cases they have shown themselves not to be above breaking out into open insurrection against the Dean and Chapter. When the choir and the cathedral authorities are at open war the music can hardly be edifying, and the country could do very well with a little more light on the subject.—The Rock, Jan. 25, 1882.

PARMA.—A fire broke out on the 29th ult. at the Teatro San Giovanni. Fortunately it was subdued without any disastrous results, though some few of the actors perished in the flames. It is as well to mention, perhaps, that the San Giovanni is a marionette theatre.

Digitized by Google

MUSIC IN VIENNA.*

Schubert's one-act piece with songs, Die Zwillingsbrüder, performed a week ago at the Imperial Operahouse, was a genuine novelty for the public—at any rate, not an individual among them looked young enough to have been one of the regular frequenters of the house sixty-two years ago. The Zwillingsbrüder was first produced in the year 1820, at the Kärnthnerthor Theater, as a "one-act farce," but ran scarcely half a dozen nights. One-act operettas were then greatly in vogue at the Imperial Operahouse, whence they were afterwards completely banished, to be summoned back of late years as welcome additions to ballets. The French Opéra-Comique furnished, during the first three decennia of the present century, a goodly contingent of such pieces. But the supply was not sufficient, so native composers had to set to diligently and provide what was wanting. The pieces themselves were mostly of a farcical nature, the most popular among them all being Schenk's Dorfbarbier. When Schubert composed the music for Die Zwillingsbrüder, he was three and twenty and had already written several of his most beautiful compositions, but not yet produced any dramatic essay on the stage. A commission to write for the Imperial Operahouse must have been a great thing for him, and so—not being, by the way, very exacting in the matter of opera-librettos—he set cheerfully to work on the farcical book, which allowed his talent to take only a low and short flight. The plot turns upon two brothers, who are so much alike as to be constantly mistaken for each other—a farce-motive of such hoary antiquity that it cannot really grow any older. From the Menœchmi of Plautus down to Shakspere's Comedy of Errors, and Holbein's Doppelgänger—rendered famous by Fichtner's clever acting—how many alterations and changes have been rung on the same theme! In modern times how effective it still is in Adam's amusing comic opera, Le Brasseur de Preston and Lecocq's Giroflé-Girofla. The author of Schubert's libretto treats the subject in a coarse Kotzebue fashion, without much wit, but in some of the scenes he excites the risible faculties of the spectators. The impression is always comical when an individual whom we have seen eating and drinking heartily, returns in a couple of minutes and begs earnestly for breakfast as he is fasting, and other strange incidents of the same kind. On the stage, they all believe one another mad; but we in the pit are sensible people; we have long ago guessed the whole secret, and feel highly pleased at being so knowing. Schubert's music produced on us a thoroughly agreeable impression. To suit the homely subject and dress, everything is treated shortly and simply; we must not expect in Die Zwillingsbrüder the romantic fragrance or the knightly brilliancy, which throw so warm and golden a tint over the same composer's Häuslicher Krieg. The two pieces are, it is true, musically related, but they are not musical twins. The score of Der Häusliche Krieg overflows with genial originality and does not contain a single number which could emanate from any one but Franz Schubert; it is a monumental work compared with the vaudeville in which figure the worthy brothers Spiess. But we would not on that account have the latter work depreciated. The very first thing, the introductory chorus, is most delightful, and characterized by the charm of genuine Schubertian feeling. Of the other numbers, the bass air: "Mag es stürmen," effectively given by Herr Scaria, the delicately scored quartet: "Zu rechter Zeit," in B flat major, and the resolute, dashing quintet with chorus: "Packt ihn," are especially catching. A little simple-mindedness is certainly necessary for everyone who goes to hear a vaudeville of the year 1820. If we possess that, we shall not feel disappointed, but have our sympathies enlisted by the little red-cheeked thing in whom there is so much youth, affection, and love of song. Special mention is due to the bass air: "Menschliche Herzen ringen und streben," introduced by Herr Scaria, which Herr Fuchs, the Capellmeister, has written and scored from a sketch of Schubert's. It is in a serious and pathetic key, which points to a more illustrious source than Die Zwillingsbrüder. The truth is, it is taken from Schubert's unfinished opera, Sakuntala, the original manuscript of which is in the possession of Herr Nikolaus Dumba. Only a small circle of intimate friends are aware what a treasure of Schubert's manuscripts this gentleman—who, as we know, is himself an admirable Schubert-singer—has, aided by good fortune and intelligence, gradually collected.† It is very much to be desired that all Schubert's still unpublished compositions in the Dumba collection should be published, after careful revision and editing, by some recognized Schubert authorities, like Nottebohm and Brahms. Some of them might enrich the stage and many the concert-room, while they would all interest and delight the world of music. Not only would any future edition of Schubert's collected works not suffer any prejudicial effect from the publication of the Dumba MSS, but it is possible only by means of them. This is not the place for specifying in detail the plan to be adopted; our object is to suggest the notion which must anticipate the wish of every admirer of Schubert, and which, as truly artistic and patriotic, may certainly count on every assistance on the part of Nikolaus Dumba.

* * * * * * * *

Yesterday, the 29th January, France, and with her probably the whole world of musically-educated people, celebrated the anniversary of Auber's birth. His first successful opera, La Bergère châtelaine, appeared in 1820, and his last, Le premier Jour de Bonheur, in 1868. Thus, this remarkable man, always active, and endowed with the freshness of youth, worked during half a century for Opera, leaving behind him a long series of productions, most of which are still among the gems of the repertory and special favourites with the public. How much the Vienna Operahouse, particularly, owes the composer of La Muette de Portici, Gustave, Fra Diavolo, and Le Domino Noir is shown by our theatrical registers. It would have been a becoming thing for that institution to celebrate Auber's hundredth birthday by a model performance of one of his operas. No difficulty stood in the way, and if the 29th January had been previously set apart for the Redoute, La Muette de Portici or Le Domino Noir might very well have been given the evening before. We ourselves should assuredly have selected for the occasion Fra Diavolo, with Mdme Pauline Lucca as Zerline. The fair artist who lately sang the Zerline of Don Juan on Mozart's birthday would certainly have been delighted, in honour of Auber, to have added a fresh charm by her other incomparable Zerline to a festival performance of Fra Diavolo. Of a truth, it does not redound to the credit of the Imperial Operahouse to have as completely ignored the 29th January, 1882, as the 15th December, 1875, the hundredth birthday of Boildieu. EDUARD HANSLICK.

* From the Neue freie Presse.

† The dramatic compositions of Franz Schubert contained in the Dumba collection are: Fierabras, three-act opera; Die Freunde von Salamanca, "Komisches Singspiel" (vaudeville) in two acts; Des Teufels Lustschloss, three-act opera; Die Zauberharfe, three-act vaudeville; Die Bürgschaft, three-act opera (third act unfinished); Der Graf von Gleichen (book by Bauernfeld; sketch, partly scored by Herbeck); Adrast (book by Mayerhofer), a fragment of an opera. There are, moreover, numerous fragments and sketches from unfinished operas of which nothing further is known. Besides the above dramatic compositions, none of which have been printed, Herr Dumba possesses in manuscript these other works of Schubert's: five Symphonies, three Overtures, eighteen Pieces for introduction into Masses, five Pieces of Chamber-Music, fifteen Works for the Piano, three Cantatas, twenty-nine Choruses, and sixty Songs and Airs, many, or rather most, of which have never been published.

—o—

LONDON BALLAD CONCERTS.

The following new songs were introduced on Wednesday evening at Mr John Boosey's Ballad Concert: "Good night," by Hugh Clendon (Miss Mary Davies); "My darling of old," by Louis Diehl (Mr Frank Boyle); "Once, and once only," by A. H. Behrend (Mr Edward Lloyd—encored); "Leaving, yet loving," by Marzials (Mr Barrington Foote—encored); "In a quaint old village," by A. S. Gatty (Miss de Fonblanque—encored); and last, not least, "A cavalier's song" (with chorus), set by C. Villiers Stanford to words by Robert B. Browning, and inimitably sung by Mr Santley. "The cavalier's song" must, however, be heard again before it is "understanded of the people." Among the "encores" of the evening were Mr Cowen's "Better land" (Mdme Antoinette Sterling), and the same composer's "Regret" (Miss Damian); the old Irish song, "Father O'Flynn" (Mr Santley); Gounod's "O, that we two were Maying" (Miss Mary Davies); and Blumenthal's "My queen" (Mr Edward Lloyd). Miss Oliveria Prescott's quaint part-song, "The Cryer," was one of the most admired of those sung by the South London Choral Society, the audience, indeed, applauded it heartily, and would much like to have heard it again. Mr John Boosey announces "a ballad and operatic concert" for Wednesday next, and for Wednesday week (Ash-Wednesday) a "grand sacred concert."

BUENOS AYRES.—The following are the artists engaged for the approaching Italian operatic season at the Teatro Nacional: Sopranos - Signore E. Teodorini, E. Pappenheim, C. Bordalba, N. Pedemonti; Mezzo-Sopranos—Signore L. Lablache, E. Treves; Tenors—R. Stagno, O. Nouvelli, E. Palermo, F. de Angelis; Baritones—G. Del Puente, F. Salvati; Basses—G. Mirabella, E. Serbolini, G. Sampieri, E. Sertori; Comic Bass—C. Sortini; and Conductor—M. Mancinelli.

Digitized by Google

REMARKS ON THE PAST YEAR.*

(From 1st Oct. 1880 to 1st Oct. 1881.)

On looking over the musical doings of the past year, as recorded in the following pages (from pages 16 to 32), it will appear that, although numerous new works have been produced by native as well as by foreign composers, some of both of real importance; and numerous new societies for concerts, instrumental and vocal, professional and amateur, have been started; long-established institutions for musical education have gone on extending their operations; and new ones have sprung up: yet, notwithstanding all this ever-increasing activity in everything connected with the art of music, which is characteristic of modern times, there have been no peculiarly striking events to which we can point in the past year. The battle which has been raging in Germany for some time between the adherents of what has been termed for the sake of distinction the school of the Old Masters and the Modern German school can scarcely be said to have commenced in this country. Not that there are no partizans of the new school in England. Every musical journal that we open has something to say on the subject; and every programme of serious import now freely admits something of this school among the works of the established masters. Persistent effort, in fact, is being made by the literary, æsthetic, scientific, and practical musician in this country to become acquainted with, analyse, and place in its right light the efforts of the new school. This endeavour, together with a more free introduction of the works of living composers, to whatever school attached, may, indeed, be referred to as a distinguishing feature of the year.

At the Musical Institution papers have been read upon the following subjects, and discussions held upon them: "An Inquiry into the Origin and Growth of certain Musical Idioms and Expressions," by Mr E. H. Turpin; "A Neglected Musical Benefactor, and a Few Words about Handel," by Mr W. H. Cummings; "The Principles of Musical Criticism," by Mr John Stainer; "On Beauty of Touch and Tone: an Inquiry into the Physiological and Mechanical Principles involved in their Cultivation," by Mr Orlando Steed; "Introductory to the Study of Wagner's Comic Opera, Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg," by Mr C. A. Barry: "The Causes of the Rise in Orchestral Pitch," by Dr W. H. Stone; "On some of the Underlying Principles of Structure in Musical Composition," by Mr H. C. Banister; "A Concise View of the Law of Copyright as affecting Composers of Music," by Mr. F. Meadows White. At the Philharmonic Concerts the instrumental performances were:—12 Overtures: 1 by Mozart, 1 Beethoven, 2 Weber, 1 Spontini, 2 Mendelssohn, 1 Rossini, 1 Berlioz, 1 Sterndale Bennett, 1 Wagner, and 1 Svensden. 5 Symphonies: 1 Beethoven, 1 Spohr, 1 Schumann, 1 Berlioz, 1 F. Cowen. 7 Concertos, Pianoforte: 2 Beethoven, 1 Chopin, 1 Schumann, 1 Scharwenka. Violin: 1 Beethoven, 1 Mendelssohn. At Ganz's Orchestral Concerts there were 9 Overtures: 1 by Beethoven, 2 Weber, 1 Mendelssohn, 1 Rossini, 1 Nicolai, 1 Auber, 1 Benedict, 1 Wagner. 4 Symphonies: 1 Beethoven, 1 Schubert, 2 Berlioz. 4 Concertos, Pianoforte: 1 Beethoven, 1 Schumann, 1 Liszt, 1 Rubinstein. Sundry Pianoforte Works: 1 Weber, 1 Schubert, 1 Liszt, 1 Chopin, 1 Alice M. Smith, 1 Svensden, and the Opera of Orpheus, by Gluck. At Richter Concerts, 10 Overtures: 3 by Beethoven, 1 Weber, 1 Berlioz, 2 Wagner, 2 Brahms, and 1 Goldmark. 9 Symphonies: 1 Haydn, 1 Mozart, 4 Beethoven, 1 Schumann, 1 Brahms, 1 Cowen and 9 Miscellaneous Works for Orchestra only: 1 by Bach, 1 Mendelssohn, 1 Liszt, 1 Grädenn, and 5 Wagner. The only Concertos were 2 for Pianoforte: 1 by Chopin, 1 Liszt, and 1 for Violin by Spohr; two Choral Works, Beethoven's Solennis in D, and the 46th Psalm by C. V. Stanford. At Hallé's Concerts were repeated performances of Berlioz's Infancy of Christ, and Faust, with (in the Miscellaneous Concerts) the Haffner serenade by Mozart; and of Symphonies, 1 by Beethoven, 1 Schubert, and 1 Goldmark. In the four Saturday Orchestal Concerts also, interesting works, old and new, were brought forward. Of Overtures: 1 by Beethoven, 1 Cherubini, 1 Mendelssohn, 1 Weber, 1 Harold Thomas, 1 W. Shakespeare, 1 Julian Edwards, 1 H. C. Nixon. Symphonies: 1 Haydn, 1 Beethoven, 1 Schumann, 1 F. H. Cowen, with Barnett's Tone Picture, and Cowen's Language of Flowers. In the works selected by the Choral Societies with Orchestra, the same tendency to give a mixture of what is new with the older masters is observable, although, owing to the comparatively limited number of these works that are composed, the new are few in number. Those performed by The Sacred Harmonic Society were 3 by Handel, 1 Beethoven, 1 Cherubini, 5 Mendelssohn, 2 Rossini, 1 Costa, 1 Benedict, and 1 Sullivan. By The Royal Albert Choral Society: 1 by Haydn, 7 Handel, 4 Mendelssohn, 1 Rossini, 1 Macfarren, 1 Sullivan. The Bach Choir performed 3 by Bach, 1 Palestrina, 1 Vittoria, 1 Handel, 1 Cherubini, 1 Mendelssohn, 1 Schumann, 1 Pearsall, 1 W. S. Bennett, and 1 Brahms.

From this enumeration of the works performed in the short series of concerts given in the year, by each of these eight leading orchestral and choral and orchestral institutions in London, it will appear that much of what is modern and new has been introduced, the proportion in this brief summary being, for the old school, say from Bach to Sterndale Bennett, 82 works; and for the modern school and living masters, from Schubert, 63 works. Of these, however, much the largest portion of the choral works are of the older masters, of which there are 38 to 11 of the modern, while there are twelve symphonies of the former to 13 of the latter. If the same kind of examination and calculation be made as to the construction of the programmes of the other numerous musical institutions and Societies, musical festivals, chamber concerts, private concerts, pianoforte and organ recitals, lectures, etc., professional and amateur, in and about London, and throughout the kingdom, the same tendency to cultivate an acquaintance with what is new, as well as old, will be observed.

In "Chamber Music," that highly important branch of the Art, now so largely sought after and patronised by the public, the best examples of all the greatest masters of past and present times are to be found, and much in a similar proportion as in their orchestral works. See the seven programmes (at p. 19) of the Musical Union, which completed its 37th season this year; and the forty-one programmes (at p. 18) of the Monday Evening and Saturday Morning Popular Concerts, which commenced their 23rd season, and 713th concert, on the 8th of November, 1880; and finished the season with their 753rd concert on the 11th of April, 1881.

It is now, we believe, well understood that the great success attending this department of music with the public has arisen, not only from the increasing progress and cultivation of music generally, and the immense resources there are in the works of the greatest composers for a limited number of instruments; but is also to be very much attributed to the analytical remarks given upon every work performed. These remarks interest all, and, to a very large portion of the audiences, they are also educational. They direct attention to the means by which the composer produces his effects, and to what in those effects is especially worthy of admiration; being also executed by the most talented artists that can be obtained—they form the musical taste at the same time that the mind is informed. Respecting these analytical programmes, it may not be generally known that, at the end of each season, they are collected together, and published. We have before us those of the last season of the Monday and Saturday Concerts, given under the direction Mr Arthur Chappell, consisting of 1,676 pages, bound up into two large volumes, and constituting a body of information on music, with practical illustrations of the most interesting character, such as can nowhere else be found collected together.

(To be continued.)

The tenor, E. Lestellier, is re-engaged for next season at the Teatro Real, Madrid.

STUTTGART.—128 new pupils entered last autumn the Conservatory, which is under the immediate patronage of the King. The total number is now 578. Of these, 158—54 males and 104 females—are studying with a view to making music their profession. Of the above 158, 106 are not natives of Wurtemberg. Of the pupils generally, 352 belong to Stuttgart and 47 to other places in Wurtemberg, 16 to Prussia, 16 to Baden, 13 to Bavaria, 1 to Brunswick, 3 to Hesse, 1 to Saxe-Meiningen, 1 to Bremen, 2 to Hamburgh, 3 to Austria, 19 to Switzerland, 1 to France, 42 to Great Britain, 1 to Greece, 12 to Russia, 39 to North America, 3 to South America, 1 to the Sandwich Islands, 2 to India, and 3 to Java. The course of instruction during the winter half consists of 726 lessons a week, given by 40 male and 3 female teachers.

* From Carte's Musical Directory, Annual, and Almanack for 1882.

Digitized by Google

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(From our own Correspondent.)*

The programme of the fifth orchestral concert does not call for special notice. Still it contained some good things, amongst others Cherubini's overture to Faniska; Raff's Symphony, No. 5, in E, Lenore; and Beethoven's Variations in D, for strings (from a quartet).† Some parts of Raff's Symphony were well received by the audience, but I cannot see much to admire in it. True, the Andante quasi larghetto in the first part is fine and contains lovely melody tenderly handled. But one good movement does not make a symphony, in the same way as a gentleman remarked to me, in re the Demonio, by Rubinstein—"one grand duet does not make an opera." And then "The March" is surely more than bizarre, it is "a little vulgar." Miss Robertson was the vocalist of the evening.

Last Saturday evening, at the sixth popular concert, there was a tremendous house, the audience numbering about 3,000. No wonder the patrons of the cheap concerts turned out in such numbers; here is the programme:—Auber's overture to Masaniello; Monsigny's "Chaconne et Rigaudon d'Aline;" the whole of Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony; Rossini's Overture to William Tell; the introduction to the third act, Dance of Apprentices, Procession of Master Singers, from Wagner's The Master Singers of Nuremberg;" Strauss' "Blue Danube" Waltz; and a selection from Felicien David's Le Desert. It is not many years since the crowds which attend these Saturday cheap concerts would have been quite satisfied with a trumpery ballad, badly sung, or even with a nigger "breakdown." On a changé tout cela, but regarding this very remarkable change in the musical taste of Glasgow, by your kind permission, more anon.

[† "From a quartet"—and that with reference to Beethoven! What other quartet it could possibly be than the one in A major—No. 5 of the "Lobkowitz" set, Op. 18—is beyond the comprehension of Dr Bridge.]

SCRAPS FROM PARIS.

Due honour has been paid both by the Grand Opera and the Opéra-Comique, to the hundredth anniversary of Auber's birth. At the former of the two houses the programme commenced with the Muette de Portici, in the third act of which was interpolated a pas de deux, entitled "Les Calabraises," and provided with music taken from the ballet in Gustave III. It was danced by those fair and famous representatives of Terpsichore, Mdlles Sangalli and Rosita Mauri, who appeared for the first time together on the stage. As may be supposed, the opera went very well, the artists exerting themselves to the utmost. The famous duet, "Amour sacré de la Patrie," splendidly sung by MM. Villaret and Lassalle, was tumultously applauded and encored, the same honour being paid to the "Prayer" in the fourth act. After this act came a Cantata, the words of which were written by M. Philippe Gille. The music is skilfully adapted by M. Léo Delibes, who has founded it on motives from various operas of Auber's in the following order: L'Enfant prodique, Le Lac des Fées, Le Cheval de Bronze, Le Philtre, Le Dieu et la Bayadère, L'Enfant prodique, Le Cheval de Bronze, and La Muette. When the curtain rose for the performance of the Cantata, the bust of Auber, decorated with palms and wreaths, was beheld on a pedestal, leaning against which was Mdme Krauss. Lower down the stage were MM. Villaret and Lassalle, to whom, in conjunction with the lady just named, was confided the execution of the vocal solos. On each side were ranged the other members of the company, while behind them were the members of the chorus. The Cantata concludes with the "Amour Sacré" already encored in the fourth act, but, when repeated in chorus by all assembled on the vast stage, again encored, and, if possibly, even more vehemently than before, by an audience wound up to the utmost pitch of enthusiasm, the result partly of admiration for Auber and partly of patriotic feeling.

At the Opéra-Comique the programme was of a more varied character. It began with an act of Le Maçon, sung by MM. Nicot and Mouliérat, Mdlles Thuillier and Chevalier. Then came the "Desert" scene from the third act of Manon Lescaut, the artists being Mdlle Isaac and M. Furst. This was followed by a concert, or so-called "Intermède," thus constituted: First Part—Overture to Zanetta (1840); "Pâques fleuries," chorus from Fra Diavolo (1830); Air from Marco Spada (1853), sung by M. Fugère; Air and Variations from Les Diamants de la Couronne (1841), sung by Mdme Bilbaut-Vauchelet; Sarabande from Les Diamants de la Couronne, and "Danza," from Le Premier Jour de Bonheur, by the Orchestra; Quartet from La Sirène (1854), sung by MM. Talazac, Herbert, Belhomme, and Carroul; Air from Actéon (1836), sung by Mdme Carvalho. Second Part—Overture to La Part du Diable (1843); Introductory Chorus from the Cheval de Bronze (1835); Duet from Le Premier Jour de Bonheur, sung by Mdmes Carvalho and Bilbaut-Vauchelet; Air from the Cheval de Bronze, sung by M. Taskin; Quartet from Lestocq (1834), sung by Mdlles Mézeray, Dupuis, Cordier, and M. Barré; Air and Chorus from La Sirène, sung by M. Talazac and the Chorus; "Fo-Li-Fo" (1857), chorus, sung by the pupils of the Conservatory. Mdme Carvalho was especially applauded for her rendering of the air from Actéon. The concert was followed by some occasional verses from the pen of M. Jules Barbier, which were splendidly delivered by M. Delaunay, of the Théâtre-Français, the whole concluding with the ceremony of crowning Auber's bust.

MM. Pasdeloup and Colonne also celebrated the Centenary, by admitting into their respective programmes for Sunday, the 29th ult., only compositions by Auber.

Delegates from Caen, Auber's native place, attended the Centenary performance at the Grand Opera, as well as that at the Opéra-Comique.—M. Philippe, author of the words of the Centenary Cantata at the Grand Opera, has been created a member of the Legion of Honour.—M. L. Brandus, the well-known musical publisher, was knocked down some short time since by a carriage. Luckily he was not seriously hurt, having escaped with a sprained shoulder.—Joseph Wieniawski recently gave two concerts in the Salle Erard, where he has been succeeded by Anton Rubinstein.

DR ARNE.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

DEAR SIR,—I lately paid a visit to the old church of St Paul's, Covent Garden. As that distinguished composer, Dr Arne, is said to be buried there (or more probably in the churchyard adjoining), my thoughts naturally resorted to him. I observed, and was glad to see, memorial tablets of William Linley, the glee composer, and his mother; also of the veteran actor, Charles Macklin. Most of the inscriptions, however, referred to people who, however estimable in private life, were not likely to arouse much interest in the breast of a musician and antiquary like myself. Not a single scrap of eulogy, or notice of any sort, did I see about Arne.

Now, sir, this seems to me very like a national disgrace. Arne is, confessedly, one of our ablest and most elegant composers; a finer melodist cannot be mentioned—witness his lovely conceptions, "Where the bee sucks," "Under the greenwood tree," and "When daisies pied," for instance—and yet this eminent musician lies buried in an obscure grave, with no memorial of any kind to mark his place of sepulture. A poor man himself, our poet, Robert Burns, fired with generous indignation at the neglect shown to his great predecessor, Ferguson, erected at his own expense a monument over that unfortunate poet, in the Canongate Churchyard, Edinburgh—a monument that reflects honour on both the men. Will no person in this wealthy city do as much to honour the ashes of Thomas Augustine Arne? The man who, among other things, gave us "Rule, Britannia"? I trust that the mere suggestion may be sufficient to our choral societies and wealthy amateurs, and meantime remain, yours truly,

D. BAPTIE.

POSEN.—Professor and Mdme Rappoldi lately gave a concert, which opened with Schumann's Sonata in A minor, for Piano and Violin. Mdme Rappoldi performed compositions by Bank, Field, Chopin, Dräseke, Rubinstein, and Liszt; Professor Rappoldi, solos by Bott, Bach, and Schubert. He was especially applauded in R. Godard's "Concert Romantique."

MILAN.—Faccio, the Milan conductor, has received a very graceful tribute to his merit from the Brothers Corti, managers of the Scala, in the shape of a gold medal struck expressly. It bears on one side his portrait in relief, and on the other this inscription: "Scala Theatre. From the Brothers Corti, as a Mark of Gratitude and Admiration. 1881."

* Appendix to last letter—delayed in transmission.

Digitized by Google

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

(From the "Daily Telegraph," Feb. 4th.)

The work of the world goes on though generations of the workers pass successively away, and when the tools drop from stricken hands there are always others full of vigour ready to pick them up. So the concert which Sir Michael Costa had been announced to direct last night took place in due course, the bâton passing to M. Sainton, who, as oft aforetime, well filled the post vacated—temporarily, as we all trust—by his chief. In one sense Sir Michael was very emphatically present—present, that is, to the minds of the audience as the object of their thoughts and sympathies. Such a man cannot be absent from his place under conditions of sickness and peril without leaving a gap not only large but painful. We miss more than a conspicuous and familiar figure, since, in virtue of the process by which those whom we have learned to admire and esteem become, in a certain sense, part of ourselves, there is always a consciousness of personal trouble. Sir Michael may rest assured that last night's audience were with him, even, as may well be believed, he was with them. M. Sainton, we need hardly say, was an excellent deputy. For many years past the "right hand" of Sir Michael Costa, he stepped into the conductor's place as by an acknowledged law of succession, and carried on the conductor's work with the fullest perception of what was required of him. The Sacred Harmonic Society is fortunate in having so capital and experienced a musician to fall back upon under its present circumstances, for assuredly proof was given on this occasion that the next best thing to a bâton wielded by Sir Michael Costa is one in the hands of M. Sainton.

The programme opened with Handel's Coronation Anthem, "Zadok the Priest," following which came Gounod's Messe Solennelle, a work previously strange to the society's repertory. It is difficult to explain why this beautiful mass is so rarely heard amongst us, unless on the assumption that English taste in sacred music remains limited to that which we recognize as the English style. This, however, can hardly be, for the reason that whenever performed, as, for example, at the Birmingham Festival and at Mr Kuhe's Brighton Festival, the work has been received with marked approval if not with absolute enthusiasm. No other result seems to us possible under the circumstances of music instinct with the spirit of beauty, perfectly accordant with the character of a gorgeous ritual and penetrated with the essence of devotion. We must admit that, last night, the various movements were not loudly applauded, but there is a better testimony to the impressiveness of sacred art than noise, and that appeared in the profound and serious attention of the audience as the solemn theme unfolded all its pathos and grandeur. Gounod's work has taken, we hope and believe, a permanent place in the society's list of favourites, among which it is fitted to secure and maintain a distinguished place. The executants, who had been carefully prepared by Sir Michael Costa up to as late as Friday last, did fair justice to their task, though Gounod's harmonies, sometimes no less difficult than ornate, tried the chorus severely and led to occasional faultiness of intonation. Of this it would be unfair to take much notice. Music at once strange and exacting demands, for a perfect first rendering, more than ordinary conditions and average capacity can give. The solo passages were sung very well indeed by Miss Anna Williams, Mr Maas, and Mr Thorndike, while, in the beautiful "Benedictus," the orchestra played with special effect. The concert ended with Beethoven's Mount of Olives, which gave the artists above-named an excellent opportunity of distinguishing themselves. Miss Williams and Mr Maas, to whom fell the greater part of the solo work, were much and deservedly applauded, nor was Mr Thorndike denied a recognition of careful and efficient singing. At the close of the performance a special round of applause for M. Sainton testified to the satisfaction he had given as conductor.

Mdme Marie Roze.—The Queen has sent Mdme Marie Roze a handsome diamond bracelet, in remembrance of the pleasure afforded to Her Majesty when Mdme Marie Roze sang to the Queen at Osborne. Her Majesty's unerring judgment in discerning true merit has not been wanting in the present instance, and the great honour the Queen has paid Mdme Marie Roze is most deservedly bestowed.

Mr Walter Macfarren's first orchestral concert (first of a series of three) is announced for Saturday evening, February 25, when his overture to King Henry V. will be given by the orchestra, and his pupil, Miss Margaret Gyde, will play his pianoforte "concert-stück" in E. Beethoven's Symphony in C minor, as well as Weber's overture to Oberon and Mozart's to Die Zauberflöte, are also in the programme. Miss Mary Davies and Mr Santley are to be the singers, and Mr Walter Macfarren will conduct.

PERSECUTION OF THE JEWS IN RUSSIA.*

Up from the land where the autocrat's heel
Dares to stem throbbing Liberty's flood,
Where the throne is upheld on a phalanx of steel,
And the crown Revolution has stamped with its seal,
Comes the wail of foul rapine and blood.

O Warsaw, that heel laid thy patriots low
When the tyrant's hoof swept o'er thy plain;
But the dragon's teeth sown by Tartarean foe
Mid the shadows of death, with its havoc and woe,
Thou art reaping in harvests of slain.

Landless and homeless thy victims have trod
Through the long weary ages, exiled,
But the blood that now cries for revenge from thy sod
Hath aforetime evoked the fierce anger of God,
And the spoiler became the despoiled.

Beware, lest the wail now piercing the sky
Should unseal the dread vials of wrath;
Lest the Angel of Death from eternity fly
With the bolts of his fury to smite hip and thigh,
As he sweeps o'er his desolate path.

Breaks there no ray through the vanishing years
On the down-trodden race in their pain?
May it be that the long-despised Shiloh appears
In the cry of deep anguish and passionate tears,
To restore them to favour again.

* Copyright. WETSTAR.

Carl Rosa Opera Company.—In The Flying Dutchman, the successes of Mdme Valleria as the self-sacrificing heroine, and that of Mr Ludwig as the bold sea captain, perpetually condemned to the waves, winds, and tempests he has impiously defied, are confirmed. Mr Ludwig has never appeared before the public to such advantage—which, following directly in the wake of Mr Santley, redounds all the more highly to his credit. About Mdme Valleria, of whose triumphs in the Old World her compatriots in the New should justly feel proud, the like may be asserted. Her dramatic embodiment of Senta is gentle, engaging, and thoroughly in keeping with the romantic sentimentality of that dreamy personage; while her execution of the music, so often trying to the voice, is invariably artistic and expressive. With regard to other characters, it will suffice to add that they are all more or less in competent hands; nevertheless, whether the Flying Dutchman, or for the matter of that Lohengrin, be destined to attract the London public as at the beginning is clearly open to question. Rienzi, however, and what, from a Wagnerian point of view, is of still larger significance, Tannhäuser, are yet to come. Why did not Mr Rosa, with the aid of Mr J. P. Jackson, bring out an English version of the Meistersinger at once, and conduct it himself? He has the score by heart, as we have cause to know; and should he not be able or willing at the time, there is his alter ego, Mr Randegger, ready at command. The always welcome Mignon of Ambroise Thomas has been given, as a matter of course, and it is agreeable to record the legitimate success of Mr Barton M'Guckin, one of the youngest and most promising of our tenors, in the not over-grateful part of Wilhelm Meister, which, in a vocal sense, he has completely mastered, while showing unquestionable advance in another direction, to attain equal proficiency in which he must devote yet further thought and study. Miss Julia Gaylord's Mignon is, from beginning to end, a most engaging personation of one of the most engaging characters in all romance. Here there is no necessity for straining the voice, as she is compelled to do in the far more arduous part of Elsa, and the result is a manifest gain. Miss Georgiana Burns is a sprightly Filina; Mr Crotty a good Lothario; Mr Betjemann a Giarno beyond dispute; Miss La Rue an acceptable Frederic; and Mr C. Lyall—than whom few operatic actors can make so much out of little, without the slightest attempt at exaggerated personal display—an inimitable Laertes. More about Mignon, except that it pleased, and was applauded as much as ever, would be superfluous.—Graphic.

In consequence of the recent financial disasters in France, the Vicomtesse de la Panouze (Mdlle Heilbronn) returns to the lyric stage.

Digitized by Google

ST JAMES'S HALL.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS,

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON, 1881-82.

DIRECTOR—MR S. ARTHUR CHAPPELL.

THE TWENTY-SEVENTH CONCERT OF THE SEASON

WILL TAKE PLACE ON

MONDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 13, 1882,

At Eight o'clock precisely.

Programme.

PART I.—Quintet, in A major, for two violins, clarinet, viola, and violoncello (Mozart)—MM. Hollander, L. Ries, Lazarus, Zerbini, and Piatti; Song, "Sleep, heart of mine" (Henry Smart)—Mr Barrington Foote; Prelude and Fugue, à la Tarantella, for pianoforte alone (Bach)—Mdlle Marie Krebs.

PART II.—Kol Nidrei, for violoncello, with pianoforte accompaniment (Max Bruch), first time—Signor Piatti; Song, "Au bruit des lourds Marteaux" (Gounod)—Mr Barrington Foote; Trio, in B flat, Op. 11, for pianoforte, clarinet, and violoncello (Beethoven)—Mdlle Marie Krebs, MM. Lazarus and Piatti.

Accompanist—MR ZERBINI.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 11, 1882,

At Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

Quartet, in B flat, Op. 18, No. 6, for two violins, viola, and violoncello (Beethoven)—MM. Hollander, L. Ries, Zerbini, and Piatti; Sonata, in A minor, Op. 42, for pianoforte alone (Schubert)—Miss Agnes Zimmermann; Sonata, in A major, Op. 69, for pianoforte and violoncello (Beethoven)—Miss Agnes Zimmermann and Signor Piatti; Liebeslieder-Walzer, Op. 52, for four hands on the pianoforte, with voice parts ad libitum (Brahms)—pianists: Miss Agnes Zimmermann and Mr Zerbini, vocalists: Mdlle Friedlander and Mdme Isabel Fassett, MM. Shakespeare and Pyatt.

Accompanist—MR ZERBINI.

DEATHS.

On January 21st, at 11, Cavendish Place, Cavendish Square, Signor CESARE VASCHETTI, aged 55.

On February 2nd, at 15, Westbourne Place, Eaton Square, Signor FABIO CAMPANA, aged 67.

On February 3rd, suddenly, Mr JAMES MALTSTER, aged 66, for many years a most faithful and valued assistant to Messrs Robert Cocks & Co., New Burlington Street.

To ——.

Although you like me well enough
To bite your lips to hide a smile,
Which may be laughter or may be love,
Sorrow is not gone yet awhile.

For yesterday you seemed so far,
So far that I had never given
A thought to you, but as the star
That lifted up my face to Heaven.

And now when Love is come at last,
Now when I nearly touch your heart
And feel it beating warm and fast,
The dull world forces us apart.

Epps.

MR W. H. HOLMES' "Fantasia Sonata," founded on the initial letters of Professor Macfarren's Christian name (G. A.), has just been published by Messrs Forsyth, of Manchester and London. The Sonata is dedicated to Mdme Natalia Macfarren.

MDME ALBANI left London on Tuesday morning, vid Boulogne and Paris, to fulfil her engagement at Monaco, where she will remain a month, singing in Faust, Hamlet, Lucia, and Rigoletto, assisted by Mdlle Vanzandt and Mdme Scalchi, MM. Gayarre, Faure, and Maurel.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1882.

A New Editor.

DR BEARD.—This new scheme puzzles me. I have perused the entire correspondence with the calmness which is in me a pronounced idiosyncracy; yet I can gather nothing from it beyond the fact that if Londonopoly—in other language, centralization—must prevail, no other chief of an English Royal College of Music than George Alexander Macfarren, successor to William Sterndale Bennett, can by any stretch of imagination be preferred. Nevertheless, in my new position as substitute for Mr Dishley Peters (who has been summoned by Mr Ap'Mutton, to assist him in his researches north of the constellation, "Orion"), it is my bounden duty to examine with care this much agitated controversy. I have, just now, but scant leisure, since I hereby officiate "on the spur of the moment"—as one Shakspere describes a hasty and unanticipated resolve. One communication, however, I must read without delay, proceeding as it does from the St Cecilia Magazine, edited, as I hear, by my very old and respected friend, Sir Julius Benedict, who revived the immortality of "St Cecilia" at Norwich, through a masterpiece that will endure as long as St Cecilia herself. Let me read attentively.

[Pulls out Magazine and reads.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(From the "St Cecilia Magazine.")

Under her long-continued immunity from European war, it is perfectly natural that England should turn her attention to the encouragement of the arts of peace, not only to industries and manufactures, which she can never wholly dispense with, but to those higher arts which, as they are consequent on cultivated tastes and intellectual refinement, belong only to the highest civilization. England is not now and never can be a military nation, and we may therefore suppose that the paths of peace are at all times more congenial to her people than the pursuits of war; and if ever the time shall come that will witness an end of strife, the result will be due not to any specific designed expressly to meet the evil, but to the development of the arts. Trade and commerce, not arms, will form the base of re-constituted society, and of this structure the fine arts will crown the summit.

Whether it arises from our isolated position, or whether it is that the religion of the country has been unfavourable to the study and practice of art, it is not our purpose to inquire. It is still the case that, with the advantages of peace in our favour, music at all events in Great Britain has not occupied the proud position assigned to it by the other nations of Europe. And when, at the beginning of the last century, we were still hesitating on our acceptance of Purcell's compositions, the Emperor Leopold of Austria was spending thousands of pounds sterling in mounting the operas of his favourite composers. At a much later period, the sisters of the Emperor Charles VI. were not ashamed to be seen on the operatic stage in following out their tastes. With the appearance of Handel in England under George I., a new era for music, however, may be said to have dawned upon our country. The rehearsal of the Messiah in Dublin at the beginning of the year 1742 secured a place for the divine art in the hearts of the people, the roots of which have struck deeper and deeper, and from which it can never be severed.

Digitized by Google

It was not, however, until the year 1822 that the increasing musical tastes of the nation found an echo in the establishment of the Academy of Music, under the auspices of the State, with an annual endowment of the munificent sum of £500 (!) less in amount than would be spent in the course of a single hour on some explosive experiment at Woolwich. Fifty-three years later music received a still further recognition in the establishment of the "School of Music" at South Kensington, which, however, is not in any sense the debtor of the State. The demand for musical education was not even yet satisfied. The schools already in existence had no other effect than that of multiplying the disciples of the art they had been founded to teach, and it is to the credit of the Corporation of London that they came in this emergency to the aid of musical art in the country. Commencing with 200 students only eighteen months ago, the Guildhall School of Music at present numbers 1,000 members. With all these opportunities, however, the increasing want of means of gaining musical education is every day more experienced throughout the country. Under these circumstances, it cannot be surprising to find that more than one of the members of our royal family should have spoken plainly on the question as it stands between the government and the people, even to the length of upbraiding statesmen, for what must be deemed culpable ignorance of an art, ministering, as music does, so thoroughly to the pleasure of the most cultivated and refined and intellectual portion of the community.

The address delivered by His Royal Highness the Duke of Albany to the members of the Athenæum Musical Society of Manchester, at the end of last year, has now become famous. In that address Prince Leopold clearly points out our deficiencies in respect of the means at our disposal of musical education, and is not afraid to tax our governing bodies with indifference to their duties. "It was too much a rule in England," he said, "that a poet, a statesman, a theologian, a great natural philosopher should not only know nothing of music, but should take no interest in it." This most unenviable state of things is likely soon to come to an end. On this occasion Prince Leopold found an able second in His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh; and now the Prince of Wales has placed himself at the head of the movement, and it is proposed that a Royal College of Music should forthwith be established in London, on a scale equal to meet the necessities of the empire. That such a proposal should merit the approval not only of the musical teaching profession, but of the nation at large, was to be expected. Under any conditions it would have been welcome, but coming from those who by birth stand at the head of English society, it is doubly grateful to the hearts of the people. Strangely enough, however, it has found enemies where they might have been least expected; and the proposal which was made, without reference to any existing institution, has already been identified with the National School of Music, supported by private enterprise; and as a consequence the scheme, to judge by the correspondence to which the question has given rise, has been condemned with a vehemence of language which would have been refreshing in the defence of our liberties, but wholly inapplicable to a case, the merits of which time alone can test.

* * * * * * * *

If the Royal Academy has taken alarm at the proposal to institute a Royal College of Music, it may have done so too soon. It has not been shown, so far as the movement has gone, that there is any intention on the part of the promoters of the scheme to overlook the claims of the Royal Academy. It will be time enough to cry out when once they have been hurt; but they have not been hurt. There is no avowed intention to hurt them, and until there is some proof of an evil disposition evinced, silence would be more becoming than complaint. As it is, the Royal Academy possesses a Royal Charter, and derives some emolument from the State; in the event of the establishment of a Royal College of Music it is obvious the State must first deal with the existing institution, and the probability is that the staff of professors who now find employment in Tenterden Street would be transferred to the Royal College, wherever that may be planted. If the site of the National Training School, with its adjoining buildings, offers advantages desirable in the formation of the new Institution, why should the State be prevented from availing itself of the position? There is really no obstacle in existence towards union between the Royal Academy and the school at South Kensington; and it is quite immaterial to the question at issue whether or not the patrons of the National School contracted to support that institution for five or for ten years. So far as the movement has gone, it has the support of the nation; and if any objection were made, it is not that the scheme goes too far, but that it does not go far enough. How does it happen, one might ask, in all the reasons adduced for bringing this College of Music into existence, that Scotland has never been mentioned once? Is Scotland no part of the Empire? Has she no musical youths? Scotland has her Universities—more, in her principal University, a Music Chair. How has it not occurred to those who take a lead in this movement to consider the claims of Scotland equally with those of England? No doubt, London is the metropolis of the Empire, and is entitled to priority; but, to all intents and purposes, Scotland is still a kingdom, and she will be unjust to herself if, in the settlement of a matter so vital to her interests as that of music, she does not make her voice heard. Centralization is good, but may, indeed, be carried so far as to choke the life of the nation—a most undesirable result. At the same time, Edinburgh possesses peculiar advantages for the foundation of a School of Music under Royal Charter. The presence of the Musical Chair in the University itself may be regarded as the nucleus of such an institution; and if, as we learn, a convention is to be held in the course of the present month, consisting of musical representatives from all parts of the country, it may be hoped that the Professor of Music may find an opportunity then of urging the claims of Scotland in this respect on the assembly.

DR BEARD.—*Well, calmly speaking (as is my wont, and as will be proved—*D. V. next May), I can see nothing in this but a repetition of arguments already pulverized into dust by my revered associate, Thaddeus Egg the Greater. I may, however, call attention to the last paragraph, which I have instructed Master Wetstar to separate from the context, by a line of asterisks. Here, it will be observed, by what the "analyst" of the Popular Concerts would call "attentive readers," that the whole argument involved in the preceding four paragraphs is substantially knocked on the head. "Off with the heads," then. Let us ponder with "anxious polyscopity"—as dear old J. V. B. translates the Oracle at Bayreuth—and dwell upon the tail.

Next week (pace the Manchester aristarchs) ———

GUARDIAN (by telephone).—A parenthesis means what may be omitted.

Digitized by Google

Examiner and Times (by telephone).—Signifying nothing in particular.

Dr Beard (continues).—Notwithstanding this impertinent intrusion by means of the newly invented substitute for "Mouchard," I say, in the greedily open ears of the Manchester aristarchs (closing his telephone communicator), that next week, I shall have a word or two to say about Charles Hallé and centralization generally. By my beard I swear it!

Schluss folgt.

En Erindring.

Do you remember once in May
Going to St Germain, to pass
A very lovely sunny day
Beneath the trees, upon the grass:
'Twas just before you went away?

We fled the city for the wood
And wandered, and the early green
Was not so thick but what one could
Behold the sweet blue sky between;
The birds were in a quiet mood.

I walk there often in the year,
When headache beats upon my brain,
To breathe the pure and silent air
In thought—and by that time, the pain
Leaves me, as you did, O my dear!

Piff.

CONCERTS.

Popular Concerts.—At a recent Saturday Concert an interesting feature was the Sextet in F sharp minor of the late Sterndale Bennett, for pianoforte and stringed instruments, introduced by Mdlle Marie Krebs in 1875, and now given for the second time with equal acceptance. Though composed at the age of nineteen, this is allowed by musicians and cultured amateurs to be a masterwork. Mdlle Krebs plays it so admirably and enters so thoroughly into its spirit as to cause regret that she does not more frequently exercise her talent on compositions from the same pen. There are plenty for her to choose from. She was associated on the present occasion with MM. Straus, Ries, Piatti, Hollander, and White, four among whom were her companions seven years ago, during which interval, from a brilliant executant she has laboured earnestly to obtain the position she now holds as a genuine artist of unquestioned eminence. At the same concert the programme included Spohr's melodious Quintet in G, for stringed instruments. Mdlle Krebs, besides playing the Sonata Pastorale of Beethoven, joined Signor Piatti in three of the five Stücke im Volkston of Schumann (Nos. 1, 2, and 4), in the second of which the cantabile playing of the King of Violoncellists was beyond praise; and Mr Barrington Foote (of Her Majesty's Theatre) had the good taste to select the late Henry's Smart's exquisite song, "Sleep, heart of mine," from the British Vocal Album, originally published, many years ago, by the firm of Wessel and Stapleton (now Ashdown & Parry), and edited by J. W. Davison. On the Monday following, an octett in A for violins, violas, and violoncellos, by the Norwegian composer, Johann Severin Svendsen, was played for the first time, and attracted considerable attention. Though very unequal, this octett is full of primitive charm, derived in a large measure from its composer's instinctive feeling for the national melodies of his native land. All the themes of which the four movements are made up possess the true Scandinavian colour, and in several instances are employed to excellent purpose, being set forth and carried out with happy ingenuity. On the other hand, the work is diffuse to excess—a fault, by the way, attributable to a large majority of our ambitious present-day composers, who think too much of the "heavenly length" which Schumann extols as a characteristic to be prized, alike in certain novels of Jean Paul Richter and in the last orchestral Symphony of Schubert, about whom Schumann raves more in the style of a lover than in that of an impartial critic. Nevertheless, the octett was a welcome stranger, and executed as it was by Herr Straus, Signor Piatti, and their associates, was welcomed as such. The remainder of the programme was of well sustained interest, Miss Santley (continually progressing) was the singer, and the always welcome Marie Krebs, again the pianist.—Graphic.

Tufnell Park Choral Society.—On several occasions we have drawn attention to the important doings of musical societies working in the vast outlying districts of the metropolis, and a moment's reflection serves to show that this may become our duty more often in the future than in the past. As London stretches farther and farther from its centre, and as the suburban population continues to increase, the necessity of local effort to provide means of musical culture and entertainment becomes proportionately more obvious. Already societies of the highest class exist far away from the musical heart of the town. We need only mention by way of examples, the Hackney Choral Union and the South London Choral Union, since these bodies have appeared in St James's Hall, and won recognition of their previously unknown merit. Others attract attention now and then by excellence or enterprise, and the list was extended on Thursday, Feb. 2nd., when the Tufnell Park Choral Society, conducted by Mr W. H. Thomas, gave a concert in the Athenæum, Camden Road, and performed Hofmann's Cinderella for the first time in England. The significance of this event should not be overlooked. It may indicate that the healthy energies of suburban amateurs are making them progress faster than do those who should be their exemplars; and it suggests a possibility that we may shortly have to turn away from Regent Street and its neighbourhood when the question arises of making acquaintance with a new work. Anyhow the production of novelty by outlying societies is an excellent sign—one to welcome, encourage and take heart from. The librettist of Cinderella has treated the nursery story very judiciously, ridding it of homely, prosaic, and ludicrous elements unfit for musical treatment, and introducing episodes of a higher character in their place. The sisters of the heroine do not appear in the "argument;" the fairy that came in the guise of an old woman is transformed into a fairy queen, with all her subjects around her; and the glass slipper fails to find its owner, in order that the despairing lover of Cinderella, having wandered into the haunts of the "little people," might pass triumphantly through a scene of temptation and then enjoy at their hands the only reward he cares for—the presence of his bride. The same spirit of change, with a view to elevation of character and greater nobility of incident, appear in matters of detail, Cinderella's coach being made of a cloud, and her horses of flashing lightnings. Moreover, with true German instinct for mysticism, the anxious lover encounters his fairy friends as they sit, like the Fates, spinning the threads of destiny. All these alterations, we are bound to admit, make a very pretty and poetical subject for the composer to work upon. The music, generally speaking, is marked by Hofmann's elaboration of detail and freedom of handling, as well as by his rarely failing aptitude of expression. It is somewhat difficult, and calls for steady work on the part of those who would master it, but this is a case in which the game pays for the candle, and leaves a profit over. The songs and choruses of the fairies are especially good, without the drawback of conventionalism. Hofmann's fancy is here to a considerable extent original, and almost wholly charming, the only question being whether, in his revolt against the conventional, he has not gone too far in the other direction. The music of the mortals presents a studied and welcome contrast in its simpler structure, while that assigned to the heroine is a successful attempt at melodic characterization. In the scene of the temptation Hofmann puts forth all his imaginative power with results decidedly interesting. It is here, in fact, that he most shows himself capable of dealing with a supernatural theme, and so brings to a climax the evidence of ability which is conspicuous throughout. Cinderella, alike by reason of its subject and its music, is a welcome addition to our store of cantatas, and should achieve popularity forthwith. The performance was surprisingly good, having regard to the difficulties presented. Only a high average of ability, well directed and hard worked, could have made it possible, and we congratulate Mr W. H. Thomas and the members of the society upon a success of which they have a right to be proud. The solos were sung by Miss Margaret Hoare (Cinderella), Miss Philps (Queen), Mr James Sauvage (Prince), and Mr Grylls. All did well—Miss Philps and Mr Grylls, not less well as amateurs than their colleagues as professionals; but a special word of praise is due to Mr Sauvage for really excellent singing. This gentleman's fine baritone voice and manly style should serve him to good purpose. In the absence of an orchestra, the accompaniments were efficiently played by Mr Frank L. Thomas, Mr S. Partridge, and Mr F. Partridge, on a pianoforte and two harmoniums, Mr Frank Thomas distinguishing himself by work at once steady and correct. There only remains to congratulate the excellent conductor and his society upon the result of a bold venture, which should encourage them to further effort.—D. T.

* * * * * * * * *

(From a well-known Correspondent.)—An evening concert was given by Mr W. Henry Thomas on Thursday, the 2nd inst., at the

Digitized by Google

Athenæum, Camden Road, to exhibit the proficiency of this well-known society, and certainly the conductor must be complimented on the manner in which the music was given. It is at all times a laborious duty providing music for large singing classes; for if the works are well known the members complain of sameness, and it is not an easy matter at all times to obtain novelties, as there are always more exponents than creators even of average ability. Mr Thomas has on this occasion turned his eyes abroad, and found in Germany a work by Herr Hofmann, never before heard in London, and a very suitable work it is for a choral society. Herr Hoffmann's librettist, in taking the old nursery story of Cinderella, has changed one of the simplest and one of the most attractive of our fairy tales into a commonplace extravaganza. The charm of the little cinder maiden's history is that taken from the kitchen she is transformed into a lady, and sent to the Prince's ball for the Prince to fall in love with. Here he is called the King, and he tells you long before that exciting ball scene—so dear to all children—takes place:

"There, where the brooklet flows,
A maiden once I found,
More fair than blushing rose,
By pearly dew drops crown'd.
I swore to my heart then to love her,
To make her my bride and my queen."

So that when the ball does take place, instead of the Prince being smitten at first sight by the little beauty, he goes wandering about the room looking for the wondrous maid, and singing most dolefully "Shall I ever behold her, my darling, my queen?" The whole story, as here told, abounds with spirits and wood nymphs and will-o'-the-wisps, and we are informed that "crickets chirp 'neath the trees," but the whole charm has vanished. An attendant very kindly informs the King that the lovely maiden who was his partner at the ball has lost her "tiny silken shoe" from off her foot, and the King issues the usual proclamation, but there is no trying on, no envy of rival claimants for the shoe. We must not use the word glass slipper, for it is a mistranslation of pantoufle en vair for pantoufle en verre, and should be a fur slipper and not a glass one. The poor little cinder girl is turned into a German frow, sleeping in a wood in the day time, to attract a restless king, who is desirous of "hunting a nobler game." But words or story are not everything in a cantata, and Herr Hofmann has managed to introduce some melodious choral music and some few solos of more than average merit. It is very suitable for class singing, and some of the choruses are decidedly effective. The greatest praise must be given to Mr W. Henry Thomas for the careful manner in which he has drilled his choir. Concerted music and solos were given with marked expression and correct intonation. Mr Frank L. Thomas, in the pianoforte accompaniments, also merited commendation for the admirable spirit he displayed. In all the introductions of the three parts he played with firmness and expression, and contributed in no small degree to the success of the whole performance. Miss Margaret Hoare, Miss Price, Miss Philps, and Mr James Sauvage gave the solos, Mr Partridge assisting at the harmonium. After this new work the concert ended with the first part of The Creation, in which Mr Alfred Smith and Mr Lewis Thomas added their weight and influence to the members of the choir already mentioned, and, I need hardly add, with excellent effect.—PHOSPHOR.

ALBERT HALL.—On Wednesday evening last the sixth of the present series of concerts was given by the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society under the direction of Mr Barnby. The programme consisted of Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise and Rossini's Stabat Mater, a pair of works which have often been in similar association, and, though so opposite in vein and character, rank among our choicest treasures of devotional music. The performance of Mendelssohn's sublime cantata left little to be desired, for it may easily be assumed that so conscientious and vigilant a conductor as Mr Barnby would secure that. His orchestra is quite equal to the demands made upon it, however exacting, and hence the audience were favoured with a highly satisfactory reading of the opening Sinfonia, and at the same time a welcome opportunity of again recognizing the exquisite beauty of the three movements which form, as it were, typical applications of the annunciatory text, as conveyed in the prefatory chorale and the majestic developments to which it is subjected. The principal vocal music was executed with ample efficiency by the artists who were entrusted with it. Mdme Lemmens Sherrington was the soprano, and sang, with her usual ability, the solos "Praise thou the Lord" and "The night is departing," and, with Miss Henrietta Beebe, that most interesting and trustful of all devotional ejaculations, "I waited for the Lord." The tenor air, "The sorrows of death," and the touching recitative to which it leads, devolved upon Mr Maas, who had previously obtained an encore, had he cared to accept it, in the lovely air "He counteth all your sorrows." We are too familiar with the Choral Society over which Mr Barnby so carefully presides, not to know that it would illustrate its capability to the best advantage. Both in the independent choruses, and in those constituting interlocutions to the soloists, the precision of the attack, and the variety of the colouring, did honour to the singers, and proclaimed repeatedly the matured state of their discipline. The Stabat Mater of Rossini which followed the Lobgesang, challenged the usual admiration. Picturesquely dramatic in every sense of the word, and essentially Italian in its flowing cantilena and brilliant instrumentation, it will be long before the charm that so inherently belongs to this work will yield to more modern influences and fade wholly away. The performance, like that of the great sinfonia-cantata which preceded it, was of a highly finished kind. The "Cujus animam" of Mr Maas, the "Pro precatis" of Signor Foli, the "Fac ut portem" of Mdme Isabel Fassett, and the "Inflammatus" of Mdme Lemmens Sherrington, were each as attractive as singing of unqualified excellence could make them; and the same eulogy may be extended to the choruses, which were delivered throughout without flaw or indecision. The hall was well filled with visitors in every part. H.

MR HAMILTON CORBETT, Scottish vocalist, is now giving a series of concerts, extending over three weeks from Monday last, at the Steinway Hall. Mr Corbett has travelled much in the United States, Canada, &c., and has earned golden opinions wherever he has gone. Possessing a pleasing tenor voice of considerable power and compass, much versatility and dramatic force, Mr Corbett has no difficulty in entertaining his audiences for two hours, aided only by Mr J. M. Harrison, his able "Pianist, cornetist, and instrumentalist." Like all "Scottish vocalists," Mr Corbett has an individuality peculiarly his own, and so naturally does he "act" his songs and his stories, that the stage is at once suggested as a fitting field for his abilities, in some of the Scottish characters created by Sir Walter Scott. That Mr Corbett's audiences at the Steinway Hall are mostly Scotch, soon becomes evident, so ready is the appreciation throughout of all that is tender, patriotic, or humorous in Scottish song; but the programme is not confined exclusively to the "auld Scots sangs." Programme No. 4, which was given on Thursday night, contained two English songs and two Irish, all of which seemed to be equally appreciated. Mr Corbett, however, slyly reminded his audience that "The Village Blacksmith" was written by Longfellow, and "The Battle of the Baltic" and "Ye Mariners of England," &c., by Tom Campbell; so that if the two latter were to be regarded as English songs, it could only be by Englishmen claiming to be of Scottish descent. We refer this point to Mr William Chappell.

A concert was given on Tuesday evening, February 7th, in the girls' school room, Endell Street, St Giles-in-the-Fields, which was very successful, giving great pleasure evidently to the "people" for whom it was arranged. The Rev. Canon Nesbit was "in the chair," and the singers and players (nearly all amateurs), who kindly gave their assistance, were Misses Joseph, Mary Chatterton, and S. Clayton; Messrs O. Borradaile and J. P. Clayton; and Mrs Sutton Sharpe—who not only played Liszt's "Regatta Veneziana," but took part with Mrs R. E. Tyler and Mr Spencer Tyler in Lealie's trio, "O memory," and also sang two duets, "The Sabbath morn," with Mrs R. E. Tyler, and Verdi's "Si la stanchezza" (Trovatore), with Mr Spencer Tyler.

PROVINCIAL.

BUSHEY.—An evening concert was given at the British School-room, Merry Hill, on Wednesday evening, by Miss E. Loft, a young vocalist of much promise. Miss Loft possesses a soprano voice of pure quality and considerable compass, and showed her musical intelligence in her delivery of the songs "She wandered down" (Clay), "Some Day" (Wellings), and "Fairly caught" (Diehl). In addition to soli by Miss Alice Bertram, Messrs Raeder, G. A. Young, Jones, Waud, and Arthur Cottam, part songs—classical, sentimental, and humorous—were agreeably rendered by the "Minnesingers" (led by Mr Cottam)—the audience being specially gratified by Reichardt's "Tears of anguish," and a sprightly setting by Mackenzie of the well-known versical joke in the Ingoldsby Legends, "A Franklyn's Dogge." The instrumentalists were Miss May Johnston (amateur pianist), and Mr Louis Diehl (violinist). Miss May Johnston joined Mr Diehl in Osborne and De Beriot's duet for violin and pianoforte on airs from William Tell, and in Chopin's difficult Polonaise in A flat exhibited a finished execution, added to natural gifts of touch, expression, and rhythmic phrasing surprising in an amateur. The concert was under the direction of Mr Arthur Cottam and Mr Louis Diehl.

BRIGHTON.—Last Saturday afternoon the banquetting room of the Pavilion was well filled by a fashionable audience, to witness the production of a new operetta, in one act, written by Mr Arthur

Digitized by Google

Law, music by Miss Harriet Young, and entitled An Artist's Proof. The bénéficiare was Mdlle De Ribeaucourt. The stage effects for the operetta were admirable, and the piece was dressed and sustained in capital style. It is seldom the privilege of provincial journalists to have to record that their town possesses a musical amateur capable of composing an operetta, with songs, trios, duets, and all the other accessories necessary for a successful performance in public; but it gives us much pleasure to say that Brighton possesses one in the person of Miss Harriet Young, of Brunswick place. This lady has previously composed operettas and many very charming songs and duets, but her latest production, An Artist's Proof, is, indeed, a "proof" of her genuine talent and great perseverance. If space permitted, we should have liked to have entered fully into the plot and particulars, but we must content ourselves and our readers by saying that it was an immense success from beginning to end. Not having the pianoforte score before us, we cannot enter into as full a criticism of the whole work as it deserves, but we must specially mention the "Rose Song," a little gem, and a genuine inspiration, sung most charmingly by Miss Annie Sinclair. The operetta was evidently much enjoyed, in fact, we have had nothing to equal it from an amateur since the days of the late talented Miss Virginia Gabriel. Miss Young accompanied her operetta most artistically, and was called forward by the well-pleased audience at its close.—Brighton Guardian.

—o—

MR SIMS REEVES' CONCERT.

The second of Mr Sims Reeves' series of concerts was given on Tuesday evening at St James's Hall, and consisted of operatic, national, and miscellaneous music, the most interesting part being a selection from Professor Macfarren's much admired opera, Robin Hood, in which Mr Reeves and Mdme Lemmens-Sherrington, two of the singers on the occasion under notice, were the "creators" of the characters of Robin Hood and Maid Marian, when the opera was produced at Her Majesty's Theatre some years ago. Both artists were on their mettle, Mr Reeves giving "The grasping, rasping Norman race" with so much spirit and such fine declamation, that an uproarious demand for its repetition compelled the great tenor to sing it again, which he did, better, if possible, than before. Mr Reeves, however, did not sing "My own, my guiding star," set down for him, an apology being made "that he wished to reserve himself for the popular sea song, 'Tom Bowling,' which he had to give later on." The charming romance was entrusted to Mr Abercrombie, and the young tenor sang it so much to the satisfaction of his audience that he was called upon to repeat it. Mdme Sherrington gave the scena, "Hail happy morn," and the ballad, "True love," con amore, and was compelled to return to bow her acknowledgments for the hearty applause awarded to her. The Sumptner's song—"The monk within his cell"—was capitally rendered by Mr Barrington Foote, and the round, "May the Saints protect and guide thee," by Miss Santley, Messrs Abercrombie, Barrington Foote, and H. Pyatt. The audience were quite in a "holiday humour" during the rest of the evening, "encoring" Mr Pyatt in "The Wolf," Mdme Sherrington in "I've been roaming," Miss Spenser Jones in "The banks of Allan Water," and Miss Santley in "Wapping Old Stairs" (exceptionally well sung, by the bye). When Mr Reeves came on to sing "Tom Bowling," he was received with hearty cheers. At its conclusion there was an ovation, and he had to return and "bow and bow again." During the evening the lovers of good instrumental music were delighted with the performance, among other pieces, of the andante and finale from Mozart's Quintet for pianoforte, oboe, clarinet, horn, and bassoon, by the "Anemoic Union" (Messrs Sidney Naylor, Malsch, Lazarus, Mann, and Wotton). At the next concert the operatic selection will be from Donizetti's Lucia di Lammermoor.

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY commenced their seventieth season on Thursday evening at St James's Hall. The first part of the programme consisted of the overtures to Der Freyschütz and Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg, Molique's Violin Concerto in A minor (magnificently played by Mr Carrodus), the "Chorus of Reapers" from Liszt's Prometheus, and the beautiful quartet from Sterndale Bennett's Woman of Samaria. The second part was devoted to Beethoven's Choral Symphony ("The Colossal No. 9"). The solo vocalists were Misses Marriott and Orridge, Messrs F. Boyle and Barrington Foote, assisted by the Philharmonic choir. Further particulars in our next.

TWO IMPROMPTUS.

(Rejected by Pt Punch*).

No. I.

(Before Supper.)

Says Gog to Magoggy—
"You're a hungry old doggy."
Says Magog to Goggy—
"You're a famished old hoggy."

FLEET GRIFFIN.

No. II.

(After Supper.)

Says Magog to Goggy—
"It's a wee bit o'er foggy."
Says Gog to Magoggy—
"You're a wee bit o'er groggy."

OG OF THE CUBITS.

* Although rejected by Pt Punch, these impromptus are still open to him (for a consideration) as likely, in this "advanced" period, to further enrich his already priceless collection of quiddities.—Dr Blitge.

BERLIN.

(Correspondence.)

The Italian operatic season was to commence at the Victoria Theater, with La Favorita. Among the novelties promised are Marchetti's Ruy Blas, and Arrigo Boito's Mefistofele. The company, it is said, is a very good one. Sig. Gialdini is the conductor. —The second series of Monday Concerts was inaugurated on the 23rd ult., and a new Quartet Association began its public existence the day following. It consists of Herren Kotek, 1st violin; Exner, 2nd violin; Moser, tenor; and Dechert, violoncello, all young artists trained under the eye of Joseph Joachim himself. Speaking of them, the Neue Berliner Musikzeitung observes:

"Of course they have no idea of setting up in opposition to their Master's Quartet; they merely propose filling up a gap which has been long felt in the busy musical life of Berlin. Leaving entirely out of consideration the fact that one quartet is not enough, only a small contingent of those who admire this kind of music can, on account of being, as it were, compelled to become subscribers, enjoy the benefit even of the one. Then again, owing to the Master's long concert tours, weeks intervene during which no quartet is to be heard in this large city, and the consequence is that all who like music joyfully welcome the new enterprise. They may do so with the more confidence, as those who have started it afford an excellent guarantee that it will be admirably carried out. From what he has done at concerts, Herr Kotek has long been known as an excellent violinist; Exner, educated in Joachim's school, has taken Holländer's place in the Royal Orchestra; Moser, a Czoech, after making a name in Switzerland, also became, in the same school, a splendid executant and took up the tenor in the quartet; Herr Dechart, who has already highly distinguished himself at concerts as a solo-violoncellist, and is now a Royal Prussian Chamber Musician, enchanted everyone on the opening evening by his wonderful tone."

The first concert went off successfully.—An excellent performance of Beethoven's Missa Solemnis has been given by Stern's Vocal Association assisted by the Berlin Sinfoniecapelle, the whole under the direction of Professor E. Rudorff. The vocal solos were well sung by Mad. Müller-Ronneburger, Mdlle Adele Asmann, Herren von d. Meden, and Strange.

HAMBURGH.—The third Song-Festival of Germany (Deutsches Gesangfest) will be held here from the 10th to the 13th August inclusive. The musical direction will be mostly in the hands of Professor von Bernuth, and Dr Kirchenpauer, Burgomaster, will act as President.

It is rumoured at Naples that the authorities of Palermo strongly advised Wagner not to take walking exercise in the environs during his visit to their city, the brigands being on the watch for him, and should he be entrapped they would demand an enormous ransom!

Digitized by Google

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.*

In accordance with the understanding come to at the last annual meeting of the members, the present special general meeting has been convened for the purpose of considering the course to be pursued in view of the approaching complete exhaustion of the society's funds. The committee regret to report that there has been a further falling off in the subscription list, and as there is no sign of any improvement in the receipts from the general public, it may be taken as a certainty that before the close of the present season the monies now in hand will have been entirely spent. From this it follows that, in the absence of a guarantee fund, or of some other means of procuring working capital and providing against the contingency of further loss, it will be impossible for the present, or indeed for any, committee to undertake the liabilities involved in arranging for a fresh series of concerts during the season 1882-83, and the question then arises whether the existence of the Society can be usefully prolonged after it has ceased to become a concert-giving institution.

The natural inference deducible from the facts recorded in the Society's accounts appears to be that its work is finished, and that it will be better therefore to bring the Society to an honourable close at the end of its fiftieth year, rather than to struggle further against the inevitable, with the almost certain prospect of having to encounter a similar difficulty sooner or later, even if by some extraordinary means present financial embarrassments could be tided over for a time.

It is useless to disguise the fact that for many years past the Society has not been self-supporting. Its concerts have of late been carried on at almost constant heavy loss, and but for the extraneous help afforded by undertakings outside the Society's own special operations, the present crisis would have occurred at a much earlier date. It may not be out of place here to record the fact that this contingency was foreseen by the late Mr Bowley, and that one special reason which weighed with him in devising and carrying out the undertakings in question was the hope that by their means the existence of the society might be prolonged. The result abundantly justified the sagacity of the society's late treasurer, but even with the assistance thus afforded the society finds itself no longer able to meet the losses which occur from season to season, and the natural outcome is the present impending financial crisis.

The causes which have led to this result are not far to seek. In the early days of the Society it had a practical monopoly of the performance of oratorio, and repetition concerts were constantly given which produced large profits. For some time past repetition performances, besides being extremely difficult to arrange, have been more often a loss than a gain, and oratorios are so frequently performed in all parts of the metropolis, that the public interest is divided, and the support given to smaller and local associations, or to concerts where economy is studied at the expense of art, naturally interferes with the receipts of the parent Society. As an illustration of this it may be mentioned that, whereas in former times 3s. tickets for the Society's concerts were often sold for many times their original price, the number of persons out of the four millions inhabiting London willing to pay half-a-crown to hear the much finer performances of last season only averaged 180; while, if certain favourite works be excluded from the calculation, the number would dwindle down to the low average of 120.

A second cause for the altered circumstances of the Society may be found in a change of opinion which has come over a certain section of the public on the question of music and public amusements generally. The Society's concerts were at one time specially patronised by many who objected on conscientious grounds to other forms of musical entertainment, but as other ideas have gradually prevailed, the support once so specially given to the Society is now spread over a wider area, and the Society has suffered in consequence. To all these influences must be added the increased expenses of the concerts—at least one-third more than they were thirty years ago—and the loss arising from the Society's removal from Exeter Hall, which, in spite of its many inconveniences, was, undoubtedly, much preferred by the subscribers to St James's Hall.

In view of the probable repetition at this juncture of that kind of criticism, already so frequently refuted, which attributes the Society's losses to its want of enterprise, it is only right once more to place on record the fact, incontestably proved by the records of the receipts at each individual concert, that for more than twenty years past there have only been two works, the names of which will readily occur to the members, the performance of which could be reckoned upon with any certainty to produce a profit. Even such a work as Judas Maccabæus has not produced a profit for more than ten years, while the magnificent Israel has only yielded a profit on six occasions out of the last fifteen performances which have been given since 1865. Such being the case with the two favourite works in question, it can easily be imagined how such masterpieces as Solomon, Samson, and St Paul, to say nothing of more modern works, have fared, while those most interesting composite concerts, so specially praised by musical critics, have presented an almost invariable record of heavy loss. The Committee have, therefore, the most abundant justification for saying that but for the line of policy they have pursued, the Society would only have had an ephemeral existence, and that the constant production of novelties would have brought about its dissolution many years ago.

With these facts in view, the conviction has been forced upon the Committee that it is impossible to carry on the Society any longer as at present constituted, and they feel that even if the difficulties of reorganization were surmounted, the chances of success even then would be so problematical, that they have no alternative but to recommend—although with unfeigned sorrow and regret—that the Society be dissolved after the close of the present season.

There are, no doubt, many who think that the work of the Society is too important to be altogether abandoned without a struggle, and that it would be a grave reflection upon the courage and public spirit of the members of the Society if they refrained from making the effort. The Committee therefore invite those who may share these sentiments to enter seriously upon the consideration of the best means of forming a new society to carry on the work, and (to use a commercial phrase) take over the goodwill and assets of the present society, if such an arrangement be possible.

The Committee, however, are bound to place on record their opinion that in view of the number of concerts given during the musical season, and the general state of the music market, it would be hopeless for any body of amateurs to attempt to give concerts on the same complete scale as those of the Sacred Harmonic Society unless they were supported by a sufficient number of influential and wealthy guarantors, as is the case with all the large musical festivals throughout the country.

* Report of the committee, to be presented at a special general meeting of members on Tuesday, the 21st inst.

—o—

CHERUBINI.*

His Life, his Works, and the Part played by him in Art.

(Continued from page 61.)

Cherubini was the tenth of twelve children, the issue of his parents' marriage, and the last survivor of this numerous family, as he himself thus remarks in the Notice dictated to de Beauchesne: "It is a singular fact that this one, whose weakly nature at his birth almost precluded the hope of rearing him, is to-day the only member living of this numerous family." He was scarcely four or five years old before he lost his mother, who was herself only forty, and shortly afterwards his father began teaching him the rudiments of music, as the Notice in question also informs us: "As soon as he was six years old, he began learning music from his father, and, when he was nine, he commenced studying composition under Bartolomeo Felici and his son, Alessandro, distinguished Florentine composers. At their death he passed under the direction of Pietro Bizzari and Giuseppe Castrucci, skilful composers of the same period."

Cherubini's father, a Florentine like the boy's mother, was, in a modest way, a very estimable artist. An excellent professor, we are told, he fulfilled the important and delicate functions of maestro al cembalo (pianoforte accompanist) at the Teatro della Pergola, then as now the first theatre in Florence. He was, therefore, perfectly competent to begin his son's musical education. With regard to the masters to whom the boy was subsequently confided, no historian mentions any of them except Bartolomeo Felici, to whom Fétis has devoted these few lines: "Felici (Bartolomeo) composer, born at Florence about 1730, had some operas performed at various theatres in Italy, among which L'Amante contrastato, 1768, and L'Amore Soldato, 1769, are mentioned. He composed, also, several separate pieces, such as violin quartets, which have remained in manuscript, and four-part songs with orchestral accompaniment. He opened at Florence, in 1770, a School of Counterpoint, which enjoyed some celebrity."

I think the dates given in this short notice are inexact, and have reasons for supposing that Bartolomeo Felici was born long before 1730. However, if we except the above few details con-

* By Arthur Pougin. From the Ménestrel.

Digitized by Google

cerning one of them, we should know nothing about the ability of the masters to whom Cherubini's musical education was at first entrusted, if Picchianti, his first Italian biographer, who also was a Florentine, and able to speak from his own reminiscences, had not taken care to give us some useful information on the subject. The following are the terms in which this writer, himself a distinguished musician, describes the period of Cherubini's earliest studies :—

" . . . . He was taught by his Father, a chapelmaster strongly attached to the old customs of the art, and a rigid observer of the ancient scholastic discipline in his teaching. Three years, however, were enough for young Cherubini to obtain a sufficient knowledge of solfeggio, and of the accompaniment of the figured bass, and the intavolatura del cembalo (the tablature of the harpsichord), as they then called the theoretical acquaintance with the keyboard, together with the art of placing the hands and of the mechanism adapted for playing the instrument. He achieved this result before completing his ninth year, and without on that account neglecting the higher study of figures, or languages, so that, with a mind thus furnished, he entered at this period on the study of counterpoint, under the direction of Bartolomeo Felici, called old Felici, to distinguish him from his son, Alessandro, also a remarkable artist.

"Bartolomeo Felici, a man deeply versed in the muscal science of his day, was a profound and skilful contrapuntist. The compositions in the a cappella style of his which have been handed down to us are models of purity, clearness, and ingenious artifice, qualities causing them to be heard with pleasure whenever they are now sung in our churches. For teaching the difficult art of composition, he was reputed the best professor in Florence and all Tuscany, and his school was attended by a large number of pupils, whose productions subsequently sustained its credit and glory. Pietro Bizzarri and Giuseppe Castrucci were likewise respectable artists, who guided Cherubini to the highest pitch of perfection, the one in the art of singing, and the other in playing the organ and the piano. Had these worthy masters of Cherubini, as well as such men as Niccolo Valenti, Luigi Braccini, Giuseppe Gherardeschi, Ettore Romagnoli, and a thousand others whom I cannot name, lived in France, in the populous city of Paris, or in any other ultramontane country, they would have enjoyed the honours of apotheosis, and there would have been no lack of eloquent writers to give us complete and magnificent biographies of them. We should not then have heard nearly all Cherubini's necrologists and biographers repeat that he had as masters in his native land only very obscure artists, whose names, if they reach posterity, will owe it entirely to the illustrious pupil who will have rendered them famous. . . ."

(To be continued.)

WAIFS.

Pitch in music does not defile.

Adelina Patti will return to Europe in May.

Señor Gayarre has been singing at Valencia in L'Africaine.

Sophie Menter has been extraordinarily successful in Stockholm.

A German version of Patience has been produced at Philadelphia.

The ballet of Excelsior has proved as successful in Naples as in Milan.

Bazzini has declined the directorship of the Liceo Musicale Rossini, Pesaro.

After a few performances of Rigoletto, the Teatro Pagliano, Florence was closed.

Schumann's Genoveva has proved very attractive at the Theatre Royal, Dresden.

Mdlle Valleria has accepted an operatic engagement for next season in America.

Teresina Tua, the girl violinist, has been playing with much success in Florence.

Señor Giner has been appointed technical director of the Conservatory, Valencia.

Mad. Madeline Schiller, we learn from the American papers, is in very poor health.

Mad. Adelina Patti has for some time past declined being "interviewed" in the States.

Fra Diavolo has been performed at the Teatro Real, Madrid, with Lestellier in the title-part.

Minnie Hauk will, it is said, organize an opera company for next winter in the United States.

Flotow's Indra was lately given, as second novelty of the season, at the Stadttheater, Lübeck.

Santley has had an offer from a Boston manager to revisit America for a concert and oratorio tour.

The Italian opera-company, under the management of Tamberlik, was performing recently in Carthagena.

A new buffo-opera, Die Töchter des Dyonisos, music by Brandl, is a success at the Carl-Theater, Vienna.

Mr Jacques Blumenthal, who has been passing the winter in the south of France, has returned to London.

A comic opera, Don Quixote, music by Neuendorff, has been produced at the Germania Theatre, New York.

A new opera, Frithjof, book by Anna von Moor, music by Ed. Ringler, has been well received in Nuremberg.

A new oratorio, Welt-Ende—Gericht—Neue Welt, by Joachim Raff, has been performed in the Town Church, Weimar.

Miss Emma Abbot suffered so much from vaccination that she was obliged to cancel a large number of engagements.

Miss Minnie Hauk's Carmen has been the success of Mr Mapleson's season in Philadelphia, as it was in New York and Boston.

Vaccination, according to the Boston Musical Record, is engaging the attention of every opera and concert singer in the United States.

The Kennedys, the celebrated Scottish vocalists, who have started on another voyage round the world, gave recitals last month in New York.

Mad. Pauline Lucca is said to have achieved a sensational success as Katharina in Goetz's Widerspentigen Zähmung at the Imperial Operahouse, Vienna.

The Symphony Orchestra Concerts, under the direction of G. Henschel, Boston, U.S., will be brought to a close on the 11th March with Beethoven's Choral Symphony.

Herr Angelo Neumann's operatic tour will commence on the 1st September, the works which will figure most frequently in the bills being the Nibelungen series and Tristan und Isolde.

A panic occurred a short time since in the Theatre in Algiers. It was due to an outburst of fire, but the flames were speedily extinguished, and the audience suffered no injury but a few contusions.

Among the Italian-opera company engaged for the Teatro Colon, Buenos Ayres, and the Teatro Imperial, Rio Janeiro, are Signora Borghi-Mamo, Signori Tamagno, Bottesini, Sparapani, and Castelmary.

A foreign paper gives the following musical definitions of a daughter of Eve :—At 15, she is an arpeggio ; at 20, an allegro vivace ; at 30, an accordo forte ; at 40, an andante ; at 50, she enters on the rondò finale ; and at 60, she is a tremolo alla sordina.

The Taunton Philharmonic Society have engaged Miss Catherine Penna to sing the soprano music of Professor Macfarren's Lady of the Lake on the 14th inst. This talented young artist was the first representative of the part when the cantata was given at one of the Crystal Palace Saturday Concerts.

A FADED VALENTINE.*

A faded valentine! which came one morning,
Back in the beauty of the vanish'd years;
Now one sad heart, all balm for sorrow scorning,
Gazes upon it through a mist of tears.

A faded valentine! whose tender pleading
Into fair Lilian's heart its pathos wove;
While she, o'ercome by its sweet interceding,
Gave unto Ernest all her youthful love.

A faded valentine! and he who sent it
Thought that he loved the fair and gentle maid;
But, ere the spring had pass'd, he did repent it,
And Lilian's heart was in the dust low laid.

A faded valentine! ah! what a story
It tells of blossoms fair, too quickly crush'd;
Of sudden night, that fell upon life's glory,
Of the heart's music, which despair has hush'd.

* Copyright. SARAH ANN STOWE.

Digitized by Google

The only Gold Medal for Wind Instruments with Keys, in the Paris Universal Exhibition of 1878, was unanimously awarded by the Jury to Messrs P. Goumas & Co., for the fine quality of tone and finish of their Instruments.

SPECIAL MANUFACTORY OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS
FOR
CLARIONETS, FLUTES, PICCOLOS, OBOES, BASSOONS, COR ANGLAIS, FLAGEOLETS, AND SAXOPHONES.

P. GOUMAS & Co.
(Late Buffet, Crampon & Co.),
Established 1830.

Nine Prize Medals have been awarded to Goumas & Co. for general excellence and improvements in the Manufacture of Wind Instruments with Keys.
Manufacturers of all kinds of Wood Wind Instruments for Military Bands, Musical Instrument Makers to Her Majesty's Army and Navy, and to the Armies, Navies, and Conservatoires of France, Belgium, Italy, Russia, Austria, Spain, America, &c.
Manufactory at Mantes (Seine et Oise), France. Paris: Passage du Grand Cerf, 18 et 20.
LONDON: 39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET.
Price Lists sent free on application.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,
MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF
ALL KINDS OF MUSIC STRINGS FOR ALL MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Sole Depôt for Signor Andrea Ruffini's (of Naples) Celebrated Strings for Soloists, manufactured by him on a system invented by Mons. J. B. Vuillaume, of Paris.
Sole Agent for Charles Albert's (of Philadelphia, U.S.) new Patent Improved Chin Rest; also his improved String Gauge.
39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, W.
Price Lists free on application.
All kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner on powerful machines made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE
(COLEMAN'S). A Delicious Beverage and Tonic.
Made from Port Wine, Liebig's Extract of Meat, and Extract of Malt; Nutritious, Strengthening, Stimulating, Flesh-forming, Health Restoring, suitable for the Robust in Health as well as the Invalid. Strongly recommended by the Medical Faculty. An Immediate Benefit is experienced after taking it; the Frame is Invigorated, and no ill effects follow.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Testimonials.

Sir,—A short time since I was induced by the novelty of the title to send for a bottle of your Liebig's Extract of Meat and Malt Wine. I was perfectly acquainted with the value of the Extractum Carnis, and not quite a stranger to the invigorating and fortifying properties of malt wine, and therefore felt a natural curiosity to test them when combined. Men who work hard, as I do, not muscular hard work, but that which is quite as exhausting, viz., brain work, very often experience the need of, and have sometimes an almost irresistible craving for, a "pick me up;" and very often the panacea for a time for lassitude, and that state of mind which renders work irksome, are alcoholic stimulants, the use of which must sooner or later end disastrously. The man who can furnish a remedy sure, certain, and harmless, for the lassitude which follows constant brain work is a benefactor of his species, and may be said to have added many years of usefulness to the lives of useful men. Your extract, if a success, and when more generally known, will be used by all toilers of the mind.—Yours faithfully,
O. D. RAY.
Thorpe Hamlet, Norwich, February 23rd, 1881.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Queen's Crescent, Haverstock Hill, London, March 5th, 1881.

Dear Sir,—Some time since, being greatly fatigued with over-work and long hours at business, my health (being naturally delicate) became very indifferent. I lost all energy, strength, and appetite, and was so weak as to be scarcely able to walk. As you are aware, I sent for a dozen of your Extract of Meat and Malt Wine, which, in a few days, pulled me up marvellously. Three or four glasses of it daily have quite altered and restored me to better health than ever, "without the assistance of a doctor." I am now giving it to my son, twelve years of age, whom we have always thought consumptive, and from a puny, ailing boy, he seems to be fast growing into a strong, healthy lad. Enclosed you have cheque. Please send me two dozen of the "Extract." With thanks for your prompt attention to my last, I am, Sir, yours truly,
GEORGE A. TYLER.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Granspound, February 25th, 1881.

Mrs Coulson thanks Mr Coleman for the book and stamps, and she has no doubt but that "the tonic" is a good one. Mrs C. encloses twelve stamps for basket.
Mr Coleman.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Vicarage, Kingsbridge, Devon, January 25th, 1881.

Dear Sir,—We are ten miles from the railway, and have been snowed up, consequently the wine has only just arrived. I enclose a cheque for £2 11s. 6d. I like the wine, and will recommend it.—Yours faithfully,
Mr Coleman, Norwich.
A. N. KINGSTON.

Pints, 30s. per dozen: Quarts, 50s. per dozen. Carriage paid to any Railway Station in Great Britain. Sample Bottle sent for 33 stamps.
P. O. Orders to be made payable to
COLEMAN & CO., MUSPOLE STREET, NORWICH.
Cheques crossed "London and Provincial Bank."
Sold by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the United Kingdom, in Bottles, 1s. 9d. and 2s. 6d. each. Ask for Coleman's Liebig's Extract of Meat and Malt Wine, and "See that you get it."

CHAPPELL'S
VOCAL LIBRARY
OF
PART-SONGS, &c.

		Composed or Arranged by	Price
1.	Dulce Domum. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
2.	Down among the Dead Men. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
3.	The Girl I've left behind me. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
4.	British Grenadiers. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
5.	Long live England's Future Queen. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
6.	My task is ended (Song and Chorus). A.T.B.B.	... Balfe	4d.
7.	Thus spake one Summer's Day. S.A.T.B.	... Abt	2d.
8.	Soldiers' Chorus. T.T.B.B.	... Gounod	4d.
9.	The Kermesse (Scene from Faust)	,,	6d.
10.	Up, quit thy bower. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	4d.
11.	Maidens, never go a-wooing. S.S.T.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
12.	Fagot Binders' Chorus	Gounod	4d.
13.	Sylvan Hours (for Six Female Voices)	Joseph Robinson	6d.
14.	The Gipsy Chorus	... Balfe	4d.
15.	Ave Maria	Arcadelt	1d.
16.	Hark! the Herald Angels sing. S.A.T.B.	Mendelssohn	1d.
17.	England Yet (Solo and Chorus). S.A.T.B.	Jules Benedict	2d.
18.	The Shepherd's Sabbath Day. S.A.T.B.	J. L. Hatton	2d.
19.	Thoughts of Childhood. S.A.T.B.	Henry Smart	2d.
20.	Spring's Return. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
21.	An old Church Song. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
22.	Sabbath Bells. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
23.	Serenade. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
24.	Cold Autumn Wind. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
25.	Orpheus with his Lute. S.S.S.	Bennett Gilbert	2d.
26.	Lullaby. S.A.A.	,,	1d.
27.	This is my own, my native land. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
28.	March of the Men of Harlech. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
29.	God save the Queen. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
30.	Rule, Britannia. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
31.	The Retreat. T.T.B.B.	L. de Rille	2d.
32.	Lo! morn is breaking. S.S.S.	Cherubini	2d.
33.	We are Spirits. S.S.S.	G. A. Macfarren	4d.
34.	Market Chorus (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	Auber	4d.
35.	The Prayer (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
36.	The Water Sprites. S.A.T.B.	Kücken	2d.
37.	Eve's glittering Star. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
38.	When first the Primrose. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
39.	O Dewdrop bright. S.A.T.B	,,	1d.
40.	Sanctus from the Messe Solennelle. S.A.T.B.	Rossini	4d.
41.	Nine Kyries, Ancient and Modern	,,	2d.
42.	Sun of my soul. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	2d.
43.	'Twas fancy, and the ocean's spray. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
44.	A Prayer for those at Sea. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
45.	O Thou whose power (Prayer from Mose in Egitto)	Rossini	2d.
46.	The Guard on the Rhine. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
47.	The German Fatherland. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
48.	The Lord is my Shepherd (Quartet). S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
49.	Te Deum in F	Jackson	2d.
50.	Te Deum in F	Nares	2d.
51.	Charity (La Carita). S.S.S.	Rossini	4d.
52.	Cordelia. A.T.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	4d.
53.	I know. S.A.T.B.	Walter Hay	2d.
54.	Chorus of Handmaidens (from Fridolin)	A. Randegger	4d.
55.	The Offertory Sentences	Edmund Rogers	4d.
56.	The Red Cross Knight	Dr. Callcott	2d.
57.	The Chough and the Crow	Sir H. R. Bishop	3d.
58.	The "Carnovale"	Rossini	2d.
59.	Softly falls the moonlight	Edmund Rogers	4d.
60.	Air by Himmel	Henry Leslie	2d.
61.	Offertory Sentences	E. Sauerbrey	4d.
62.	The Resurrection	C. Villiers Stanford	6d.
63.	Our Boys (new Patriotic Song)	H J. Byron and W. M. Lutz	4d.
64.	The Men of Wales	Brinley Richards	2d.
65.	Dame Durden		1d.
66.	A little Farm well tilled	Hook	1d.
67.	There was a simple maiden	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
68.	Fair Hebe	,,	1d.
69.	Once I loved a maiden fair	,,	1d.
70.	The jovial man of Kent	,,	1d.
71.	The oak and the ash	,,	1d.
72.	Heart of Oak	,,	1d.
73.	Come to the sunset tree	W. A. Philpott	4d.
74.	May. S.A.T.B.	W. F. Banks	2d.
75.	Pure, lovely innocence (Il Roi de Lahore—Chorus for Female Voices)	G. Massenet	4d.
76.	A Love Idyl. S.A.T.B.	E. R. Terry	2d.
77.	Hail to the Woods! A.T.T.B.	J. Yarwood	2d.
78.	Near the town of Taunton Dean	Thomas J. Dudeney	2d.
79.	Our merry boys at sea	J. Yarwood	2d.
80.	The Shepherd's Farewell. S.A.T.B.	Berlioz	3d.
81.	When the sun sets o'er the mountains (Il Demonio)	A. Rubinstein	3d.
82.	Hymn of Nature	Beethoven	3d.
83.	Michaelmas Day (Humorous Part Songs, No. 1)	Walter Maynard	4d.
84.	Sporting Notes (Humorous Part Songs, No. 2)	Walter Maynard	4d.
85.	Austrian National Hymn	Haydn	4d.

LONDON:
CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND STREET, W.
City Branch—14 & 15, Poultry.

Digitized by Google

SYDNEY SMITH'S
FOUR NEW PIECES.

SPERANZA.

ANDANTE ESPRESSIVO.

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

NONCHALANCE.

CAPRICE DE CONCERT.

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

I PIFFERARI.

MUSETTE MODERNE.

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

NABUCO.

GRAND FANTASIA ON THE OPERA OF VERDI.

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

SYDNEY SMITH'S NEW PIANO DUETS.

		s.	d.
SEMIRAMIDE.	Fantasia on Rossini's Opera	6	0
ROSE LEAVES.	Morceau Élégant	5	0
BACCHANALE		5	0
LE RETOUR DE L'ARMÉE.	Morceau Militaire	5	0

LONDON: ASHDOWN & PARRY, HANOVER SQUARE.

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, & SPALDING, at 3 and 5, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, February 11, 1882.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 60.—No. 7. SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1882. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.
LAST WEEK BUT TWO.

MONDAY, Feb. 20, BALFE'S "BOHEMIAN GIRL." TUESDAY, Feb. 21, WAGNER'S "FLYING DUTCHMAN." ASH WEDNESDAY, NO PERFORMANCE. THURSDAY, Feb. 23, WAGNER'S "TANNHÄUSER," with entirely New Scenery, Costumes, and Properties. FRIDAY, Feb. 24, GOUNOD'S "FAUST." SATURDAY Morning, Feb. 25, at Two, WAGNER'S "TANNHÄUSER." SATURDAY Evening, BIZET'S "CARMEN."

POPULAR PRICES.

For full Particulars see Daily Papers. Box Office open Daily from 10 till 5.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—The ELEVENTH of the TWENTY-SIXTH SERIES of SATURDAY CONCERTS and AFTERNOON PROMENADES will take place THIS DAY (SATURDAY), Feb. 18, at Three o'clock. Vocalists—Miss Mary Davies and Mr W. H. Brereton. Solo Pianoforte—Miss Agnes Zimmermann. The programme will include Overture, Air, and Ballet Music, The Veiled Prophet, first time in England (C. V. Stanford); Concerto in C minor (W. S. Bennett); Symphony in A, No. 7 (Beethoven). Conductor—Mr AUGUST MANNS. Numbered Seats for a Single Concert in Area or Gallery, 2s. 6d. and 1s. 6d.; Unnumbered Seats in Gallery, 1s.; Unnumbered Seats in Area, 6d.—all exclusive of Admission to the Palace.

WEDNESDAY NEXT.

ASH WEDNESDAY.—GRAND SACRED CONCERT, ST JAMES'S HALL, WEDNESDAY Next, at Eight o'clock, by the following Artists of the London Ballad Concerts: Miss Mary Davies and Miss Santley, Mdme Antoinette Sterling and Miss Damian; Mr Joseph Maas, Mr Santley, and Mr Maybrick. The South London Choral Association of Sixty voices, under the direction of Mr L. C. Venables. Conductor—Mr SIDNEY NAYLOR. The programme will contain the following celebrated pieces: "Hear my prayer," "With verdure clad," and "I mourn as a dove" (Miss Mary Davies); "Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets," "Angels, ever bright and fair," and "O had I Jubal's lyre" (Miss Santley); "O rest in the Lord," "The Better Land," and "The Lost Chord" (Mdme Antoinette Sterling); "For the Lord is mindful" and "O Lord, Thou hast searched me out" (from The Woman of Samaria) (Miss Damian); "Deeper and deeper still," "Sound an alarm," and "Cujus Animam" (Mr Joseph Maas); "There is a green hill far away," "Le Nom de Marie," and "Nazareth" (Mr Santley); "Arm, arm, ye brave," and "Shall I in Mamre's fertile plains?" (Mr Maybrick); "To Thee, cherubim," "The God of Israel," "Abelard," "Homeward," and "The Silent Land" (South London Choral Association). Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Family and School Tickets, to admit Six to Stalls, £2; Area, 4s. and 2s.; Balcony, 3s.; Gallery and Orchestra, 1s.; to be had at Austin's, St James's Hall; the usual Agents; and of Boosey & Co., 295, Regent Street.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERT.—WEDNESDAY, March 1st.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERT, ST JAMES'S HALL, WEDNESDAY, March 1, at Eight o'clock. Artists: Miss Mary Davies, Miss C. Elliot, and Mdme Antoinette Sterling; Mr Edward Lloyd and Mr Frank Boyle, Mr Santley and Signor Foli. The South London Choral Association, under the direction of Mr L. C. Venables. Conductor—Mr SIDNEY NAYLOR. Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Family and School Tickets to admit Six to Stalls, £2; Area, 4s. and 2s.; Balcony, 2s.; Gallery and Orchestra, 1s.; to be had at Austin's, St James's Hall; the usual Agents; and of Boosey & Co., 295, Regent Street.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—Seventieth Season.—SECOND CONCERT, ST JAMES'S HALL, THURSDAY, Feb. 23, at Eight o'clock. Liszt's "Hungaria" (first time in England); Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto—Herr Xaver Scharwenka (his first appearance this season); Overtures, Jupiter (Mozart), Leonora, No. 3 (Beethoven). Vocalists—Mdme Marie Roze and Mdme Trebelli. Conductor—Mr W. G. CUSINS. Tickets, from 2s. 6d. to 15s., of Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., 84, New Bond Street; Mr Austin, St James's Hall; and the usual Agents.

By order, HENRY HERSEE, Secretary.

SCHUBERT SOCIETY. President—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT. Founder and Director—Herr SCHUBERTH. Sixteenth Season, 1882. The FIRST CONCERT (F. Schubert's Compositions forming the first part of the programme) will take place at the LANGHAM HALL, Great Portland Street, on TUESDAY, 28th February, 1882, to commence at eight o'clock precisely. Full prospectus on application to H. G. HOPPER, Hon. Sec., 244, Regent Street, W.

WALTER MACFARREN'S ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS,

ST JAMES'S HALL.—FIRST CONCERT, SATURDAY Evening Feb. 25. The Programme will include Beethoven's Symphony in C minor, Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, Walter Macfarren's Pianoforte Concertstück, and Overtures: Mozart's Zauberflöte, Weber's Oberon, and Walter Macfarren's King Henry V. (first time in London). Executants: Miss Mary Davies and Mr Santley, Miss Margaret Gyde (her first appearance), and M. Sainton. Band of Seventy. Conductor—Mr WALTER MACFARREN. Subscription to the Series, One Guinea. Sofa Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Balcony, 3s.; Admission, One Shilling. Programmes and Tickets of Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., 84, New Bond Street; usual Agents; and Austin's Ticket Office, 28, Piccadilly.

THE LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC.
ST GEORGE'S HALL, and No. 1A, HARRINGTON GARDENS, S.W.

Principal—Professor WYLDE, Mus.D., Cantab.
Examiners—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT and Signor BEVIGNANI.

The fee, five or six guineas, includes instruction in three branches. Establishment at South Kensington is solely for amateurs.

Harmony and Composition.—Dr Wylde and Mr J. F. Barnett. Pianoforte—Dr Wylde, MM. Barnett, Henseler, Lafstner, Logé, Koehler, Gear, Trew, Roche, Mattei, Lehmeyer, Ehrenfechter.

Singing—M. Garcia, Lablache, Visetti, Raimo, G. Garcia, Engel, Scuderi, Romili, Danielli, H. Gear, Barnett, M. Costa, Dinelli, and F. Schira.

Violin—Pollitzer, Ludwig. Harp—Wright, Oberthür. Cello—Pezze.

The names of New Students are being received for entrance at the Half-term, commencing February 27.

Prospectuses, with terms of Mr Robertson's Painting, Miss Cowen's Elocution, and the Language Classes.

Also information respecting the Lectures and Lessons in Elocution by the Rev. Alex. J. D. D'Orsey, B.D., Lecturer K.C.L.

MR and Mdme BODDA'S (Miss LOUISA PYNE) ACADEMY FOR SINGING, Operatic and Miscellaneous. "BONALLY," 85 and 87, Cambridge Gardens, Notting Hill. Professional and Amateur. In and Out-Door Students. Studies—Singing (Private Lessons), Elocution, Piano, Deportment, Choral Practice, Italian. Prospectuses as above, or Mr STEDMAN, 12, Berners Street.

"MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY."

MR CHARLES ABERCROMBIE will sing WILFORD MORGAN'S popular Song, "MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY," at Rochester, This Evening, Feb. 18.

"MIDNIGHT CHIMES."

MDME T. DE VANEY will sing "MIDNIGHT CHIMES," by MICHAEL BERGSON, at the composer's séance musicale, Feb. 21st.

"AT MORN I BESEECH THEE."

MISS T. O'BRIAN will sing "AT MORN I BESEECH THEE," Sacred Song by BERGSON, at the composer's séance musicale, Feb. 21st.

"SERENADE MORESQUE."

SIGNOR DE RIA will sing "SERENADE MORESQUE," by BERGSON, at the composer's séance musicale, Feb. 21st.

"A DREAM WISH."

MISS ROSA HART will sing "A DREAM WISH" (Gipsy's Song), by M. BERGSON, at the composer's séance musicale, on Feb. 21st.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR GEORGE COX will sing ASCHER'S popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" at Mr Wm. Carter's Concert at the Albert Hall, on March 1st.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR ARTHUR HOOPER will sing (by desire) ASCHER'S popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" on March 6th, at Mr John Cheshire's Concert at Hammersmith.

"PARADISE LOST." An Oratorio. Composed by ANTON RUBINSTEIN, on the Poem of MILTON. The English version of the words by JOSIAH PITTMAN. Paris: GÉRARD, 2, Rue Scribe.

Digitized by Google

LONDON CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.—
Principal—Mr LANSDOWNE COTTELL.
The Directors invite attention to the recent extension and increased accommodation, residential and otherwise.
Fees from Two Guineas per term, residential from Fourteen Guineas, inclusive of the Musical and Fine Art Lectures.
Free Tuition is awarded to talented young artists unable to pay fees by fund granted for this purpose.
Prospectus (one stamp), Hon. Sec., 6, Tavistock Square.

CONDUCTOR WANTED.
SCARBOROUGH CLIFF BRIDGE COMPANY.
The Committee of the above Company are prepared to receive applications for the CONDUCTORSHIP of their BAND for the Season, commencing in June next. Full particulars may be obtained from the undersigned, to whom all applications, accompanied with copies of Testimonials and stating Salary required, must be addressed on or before the 21th inst. Silence polite negative.
FRAS. GOODRICKE,
Feb. 3rd, 1882. Secretary and General Manager.

WANTED, a good MODERN ORGAN, Second-hand, for a Country Church. Apply, stating price and particulars, to "VICAR," Raglan, Monmouthshire.

REDUCED PRICE, 2s. 6d.
THE EPIKLEIS, or Musical Domino (POOLEY'S PATENT), an Aid to Pianists for the Slow Shake and other Exercises—entirely a mental aid. Testimonials from the best Pianists and Teachers. By Post, 2s. 6d. Handbook, with Exercises and useful Hints on Playing, 1s.—JOHN POOLEY, 3, The Terrace, Clapham Park Road, London, S.W. Agents Wanted all over the world.

THE PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, AND KNIGHTAGE OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE for 1882. By JOSEPH FOSTER.
Early in January. In one or two volumes, royal 8vo, cloth gilt, price 42s. The Peerage or Baronetage separate, each 21s.
The THIRD EDITION, for 1882, containing all new Creations, has been considerably enlarged, and carefully corrected throughout. It is illustrated by upwards of 1,400 Engravings of Arms, &c., and contains fuller pedigrees than any other work.
Westminster: NICHOLS & SONS, 25, Parliament Street.
CHAPMAN & HALL, Limited, 11, Henrietta Street, W.C.

NEW SONG BY J. L. HATTON.
THE GOOD SHIP ROVER. Words by JOHN STEWART. Music by J. L. HATTON. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

SUNG BY MISS ANNETTE ALBU.
"A DREAM WISH," Poetry by Mrs M. A. BAINES, Music by MICHAEL BERGSON, is published, price 4s., by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

PARIS UNIVERSAL EXHIBITION, 1878, CLASS XIII.
Gold and Silver Medals, Paris, 1878. Gold Medal, Paris, 1879.
Gold Medal, Rome, 1880, and two Diplomas.
ARTISTIC HOUSE,
PARIS—10, RUE DU FAUBOURG-POISSONNIÈRE, 10—PARIS.
CH. J. B. COLLIN-MÉZIN,
Stringed Instrument Maker.
The celebrated VIOLINS and VIOLONCELLOS for SOL 18TS, which, since the adoption of the new system, are the only approved, recommended and played by the greatest Masters; among others, Messrs Sivori, Marsik, Hollmann, Léonard, Armingaud, Miss Marie Tayau, &c., &c.; Messrs Massart, Sauzay, Dancla, Franchomme, Maurin, Chevillard, Jacquard, &c., Professors at the Conservatoire of Music, Paris.
PRICES:—
Violin, £12; Tenor, £14; Violoncello, £20.
BOW in Pernambuco, Silver Mounted, first class, £1 4s.; Collin-Mézin, £1 12s.
Catalogues and Testimonials post free on application.

THE ROSE SONG.
From
BALFE'S OPERA,
IL TALISMANO.
Price 4s.
London: DUFF & STEWART, Hanover Street.

Just Published.
THE LOVERS' WALTZ
(L'AMANTE).
FOR THE PIANOFORTE.
By
G. MURATORI.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

THE VOICE AND SINGING.
BY
ADOLFO FERRARI.
THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.
Price 12s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.
"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

VOCAL EXERCISES COMPOSED BY FRANK MORI.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.
N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by the late FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

New Edition of "LE PETIT SOLFEGE."
LE PETIT SOLFEGE. Vingt Solfèges pour Voix de Mezzo-Soprano. Par JOS. CURCI. Price 6s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.
"This work for educational purposes will be found of inestimable value, since it is one of the very few which confines itself to the cultivation of the middle of the voice; and whilst the phrases are admirably adapted to develop the breathing powers and volume of the voice, the melodies are so exquisitely harmonized that they must prove of great benefit in the improvement of the taste and ear of a student in singing."—Pictorial World.

THE ART OF SINGING.
New Edition, Revised and Improved, of
A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR
THE VOICE.
By T. A. WALLWORTH.
A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdme Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklein, and other successful Vocalists.
Full Music Size, price 7s.
London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.
For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.
DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis, of Basingstoke, says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

LA POMPA DI FESTA. Grande Marche, pour Piano, à Quatre Mains. Par IGNACE GIBSONE. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"HER VOICE."
"HER VOICE." IGNACE GIBSONE'S popular Song (poetry by "A Soldier's Daughter"), sung by Mdme ENRIQUEZ, is published, price 4s., by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NEW VOCAL QUARTET.
"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" Arranged for Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, and Bass by G. B. ALLEN. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.

Mr Rosa redeemed one of his most important promises on Tuesday night by the production of Wagner's Tannhäuser, according to the English version of Mr John P. Jackson. Rumour had long busied herself with the preparations for this revival, hinting at their elaboration and costliness, and as the scenic requirements of Tannhäuser are well known, amateurs flocked to the representation with an exalted idea of the spectacular treat in store. They were not disappointed. We may add that they were not surprised, since Mr Rosa very well knows—none better—how much the fortune of such a work depends upon pageantry, and he has always shown a clear perception of the fact that what is worth doing at all should be done well. Therefore the thousand tongues of Rumour, while wagging to the same tune, wagged to the same truthful purport. In the second act of Tannhäuser especially, Mr Rosa has put upon the stage which he occupies for so short a time a vision of a chivalric and poetic age, accurate, we are ready to believe, even down to details, since nothing appears incongruous; splendid certainly, attractive we hope and trust. It is not too much to say that as far as stage accessories go Tannhäuser is now for the first time worthily before the English public. Mr Rosa is not contemptuous of the Venusberg, nor afraid to bestow some little thought upon the supernatural parts of the play. He, therefore, shows the court of the Goddess of Love as a place where a man of Tannhäuser's temperament would find congenial society and attractive surroundings. We can understand the hold it has upon him and the mortal struggle necessary to resist its temptations, while from our safe vantage-ground, as mere lookers-on, we are able to appreciate the grace and beauty of the spectacle without necessary reference to motives and designs. It is not, however, upon the scene of sportive naiads, warbling sirens, and dancing nymphs that the manager has put out his full strength. He does this, as already intimated in the second act, what time the Minnesingers contend for a prize from the hand of Elizabeth before a noble company. The architectural "set" here shown is one of much boldness and effect, the eye traversing the length of the Hall of Song, which, with its brilliant ornamentation and lofty arches, seems worthy of regal pageants. Fittingly, too, in the midst of such surroundings, is the ceremony of the reception of the guests by the Landgrave and Elizabeth carried on with elaboration and stateliness. To the music of the well-known march, chamberlains receive each group of visitors and conduct them to the throne, whence gaily attired pages usher them to their seats. Nothing is hurried, and no formality dispensed with; while, as the ceremonial thus proceeds, spectators have time to note the varied beauty of the dresses, upon which thought and labour, to say nothing of money, have been lavished without stint. A finer show of its dignified kind, or one more carefully wrought out in detail, has seldom, if ever, been presented on our lyric stage. After this the third act necessarily appears an anti-climax, but here, as elsewhere, no pains are spared, and no opportunity for effect allowed to pass unused.

That Mr Rosa's liberality and Mr Betjemann's stage skill had been backed by a determination on the part of Mr Randegger to secure a good musical performance was not long in doubt on Tuesday night. To be sure, there were moments when the excellent conductor could not have felt quite happy, but if composers will write chromatic harmonies for a chorus advancing slowly from behind the scenes, the result is inevitable. The pitch drops before the orchestra can give help, sensitive ears are offended, and sensible minds, if none other, lay the blame in the right quarter. For the rest, there was little indeed of which to complain as far as precaution and skill could operate. The familiar overture was brilliantly rendered and applauded with enthusiasm. We prefer, however, to regard as the master-stroke of the evening, not this orchestral display, but the execution of the magnificent and long-drawn-out finale to the second act. Special pains must have been taken with the ensemble in order to obtain a result which, familiar as the music now is, seemed an expansion of its power and significance. Coming to the consideration of individual merit, first notice is claimed by Mdme Alwina Valleria, whose Elizabeth was proof, both vocally and dramatically, that we have in her an artist qualified at all points to represent Wagner's charming heroines. Those characters, though differing from each other much as the women of Shakspere, demand certain rare attributes in common, as, for example, sweetness and dignity, purity, and all the passion that may be associated therewith, quick sensitiveness, and fortitude to the death. Whatever may be said against the sensuousness of Wagner—and that is much, as, before long, we may have to demonstrate—let us gladly admit that his typical woman is a divine creation, only "a little lower than the angels." Elizabeth is such a character; more so than her weaker sister Elsa, not less so than the sublime redemptress, Senta. It is, therefore, not a part for everybody; nor for anybody in whom is wanting a natural affinity, such as places at the command of the artist all the resources of her nature. Mdme Valleria met the condition required; and, not needing the effort which ends in mere artificiality, was a real Elizabeth, stedfastly loving, through evil and through good report, until death. In an embodiment of this kind there are points which evade description and defy analysis. They are points of contact only between feeling and feeling, and it is sometimes as impossible to state in words the reason of the result as to fight against it. Enough, therefore, that we recognize in Mdme Valleria's Elizabeth the peculiar and precious quality born of sympathy, and, in turn, giving birth to it. Her acting was throughout quiet, yet forcible; never overstrained on the one hand, or lacking in depth of feeling on the other. This was most obvious throughout the finale to the second act, where it was hard to recognize in the impassioned and devoted heroine the princess who had, just before, been doing the routine honours of a court. Mdme Valleria's singing had, on this occasion, a fair chance, thanks to the restoration of her health and voice. She opened well with the greeting to the Hall of Song, delivering it with appropriate breadth of phrasing and earnestness of manner. Her great effect was made, however, in the famous prayer, which she sang in a style that Wagner himself might have applauded. Not to dwell further on such particulars, let it suffice if we add that Mdme Valleria's performance in Tannhäuser must necessarily be a conspicuous feature during the remainder of the season, and an inducement to expect from her further contributions to the success of opera in English. In the small though not unimportant part of Venus, Miss Georgina Burns again did good service, singing the music with fluency and point; while, in the still smaller part of the Shepherd Boy, Miss Irene Adams met all requirements. The representative of Tannhäuser was Herr Schott, whose singing, being always the same, and having given rise to a sufficiency of discussion, may here pass with no more than the remark that it imparted a terrible air of realism to the later utterances of the minstrel-knight. The sounds were sounds of genuine anguish—the wailings of a struggling soul over whom the deep waters are closing. As to Herr Schott's dramatic rendering of the part there should be none but words of praise. His bearing and delivery, always easy, natural, and appropriate in the earlier scenes, rose in the last act far above mere conventionalities and became part of a singularly powerful and impressive display. Our lyric stage has witnessed nothing better than this of late years, and due note should be taken of the fact. As Wolfram, Mr Ludwig took another great step forward in his profession. The part is a singing one, and Mr Ludwig did it such justice as it has rarely met with before. His rendering of "O star of eve" was admirable in all respects and justly applauded. After deserved recognition of the efforts made by Mr Pope as the Landgrave, and by Messrs Davies, D'Egville, Thomas, and Leahy as the Minstrel Knights, we may close this notice with an emphatic acknowledgment of Mr Rosa's spirited venture and of its right to be a grand success.—D. T.

LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The following is the programme of the music performed by the students at the soirée musicale, given on Tuesday evening, Feb. 7, at the Marlborough Rooms, Regent Street:—

PART I.—Pianoforte Duet (Schubert)—Miss Louis and Mr Bromell; Pianoforte Solo, "Dornröschen" (Bendell)—Miss Nellie S. Dwelley; Cavatina, "O mio Fernando" (Donizetti)—Miss E. White; Song, "Saved from the storm" (Barri)—Mr Phillips; Pianoforte Solo, Scherzo in B flat minor (Chopin)—Miss Hyman; Song, "The bird that came in spring" (Benedict)—Miss Lavinia Letherbarrow; Recit. and Cavatina, "Infelice!" (Verdi)—Mr Reakes; Violin Solo, "I Lombardi" (Vieuxtemps)—Miss Kate Chaplin; Cavatina, "Sorgete" (Rossini)—Mr Oscar Noyes; Pianoforte Solo, Polonaise in C sharp minor (Chopin)—Miss Louis; Song, "Alas! those chimes" (Wallace)—Miss L. Hall; Song, "Waiting" (H. Millard)—Miss Nash; Pianoforte Solos, "Berceuse" (Chopin), and "Valse Chromatique" (Leschetizky)—Miss Maggie Okey. PART II.—Polonaise, in C (Chopin)—Pianoforte, Miss Elsie Evans, Violin, Mr Skuze; Aria, "Fanciulle che il core" (Meyerbeer)—Miss E. Walter; Pianoforte Solos, "Wanderstunden" (Heller), and Valse in A flat (Chopin)—Miss Kate Griffiths; Song, "The Children's Home" (Cowen)—Miss A. F. Martin; Pianoforte Solo, "Am Meer" (Blumner)—Miss Taylor; Song, "Bid me discourse" (Bishop)—Miss Edith Luke; Song, "Twilight" (E. Bromell, words by Gertrude Harraden)—Miss F. Smith; Pianoforte Solo, Impromptu in E flat (Schubert)—Miss Budgett; Song, "Sweetheart mine" (Scuderi)—Miss Maggie Okey; Violin Solo (Vieuxtemps)—Mr Skuze; Pianoforte Solo, "Andante sostenuto" (Mendelssohn), and "Tarantelle" (Heller)—Miss Edith Rose Benbow. Accompanists, Miss Elsie Evans, Mr Bromell, and Mr C. Trew (professor).

Digitized by Google

AN ENGLISHMAN IN VIENNA.

It does not often happen that Englishmen write Symphonies, and still more seldom is it that they do so with success. But a rarity of this description was offered us by Hanns Richter at the last Philharmonic Concert—the Symphony and the Englishman with it. The latter is Frederic Cowen, a well-bred, polished gentleman of thirty. He received the most important part of his musical education in Germany; it was there that he acquired style and form for his Symphony, the poetic impulse being the result of a sojourn in Norway. His "Scandinavian Symphony," a broadly planned work carefully carried out to the most delicate detail, testifies to talent and hard study. Mr Cowen, long since no novice, is master of all the technical requirements of his art, and has more especially the modern orchestra under his command. In his latest composition—the only thing of his with which we are acquainted—he is rather a poet and landscape painter than an independently imaginative musician, and hence thematic purport and contrapuntal art are less pronounced than effective colouring. Of the four movements the first—a pathetic Allegro in C Minor—affords the purest satisfaction; it is the one which is most musically thought out and has two pregnant and felicitously contrasted themes, the second (the melodic theme) with that final formula characteristically sinking into the minor key, with which we have been rendered familiar by Swedish folk's-songs, and also by Ophelia's great scene in Ambroise Thomas's opera. In the second movement, a dreamy Andante in E flat major, no attempt is made to disguise the fact that to poetic feeling and landscape-painting the sway is conceded over pure musical development. For the purpose of producing the impression of a "Norwegian Summer's Night," the composer even has recourse to the theatrical expedient of stationing the horn-quartet out of sight in some far-distant place behind the scenes; dreamy harp arpeggios mingle with the fanfares as they mysteriously force their way to the ear. All this is well done. The Scherzo, with its quickly tripping theme of muted violins, reminds the hearer of Mendelssohn's Elves' music, and in its instrumental effects (among them being the continuous light strokes on the triangle) of Berlioz's Queen Mab. Though of slight value musically, the Scherzo produces a certain material effect. The last movement, which repeats themes out of the preceding movements, is by far the least important, but unfortunately, at the same time, the longest and most noisy. The composer here grows monotonous from uninterruptedly employing the same figure, and endeavours by hubbub to deceive us and himself as to the want of invention. As the Symphony is not yet engraved—it will shortly be published, however, by A. Gutmann—there might be yet time to ease the Finale somewhat by large cuts. The novelty, played by the Philharmonic band with brilliant effect, met with an extremely favourable reception, as shown by repeated calls for the composer, who was present on the occasion.—Neue freie Presse.

After the surprisingly enthusiastic manner in which, at the very first rehearsal, the "Scandinavian Symphony" was received by the members of the Philharmonic Orchestra, who generally set their faces so doggedly against novelties, the public were justified in expecting something great, or, at least, unusual, and in the latter respect their expectation was literally fulfilled. It is something unusual in a modern symphony to have a fully worked out first movement based upon ideas which at once characteristically greet the ear; it is something unusual to have a pungent, formally masterful, and charmingly scored Scherzo, with its continuously and softly sounding triangle; something unusual, too, is the effect, never before introduced in a symphony, but magically fascinating, of an Adagio depicting a "Summer evening on a Fjord," in which suddenly a number of horns not constituting part of the regular orchestra, skilfully combined, and stationed in the room out of sight of the public, suddenly take part, as though "aus weitester Ferne," in the performance, while everyone eagerly listens with bated breath as though—to employ Schumann's words when speaking of a passage in Schubert's C major Symphony—"a heavenly visitor had glided into the orchestra." The Finale of this beautiful work, so rich in fancy, but characterized by poetry more than by originality, does not, in our opinion, stand on quite the same height as what precedes it, though if we heard the work several times it is very possible we might change this purely subjective opinion. The said Finale takes up again the motives of the first movement and carries them, noisily and with well-nigh warlike excitement, through many bold metamorphoses, to the end, which is delayed far too long; it is certainly only by accident that in a repeated passage of the Finale we were strongly reminded of Schumann's well-known song, Aufenthalt. The reception of the "Scandinavian Symphony," which is yet in manuscript, but—as we have heard—has already found a publisher here in Herr A. Gutmann, was particularly favourable, and in the Adagio absolutely uproarious. People were surprised to find the composer, who was repeatedly called on, still quite a young man, apparently not over thirty, and, in harmonious conformity with the Symphony they had just heard, a perfect specimen of a thorough gentleman, who looked just the person from whom we should expect the clever musical aperçus and all the savoir faire, so characterized by good taste, of the "Scandinavian Symphony."—Vienna Signale.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Subjoined is the programme of the music given at the fortnightly meeting of professors and students, on Saturday evening, February 11th:—

Sonata, in E, Op. 14, No. 1, pianoforte (Beethoven)—Miss Florence Tyers, pupil of Mr O'Leary; Aria, "Roberto o tu che adoro," Roberto il Diavolo (Meyerbeer)—(accompanist, Miss Annie Mukle)—Miss Bertha Moore, pupil of Mr. W. H. Cummings; Grave and Fugue, from Sonata in A, No. 6, violin (Corelli)—(accompanist, Mr Dancey)—Mr W. Richardson, pupil of Mr Burnett; Air, "O rest in the Lord," Elijah (Mendelssohn)—(accompanist, Miss Dinah Shapley)—Miss Georgina Booth, pupil of Mr Fiori; Introduction and Allegro, in D (MS.), organ (W. G. Wood)—(Potter exhibitioner)—Mr. W. G. Wood, pupil of Professor Macfarren and Dr Steggall; Air, "Jerusalem," St. Paul (Mendelssohn)—(accompanist, Mr Ernest Ford)—Miss Kate Bentley, pupil of Mr Randegger; Partita, in B flat, No. 1, pianoforte (Bach)—Miss Alice Dyer, pupil of Mr Walter Macfarren; Recitation, "The Bridge of Sighs" (Thomas Hood)—Miss Ada South, pupil of Mr Walter Lacey; Larghetto (MS.), pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (G. E. Jones)—(student)—Messrs G. Herbert, G. E. Jones, and J. Hambleton, pupils of Messrs Prout, Harold Thomas, Burnett, and Pezze; Duetto, "Saper vorrei" (Haydn)—(accompanist, Mr Ernest O. Kiver)—Miss Easterfield, and Miss Ercell, pupils of Mr Goldberg; Andante and Allegro, from MS. Sonata, in E minor, pianoforte (Charles S. Macpherson)—(Sterndale Bennett scholar)—Mr Macpherson, pupil of Professor Macfarren and Mr. Walter Macfarren; Song, "O that we two were Maying" (Gounod)—(accompanist, Miss Essie Bull)—Miss Hendon Warde, pupil of Mr. Shakespeare; Aria, "Si tra i ceppi," Berenice (Handel)—(accompanist, Mr H. Douglas Redman)—Mr Arthur Grimshaw, pupil of Mr Holland.

The first concert of chamber music takes place to-day (Saturday), and the next fortnightly meeting on Saturday, March 4th.

MUSIC AT BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The theatrical season is drawing to a close, nothing but "farewell benefits" taking place at the Salle Monsigny. Since the beginning of the year we have had a variety of dramas, operas comique, and vaudevilles placed on the boards by the enterprising manager, M. Champagne, including Les Dragons de Villars, in which Mdlles Dumoulin and Géradon (an old favourite of 1877) appeared, and La Fille de Régiment; while Le Prêtre (M. Champanois in the principal character), Le Voyage d'Agrémont, Le Monde où l'on s'ennuie, Le Jour et la Nuit, "93" (by Victor Hugo—a long drama in five acts and twelve tableaux), and Les Diamants de la Couronne, given last night, complete our past repertoire. A new director is appointed for the month of June—M. Bérard, who was the "comique" here a few years ago. The last night of the season will be on March 31st.

To encourage intended visitors this year, I must tell you that "all the town is up" in the shape of a main drainage, twenty-five feet deep, carried through every street, at which hundreds of men are at work. Though not very pleasant for residents at present, our visitors will in future have no cause to complain of the "delicate perfume from the harbour" and other egouts (ça dépende desgouts!) so characteristic of fair Boulogne.

X. T. R.

Boulogne-sur-Mer, Feb. 15, 1882.

Digitized by Google

A FÊTE AT BUCHAREST.

The supposed indolence of the Roumanians cannot be said to reveal itself in their amusements; on the contrary, in the pursuit of pleasure they display an energy contrasting strongly with the national feeling. Ladies who would shudder at the prospect of walking a mile, are indefatigable in their attendance at balls, theatres, and similar haunts of dissipation. Any catastrophe, local or foreign, is hailed with secret delight, as offering the pretext for organizing fêtes on a more or less magnificent scale, solely, of course, with the view of benefitting the victims of the disaster. The recent burning of the Krembser Circus, as might have been expected, was not permitted to pass without a noble outburst of generosity, originated by members of the Roumanian press. It was proposed by that philanthropic body to arrange a fête of unprecedented grandeur: a committee of between fifty and sixty gentleman and an equal number of lady patronesses, with Prince George Bibesco as president, was consequently formed, and their combined ingenuity called into requisition, in order to invent novel and attractive features. If the multiplicity of cooks did not succeed on this occasion in spoiling the broth, certainly a considerable amount of time was disposed of in the discussion of wild and impracticable combinations. At the last moment "obstruction" was caused by a difficulty in deciding the colours of the rosettes to be worn by the ladies and gentlemen of the committee. Red was proposed for the gentlemen, but as in Roumania nothing can take place without the intervention of political feeling, that pronounced hue was indignantly repudiated by the conservative members, while white was voted too "inoffensive" by the liberals. More neutral tints were finally agreed upon, and the proceedings again set in motion. A protest was also raised against the devoting of the entire proceeds to the succour of a foreigner, which resulted in a decision to divide the spoil, giving one half to Krembser, the remainder to the poor of Bucharest.

The fête took place on Thursday evening at the Operahouse. The body of the theatre was raised to the level of the stage, handsomely carpeted, and lined with chairs. On each side of the stage a Tombola (Raffle), offered its seductive store of prizes; the extreme end was occupied by a buffet, equally, perhaps more, seductive, and presided over by several ladies of the committee all dressed in the picturesque Wallachian national costume. In the centre of the theatre a large space was reserved for dancing, and at each corner a flower stall was placed, decorated even more attractively by its fair occupants than by the floral treasures they offered for sale. Amongst the flower sellers were conspicuous Mdme Gregoire Ghika, sister to the Princess of Serbia, Mdmes B. Brâtiano and Catargi, with other ladies well known in Roumanian society. In the foyer another buffet, as well furnished as the rival establishment downstairs, broke on the gaze of the thirsty crowd; and a boutique of jewellery sold by the "Trei Costici," three namesakes renowned in Bucharest, occupied the adjoining apartment. Facing the buffet a luxurious divan supplied with piles of Turkish tobacco, cigarettes, &c., which were offered for fabulous sums by the charming Wallachian attendants, the whole forming a delightfully oriental picture. In another division was placed the Press Kiosque partly for the sale of newspapers and objets de fantasie, but principally for the propagation of a review published for the occasion entitled "Caritatea" (Charity.) The frontispiece was adorned with a design given by M. Aman, one of the most distinguished Roumanian painters, and amongst the contributors was in the first place, Her Majesty the Queen of Roumania, who, under her poetical "nom de plume," Carmen Sylva, had sent some admirably expressed "Thoughts." The famous politician and poet, M. Rosetti, was represented by a short but powerful paper on the Roumanian peasant, M. Damé, editor of the "Rômanul," by a poem on the conflagration of the Circus, M. Demètro Jannesco by a humorous sketch, and Mdme Demètro Jannesco, better known in London in her character of pianist, and under her maiden name Miss Bessie Richards, by an article entitled "Les salons musicaux à Londres et à Bucharest." It is a matter of opinion whether the large circulation attained by "Caritatea" was due as much to its own merits as to the strenuous exertions of the ladies deputed to act as itinerant vendors in the theatre, who did not relax their efforts until every gentleman was supplied with at least half-a-dozen copies, for which were paid various sums ranging from one to one hundred francs. The victims were even pursued to the boxes by their relentless persecutors. A sufficiently happy result was, however, attained, as the Press Kiosque alone realized upwards of 5,000 francs. The aspect of the theatre was indescribably brilliant. Three tiers of boxes and the body of the building were filled, the ladies all wearing national costume, diversified according to the different districts they represented, and a good deal by the fancy of the wearer. The costume generally consists of a skirt and full bodice chemise made of loose white linen, woven and embroidered by the Roumanian peasants; the bodice is confined by a spangled belt or a red scarf twisted several times round the waist; over the skirt is worn a tunic and apron, black or red for the most part, and more or less intricately spangled and worked in gold, silver, and the brightest colours. Round the neck are hung quantities of coins and pearls, the same ornaments often, combined with a coloured foulard handkerchief, being fastened on the head; those whom nature has supplied with sufficient abundance wear their hair in two long plaits, or flowing unconfined over the shoulders. Married ladies are not permitted this display of perhaps their greatest charm, and the handkerchief is in their case replaced by the marama, a long white filmy veil, sometimes spangled, sometimes plain, which is arranged most becomingly on the head. The marama is attached with stars and sequins, one end floating at the back, the other thrown lightly round the throat.

The King arrived at ten o'clock, accompanied by the Prince of Monaco, and several gentlemen of the Court; her Majesty the Queen was unfortunately prevented by indisposition from adding by her presence to the brilliancy of the scene. But she sent a gracious message to the committee implying that she was at least not absent in the spirit. After surveying the theatre from his box, the King joined the crowd downstairs and good-naturedly laid himself open to the persistent demands of the various amateur flower and tobacco merchants, and propagators of the "Tombola" tickets. His Majesty is said to have laid out £200 amongst his charitable and seductive subjects, and was only induced to renounce this lavish expenditure when informed by his Marshal that the exchequer was exhausted.

In the midst of the hum of conversation, the appeals of the vendors, and the clinking of glasses at the buffets, was heard in the intervals of the dances the half-savage and melancholy music of the lautari, or national musicians, grouped in a recess of the stage, and attired in the very original costumes of the country. Dancing was kept up, as they say in describing county balls, with great spirit until "a late or rather an early hour." Bucharest was sent home finally wearied, while Krembser, who had been watching the proceedings with an easily explained interest, retired in a state of perfect beatitude. The exact sum realized by the fête has not yet been officially stated, but it is said by the reliable reporters to amount to over 50,000 francs (£2,000).

Bucharest, Sunday, Feb. 5th.

—o—

EDUCATIONAL INFLUENCES OF THE DRAMA.

On Friday last, before a crowded meeting of the "Balloon Society of Great Britain," held at Westminster, Capt. F. S. Dumaresq de Carteret-Bisson, M.A., author of "Our Schools and Colleges," gave an interesting address on the "Drama as an Element of Education." The chair was taken by Major Charles Mercier, and amongst those present were Mr W. H. Le Fevre, C.E. (president of the society), Lady Havelock. Lady Marchmont, Hon. Mrs Gordon, Mrs Cox, Mrs Ross, Col. Bruce, R.E., Miss Minnie Bell, Capt. Molesworth, and many others interested in the drama. A letter was read from Prince Leopold, stating that his absence on the continent rendered his attendance impossible. After a communication from M. de Fonville, president of the French Balloon Society, had been read, giving a full description of his balloon ascents from Paris during the recent extraordinary fogs, the lecturer traced the history of the drama from its early days in Greece. To the want of a legitimate drama he attributed, to some extent at least, the rapid decline of the Roman Empire, and to its existence no small amount of the vitality that characterized the Teutonic race. Tracing the history of the British drama, from the miracle plays introduced soon after the Norman Conquest, to its glorious noonday in the time of the immortal Shakspere, he contrasted the manner in which the works of the poet were produced in the days of Queen Elizabeth; the dingy boards, the tawdry decoration and almost total absence of scenery, when the removal of a throne and the substitution of a table and glasses were considered enough to mark the change from a palace to a tavern, with the splendid appointments of the present day, and the magnificent scenery which framed the performance of actors of genius like Mr Henry Irving, Miss Ellen Terry, Mr Wilson Barrett, and Miss Eastlake. If, fifty years ago, any one had stated that the works of Shakspere would become an important element of education, he would have been looked upon as a brainless enthusiast; and yet so changed were the times, that the value in this respect was now universally acknowledged of the productions of the greatest poet of all time. The lecture was interspersed with readings from Hamlet, Othello, and The Lady of Lyons, which were rendered by the lecturer with due dramatic effect. A discussion on the educational influences of the drama followed.—(Communicated.)

Maurel has cancelled his engagement in Marseilles. He is said not to have been satisfied with the other members of the company.

Digitized by Google

MR SIMS REEVES' CONCERT.

The third concert of "operatic, national, and miscellaneous music" was given by Mr Sims Reeves at St James's Hall on Tuesday evening. The popular tenor was in good health and excellent voice, no "apology" had to be made, and Mr Reeves gave the three pieces he had undertaken to sing with all his usual energy and ability. The operatic selection was from Lucia di Lammermoor, Mr Reeves rendering "Fra poco a me recovero" with all the expression requisite to give effect to Donizetti's beautiful aria. Mr Reeves afterwards gave (by desire) the song from Professor Macfarren's Robin Hood, "The grasping, rasping Norman race," which produced so great an effect at his last concert, and was, as on that occasion, compelled to repeat it. Mr Reeves's last song was Hatton's "Good-bye, sweetheart," at the conclusion of which he was twice called back to bow his acknowledgment for the hearty applause with which he was greeted. The other singers in Lucia were Mr Barrington Foote, to whom was confided the aria, "Cruda funesta smania"; Mdme Marie Roze and Mr Shakespeare who contributed the duet, "Sulla tomba," Mdme Roze afterwards singing the aria, "Perché non ho" (re-called twice); and Miss Carlotta Elliot, who gave the recit. and aria, "Ardon gl'incensi" (flute obbligato Mr Nicholson), the same lady joining Messrs Shakespeare, Barrington Foote, and H. Pyatt in the fine sestet, "Chi mi frena." A feature in the concert was the performance on the violoncello by Signor Piatti of his arrangement of "Airs Baskyrs," which elicited such uproarious applause that Signor Piatti returned and repeated the composition. Signor Piatti afterwards played, in perfection, his transcription of Schubert's "Ave Maria." The micellaneous part of the concert included "Se il rigor" (La Juive), and "In sheltered Vale" (Carl Formes), capitally sung by Mr H. Pyatt; Bishop's "Pretty mocking bird" (flute obbligato Mr Nicholson), admirably rendered by Mdme Marie Roze, who was twice "called," but could not be persuaded to sing again, and Sterndale Bennett's beautiful song, "Maiden Mine," beautifully sung by Mr Shakespeare. The Anemoic Union, under the direction of Mr Lazarus, played, with effect, selections from operas by Rossini, Verdi, &c. Mr Sidney Naylor accompanied the singers.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The last Saturday Popular Concert of our present choral and orchestral series, under the management of the Glasgow Choral Union, conducted by Mr Manns, was one of peculiar interest. It was called a "plebiscite" concert, and the following was the voix populaire as to the pieces which contained the greatest merit of all the many played during the season:—Amongst the symphonies Berlioz's Fantastique heads the list with an enormous majority, it obtained 859 votes. Beethoven's Pastoral comes next in order with 407; Raff's Leonore, 310; and Mendelssohn's Scotch Symphony has 264. Tannhäuser is at the top of the overtures, with 425 votes; William Tell, 391; and, in the department of "ballet airs and dance music," Mr Manns' "Indian Plait Dance" scored 493, as against the "Blue Danube" waltz, which gained 360. Among the "miscellaneous music," Boccherini's Minuet for strings has first place, 268; and Weber's "Imitation à la Valse," 255. It was quite impossible for the directors to make the programme in accordance with the general wish, and the following judicious selections were made, out of a total of 2,422 votes:—Symphonie Fantastique, An Episode in the Life of an Artist (Berlioz), 859; Kólâttam, "An Indian Plait Dance" (Manns), 493; Overture, Tannhäuser (Wagner), 425; Overture, William Tell (Rossini), 391; Waltz, "The Blue Danube" (Strauss), 360; Minuet for Strings (Boccherini), 268; Overture, A Midsummer Night's Dream (Mendelssohn), 253. It need hardly be added that the concert was an enormous success. Every inch of the large concert-room was eagerly contested for, whilst many hundreds were turned away with sadly disappointed faces. Of course the audience applauded to the utmost every item played; and why not? had not all present good reason to approve of their pet selection! Mr Manns and his orchestra entered heartily into the situation, and gave a jocund rendering of every number on the programme. Mr Fred. King was the vocalist of the evening, and sang with great effect to the entire satisfaction of the audience.

The 10th and concluding concert of the subscription series was devoted (as it turned out) to a wonderfully fine performance of Berlioz's Faust. Berlioz's works have, during our brief season, created a universal amount of attention, and it may be safely said, admiration, which no composer has previously received at the hands of the general public as well as at those of the most enthusiastic amateurs.* Whether this present excitement over these works will subside with a permanent admiration of the French composer's erratic writings remains to be seen; for my own part, I question it. Be that as it may, let me briefly indicate how the dramatic legend was performed. The solo vocalists were—Miss M. Davies, Mr Barton M'Guckin, Mr Fred. King, and a member of the Choral Union. Miss Mary Davies sang her music with that delicacy and freshness which, from her, we always expect. Mr M'Guckin appeared in the first part not to be wholly at home in his music, and consequently was less effective than he otherwise was sure to have been. Mr Fred. King in more than one number made his mark as a singer with a fine voice, and with equally fine expression, and can at times display an amount of declamatory power which, in these days, is seldom heard from a baritone. The chorus were fairly well up in their work, and in the first portion of the legend the singing was characterised by great vigour. In the second part, however, it is to be feared that more than one of Berlioz's intricate passages (which never should have been written for the human voice) were a shade too much for the members of the choir. Yet in justice it should be added that every member strove to give a good account of every bar. Thus any shortcomings in exact execution were literally borne away by the determined efforts of all sections of the choir in their desire to give a vivid representation of the marvellous tone-picture. Regarding Mr Manns and his orchestra nothing more need be said than they were at their very brightest, and contributed in a great measure to the grand success of the evening.

Thus finished the present series of concerts under Mr. Manns' direction, which, in time to come, will have an honourable mention in the pages of the History of Music in Scotland. I understand that so great has been the success this season, alike musically and financially, that Mr Manns will return next year to Glasgow and will occupy the same position which he has done during the last three seasons.

[* "Our own correspondent" in writing this must have been recreating himself with some one who "likes his gompany."—D. T.]

THE KENNEDY FAMILY IN NEW YORK.—In Steinway Hall on Friday night, Jan. 20th, there was a large audience gathered to hear a concert of Scottish music by the Kennedy family. Nearly every chair in the room, writes The Tribune, was occupied, and there was an outburst of enthusiam after each song, in which, as plainly as in the beating of time by hundreds of feet during the playing of some reels and strathspeys, could be perceived the patriotic spirit of New York's Scotch population. The singers all brought good voices and a delightfully simple and heartfelt style to the performance of their work, and made the evening one of rare pleasure even to those whose patriotic memories were not appealed to. The beauty of the old Scottish songs and their characteristic features have often been descanted upon, and nothing new can be added upon these points, but to appreciate the humorous and patriotic ones especially, they should be heard from a singer with the imitative powers and the inspiriting declamation of Mr Kennedy.

PARIS.—Mr Charles Oberthür, professor of the harp at the London Academy of Music, is not merely an eminent virtuoso but also a composer of merit. We had the proof of this at a concert he gave in the Salle Erard, when several of his compositions were successfully performed; among them the audience were especially pleased with a trio for violin, violoncello, and harp, very well executed by MM. Nadaud, Loeb, and the author, and a fine "Prayer" for organ and harp, played by MM. Lamothe and Oberthür. In the vocal portion of the concert, Mdlle Doré-Desvignes was applauded for her rendering of a romance by Oberthür, and M. Valdec charmed the audience with two melodies by M. L. Diémer. We must also mention the pleasure M. J. Loeb, the excellent violoncello solo of the Opera, afforded by playing to perfection a piece by M. B. Godard, and Dunckler's "Fileuse."—Le Ménestrel.

Digitized by Google

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

In anticipation of a special general meeting, to be held on the 21st inst., the committee of the Sacred Harmonic Society have issued a report on the general condition of that body. It is a disappointing, and to lovers of music a melancholy, document. There were many who looked forward to the society's jubilee season as to a point where the tide of fortune, long ebbing, would turn and flow. It was fondly hoped that an institution, venerable in point of age, and having peculiar claims upon artistic society, would find even obstinate indifference change to something of friendly interest at such a critical period in its history. Nothing of the kind, however, has taken place. On the contrary, lukewarmness has become so cold as to have almost lost a right to the name, and it really seems as though the friends of this once powerful society are "scuttling" away from it like rats from a rotten ship. For this view of the case we have the authority of the committee, who say that "there has been a further falling off in the subscription list," while "there is no sign of any improvement in the receipts from the general public." It is added that, "whereas in former times three-shilling tickets for the Society's concerts were often sold for many times their original price, the number of persons out of the four millions inhabiting London willing to pay half-a-crown to hear the much finer performances of last season only averaged 180; while, if certain favourite works be excluded from the calculation, the number would dwindle down to the low average of 120." We confess our profound disappointment—we had almost written disgust—at this state of things, and can feel no surprise at the resolution to which the committee have come. Deeply interested as are the members of that body in the success of the institution they control, their only honest and straightforward course was to lay the matter before their constituents, and advise that "it will be better to bring the Society to an honourable close at the end of its fiftieth year, rather than to struggle further against the inevitable, with the almost certain prospect of having to encounter a similar difficulty sooner or later, even if by some extraordinary means present embarrassments could be tided over for a time." Everyone must admire the manly tone of this counsel. The committee do not wish the Society to go begging for the means of subsistence, but desire that, having lived a life of dignity for fifty years, it may gather its robes about it and die a worthy death. They could do no other; but the obligation resting upon them does not debar us from asking whether some plan may yet be devised to the end of continuing a valuable career, without compromising principles that command our sympathies.

The committee naturally set forth the causes which, in their view, have led to the present position of the society, and the manner in which they anticipate the charge of lacking enterprise is noteworthy. Superficial observers are wont to say that the enterprise languishes because of limitation to a small repertory of familiar masterpieces. Against this opinion the report sets facts and figures, declaring that "for more than twenty years past there have been only two works, the names of which will readily occur to the members, the performance of which could be reckoned upon with any certainty to produce a profit." Even Israel in Egypt, we are told, has only yielded a profit on six occasions out of the last fifteen performances. The committee might have given other and still more convincing particulars had they chosen to do so. They might have pointed out, for example, how Beethoven's Second Mass, and Bach's Matthew Passion were performed to receipts hardly sufficient for more than the rent of the room. In view of all this, it is idle to reproach the society for not affecting new works. Some years ago, Mr Barnby tried the value of novelties, and he is now found at the Albert Hall ringing the changes upon about as many old oratorios as there are fingers on his hands. We may marvel that such things should be; we may feel ashamed of them; but we cannot dispute their existence. The real causes of the society's present state are set forth by the committee with a confidence which reflection perfectly justifies. They say, in the first place, that oratorio performances, especially by smaller and local associations, are now frequent, instead of, as was once the case, rare. These, naturally drain away support from the central society, and have the advantage of being able to offer the amateurs of oratorio an entertainment which, if not a very high class, is inexpensive and easily accessible. In the next place, the Committee point to the change which has come over public opinion on the question of music and public amusements generally. At one time, a performance of sacred works was the only entertainment which large numbers of persons thought consistent with their religious principles, while many regarded even this with doubt as a possible invention of the enemy. Whether we have become less religious, or less puritanical, is beside the question; in any case the restriction no longer exists; the barriers between sacred and secular art are broken down, and the society enjoys only a share of the patronage which once was all its own. We are asked to recognize other though minor causes, in the increased expense of concert-giving—calculated at one third more than had to be met thirty years ago, and due almost entirely to the demands of solo vocalists; and in the compulsory removal from Exeter Hall, with which building the society had been so long identified. Let us frankly admit the formidable character of the changes which have worked harm to the institution. They are changes which evade argument, and lie beyond the reach of remonstrance. It is of no use to wax angry with them, the only course open being to take them into account, and see if circumstances cannot bend to the new order of things.

Very properly the committee assume that a section of the musical public will resent the abandonment of their work without further struggle, and they invite such persons seriously to consider the best means of forming a new society, which shall take over the goodwill and assets of the old institution. We regard this suggestion as utterly impracticable. No new society would succeed where the present organization has failed, since it would have to encounter the same obstacles without the prestige that attends an honourable record of achievement through fifty years of life. What, then, is to be done? Should a few cries of "Nothing" answer this question we may safely ignore them. Whatever the low state of musical life among us, it is hard to believe that a society which presents, in the best available manner, the masterpieces of oratorio is accounted valueless, or that an institution which for half a century has embodied a distinctly national taste, and, at the Crystal Palace, has given performances able to call forth the wonder and admiration of the world, has failed to make itself an object of sentiment and sympathy. It must surely be that the Sacred Harmonic Society possesses a multitude of friends who, however careless at other times, are in the present trouble willing to come forward and give the help which it can scarcely be expected to beg. The committee themselves indicate in a passing manner the only method open to such well-wishers. They say, "It would be hopeless for any body of amateurs to attempt to give concerts on the same complete scale as those of the Sacred Harmonic Society, unless they were supported by a sufficient number of influential and wealthy guarantors, as is the case with all the large musical festivals throughout the country." The remedy lies, therefore, in a guarantee fund. We shall be told, perhaps, that a concern which cannot pay its way is not worth propping up, and the dictum may hold good in matters outside the domain of art. Nevertheless, it should not be forgotten that institutions like the Sacred Harmonic Society do not exist for the sake of a balance-sheet. They are public educators, centres of beneficent influence, agents of refinement, and ministers to the most ennobling of pleasures. As such their life should not depend upon ability "to make two ends meet." Hence the idea entertained in some quarters of attempting to raise a guarantee fund to be represented on the committee by certain of the guarantors is one eminently worthy of consideration, and likely to meet with support. The time is opportune for such a proposition, while the sympathy everywhere felt for Sir Michael Costa might be glad to take a practical form in connection with a society served by him for more than a generation. How the thing is done matters little, but for very shame's sake let us all hope that it may be done somehow, and music in the metropolis spared the disgrace of seeing one of its oldest representative bodies left to die of wasting.—D. T.

—o—

SIGNOR FABIO CAMPANA.

The sudden death of Signor Fabio Campana, which took place on Thursday, Feb. 2nd, at his residence, 15, Westbourne Place, Belgravia, leaves a blank in the musical world in general, and in that vast circle of friends and admirers by whom the talented maestro was so deservedly beloved and esteemed. Signor Campana was one of the most popular composers of the modern Italian vocal school; the diversity and easy flow of his melodies, up to the moment when death interposed, are striking proofs of his bright talent. His vocal compositions, numbering upwards of 400, were seldom absent from the programmes of the most brilliant concerts of the season, whether given in fashionable concert-rooms or in the elegant drawing-rooms of the élite. Who can fail to acknowledge the charm of "Tel' rammenti," "Una sera d'amore," and "Non posso vivere senza di te"? His opera, Esmeralda, though rarely heard in this country, is invariably received with the greatest favour in Italy, Spain, and Russia.—(Communicated.)

Gudrun, a new opera, music by Aug. Klughardt, has been produced at the Grand-Ducal Theatre, Neu-Strelitz.

Digitized by Google

ST JAMES'S HALL.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS,

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON, 1881-82.

DIRECTOR—MR S. ARTHUR CHAPPELL.

FIRST APPEARANCE OF HERR JOACHIM

ON

MONDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 20, 1882,

At Eight o'clock precisely.

Programme.

PART I.—Quartet, in F major, Op. 59, No. 1 (dedicated to Count Rasoumowski), for two violins, viola, and violoncello (Beethoven)—MM. Joachim, L. Ries, Straus, and Piatti; Song, "Lusinghe più care" (Handel)—Miss Annie Marriott; Nocturne, in C minor and Impromptu, in F sharp major (Chopin), for pianoforte alone—Mdlle Marie Krebs.

PART II.—Romance (Joachim) and Caprice (Paganini), for violin, with pianoforte accompaniment—Herr Joachim; Duet, "How lovely is thy face" (Handel)—Miss Annie Marriott and Miss Edith Miller; Trio, in G major, Op. 9, No. 1, for violin, viola, and violoncello (Beethoven)—MM. Joachim, Straus, and Piatti.

Accompanist—MR ZERBINI.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 18, 1882,

At Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

Quartet, in D minor, Op. 10, No. 2, for two violins, viola, and violoncello (Mozart)—Mdme Norman-Néruda (her Last Appearance but One), MM. L. Ries, Straus, and Piatti; Song, "The Savoyard's Return" (Piatti)—Mr Herbert Reeves—violoncello obbligato, Signor Piatti; Sonata, in E minor, Op. 90, for pianoforte alone (Beethoven)—Mr Charles Hallé; Sonata, in D major, for violin, with pianoforte accompaniment (Handel)—Mdme Norman-Néruda; Song, "The Miller's Daughter" (Pinsuti)—Mr Herbert Reeves; Trio, in D major, Op. 70, No. 1, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (Beethoven)—Mr Charles Hallé, Mdme Norman-Néruda, and Signor Piatti.

Accompanist—MR ZERBINI.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

SCOTLAND.—Reid Festival next week.

GLASGOW—PAISLEY.—Too late, as usual. Cannot you remember that Mr D. P. is travelling in space, and that Dr Beard, who resides near Worcester, is his temporary substitute?

AN ADMIRER OF BOTH.—No. Auber, the inimitable Frenchman, was born in 1782, ten years before Rossini, the inimitable Italian, who came into the world (happy coincidence!) in the same year as our poet of poets, Percy Bysshe Shelley.

DEATHS.

On Feb. 4th, Mr G. A. CHALLENGER, pianoforte manufacturer, in his fifty-fourth year.

On Feb. 9th, at 33, Oakeley Square, N.W., JOHN, eldest son of the late RALPH ALLISON, of Wardour Street, Soho, aged fifty-one.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.'S, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). Advertisements not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1882.

A CRY FROM THE ORCHESTRA.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—May I ask how many rehearsals are deemed necessary by Mr Joseph Barnby for the oratorio performances in Albert Hall? Is it generally known that extra rehearsals cost money, and that English orchestral players are not slaves as the orchestral players at Munich would seem to be? We have no amateur composer here, like Baron von Perfall. We swear, and have long sworn, by Sir Michael Costa, always the true Father of the Orchestra, looking after his "fiddlers" as Nelson looked after his sailors, and Wellington after his soldiers—while always exacting the discipline which, strictly observing himself, he as strictly enforced upon those under his control. You want exceptional performances—well, you must pay for them. Every working man's labour is worth his hire. Why, then, should orchestral players be called upon to work at unreasonable times (and for unreasonable terms), in order to lighten the risk of an undertaker? That undertaker may undertake a grand undertaking; but the orchestra will not undertake to undertake forced labour. If Mr Richard Wagner requires three hundred rehearsals for Parsifal he may get them at Bayreuth, but will never get them here. Not even poor Kundry, with all her love for Amfortas, whom, by her wiles, like a certain Vivien, she dragged down from the skies to the earth, could persuade them—the late M. De Folly (who always wished to descend from the heights of the piccolo to the depths of the contrabasso), perhaps excepted.—I am, Sir, yours respectfully,

AN ORCHESTRAL PLAYER OF SOME WATES.

["A white stone! A white stone!" ("Strap," in course) —"a white stone!—a white stone!"—Mr Bridge.]

A QUESTION OF FLUTES.

On Change.

DR QUINCE (hurriedly).—Ah! One instant. About flutes—Böhm or Gordon?

DR SHIPPING (hurriedly).—Böhm, of course.

DR QUINCE (hurriedly).—About Gordon?

DR SHIPPING (breathless).—Böhm, of course!

[Exeunt severally to Turkish and Egyptian.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—The German manuscript of the accompanying paper, with a translation by himself, which I have since re-cast, was sent me by Mr. J. P. Triggs, flutist, of Glasgow. He tells me that he received the manuscript, corrected and signed in Dr Schafhäutl's handwriting, from Mr Schmidt, the publisher, of Heilbronn. I do not know whether it has been published in Germany, but I believe that it contains matter likely to interest English flute players, and settles authoritatively the much-debated question as to the invention of the Böhm flute.—I am, sir, very faithfully yours,

W. S. BROADWOOD.

Cabalva, Radnorshire, Feb. 13th, 1882.

THEOBALD BÖHM, AND THE FLUTE CALLED AFTER HIM.

It seems that the old dispute as to who was the real inventor of the "Böhm Flute" has again cropped up. It originated in Paris. The celebrated flutist, V. J. B. Coche, who was one of the first to play the Böhm flute, who contributed more than anyone to bring it into use in France, and who explained its merits in a pamphlet of his own composition (Paris, 1839), writes to Böhm, May 25th, 1838: "On dit dans le monde artiste, que la flute qui porte votre nom a été découverte par un nommé Gordon ancien élève de Drouet."

The Gordon in question was a Swiss, who had served as an officer in the Gardes du Corps of Charles X., and had been pensioned after that King's abdication. He heard Böhm play upon his ring-keyed flute at a concert in London (1831); made Böhm's acquaintance; and conceived the idea of himself making a new flute that should be free from the defects of the old flute. We shall become better acquainted with this "new flute." Gordon worked at it in Paris indefatigably with his own hands, and showed it to his teacher, Drouet. In a letter dated Feb. 15, 1833, he writes to Böhm: "J'ai vu Drouet à Paris; mais il récule devant un changement dans le doigté. Tulou en est là aussi."

That Drouet and Tulou should have remembered Gordon when Böhm came forward with his own flute, is easily to be accounted for; but that they should distinguish what was the fundamental principle on which the flutes of Gordon and of Böhm were constructed, is more than could be expected of most artists; besides which they were reluctant to acknowledge that the new was more and more superseding the old flute; for Coche had already won over all musicians by his performances on the new Böhm flute.

Digitized by Google

I have frequently written concerning its origin; for instance, in the official reports of the London Industrial Exhibition, 1851 (Berlin, 1852, pages 882-884*)*; again, in the report of the Juror's Committee, Munich Industrial Exhibition, 1854 (Munich, 1855, pages 444-446*)*; and finally, in greater detail, in the Algemeine Musikalische Zeitung, Leipsic, 1879, No. 39, pages 643-646.

Now that Gordon and Böhm are both dead, the former long since, the latter only towards the end of last year (November 25), I feel myself doubly compelled to make it clear to the musical public, that Theobald Böhm is indeed the inventor of the flute which bears his name.

The eminent flutist, Theobald Böhm, was gifted not only with musical talent, but possessed also a genius for mechanism. After his appointment to the Royal Bavarian Orchestra in 1816, he made several cleverly designed flutes, with a special arrangement of key mechanism, for himself and for his master, Rapelle, also a member of the Royal Orchestra; and, finally, in the year 1828, he set up a flute manufactory of his own in Munich. From this period dates the gradual adoption in England and France of the excellent system of key mechanism, designed and made by Böhm himself. The great success which Böhm achieved as a flutist in Munich and in Switzerland induced him at length to visit Paris and London, where the artistic refinement of his style, the fluency and certainty of his execution commanded general admiration. In London the extraordinarily large tone of the flute player Nicholson, at that time so celebrated in England, surprised Böhm, who hastened to make his acquaintance, and soon found that the secret of the power of the Nicholson flute lay in the unusual size of the holes. But even so, the capabilities of the instrument were very limited, for, except that of F, no scale was quite in tune. The scales on the Böhm flute were all in better tune than those upon the Nicholson flute, as at that time manufactured by the English makers. Böhm had long been thinking of making a flute which should combine fulness of tone with accuracy of intonation; but he foresaw that this could not be accomplished without a change of fingering, and he knew how difficult it would be to induce musicians, who had practised one system all their lives, to take to another. During this visit to London, however, he finally resolved to carry out his long cherished purpose.

In December of the year 1832, his new flute with its new scale was finished. He soon mastered the new fingering, and in the succeeding year, 1833, played it in Paris, and also in London, with great success.

Savart, the professor of acoustics, at first received Böhm very coldly, and declared that to play the scale on the flute in tune in all keys was impossible, but when he heard Böhm do this he was so astonished that he himself introduced Böhm to the Academy.

In London, Böhm created quite as great a sensation as in Paris. He particularly impressed Gordon, a retired colonel of the Gardes du Corps of Charles X. Gordon, who was a pupil of Drouet, and an enthusiastic flute player, at once comprehended the advantages of the Böhm flute, renewed his acquaintance with Böhm, and was initiated into his system. He induced Böhm to have a flute tube made for him at Munich by his best workman, but without keys; for he believed that the Böhm mechanism could be simplified so as to require eight keys only. To this notion he clung till the end of his days; undeterred by constant failure, or by Böhm's warning that to obtain power, equality, and freedom of tone; together with fluency of execution and accuracy of intonation, with a flute having thirteen sound holes and only eight keys, was an impossibility. This notion of Gordon's had already become a sort of monomania. He clung to it till the end of his life—a very sad end, as we are told.

Gordon left London "peu de temps après votre départ pour Munich," as he writes in a letter of the 15th February, 1833. He was then working, as we have seen, at a flute, with the thirteen holes of the Böhm system, but with only eight keys, which, as he wrote, he himself had made. This flute was barely playable in slow movements. In rapid passages, the very unequal tone frequently missed altogether. Gordon, however, ascribed these ever recurring difficulties of execution to bad workmanship; so that he looked upon the flutes he had made thus far as mere models.

In a letter from Lausanne, dated February, 1833, which lies before me at this moment, he requests Böhm to have a flute made by one of his very best workmen on his (Gordon's) model. Böhm answered that it would be better that Gordon should come to Munich. He followed this advice, and arrived in Munich July, 1833, where he remained till March, 1834; Böhm placing at his disposition one of his most skilful workmen, but being himself away in London.

Model after model was made and rejected one after another. I myself at first witnessed these unsuccessful attempts. At length a well made flute upon Gordon's model was finished, and he at once brought his invention before the public. In 1834 Gordon advertised his new flute in Paris, under the name of La Flûte Diatonique, and brought out a lithographed "Table of Fingering" for it.

In the introduction appended to his Table of fingering for the flûte diatonique, fabriquée dans les ateliers de Böhm, he says:—

"La suppression des deux clefs de Fa dièze, est une idée dont l'application offre de grands avantages. L'idée de cette clef, de Fa dièze communiquée par M. Böhm de Munich, a été avec son agrément adoptée pour la présente Flûte, dont elle complète les moyens d'execution." This diatonic flute had, of course, the thirteen holes of the Böhm system; five of which remained open for the fingers (E, F, F sharp, B, and C sharp).

Gordon's eight keys intended for the other eight holes were connected with each other by contrivances of all sorts—a very puzzle of levers. Above the D sharp hole were the ends of three keys, close together. Five keys had ends shaped like hackers (like the crescent of the moon five days before new moon), and these were for the shakes. They were placed in the shape of a sickle round the holes, so that when one key was pressed down it closed two adjoining holes. Gordon worked on with Böhm's best workman (Böhm himself being again away) with great perseverance, but none of his diatonic flutes satisfied him. At length despairing, he went back to Switzerland, and we have no reliable account of what became of him and his flute. It was reported that he threw it into the Lake of Geneva, and died in a mad-house. His own fixed idea appears to have completely overmastered the intellect of that gallant and amiable gentleman.

In that same year (1833) Böhm went again to London, and created so great a sensation that the celebrated Dorus*, then a young man, at once laid aside the old flute, and with his wonted energy and talent soon mastered the Böhm flute. In 1837 the Böhm flute was introduced into the Paris Conservatoire, after a committee—of which Savart, Prony, and Dulong were members—had borne the highest testimony to its merits.

In 1846 Böhm crowned his invention by substituting a cylinder for the old conical bore; he also introduced that parabolic curve in the head joint, which is necessary for correctness of intonation in the high notes. This flute obtained the Gold Medal at the Universal Exhibition (London, 1851), Berlioz taking an active part in the decisions of the jurors. Also at the Paris Exhibition, 1855, it carried off the Gold Medal, to which was added a most flattering acknowledgment of the merits of Böhm's system. At the present time the Böhm flute is played upon all over the civilized world.

Those who know how great is the distance which separates the conception of even the happiest ideas from their realization and introduction in a practical form, will see a proof of the value of Böhm's system in the fact that it has at length established its position in the musical world, notwithstanding the long-continued opposition of many leading artists. In a letter to Böhm, already quoted, Gordon writes that Drouet and Tulou approved of his flute; but would not hear of a change of fingering.

Böhm's flute would have been rejected for the same reason, had not its superiority been such as to throw into the shade all others—old or new. Thus I have again related in its general outlines the history of the invention and development of the Böhm flute. Probably, I am the best witness as to the whole matter; for I lived over fifty-two years with my friend Böhm; under my guidance he devoted himself most perseveringly to the study of acoustics. I witnessed his innumerable experiments, which embraced all wind instruments; and which could only be carried out by one who united in his own person a practical knowledge of technical mechanism and of acoustic science.

That such a man should have borrowed from others the ideas upon which he founded the construction of his instruments, is what no one can seriously believe.

In later years Böhm extended the compass of the flute, carrying it down from C to the low G, thus adding a new powerful and effective instrument to the resources of musical art.† His key mechanism, now used upon all keyed wind instruments of the better class, have already secured for Böhm a permanent place in the history of musical instruments. The keys upon the foot joint of the flute, formerly supported by "cheeks" cut out of the wood and having a brass pin for axle—also the equally clumsy metal cups—

* It was, I believe, Dorus who introduced the closed G sharp key, which is in general use among French flutists.

† This is an allusion to the G (bass) flute, brought out only a few years ago by Böhm; and used in the orchestra—I am told, in some German orchestras, to produce special effects.—W. S. B.

Digitized by Google

were replaced by small pillars and slender steel rods and axles, revolving in the ball shaped extremity of the pillar, and working with the accuracy and precision of a chronometer. The delicate steel springs of the mechanism furnished the means of uniting the action of keys placed at opposite extremities of the flute tube, and enabled the performer to cover a distant hole as perfectly and with the same certainty, as if the key lay beneath the finger. Keys are indispensable for the large holes of the Böhm flute; they cannot be covered by the unaided finger. Upon the old flute the keys opened small holes; upon the Böhm flute the keys hermetically close large holes. Böhm made, with his own hands, the first batch of his flutes, and he accustomed both his workmen and his successor* to such finish of mechanism as has seldom been equalled and never surpassed.

(Signed) CARL VON SCHAFHÄUTL,
Doctor and Professor in the Royal Bavarian Academy, University, and Conservatorium.

Munich, January 23, 1882.

—o—

MDLLE SARAH BERNHARDT AT GENOA.

As I had already told you, expectation was great. The stalls at the Carlo Felice were 20fr., and the prices of the boxes preposterous, yet on the day of the first appearance not a place could be found. The great actress arrived here on the morning of the 5th, and took apartments at the Hotel de Génes, just opposite the Carlo Felice Theatre. At night the house presented a splendid spectacle, among the spectators being Giuseppe Verdi, who was anxious to hear Mdlle Bernhardt in the piece which inspired his Traviata. There were in the theatre Mdlle Bianca Donadio, Adelina Patti's rival, and the two celebrated Italian actresses, Signora Maggi and Signora Campi. On Mdlle Sarah Bernhardt appearing on the stage a few of the spectators clapped their hands, but the rest of the audience remained silent. Shortly after the piece had commenced Mdlle Sarah Bernhardt fell on the stage in a fainting fit. There were cries of "Rideau, rideau," and the curtain fell. Animated discussion followed, when a gentleman appeared on the stage and announced that Mdlle Sarah Bernhardt was very ill, but hoped to feel better in a quarter of an hour and to resume acting. Notwithstanding the advice given by several doctors, Mdlle Sarah Bernhardt insisted upon continuing the piece. The second act was a great success, and so was the third. But during the scene with Armand's father the actress fainted again, spitting blood. She was carried senseless to her apartment in the hotel, a police inspector requesting the public to pardon if the play could not be continued. The impression produced was so great that on her re-appearing the second night to act Adrienne de Lecouvreur she met with a most enthusiastic reception, more especially on the part of the ladies, who presented her with splendid bouquets and presents. The following day Mdlle Sarah Bernhardt spent several hours at the churchyard of Staglieno admiring the splendid monuments of that cemetery.—Morning Post Correspondence.

MR HENRY IRVING, the distinguished actor, was elected by the committee, on Wednesday last, a member of the Athenæum Club.

MR JACQUES ROSENTHAL is to be the solo violinist at the Rochester Philharmonic Concert on Monday, when he will play the Concerto by Vieuxtemps, for which he obtained so much praise on his début at one of the Crystal Palace Saturday Concerts.

MDME ALWINA VALLERIA has requested us to state that the rumour of her intention to visit America this winter is entirely without foundation. Mdme Valleria will remain in England to fulfil the numerous engagements she has already contracted.

SALZBURG.—Peter Singer, a Franciscan monk, and inventor of a musical machine he called a "Pansymphonicon," died here suddenly on the 25th of January. He was born in 1810, at Hesselgehr, in the Tyrolean Lechthal. He was, also, the author of numerous works on music.

* Mr. Mendler, of Munich.—W. S. B.

CONCERTS.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—The programme of the last concert was "miscellaneous," comprising three works, which have absolutely nothing in common but their excellence. These were Handel's "Zadok the Priest" (Coronation Anthem for George II.), Gounod's "St. Cecilia" Mass, and Beethoven's Mount of Olives, according to the Exeter Hall version, once bearing the title of Engedi—all too familiar to call for anything in the shape of critical remark. The leading singers were Miss A. Williams, Messrs Joseph Maas and Thorndike, to Mr Maas falling the difficult recitative and air with which Beethoven's oratorio opens. In consequence of the sudden indisposition of Sir Michael Costa, the whole performance was directed—how ably need not be said—by M. Sainton, his long-trusted first violin, and, from time to time, zealous substitute as conductor. A report, to be presented by the Committee at a special general meeting of the members of the Sacred Harmonic Society (on Tuesday, the 21st inst.), has already been printed and circulated among the friends and well-wishers of the institution. From this report, into the details of which space will not allow us at present to enter, but which it will be our duty to consider on a later occasion, there appears to be little hope for the future. To come at once to the point—the idea of another series of performances, under the same control and similar conditions may be put aside, as a dream of Utopia very unlikely to be realized. Nevertheless, if it be written in the Book of Fate that the present season must inevitably be the last, the Society, and its zealous guides may console themselves with the strong conviction that they have accomplished a great work thoroughly, and from the very commencement to the infinite credit of all concerned. Fifty years ago they began to remind our musical public that Handel, who had been dead for more than three quarters of a century, wrote many other things besides The Messiah, and other works more or less widely recognized. They also helped Spohr and Mendelssohn to obtain well deserved popularity among us, and in other respects justified a claim to general acknowledgment. The jubilee of the society—its "golden wedding" with that large number of our musical public to whom sacred compositions (as "high mountains" to Lord Byron) "are a feeling"—can only, then, be regarded as the climax to an undertaking, enthusiastically set on foot and enthusiastically carried out, by a body of amateurs whose exertions will surely be mentioned with due honour in future historical records of an art the high integrity of which, amid vicissitudes unnecessary to recount, they promoted and sustained for half a century. All honour to them! The next concert is announced for the 24th inst, on which occasion, besides Dr Arthur Sullivan's Martyr of Antioch, the programme includes a new "Te Deum" by Mr W. G. Cusins (conductor of the Philharmonic Concerts), and Mendelssohn's magnificent setting of the 42nd Psalm. On this occasion—although, happily, Sir Michael Costa is sensibly recovering from the illness that so alarmed his many admirers among the public, and his many staunch friends who follow as professors or love as amateurs the art towards the advancement of which he has rendered such eminent service, M. Sainton will again be at the conductor's desk. It may be worth reminding our readers that Sir Michael was appointed conductor of the Sacred Harmonic Society's Concerts as far back as 1848, and that during that period he has directed all the Handel Festivals in the Crystal Palace from 1857 (the preliminary essayal) to 1880, the last grand assemblage.

POPULAR CONCERTS.—The engagement of Mdme Norman-Néruda, begun so recently and terminating so much sooner than anticipated, has in one sense been satisfactory, and in another unsatisfactory, to the constant patrons of Mr Chappell's excellent concerts—satisfactory, because the highly-gifted lady violinist was never playing with more technical finish, or more admirable expression, than now; and unsatisfactory, because the curtain closes in so unexpectedly brief a time upon a delightful episode in the present season. Mdme Néruda has played in bonâ fide "classical" pieces by various masters, besides solos fitted to show to advantage her technical mastery of the instrument upon which she shines as "a bright particular star." Nevertheless, it must suffice to speak of her last appearance. This was on Monday evening, when, just as though to make her early departure the more regrettable, she led, with incomparable grace and (pass the word) "finesse," Schubert's fascinating quartet in A minor (the "Styrian quartet")—a composition into which she enters heart and soul, and which, it may be safely affirmed, she interprets with a perfection that may be accepted in the fullest signification of the word. In this quartet her associates were MM. Ries, Straus, and Piatti, upon whom, the last-named especially, no comment is required. For her solo, the fair and gifted Moravian selected three numbers from a suite by Franz Ries (a nephew to Ferdinand Ries, Beethoven's one professional pupil, and a famous composer of his day), the worth of which was even exceeded by the style in which it was executed, although the movements—"Prelude," "Romance," and "Scherzo" are by no means without very considerable merit. She also joined Mdlle Marie Krebs, ready and intelligent, in Beethoven's sonata for pianoforte and violin, "Op. 24" (F major)—melody of the rarest kind from the opening to the concluding bars—a performance to be recorded, in unqualified terms, as on both sides admirable. At the same concert Mdlle Krebs played, to the loudly proclaimed satisfaction of all present, the famous Chromatic Fantasia of J. S. Bach, also joining Signor Piatti in a Larghetto and Allegretto by Mr A. C. Mackenzie, which, it must be admitted, owed its chief success to the execution of the two artists—Signor Piatti's delivery of the theme of the opening movement being above praise. Mr Oswald was the singer, introducing, among other pieces, the late Sterndale Bennett's beautiful setting of Burns' plaintive stanzas, "To Chloe in sickness." Miss Emma Barnett has also made a successful appearance as pianist at these concerts, in one of the early sonatas of Beethoven (Op. 10—D major); Misses Spenser Jones and Carlotta Elliot enriching the catalogue of singers. Meanwhile, the arrival of Herr Joseph Joachim—among violinists still the emperor—is immediately expected, and (need it be said?) with pleasurable anticipations.

Digitized by Google

Madame Isabelle Powers' Concert.—The first appearance of a new vocalist is always an event of importance in the musical world; and, although Madame Powers is well known in musical circles in the North, in London she is a comparative stranger. She proved herself, although suffering from nervousness, to be a thoroughly well-trained singer. Her voice is fresh, clear, and expressive, Handel's "Angels ever bright and fair" being artistically rendered, and that being the fact, it need hardly be said that she proved herself fully equal to the other songs she undertook, viz., Hatton's "To blossoms," and Willem Coenen's "Come unto me." It may be prophesied that Madame Powers will soon find scope in the musical world of London for the display of her musical abilities. Among novelties of interest were the performances of some pianoforte pupils of Signor Li Calsi and Herr Lehmeyer, who acquitted themselves with great credit to their well-known masters. Besides these talented pupils (Miss Alice Ashplant and Mr Sumpter) there was a "host of vocal and instrumental talent," and the concert gave evident satisfaction to a brilliant audience. Mr Trickett, evidently a thorough musician, accompanied the singers with tact and discrimination.

Mr Walter Clifford and a party of friends kindly provided the weekly entertainment to the inmates of the Brompton hospital, on Tuesday evening, Feb. 7th. The performance opened and closed with Bishop's trio, "Maiden Fair," admirably sung by Mdme Alice Barth, Messrs Faulkner Leigh and Walter Clifford. Mdme Barth sang "Bid me discourse" and Balfe's "Killarney;" Mdlle Arditi, "Clochette" and Tosti's "Good bye," each lady obtaining hearty applause; Messrs Faulkner Leigh and W. Clifford gave the duet, "The moon has raised;" and Mr Faulkner Leigh a new song by Signor Mazzoni, "Are blue eyes true?" and "The anchor's weighed" (encored); Mr Clifford sang, "Oh, Mistress Mine," "To Anthea," and "From rock to rock," eliciting warm applause. Mr Henry Parker played three charming pianoforte solos of his own composition and accompanied the songs. Mr Romaine Walker recited "A little hero" and "Roger and I" very ably, and the whole performance was evidently enjoyed by the audience.

Mr Percy Blandford gave a concert at St. James's Hall, on Friday evening, Feb. 10th, assisted by Mdme Lemmens-Sherrington, Mdme Patey, Mr Edward Lloyd, Signor Foli, Mr Marcellus Higgs (organ), and Mr Sydney Naylor (pianoforte). Mr Blandford contributed "Sound an alarm," from Judas Maccabæus, an excerpt ("Ingemisco") from Verdi's Requiem, and Adolphe Adam's "Cantique pour Noël;" Mr Edward Lloyd, "Be thou faithful" (St. Paul) and Sullivan's "Once again;" Signor Foli, "Arm, arm, ye brave" (Judas Maccabæus), and Pinsuti's "Bedouin love song;" Mdme Sherrington, "Angels ever bright and fair" and a popular ballad; Mdme Patey, "O, rest in the Lord" and Mr Michael Watson's "Winter story." The Sterndale Bennett quartet, "God is a Spirit" (The Woman of Samaria) was also included in the programme. Mr Marcellus Higgs played the "War March of the Priests," from Athalie, and took part with Mr Sidney Naylor in Guilmant's "Duo Pastorale," for American organ and pianoforte, and Alberti's fantasia upon "Fatinitza." The concert gave perfect satisfaction.

Mr Sinclar Dunn's second annual concert on the 14th inst. at the London Art Galleries, was attended with much success. Mr Dunn was assisted by the following artists: Miss Effie Clements, Miss Augusta Arnold, and Mr Frank May, vocalists; Mr Frank Arnold, violinist, and Mr W. G. Wood, pianist. The programme was well selected and of reasonable length, most of the audience remaining to the end and testifying their appreciation throughout, even the last song, by Mr Dunn, being encored.

Miss Minnie Bell, a lady who possesses considerable talent as a dramatic reader, gave an interesting entertainment at St James's Hall, on the 11th inst., forming one of a series of Saturday evenings devoted to readings, interspersed with music. Miss Bell excels both in pathetic and humorous pieces, and her expressive rendering of "Beautiful Snow," by Sigourney, and "The Lady of Provence," by Mrs Hemans, visibly affected the audience, as did, in a different manner, a comic scene from A Midsummer Night's Dream, and the "Execution" from the "Ingoldsby Legends." Miss Bell was assisted by Mdme Isabelle Powers and Miss Clara Myers (vocalists), and Mr George Gear (pianist), who played compositions by Chopin and Rubinstein, as well as his own rigaudon, entitled "Le Plaisir," winning much approval for each. We hope that Miss Bell may be encouraged to continue these agreeable entertainments.—F.

An Irish Ballad Concert was given at the Royal Victoria Hall (long known as the Victoria Theatre) on Thursday evening, Feb. 10, in the presence of T.R.H. Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of Teck, and a distinguished audience. The house was crowded in every part, and additional chairs had to be placed on the stage. The Royal party arrived at nine, and were received by the Committee, Lord and Lady Mount Temple, Mr and Mrs Montefiore, the Rev. J. W. Horsley, Mr Sargent, Mr Clement Hoey, Mr Creasey, Mr Poel, Lord Brabazon, and Miss Cons, Hon. Sec.; the national Anthem being sung by all the artists taking part in the concert. During the evening the following Irish pieces were given:—"The Harp that once thro' Tara's Hall" (Moore), Mdme Liebhart; "Tell me, my heart" (Bishop), Miss Henrietta Beebe; "The last rose of Summer," Mdme Adeline Paget; "Home, sweet home" (Jaell), Mdlle Buziau; "Dublin Bay" (Barker), Mr Egbert Roberts; "The Minstrel Boy," Mr Herbert Thorndike. Mr Victor Buziau played a violin solo, "St Patrick's Day," and the band of the Royal Horse Artillery played a selection of Irish melodies. There were several encores during the evening, and the whole performance was a great success.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERTS.

Mr John Boosey's Ballad Concert at St James's Hall on Wednesday last was equal to its predecessors both in quality and quantity. Spohr's "Rose softly blooming" (Miss Mary Davies), Signor Pinsuti's "I fear no foe" (Signor Foli), Behrend's "Once and once only" (Mr Edward Lloyd), Stephen Adams' "Midshipmite" (Mr Maybrick), and "O ruddier than the cherry" (Mr Santley), were all so effectively rendered that the audience called for them again, and their wishes were responded to, according to the fashion of the day, by the singers giving other songs instead! Among the stereotyped successes were Molloy's "Long Avenue" and Barnby's "When the tide comes in" (Mdme Antoinette Sterling), Balfe's "When other lips" (Mr Edward Lloyd), Barnby's melodious part-song, "Sweet and Low" (South London Choral Society), and Ambroise Thomas's setting of Mignon's song, "Knowest thou the land" (Mdme Isabel Fassett). Mr Sidney Naylor, as usual, accompanied with musicianly ability. On Wednesday evening, February 22 (Ash Wednesday), a "Grand Sacred Concert" is announced, and the next ballad concert will take place on Wednesday evening, March 1st, Mr Sidney Naylor conducting on both occasions.

Strassburgh.—The Government have again voted a grant of 128,000 marks for the Stadttheater. The Town furnishes the orchestra gratis; or, in other words, adds about 70,000 marks to the above sum, besides giving 20,000 marks in cash, with occasional extra contributions towards getting up particular pieces. Altogether the annual amount received is about 220,000 marks.

Monte-Carlo.—The operatic season commenced with Le Pardon de Ploërmel, the cast including Marie Vanzandt, Mdme Scalchi, Novelli, and Maurel. M. Jules Cohen conducted. The second opera was to be Mignon, with Mdlle Vanzandt, Mdmes Scalchi, Dereims-Devriès, MM. Novelli and Devriès, Sig Accursi conducting. Mdme Albani and Señor Gayarre arrived some time ago. Faure is not expected till the 21st. Hamlet is in rehearsal for him and Mdme Albani.

Brussels.—Suppé's buffo opera, Boccace, with a French libretto by MM. Chivot and Duru, has been successfully brought out at the Théâtre des Galeries St. Hubert. It will shortly be produced, also, at the Folies-Dramatiques, Paris. Hector Berlioz's dramatic symphony, Roméo et Juliette, has been performed, under the direction of M. Dupont, at the Popular Concerts, for the first time in this capital.

Digitized by Google

COUNTY HALL, WORCESTER,

The use kindly granted to M. JULLIEN by the Chairman and Magistrates of the County Sessions.

MONS. JULLIEN'S GRAND CONCERT,

ON WEDNESDAY MORNING, MARCH 22nd, 1848, given expressly for the first appearance of MR. SIMS REEVES, MR. HENRY WHITWORTH, and MISS MIRAN.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.

OVERTURE—(Masaniello) ..... Auber.
QUADRILLE—On Melodies from Balfe's Opera, The Maid of Honor ..... Jullien.
SYMPHONY—The Allegretto from Beethoven's Symphony in F ..... Beethoven.
GRAND SCENA—From Verdi's Opera, Ernani, sung by Mr. SIMS REEVES, his first appearance ..... Verdi.
VALSE—"Ravenswood," (selected from the Melodies of Donizetti's Opera, The Bride of Lammermoor) ..... Jullien.
ARIA—"Non più andrai," (from Le Nozze di Figaro), sung by Mr. WHITWORTH, his first appearance ..... Mozart.
SOLO—FLAGEOLET—(performed by M. COLLINET) ... Mayseder.
ROMANZA—"Dulcet Music" (from the Opera, The Maid of Honor), sung by Miss MIRAN, her first appearance Balfe.
QUADRILLE—"THE SWISS QUADRILLE" ..... Jullien.
(Composed during his late tour in Switzerland).

PART II.

OPERA—Grand Selection from Bellini's Opera, Norma, with Solos for Flute, Clarionet, and Cornet-a-piston, performed by Mr. RICHARDSON, HERR SONNENBERG, and HERR KŒNIG ..... Bellini.
VALSE—"Olga, or the Princess's Waltz" ..... Jullien.
BALLAD—"In this old chair my father sat," sung by Mr. SIMS REEVES ..... Balfe.
POLKA—"The Eclipse" (with Cornet obbligato, HERR KŒNIG) ..... Kœnig.
SONG—"The Last Man," sung by Mr. WHITWORTH ... Calcott.
BRINDISI—"Il segreto," from the Opera, Lucrezia Borgia, sung by Miss MIRAN ..... Donizetti.
SOLO—FLUTE—(performed by Mr. RICHARDSON) ... Richardson.
NEW GERMAN DANCE—"DER SCHOTTISCH" ..... Jullien.
Lately introduced in the nobility's Balls by M. JULLIEN.

Doors open at One p.m. Concert commence at Two p.m.
Seats, 4*s.*; Promenade, 2*s.* 6d.

Tickets to be had at Marsden's Library and Music Warehouse, 46, High-street, where may be obtained all the popular Publications of M. Jullien, &c. Ghost.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

(From the "Daily Telegraph.")

On Thursday, Feb. 9th, the Philharmonic Society entered upon its seventieth season, and now the days of its years are almost three-score years and ten. Let us hope there is no analogy between man and his institutions as regards the days that lie beyond, since, in the one case, if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength "labour and sorrow." No one wishes labour and sorrow, but "long continuance and increasing" to the oldest of our musical institutions, which, sooth to say, put forward an exceedingly vigorous prospectus in view of the concerts just begun. Out of twenty-three works named, seven are marked "first time," and not one of the seven fails to excite more or less pleasurable anticipation or curiosity. True, none of them are promised absolutely, the directors being satisfied to open their minds to the public and show the faculties thereof in the act of "contemplating" production. We may, nevertheless, reckon with assurance upon hearing some, if not all, of the novelties mentioned. The loss of one or two, perhaps, many of us would be able to survive. For example, we should not see the world covered with a funeral pall if we never heard Liszt's so-called symphonic poem, "Hungaria." On the other hand, let us by all means have Brahms' choral ode, "Nänie," and his new pianoforte concerto; Rubinstein's Paradise Lost, and the pianoforte concerto which Signor Sgambati has written and engaged to play. For the possible credit of our native composers, let us also have the new overtures announced as by Mr Corder and Mr Villiers Stanford respectively. These things, together with the standard works of Beethoven, Mozart, Mendelssohn, and others, would more than serve to distinguish the season, assuming, of course, that they received an adequate interpretation, apart from which excellence of programme only accentuates failure.

The opening concert was fairly well attended, but those present could not have shut their eyes to the fact that the society must be better upheld if it is to stand. In this respect appearances are alarming, not only as regards the Philharmonic, but other bodies of the same rank. Our public appear to have sunk into a state of invincible indifference to these old institutions, and the phenomenon is well worth study. Are the sensational enterprises which "make a pitch" amongst us like a wandering show, found more attractive? If that be so, it would seem as if public taste had lost its relish for solid, nutritious food, and taken up with condiments. The performance began with the overture to Der Freischütz, capitally played by an orchestra of eighty instruments, "led" by Herr Wiener, in the absence of Herr Straus. This was followed by the Chorus of Reapers from Liszt's Prometheus. We all know how a certain quadruped dressed itself in a lion's skin, and consorted with noble brutes undetected till, in a careless moment, it opened its mouth and brayed. Without insisting upon comparisons which would be as untrue as impolite, one cannot help thinking of the fable when Canon Liszt is seen disporting himself in Arcadia. What would the Greeks have said had the Delphic Pythia, after swelling and foaming, tearing her hair, and mangling her flesh, come down from the tripod, put on the rustic dress of the period, and made hay in Parnassian fields? Canon Liszt is the Pythia of modern music. He, too, swells and foams and tears his hair, and is generally unintelligible; yet here he presents himself in a straw hat, attuning his oaten reed to the accompaniment of a double drone, such as M. Gounod loves when in sweetly pastoral mood. Unfortunately, the Canon cannot forget his proper character as the Oracle. He feels upon him the impress of the tripod, and his reaper's ditty, pretty enough generally, is marred by occasional impulses to break away into the musical equivalent of what our Transatlantic friends call "high-falutin." The vocal part was fairly well sung by the new choir attached to the society—a body that later on, in the final movement of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, went very successfully through a fierce "baptism of fire." Following Liszt's piece came Molique's concerto in A minor, for violin and orchestra; solo by Mr J. T. Carrodus. Our admirable English artist introduced this example of his master's skill at a Philharmonic concert some years ago, and then made an impression not yet effaced from the minds of some, at any rate, among his auditors. He unquestionably did well to select it for the occasion under notice, since a result flattering both to composer and performer was beforehand assured. The concerto is a capital example of works written by virtuosi for the instrument of their choice, and exhibits a profound knowledge and command of executive resources. But it has a further value. The themes are in nearly every case interesting, their development is masterly, and the orchestra is handled with the ease of a man possessing full control of its power. We have to thank Mr Carrodus for an opportunity of again hearing the work, and for a chance of drawing attention to the injustice suffered in these days by the dii minores of music owing to a common habit of swearing by the few Olympians nearest the throne. Mr Carrodus, although incommoded through the breaking of a string and the necessity of finishing the principal movement with a strange instrument, played in splendid style, connoisseurs hardly knowing whether most to admire his delivery of cantabile or his easy victory over the enormous difficulties presented by Molique's bravura. Both were equally deserving of lavish applause, and, as the audience recognized the fact, the occasion became one of triumph for an artist whose exceptional ability should long ago have placed him first in the esteem of his countrymen. Mr Carrodus, who was received with continued applause, obtained at the close of his task an enthusiastic recall. In the remainder of the programme were Bennett's quartet, "God is a spirit," not very well sung by Miss Marriott, Miss Orridge, Mr F. Boyle, and Mr Barrington Foote; the overture to Wagner's Meistersinger, and Beethoven's Choral Symphony. The introduction of the Colossus at the first concert was, we think, ill-advised, since its formidable difficulties cannot be mastered in two rehearsals, as blemishes in performance most conclusively showed. Mr W. G. Cusins conducted, and did all in his power to make up for the shortcomings of imperfect preparation. We should add that the orchestral part of Molique's concerto was well rendered under his direction, especially the passages of accompaniment.

The Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha has conferred the Medal for Art and Science, with the Green and Silver Ribbon, on the Countess Stephanie Wurmbrand, the Hungarian composer, pupil and sister-in-law of the late Carl Tausig.

Digitized by Google

REMARKS ON THE PAST YEAR.*

(From 1st Oct. 1880 to 1st Oct. 1881.)

(Continued from page 85.)

It is noticeable, as will be seen at pages 25, 26, 30, and 31, that public concerts of chamber music are also finding their way into our provincial towns, as in those given by Mr Stratton at Birmingham; by Mr Marshall Bell at Newcastle-upon-Tyne; by Mr Forrest at Shrewsbury; and by the Society at Cambridge. Once begun, and the assistance being also given of those interesting and instructive analytical remarks on the programme to which we have referred, they will certainly progress and go on exercising a similar influence in the larger towns in the country to that which is patent in those of London. It may be remarked that in some of the tentative efforts in this direction, given in the country, nothing but instrumental music is given. This plan will probably be found to require from the audience too great a strain of attention. It is evidently felt, from the usual practice of introducing something vocal between each two instrumental works at these concerts, that it forms a relaxation of the mental absorption which art displayed in the former may produce, especially as the vocal music thus introduced is never of a trifling character.

There is, however, one important exception to the plan of introducing vocal pieces at the public performances of the highest class of instrumental works to which we wish to refer, and which we may safely mention as the most remarkable musical event of the year. At Mr Charles Hallé's Pianoforte Recitals—the twenty-first series—there were no vocalists. The entire series of eight recitals were executed by Mr Hallé alone, when he undertook and went successfully through the Herculean task of performing the forty-eight preludes and fugues of Bach, with thirty sonatas and two other works of Beethoven, without any assistance of any kind, or even the aid of a copy of the music. We think this performance so unique and so interesting, from the constantly recurring contrast of the very different styles of those two masters, that we quote the remarks concerning them from the introduction to the volume of analytical programmes (a work consisting of 574 pages), that should be in the hands of every pianoforte player who desires to be familiar with the works of these two great composers for the instrument.

"The eight recitals will this year comprise the entire series of sonatas devoted by Beethoven to the pianoforte unaccompanied, with the substitution, as on previous occasions, of the Andante in F major, Op. 35, and the Thirty-two Variations upon an original theme in C minor, Op. 36, for the short and easy ones in G major and minor, Op. 49. Mr Hallé believes, after an interval of so many years since the last 'Beethoven Recitals,' a repetition may prove not unattractive to the many zealous students of the legacy of masterpieces bequeathed to the most universal of instruments by the greatest composer of his age. So far as the generally accepted opus numbers permit, the sonatas will be presented in chronological order.

"In addition to the sonatas, Mr Hallé will play (for the first time) the forty-eight preludes and fugues of J. S. Bach—six of each at each of the eight recitals—the preludes and fugues separating one sonata of Beethoven from another. These will follow precisely the order of succession according to the Wohltemperirte Klavier—the title given by Bach himself to his great work; and it is hoped that some interest may be created by the opportunity thus afforded of comparing the styles of two masters who, though belonging to different periods and representing widely different phases of art, had nevertheless so much in common.

"Beethoven's Sonatas.—The composition of the pianoforte sonatas occupied the great musician at varied intervals from 1796 to 1822, the ripe period of his first and second 'styles' or 'manners' (as it has long been the fashion to designate them)—commencing with 'Op. 101' and terminating with 'Op. 111,' what is generally accepted as the inauguration of his third. Thus, like the quartets and quintets for stringed instruments, the sonatas for pianoforte and violin, the five sonatas for pianoforte and violoncello, and the six trios for pianoforte and strings—to speak only of the chamber music—they enable the student, step by step, to follow out the progress and development of the genius and artistic culture of the master. Perhaps, indeed, had he written nothing more than these solo sonatas, he might be judged by them alone, and still appear as the complete Beethoven. That there is no other example on record of a series of compositions dedicated to a single instrument, each so essentially differing from its precursors and followers, while all bear the strongly individual impress of one mind, must be admitted without question. On May 17th, 1861, the first series of recitals was devoted to the solo sonatas, as also, subsequently, in 1862 and 1866. In 1871 the ten sonatas for pianoforte and violin were included, besides others by Mozart, Dussek, and Schumann. In 1868 all the pianoforte compositions of Beethoven, apart from the sonatas, were produced, in connection with the sonatas and miscellaneous pieces of Franz Schubert; and at various other times, unnecessary to specify, works by composers preceding Beethoven, by other composers about Beethoven's period, and by composers belonging to the more modern German school, were selected—something more or less important by Beethoven, however, invariably constituting a feature in the programmes. Through these last it was intended to show how and to what extent he may have influenced not only musicians writing contemporaneously with himself, but also some of those aiming at the highest point, who came after him. A fresh survey of the entire career of Beethoven as composer for the pianoforte may, in a greater or lesser degree, help to prove that (allowing for certain exceptions) no very great deal of what is absolutely new has been accomplished in that direction since he brought his task to an end. At the same time, the introduction of some of the comparatively unknown works, besides giving occasional variety to the programmes, enriched them in a certain way, by opening up fresh sources of interest for the consideration of earnest amateurs, desirous of perfecting their knowledge and experience by becoming acquainted with all styles of pianoforte music, solo, and in concert with other instruments, which after their manner strive to uphold by legitimate means the dignity and purity of art.

"Bach's Forty-eight Preludes and Fugues.—Das Wohltemperirte Klavier, though the first part was composed in 1722, and the second somewhere between 1730 and 1740, remained unknown to England until 1799-1800, when both parts were published, in direct succession, by Kollmann, a German settled in London. It is now happily more or less familiar to every one who has a right to claim the title of 'musician.' Handel must have been well acquainted with this remarkable work of his most illustrious contemporary, though he is never reported to have spoken of it, and never could find convenient occasion for a friendly interview with its composer."

(To be continued.)

* From Carte's Musical Directory, Annual, and Almanack for 1882.

MUSIC AT LIVERPOOL.

The following interesting article is slightly condensed from the Liverpool Mercury:—

"The programme of the concert of the Philharmonic Society last night—the ninth of the current series—was of a varied character, including an overture called Mountain, Lake, and Moorland, by Harold Thomas; a choral and orchestral setting of Mrs Hemans' poem, The Voice of Spring, by Dr Swinnerton Heap; a violoncello concerto by Carl Eckert; a scena, "Moise Mourant," by Emile Louis; and the overture, scherzo, and notturno from Mendelssohn's Midsummer Night's Dream. As the production of a student of our chief national school of music, Mr Thomas's overture, played for the first time here, was of peculiar interest. Traces of the influence of the composer's master, Sterndale Bennett, the purest of modern English musicians, are discernible, but there is about the work an Academic flavour. The numerous merits of the overture cause regret that the author has not entered more extensively into a branch of his art which affords ample opportunity for the exercise of his undoubted talent. Mr Thomas has sufficient capacity to accomplish the arduous task of constructing a symphony of the descriptive type. Dr Heap's work, ably constructed, yet too ponderous an embodiment of Mrs Hemans' verses, was unfortunate in performance, the members of the chorus, from beginning to end, apparently spelling their way. In 'Moise Mourant,' the Great Lawgiver apostrophises the promised land, and bids the children of Israel farewell, the musical narration of these incidents being somewhat in the vein of Gounod. Much intention is apparent, but the melody, while easy in movement, lacks distinctive character, and the orchestration if occasionally clever, is out of proportion. Mr Santley also sang Hoel's romanza, from Dinorah, 'Sei vendicata assai,' and Vulcan's 'Au bruit des lourds marteux d'airain,' from Gounod's Philemon et Baucis. The other vocalist was Mdme Patey, who gave Beethoven's 'Creation's Hymn,' Haydn's canzonet, 'She never told her love,' and 'A Winter Story' (with organ obbligato) by Michael Watson. The 'cello part in the Eckert concerto was played by Mr Hausmann, who had not appeared before in this city. Eckert was a pupil of Mendelssohn, who formed a high opinion of him, but the early promise which secured this honour can hardly be said to have been fulfilled. * * * * Mr Hausmann's tone is pure and sonorous, his intonation is perfect, and while his command of the instrument is absolute, his execution is entirely undemonstrative. In addition to the concerto, he gave one of Max Bruch's Hebrew melodies, a song by Schumann, and a short piece by Fitzenhagen, the last-named evidently chosen for the purposes of technical display. The Mendelssohn overture was roughly rendered, and there were defects in the treatment of the notturno, but the scherzo was played with admirable effect. The concert concluded with Weber's overture, The Ruler of the Spirits. Mr Bruch conducted. For the next concert of the series Mdme Trebelli and Dr Joachim are engaged, and at the two succeeding concerts Sullivan's Martyr of Antioch and Mendelssohn's St Paul are respectively to be given."

Digitized by Google

We all heard Mr Harold Thomas's overture at the Philharmonic some time ago, since then we understand he has made several amendments and improvements, in order to render it as perfect as he had it in his mind before putting it to paper. We all equally remember that Mr Thomas was a favourite pupil of Sterndale Bennett's—a fact to which the critic of the Liverpool Courier thus gracefully alludes:—

"Mr Harold Thomas must be credited with the success of a refined orchestral work, and, as a pupil of Sterndale Bennett's, of having certainly reflected honour on his master."

We believe that nothing could have gratified Mr Thomas more than this special mark of appreciation.

WAIFS.

Mr W. Dorrell has returned to town from Sussex, and will remain at his new residence in Baker Street until the Easter recess.

Liszt will remain in Pesth till April.

The esteemed French tenor, Armandi, died lately in Toulon.

A new operetta, La Fine del Mondo, has been produced at Cannes.

Terziani is created Commander of the Order of the Italian Crown.

Diedicke, Ducal Music Director, is appointed director of the Ducal Opera, Dessau.

Pedrotti's Tutti in Maschera is to be performed at the Teatro Rossini, Venice.

The Boston (U.S.) Mendelssohn Quintet Club have been performing in Australia.

It is proposed to erect a monument at Angoulême to the memory of Emil Prudent, the pianist.

Georg Vierling and H. Hofmann are created members of the Royal Academy of Fine Arts, Berlin.

Mercadante's Orazi e Curiazi is in rehearsal at the San Carlo, Naples. (Why not Cimarosa's Artemesio?)

Ciro Pinsuti was lately in Venice, with the view, it is said, of producing there his new opera: Margheretta.

Carl Heymann, the brilliant and eccentric pianist, will give a concert on the 22nd inst., in the Gewandhaus, Leipsic.

Frederic Archer was specially engaged a short time since to give an Organ Recital in the Metropolitan Church, Toronto.

Two new musical papers have appeared this year: the one, Archivio Musicale, at Naples; the other, Music, at New York.

Negotiations are pending to secure Theodore Thomas and his orchestra for a Musical Festival at San Francisco, next June.

In future, French authors whose pieces are performed at the Imperial Theatres, St Petersburgh, will receive authors'-fees.

An Italian version of an operetta, book by Deschamps, music by the Duc de Dino, will be played in Lent at the Pergola, Florence.

Ronchetti Monteviti, director of the Milan Conservatory, who has sent in his resignation, will probably be succeeded by Platania.

Signora Moretti has presented the Musical Museum recently founded in Milan with a handsome harp by Kotzmann, Paris, 1680.

A one-act opera, Der Invalide, music by Gottfried Kunkel, is shortly to be produced at the Stadttheater, Frankfort-on-the-Maine.

The buffo-opera company from the Carltheater, Vienna, will this year again play in Hamburgh, from the 15th April to the end of May.

The Emperor Wilhelm has conferred the Order of the Red Eagle on Herr Ferdinand von Strantz, Director of the Royal Opera, Berlin.

Anton Rubinstein's Nero has been again performed at the Stadttheater, Hamburgh, with Mdlle Bréthol as Poppæa, and Dr Krauss as Vindex.

The magnificent Italian tragedian, Tommaso Salvini, has signed a three months' engagement for Russia, beginning in March at St Petersburgh.

Maria Waldmann, the wife of Count Galeazzo-Massari, and the first Amneris of Verdi's Aida, will shortly be created, by King Humbert, Duchess of Voghenza.

Mr Barton M'Guckin sang "The Rose song" from Balfe's opera, Il Talismano, at Mr De Jong's concert at Manchester last week with great success, gaining a unanimous encore.

Cesare Copponi, ballet-master of the Scala, Milan, was sent to Brussels for the purpose of studying the dances in L'Hérodiade, which is to be produced at the theatre just named.

A son of Mdme Otto Goldschmidt (Jenny Lind) has been appointed to the clerkship in the Chancery Registrar's office, vacated by the appointment of Mr Charles Carrington as a Chancery Registrar.

The idea of producing Gounod's Tribut de Zamora at Antwerp has been abandoned—at least, for the present. Ch. Lecocq's latest, Le Jour et la Nuit, is to be substituted. (O, Gemini.—Dr Blitge.)

The publishing house of Conrad Glaser, at Schleusingen, well-known to every vocal association in Germany, has celebrated its Golden Jubilee. It now belongs to the son of the founder (deceased).

The Centenary of Metastasio's birth will be celebrated at Rome in April. An executive committee has been formed, consisting of Count Mamiani, Prince Teano, Professor Tomasini, Marchetti, and Ferziani.

H. Westberg is about to sing at several concerts in Holland. He then gives a concert of his own at Cologne, afterwards proceeding to Stockholm, with another in his eye.—(Who is H. Westberg?—Dr Blitge.)

The pianist and composer, Bonawitz, has written a new overture, lately performed for the first time in Philadelphia, for a tragedy, entitled 1793, by Milano.

The tenor, De Sanctis (lately of Mr Gye's company), was wounded, at Venice, in the forehead during his combat with Telramund in a recent performance of Lohengrin. The injury was not serious, however, and he was able to continue the opera.

Miss Louisa Ball has been presented with a complete set of Shakspere's works, in recognition of her talented reading (in costume), on a late occasion, at Lammas Hall, of the character of Prince Arthur in Shakspere's King John. The little lady, though quite young, has already made a marked impression as an elocutionist.

Mr Chanot, a maker of violins, was sued by Mr Hodges, of Gateshead-on-Tyne, in the Queen's Bench for £55, the price of one which he had sold as having been made by Carlo Bergonzi in 1742. It turned out subsequently that the violin was only fifty years old, but the defendant refused to return the money. Mr Chanot admitted that he had himself put on the label of the pretended maker; that he had a considerable supply of similar labels; that it was useless offering a violin for sale unless it had the name of an old manufacturer; and that he had bought the violin two years ago in Paris for about £18. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, damages £70, the defendant to retain the violin in question. (He will doubtless find a purchaser.—Dr Blitge.)

ST. PETERSBURGH.—Mdme Marcella Sembrich's concert in the large Hall of the Nobility drew an immense audience. All the tickets were sold, the receipts, 9,000 roubles, being handed over to the Students' Fund. It was the magic name of the Diva which attracted so vast a number of persons, despite the exceedingly high prices of admission. The audience were able to admire the lady as a singer, a violinist, and a pianist; and it may in the present instance well be said: Omne trinum perfectum. We know that Mdme Sembrich's exceptional vocalization and admirable voice, which recalls to our mind the no less admirable voice of Bosio, placed her, at the very outset, in the first rank as a singer. So, for to-day, I will leave the vocal question on one side. It is of the instrumental virtuosa that I would speak. She executed Bériot's Seventh Concerto in a manner that was perfect as regards mechanical skill, and charming as regards gracefulness. She is neither a Joachim nor a Sarasate, but we listen to her with great pleasure; so much is indisputable. As a pianist she must, to my mind, be placed in the front rank. Her playing is not only finished, but artistic as well, both in style and sentiment. The way in which she interprets Chopin especially charmed me, and worked up the public to absolute enthusiasm. M. Vizentini conducted the instrumental part of the concert with his customary ability. The singing was well accompanied by M. Drigo, a young chapelmaster, who is in the right path and has a fine future before him.—The re-appearance in the bills of Boito's Mefistofele has been successful in every respect. It was a great and, moreover, legitimate success for Mdme Durand, the Orchestra, and Bevignani. Gratifying revival, also, of Gounod's Roméo et Juliette, with Sembrich and Sig. Marconi.—MAURICE RAPPAPORT (Correspondence of Le Ménestrel).

Digitized by Google

The only Gold Medal for Wind Instruments with Keys, in the Paris Universal Exhibition of 1878, was unanimously awarded by the Jury to Messrs P. Goumas & Co., for the fine quality of tone and finish of their Instruments.

SPECIAL MANUFACTORY OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS
FOR
CLARIONETS, FLUTES, PICCOLOS, OBOES, BASSOONS, COR ANGLAIS, FLAGEOLETS, AND SAXOPHONES.

P. GOUMAS & Co.
(Late Buffet, Crampon & Co.),
Established 1830.

Nine Prize Medals have been awarded to Goumas & Co. for general excellence and improvements in the Manufacture of Wind Instruments with Keys.
Manufacturers of all kinds of Wood Wind Instruments for Military Bands, Musical Instrument Makers to Her Majesty's Army and Navy, and to the Armies, Navies, and Conservatoires of France, Belgium, Italy, Russia, Austria, Spain, America, &c.
Manufactory at Mantes (Seine et Oise), France. Paris: Passage du Grand Cerf, 18 et 20.
LONDON: 39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET.
Price Lists sent free on application.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,
MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF
ALL KINDS OF MUSIC STRINGS FOR ALL MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Sole Depôt for Signor Andrea Ruffini's (of Naples) Celebrated Strings for Soloists, manufactured by him on a system invented by Mons. J. B. Vuillaume, of Paris.
Sole Agent for Charles Albert's (of Philadelphia, U.S.) new Patent Improved Chin Rest; also his improved String Gauge.
39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, W.
Price Lists free on application.
All kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner on powerful machines made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE
(COLEMAN'S). A Delicious Beverage and Tonic.
Made from Port Wine, Liebig's Extract of Meat, and Extract of Malt; Nutritious, Strengthening, Stimulating, Flesh-forming, Health Restoring, suitable for the Robust in Health as well as the Invalid. Strongly recommended by the Medical Faculty. An Immediate Benefit is experienced after taking it; the Frame is Invigorated, and no ill effects follow.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Testimonials.

Sir,—A short time since I was induced by the novelty of the title to send for a bottle of your Liebig's Extract of Meat and Malt Wine. I was perfectly acquainted with the value of the Extractum Carnis, and not quite a stranger to the invigorating and fortifying properties of malt wine, and therefore felt a natural curiosity to test them when combined. Men who work hard, as I do, not muscular hard work, but that which is quite as exhausting, viz., brain work, very often experience the need of, and have sometimes an almost irresistible craving for, a "pick me up;" and very often the panacea for a time for lassitude, and that state of mind which renders work irksome, are alcoholic stimulants, the use of which must sooner or later end disastrously. The man who can furnish a remedy sure, certain, and harmless, for the lassitude which follows constant brain work is a benefactor of his species, and may be said to have added many years of usefulness to the lives of useful men. Your extract, if a success, and when more generally known, will be used by all toilers of the mind.—Yours faithfully, O. D. RAY.
Thorpe Hamlet, Norwich, February 23rd, 1881.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Queen's Crescent, Haverstock Hill, London, March 5th, 1881.

Dear Sir,—Some time since, being greatly fatigued with over-work and long hours at business, my health (being naturally delicate) became very indifferent. I lost all energy, strength, and appetite, and was so weak as to be scarcely able to walk. As you are aware, I sent for a dozen of your Extract of Meat and Malt Wine, which, in a few days, pulled me up marvellously. Three or four glasses of it daily have quite altered and restored me to better health than ever, "without the assistance of a doctor." I am now giving it to my son, twelve years of age, whom we have always thought consumptive, and from a puny, ailing boy, he seems to be fast growing into a strong, healthy lad. Enclosed you have cheque. Please send me two dozen of the "Extract." With thanks for your prompt attention to my last, I am, Sir, yours truly, GEORGE A. TYLER.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Grantpound, February 25th, 1881.

Mrs Coulson thanks Mr Coleman for the book and stamps, and she has no doubt but that "the tonic" is a good one. Mrs C. encloses twelve stamps for basket.
Mr Coleman.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Vicarage, Kingsbridge, Devon, January 25th, 1881.

Dear Sir,—We are ten miles from the railway, and have been snowed up, consequently the wine has only just arrived. I enclose a cheque for £2 11s. 6d. I like the wine, and will recommend it.—Yours faithfully,
Mr Coleman, Norwich. A. N. KINGSTON.

Pints, 30s. per dozen: Quarts, 50s. per dozen. Carriage paid to any Railway Station in Great Britain. Sample Bottle sent for 33 stamps.
P. O. Orders to be made payable to
COLEMAN & CO., MUSPOLE STREET, NORWICH.
Cheques crossed "London and Provincial Bank."
Sold by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the United Kingdom, in Bottles, 2s. 9d. and 1s. 6d. each. Ask for Coleman's Liebig's Extract of Meat and Malt Wine, and "See that you get it."

CHAPPELL'S
VOCAL LIBRARY
OF
PART-SONGS, &c.

		Composed or Arranged by	Price
1.	Dulce Domum. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
2.	Down among the Dead Men. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
3.	The Girl I've left behind me. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
4.	British Grenadiers. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
5.	Long live England's Future Queen. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
6.	My task is ended (Song and Chorus). A.T.B.B.	Balfe	4d.
7.	Thus spake one Summer's Day. S.A.T.B.	Abt	2d.
8.	Soldiers' Chorus. T.T.B.B.	Gounod	4d.
9.	The Kermesse (Scene from Faust)	,,	6d.
10.	Up, quit thy bower. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	4d.
11.	Maidens, never go a-wooing. S.S.T.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
12.	Fagot Binders' Chorus	Gounod	4d.
13.	Sylvan Hours (for Six Female Voices)	Joseph Robinson	6d.
14.	The Gipsy Chorus	Balfe	4d.
15.	Ave Maria	Arcadelt	1d.
16.	Hark! the Herald Angels sing. S.A.T.B.	Mendelssohn	1d.
17.	England Yet (Solo and Chorus). S.A.T.B.	Jules Benedict	2d.
18.	The Shepherd's Sabbath Day. S.A.T.B.	J. L. Hatton	2d.
19.	Thoughts of Childhood. S.A.T.B.	Henry Smart	2d.
20.	Spring's Return. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
21.	An old Church Song. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
22.	Sabbath Bells. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
23.	Serenade. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
24.	Cold Autumn Wind. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
25.	Orpheus with his Lute. S.S.S.	Bennett Gilbert	2d.
26.	Lullaby. S.A.A.	,,	1d.
27.	This is my own, my native land. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
28.	March of the Men of Harlech. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
29.	God save the Queen. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
30.	Rule, Britannia. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
31.	The Retreat. T.T.B.B.	L. de Rille	2d.
32.	Lo! morn is breaking. S.S.S.	Cherubini	2d.
33.	We are Spirits. S.S.S.	G. A. Macfarren	4d.
34.	Market Chorus (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	Auber	4d.
35.	The Prayer (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
36.	The Water Sprites. S.A.T.B.	Kücken	2d.
37.	Eve's glittering Star. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
38.	When first the Primrose. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
39.	O Dewdrop bright. S.A.T.B	,,	1d.
40.	Sanctus from the Messe Solennelle. S.A.T.B.	Rossini	4d.
41.	Nine Kyries, Ancient and Modern	,,	2d.
42.	Sun of my soul. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	2d.
43.	'Twas fancy, and the ocean's spray. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
44.	A Prayer for those at Sea. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
45.	O Thou whose power (Prayer from Mose in Egitto)	Rossini	2d.
46.	The Guard on the Rhine. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
47.	The German Fatherland. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
48.	The Lord is my Shepherd (Quartet). S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
49.	Te Deum in F	Jackson	2d.
50.	Te Deum in F	Nares	2d.
51.	Charity (La Carita). S.S.S.	Rossini	4d.
52.	Cordelia. A.T.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	4d.
53.	I know. S.A.T.B.	Walter Hay	2d.
54.	Chorus of Handmaidens (from Fridolin)	A. Randegger	4d.
55.	The Offertory Sentences	Edmund Rogers	4d.
56.	The Red Cross Knight	Dr. Callcott	2d.
57.	The Clough and the Crow	Sir H. R. Bishop	3d.
58.	The "Carnovale"	Rossini	2d.
59.	Softly falls the moonlight	Edmund Rogers	4d.
60.	Ah! by Himmel	Henry Leslie	2d.
61.	Offertory Sentences	E. Sauerbrey	4d.
62.	The Resurrection	C. Villiers Stanford	6d.
63.	Our Boys (new Patriotic Song) H. J. Byron and W. M. Lutz		4d.
64.	The Men of Wales	Brinley Richards	2d.
65.	Dame Durden		1d.
66.	A little Farm well tilled	Hook	1d.
67.	There was a simple maiden	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
68.	Fair Hebe	,,	1d.
69.	Once I loved a maiden fair	,,	1d.
70.	The jovial man of Kent	,,	1d.
71.	The oak and the ash	,,	1d.
72.	Heart of Oak	,,	1d.
73.	Come to the sunset tree	W. A. Philpott	4d.
74.	May. S.A.T.B.	W. F. Banks	2d.
75.	Pure, lovely innocence (Il Roi de Lahore—Chorus for Female Voices)	G. Massenet	4d.
76.	A Love Idyl. S.A.T.B.	E. R. Terry	2d.
77.	Hail to the Woods! A.T.T.B.	J. Yarwood	2d.
78.	Near the town of Taunton Dean	Thomas J. Dudeney	2d.
79.	Our merry boys at sea	J. Yarwood	2d.
80.	The Shepherd's Farewell. S.A.T.B.	Berlioz	3d.
81.	When the sun sets o'er the mountains (Il Demonio)	A. Rubinstein	3d.
82.	Hymn of Nature	Beethoven	3d.
83.	Michaelmas Day (Humorous Part Songs, No. 1)	Walter Maynard	4d.
84.	Sporting Notes (Humorous Part Songs, No. 2)	Walter Maynard	4d.
85.	Austrian National Hymn	Haydn	4d.

LONDON:
CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND STREET, W.
City Branch—14 & 15, Poultry.

Digitized by Google

NEW VOLUMES of the ROYAL SERIES.

THE SONGS OF SCANDINAVIA
AND NORTHERN EUROPE.
EIGHTY-THREE NATIONAL AND POPULAR SONGS.

THE SONGS OF EASTERN EUROPE.
ONE HUNDRED VOLKSLIEDER OF AUSTRIA, HUNGARY, BOHEMIA, SERVIA, &c.

WITH ENGLISH WORDS BY CLARA KAPPEY.

EDITED BY

J. A. KAPPEY.

Price 2s. 6d. each, paper covers; 4s. cloth.

"Messrs Boosey & Co. have done good service not only to amateurs but to art, by including in their series of volumes of national melodies 'The Songs of Scandinavia' and 'The Songs of Eastern Europe.' The first-named contains eighty-three examples; and the second, a hundred. We need not insist upon the importance of collections like these, whatever the country they represent; but we must say that no musical library is complete without the songs of Scandinavia and Eastern Europe. The editor, Mr J. A. Kappey, has taken great pains to secure melodies of a genuinely representative character, and at a time when attention is becoming more and more directed to folk-tunes as a source of new thematic ideas, the volumes in question are of peculiar value. They have our most hearty commendation, the 'Songs of Eastern Europe' more especially, since the volume contains, besides examples of Liszt, Chopin, and other masters, a very valuable collection of volkslieder from the hitherto untouched wealth of the Austrian provinces."—Daily Telegraph.

"Messrs Boosey & Co. have published two additional volumes of their National Songs, which appear likely to be the most interesting of the series. We know little of the rich repertory of Scandinavian Songs, and Mr and Miss Kappey, the editors of these books, are to be thanked for introducing some of the best specimens to public notice. Five of the Russian songs are so old as to be traditional; and in the series are to be found a beautiful Cossack lullaby by one Bachmetieff, a gipsy song by Lvoff, and several songs by Warlamoff. These and the Polish songs (all of which are traditional) may be considered among the most interesting items of a small but acceptable collection. Two ancient Lithuanian songs, a couple of Finnish, and four ancient Norwegian melodies, will likewise be found in the book. The majority of the Swedish songs are by Lindblad, that prolific song writer, who died in 1864. Tradition says that the old melody of 'The Beggar Boy' was once sung in the days when she was a poor child by the distinguished artist now known as Mdme Christine Nilsson. Included in the Danish songs is the traditional 'Dannebrog,' the music of which is attributed to one 'Bay.' It would be interesting to inquire the foundation for this statement, as the origin of the Danish National Anthem was generally understood to be unknown. The tradition of the 'Dannebrog Banner,' which, in 1719, fell down from heaven to bring victory to the Danish arms, is duly recorded in a footnote. Most of the Dutch songs given date back to the sixteenth century; and there are besides three songs by W. F. G. Nicolai, and one Flemish song. Altogether eighty-three of the national songs of northern Europe are included in this valuable and interesting book. In future editions a larger preface or more footnotes, giving further particulars of the old songs whose history is known, would be welcome. Equally interesting are the songs of Eastern Europe, recently issued by Messrs Boosey, and likewise edited by Mr and Miss Kappey. Among the thirty-four Austrian songs, the large majority are volkslieder, and they include Tyrolean, Styrian, and Polish songs, two of them by Chopin. These are followed by twenty-three characteristic specimens of Hungarian songs, giving a very fair idea of the peculiarities of Hungarian music, and comprising modern songs by Liszt, and some traditional songs of Bosnia, Moravia, and Dalmatia. The first of the Bohemian songs is the 'War-song of the Hussites,' once, it is believed, the national song of the country. A few specimens of Servian, Swiss, Greek, and even Turkish melodies. The last are very peculiar; and he peculiar intervals common to this and other Eastern music are claimed by some to have been handed down direct from the music of the ancient Hebrews."—Figaro.

LONDON: BOOSEY & CO., 295, REGENT STREET.

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, & SPALDING, at 3 and 5, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, February 18, 1882.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 60.—No. 8. SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1882. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 6d. Stamped.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.
LAST WEEK BUT ONE.

MONDAY, Feb. 27, by Special Request, "LOHENGRIN." TUESDAY, Feb. 28, "TANNHÄUSER." WEDNESDAY, March 1, "TROVATORE" (Only Time). THURSDAY, March 2, "TANNHÄUSER." FRIDAY, March 3, "MIGNON" (Last Time). SATURDAY, March 4, at Two, "RIENZI;" at Eight, "MARITANA" (Last Time).

POPULAR PRICES.

For full Particulars see Daily Papers. Box Office open Daily from 10 till 5.

WEDNESDAY NEXT.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERT.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERT, ST JAMES'S HALL, WEDNESDAY next, at Eight. Special Selection of OLD ENGLISH BALLADS. Artists: Mdme Trebelli and Miss Mary Davies, Mdme Antoinette Sterling and Miss C. Elliot; Mr Edward Lloyd and Mr Frank Boyle, Mr Santley and Signor Foli. The South London Choral Association of sixty voices, under the direction of Mr L. C. Venables. Conductor—Mr SIDNEY NAYLOR. The programme will include the following: "Fanciulle che il core," "C'est l'Espagne," "Looking Back" (Mdme Trebelli); "There's a Bower of Roses," "The Blind Beggar of Bethnal Green," and "The Ash Grove" (Miss Mary Davies); "Love the Pilgrim" "By the simplicity of Venus Doves" (Miss Carlotta Elliot); "Darby and Joan" and "Never again" (Mdme Antoinette Sterling); "Serenade," "Sally in our Alley," and "The Soldier's Tear" (Mr Edward Lloyd); "My Darling of Old" and "Drink to me only with thine eyes" (Mr Frank Boyle); "Marching along," "Leather Bottel," and "The Friar of Orders Grey" (Mr Santley); "Storming of the Breach," "The Clear Cavalier," and "The Brave Old Oak" (Signor Foli). Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Family Tickets (to admit Six to Stalls), £2; Area, 4s. and 2s.; Balcony, 3s.; Gallery and Orchestra, 1s.; to be had at Austin's, St James's Hall; the usual Agents; and of Boosey & Co., 295, Regent Street.

MR SIMS REEVES has the honour to announce that his FOURTH CONCERT of Operatic, National, and Miscellaneous Music will take place, at ST JAMES'S HALL, on TUESDAY next, February 28th, at Eight o'clock. Artists: Mdme Trebelli, Miss Santley, Miss Spenser Jones, Miss Carlotta Elliot: Mr Santley, Mr Herbert Reeves, and Mr Sims Reeves. Conductor—Mr SIDNEY NAYLOR. The Anemoic Union (under the direction of Mr Lazarus). Flute—Mr H. Nicholson. Oboe—Mr Malsch. Clarionet—Mr Lazarus. Horn—Mr T. Mann. Bassoon—Mr T. Wotton. Pianoforte—Mr Sidney Naylor. Tickets, 10s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 3s., and 1s., at Austin's Ticket Office, St James's Hall, and usual Agents.

"THE MESSAGE."

MR SIMS REEVES will sing BLUMENTHAL'S Song, "THE MESSAGE," at his Concert, St James's Hall, Tuesday next, Feb. 28th.

WALTER MACFARREN'S ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS,
THIS EVENING.

ST JAMES'S HALL.—FIRST CONCERT, This (SATURDAY) Evening Feb. 25. The Programme will include Beethoven's Symphony in C minor, Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, Walter Macfarren's Pianoforte Concertstuck, and Overtures: Mozart's Zauberflöte, Weber's Oberon, and Walter Macfarren's King Henry V. (first time in London). Executants—Miss Mary Davies and Mr Santley, Miss Margaret Gyde (her first appearance), and M. Sainton. Band of Seventy. Conductor—Mr WALTER MACFARREN. Subscription to the Series. One Guinea. Sofa Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Balcony, 3s.; Admission, One Shilling. Programmes and Tickets of Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., 84, New Bond Street; usual Agents; and Austin's Ticket Office, 28, Piccadilly.

MR WALTER BACHE'S ORCHESTRAL CONCERT, ST JAMES'S HALL, March 2nd, at 8.30. Franz Liszt "A Faust Symphony" (Faust, Gretchen, Mephistopheles); "Der Tanz in der Dorfschenke" (Mephisto Waltzer); Episode from Lenau's Faust. Orchestra of Eighty-one Performers. Mr Ben Davies (of the Carl Rosa Opera). Chorus of Eighty Voices (Tenors and Basses). Conductor—Mr WALTER BACHE. Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Reserved, 5s.; Balcony, 3s.; Admission 1s.

"PARADISE LOST." An Oratorio. Composed by ANTON RUBINSTEIN, on the Poem of MILTON. The English version of the words by JOSIAH PITTMAN. Paris: GÉRARD, 2, Rue Scribe.

LONDON CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.—
Principal—Mr LANSDOWNE COTTELL.

The Directors invite attention to the recent extension and increased accommodation, residential and otherwise.

Fees from Two Guineas per term, residential from Fourteen Guineas, inclusive of the Musical and Fine Art Lectures.

Free Tuition is awarded to talented young artists unable to pay fees by fund granted for this purpose.

Prospectus (one stamp), Hon. Sec., 6, Tavistock Square.

SCHUBERT SOCIETY. President—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT.
Founder and Director—Herr SCHUBERTH. Sixteenth Season, 1882. The FIRST CONCERT (F. Schubert's Compositions forming the first part of the programme) will take place at the LANGHAM HALL, Great Portland Street, on TUESDAY, 28th February, 1882, to commence at eight o'clock precisely. Full prospectus on application to H. G. HOPPER, Hon. Sec., 214, Regent Street, W.

MR and Mdme BODDA'S (Miss LOUISA PYNE) ACADEMY FOR SINGING, Operatic and Miscellaneous. "BONALLY," 85 and 87, Cambridge Gardens, Notting Hill. Professional and Amateur. In and Out-Door Students. Studies—Singing (Private Lessons), Elocution, Piano, Deportment, Choral Practice, Italian. Prospectuses as above, or Mr STEDMAN, 12, Berners Street.

LESSONS WANTED on mutual terms, by Baritone Vocalist, compass low E to G, good Reader, and accustomed to Concert-Singing and Playing. Would accept Engagements at once if required. Address—"BARITONE," care of Mr Horton, 48, Smith Street, Mile End, E.

THE PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, AND KNIGHTAGE OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE for 1882. By JOSEPH FOSTER.
Early in January. In one or two volumes, royal 8vo, cloth gilt, price 42s. The Peerage or Baronetage separate, each 21s.

The THIRD EDITION, for 1882, containing all new Creations, has been considerably enlarged, and carefully corrected throughout. It is illustrated by upwards of 1,400 Engravings of Arms, &c., and contains fuller pedigrees than any other work.

Westminster: NICHOLS & SONS, 25, Parliament Street.
CHAPMAN & HALL, Limited, 11, Henrietta Street, W.C.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR GEORGE COX will sing ASCHER'S popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" at Mr Wm. Carter's Concert at the Albert Hall, on March 1st.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR ARTHUR HOOPER will sing (by desire) ASCHER'S popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" on March 6th, at Mr John Cheshire's Concert at Hammersmith.

"THE PRISONER'S LAST SONG."

MISS ALLITSEN will sing "THE PRISONER'S LAST SONG" (by J. P. GOLDBERG), at Miss Agabeg's Concert, Steinway Hall, March 14th.

PLAYED BY MDLLE KREBS.

LISZT'S "TARANTELLE DE LA MUETTE DE PORTICI" ("MASANIELLO"). 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"TANNHÄUSER."
"O THOU MOST LOVELY EVENING STAR."

LISZT'S TRANSCRIPTION of "L'ETOILE DU SOIR" ("O THOU MOST LOVELY EVENING STAR"—"ABENDSTERN"). 3s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NEW SONG BY J. L. HATTON.

THE GOOD SHIP ROVER. Words by JOHN STEWART. Music by J. L. HATTON. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

SUNG BY MISS ANNETTE ALBU.

"A DREAM WISH," Poetry by Mrs M. A. BAINES, Music by MICHAEL BERGSON, is published, price 4s., by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

Digitized by Google

THE ROSE SONG.

From

BALFE'S OPERA,

IL TALISMANO.

Price 4s.

London: DUFF & STEWART, Hanover Street.

Just Published.

THE LOVERS' WALTZ

(L'AMANTE).

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By

G. MURATORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

THE BETTER WORLD.

Words by Mrs. M. A. BAINES.

Music by

MICHAEL BERGSON.

Composed expressly for and sung by Mdme MARIE ROZE; sung also by Miss JESSICA O'BRIEN.

Price 4s.

London: STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

Just Published.

L'AMANTE.

VALZER, PER VOCE DI MEZZO-SOPRANO.

Musica di

G. MURATORI

(The English Version of the words by MARIA X. HAYES).

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

AMELIA.

CANZONE POPOLARE.

Parole e Musica di

G. MURATORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

MIDNIGHT CHIMES.

(SONG.)

Words by MARIA X. HAYES.

Music by

MICHAEL BERGSON.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

DANSE PYRRHIQUE.

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By

BROWNLOW BAKER.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Where may be obtained, Composed by Brownlow Baker, "Bourrée," in E flat, 4s.; "Memory" (Romance), 3s.

Just Published.

UNITY.

A NEW MASONIC SOLO AND QUARTET.

Dedicated by express permission to His Royal Highness PRINCE PATRICK, DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, and all true and accepted Masons.

By

RICHARD F. HARVEY,

Organist of Unity Lodge 238 (Dublin).

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

MENUET DE LULLI.

POUR LE PIANOFORTE.

Par BENTAYOUX.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—The "Menuet de Lulli" can also be played as a Duet for Violin and Violoncello.

THE VOICE AND SINGING.

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

VOCAL EXERCISES COMPOSED BY FRANK MORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by the late FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

New Edition of "LE PETIT SOLFEGE."

LE PETIT SOLFEGE. Vingt Solfèges pour Voix de Mezzo-Soprano. Par JOS. CURCI. Price 6s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

"This work for educational purposes will be found of inestimable value, since it is one of the very few which confines itself to the cultivation of the middle of the voice; and whilst the phrases are admirably adapted to develop the breathing powers and volume of the voice, the melodies are so exquisitely harmonized that they must prove of great benefit in the improvement of the taste and ear of a student in singing."—Pictorial World.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE.

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdme Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklein, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis, of Basingstoke, says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

LA POMPA DI FESTA. Grande Marche, pour Piano, à Quatre Mains. Par IGNACE GIBSONE. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"HER VOICE."

"HER VOICE." IGNACE GIBSONE's popular Song (poetry by "A Soldier's Daughter"), sung by Mdme ENRIQUEZ, is published, price 4s., by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NEW VOCAL QUARTET.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" Arranged for Soprano. Contralto, Tenor, and Bass by G. B. ALLEN. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

Tannhäuser as it was.

Tannhäuser as it is will appear as soon as our great artist, Tyall the Tinner, has finished his sketch.—Otto Bard.

Digitized by Google

REMARKS ON THE PAST YEAR.

(From 1st Oct. 1880 to 1st Oct. 1881.)

(Concluded from page 109.)

The position, development, and tendencies of different schools of music, as we learn from the illustrations given of them in the various public concerts and performances, and from the critics in the numerous journals devoted to music, seem to be this—from Bach to the present time, music, it appears, has been undergoing a continuous process of expansion. In Bach, it is allowed, were concentrated the resources of musical harmony to an extent never surpassed, his works embodying a power of musical intellect which has excited the admiration and emulation of the greatest composers since his time,—

"Untwisting all the chains that tie the hidden soul of harmony."

Handel, his contemporary, with a similar cultivation and development of harmony, not perhaps to the same extent, adapted his works to the more general capacity, and hence the universal popularity of his music from his time to the present. This was the first expansion. The next most noticeable step in the way of further expansion was in Haydn and Mozart. Haydn, although a great innovator in his early days, being conservative in his works compared with Mozart. Beethoven, who soon started away from the manner of Haydn and Mozart, has realized a still further expansion, exceeding in this respect even the later productions of Spohr and Mendelssohn. Of the later and living composers, some, it is seen, aim at the more and some at the less expanded models. The last and greatest expansion, which, it appears, applies especially to dramatic music, and the object of which is understood to be to give a more definite expression by embodying in the music the varying sense of the words, although carried out lately with immense energy and perseverance in the operas of Wagner, is seen by our critics to have had its beginning in France—first in the operas of Gluck, brought out in Paris, and later in those of Berlioz. In the works also of Berlioz, for instruments only, principles something similar, but without words, are acted upon, subjects are given, and the varying feelings the composer wishes to depict are stated somewhat in detail, so that the listener may have a more definite idea than usual of what the music expresses, constituting thus what has come to be known as instrumental programme music. It is doubted by those who adhere more to the instrumental works by the older masters whether the varying feelings thus attempted to be depicted by music can ever be received as a substitute for the delight afforded by what is termed "music proper," or "pure music," which proceeds, they say, from an intuition above the reach of words, and "gives delight, we know not why;" and even in the musical drama, although it is admitted that nothing in a serious opera should be introduced for the sake of mere display, but all should be subservient to the general subject of the work, it is a question with them whether those airs and concerted pieces should be left out which are found in the operas of the best masters, and in which that higher order of music is usually embodied, not so much according to the varying sense of the words, but according to their general sense. Some of the operas of Wagner have taken their turn lately at our Italian operas, Lohengrin especially, with decided success. As a musical drama, it seems to be considered even more successful with the general public than with the musical world. The public attention will, however, shortly be directed more fully to this subject. It is promised that all the important works of Wagner shall be produced next season in the most efficient manner. An opportunity will thus be afforded, which will not be lost by our critics, of entering more fully than hitherto into the merit of them. Opera is becoming yearly more and more popular. There is now a great mixture of styles at the Italian Opera—German, French, and occasionally English, as well as Italian. Operas in English of a similar variety of schools have been given for some years past with success by Mr Carl Rosa in London and throughout the kingdom. A most remarkable proof of the interest taken by the public in opera to which we may refer is the unparalleled success which has attended the comic operas of Mr Arthur Sullivan, joined to the subjects and words of Mr W. S. Gilbert, which have been performed every night now for about five years, not only in London, but throughout this kingdom and America. This interest of the public in operatic music points, it has been said, to the realization of the long talked-of and long projected founding of an English opera. That Mr Sullivan has all the qualifications to take the initiative in bringing this project to bear is well known, and we cannot doubt his willingness to join heartily with other English artists similarly prepared to attain this object. It is believed that all things tend in this direction.

—o—

THE PROPOSED NATIONAL CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—As one taking a deep interest in the spread of musical education and culture, I have followed, with a good deal of interest, the various steps thus far taken towards the establishment of the proposed National School, I beg pardon, Conservatoire of Music. So far as I have been able to comprehend the arguments in favour of this new departure, it would seem that there is a large amount of musical talent in England pining away for want of proper nourishment and support. This the proposed School would supply free of charge, forming in this respect a contrast to the existing Royal Academy of Music which has a by no means exorbitant tariff of fees.

Now, without losing sight of the fact that skill in and love of music have greatly increased amongst us during the last thirty or forty years, I am somewhat sceptical as to the large amount of talent said to be "Wasting its sweetness on the desert air."

Be this however as it may, I am fully persuaded that the Royal Academy of Music, with its excellent staff of professors—equal to any continental staff—its orchestral and singing classes meeting weekly for combined practice; its convenient and well-appointed premises, its well-stocked musical library, and all its other means and appliances to boot, is quite able and willing to foster and develop any and all the talent the country may happen to possess. If the promoters of the new scheme would limit their efforts to providing for the present National Academy the necessary sinews of war, instead of forming an inevitable rival to it, they would be handsomely backed up by all lovers of music, and much greater and more lasting results would, in all probability, follow, than under the proposed new scheme. I would suggest, therefore, that a vigorous effort be made throughout the length and breadth of the land to collect subscriptions and donations, and that each city, town, and village should be entitled to nominate likely pupils, in proportion to its contributions. By this means the reproach that talent is now starving, would be removed, and we should have the satisfaction of seeing the actual number of five hundred Royal Academy students doubled, or may be trebled. The old institution in Tenterden Street would thus be enabled largely to extend that field of usefulness, which, I cannot help feeling, has not been adequately acknowledged by the promoters of the scheme, but which, nevertheless, for some sixty years past, has produced the great bulk of those high-class artists, who have raised England in musical estimation and reputation, and which has supplied probably nine-tenths of the true music-teaching power of the country.

I am, &c.,
JOHN TOWERS.
Former Student of the Royal Academy of Music;
Author of "Let Children Sing;"
"Beethoven: a Centenary Memoir," &c.
225, Brunswick Street, Oxford Street, Manchester.

—o—

CAUTION TO CONCERT-GIVERS, SINGERS, AND ACCOMPANISTS.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

DEAR SIR,—At a concert recently given in the country in aid of a local charity the song "Will of the Wisp," by J. W. Cherry, was performed. Shortly after, Mr Harry Wall made a claim on the concert-giver, the singer, and the accompanist for £2 from each, as penalty for infringement of performing-right. Will you be kind enough to make this known in the Musical World, as a warning to others who may contemplate performing that song in public. I enclose my card and have the honour to be

A READER.

VIENNA.—Gluck's Orpheus has been performed at the Imperial Operahouse with Mdlles Papier, Kupfer and Braga, as Orpheus, Euridice, and Eros; great credit is due to the orchestra and chorus. Suppé's last buffo opera, Herzblättchen, produced for the first time on the 4th inst. at the Carltheater, achieved but a moderate success, despite the fact of Mad. Gallmeyer's playing the leading female character. The first act alone seems to have pleased the public.

Digitized by Google

PAISLEY MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(From our Special Correspondent.)

Paisley has just had presented to it a set of magnificent halls, which can favourably compare with anything of its kind in the kingdom. The donors of the halls are Messrs Clark, the celebrated thread spinners, who have already paid upwards of £80,000 on the building, and before its completion it is expected that the whole will cost about £100,000. Nay more, the Messrs Clark intend to give the other £20,000, so as to keep the halls in good condition free of expense to the town. Further, the mother of the Messrs Clark (lately deceased) gave several thousands of pounds to get a grand organ. The grand hall will accommodate from 2,000 to 2,500 of an audience, but the hall proper is probably surpassed in beauty by the spacious corridors, crush room, and waiting rooms which surround the large concert room. The hall is not yet properly finished, the damp from the semi-wet plaster naturally interferes with its musical acoustics; so far, however, as one is fit to judge, they may be expected to be above the average. As to the organ, it would hardly be fair to give a final judgment on its merits, because the portions to be added may alter its whole tenor. In the meantime, however, as it stands, I cannot place it amongst the "finest in the land." One thing, however, outside of music is quite clear that there may be some improvement made on the mode of ventilation. I desire to write simply of my own personal experience. When on the ground floor, I felt the cold air rushing along my feet and legs. By the gentlemanly permission of the committee I was allowed to roam all over the house. I did so, and underwent many sudden changes of temperature. These remarks may not appear to be connected with a musical festival, yet I hold they are; for unless a concert room, such as that of the magnificent G. A. Clark hall, is made comfortable, music thereby suffers. This is a matter easily remedied.

For the proper inauguration of the superb hall it was arranged to give a musical festival on a most complete scale. The committee arranged for four performances: Elijah on Thursday forenoon, a miscellaneous concert on the same evening, Macfarren's Lady of the Lake on Friday evening, and a miscellaneous concert on the Saturday evening. High expectations were raised as to the performance of Elijah, and I feel satisfied these were by all more than realized. The principal solo vocalists were Mdme Marie Roze, Miss Helen D'Alton, Mr Vernon Rigby, and Mr Fred. King. The chorus consisted of the amalgamated choirs of Paisley, numbering about 350 (who had been admirably trained by Mr Brown, an enthusiastic amateur), with Mr Manns as conductor, accompanied by his fine band, intact, from the Glasgow Orchestral concerts. Dr. A. L. Peace was organist. Now with such an array of talent the result was one of the finest performances of Mendelssohn's masterpiece it has been my good fortune to listen to. Mdme Marie Roze was in the best of voice, and as she is now acknowledged to be one of the foremost interpreters of the soprano part of Elijah, your readers can readily imagine the great effect she made, especially when so ably supported. Mr. Vernon Rigby was also in good voice, and sang his music with that sweetness and individuality of expression for which he is so well known. As the Prophet Mr Fred. King made a very special hit. His singing and declamation of many parts of his portion of the oratorio (notably the Baal scene) were superb. He threw a warmth of original colouring into his share of the work which told profoundly on those present. The chorus were well entitled to a full share of the honours. Admirably trained (as I have already pointed out), they had no bother with the execution of the music, and thus could give full attention to the expression desired. They are nearly all young, and thus the quality of tone is remarkable for its rich purity, and still further the fire and enthusiasm of youth gave much additional zest in listening to their well-directed efforts. I need not say one word regarding Mr Manns and his orchestra, the conducting and the playing of the orchestra were by no means the least important features of the forenoon.

In the evening a miscellaneous concert was given when the leading items of the programme were as follows:—Weber's overture to Oberon; Schubert's Rosamunde music; Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony; Rossini's Guillaume Tell; and above all, for the first time in Scotland (if not in England as well), Guilmant's Symphony, for organ and orchestra — interesting to hear from the pen of the leading French organist, yet I am not quite sure if the composition could be held in esteem as a work of art. True, the organ and the resources of the orchestra are most skilfully used and the general effect is charming; still, on listening to it, there is felt a want of broad writing. One, however, is forced to admire its many pretty little passages with which the work abounds. Let us record how perfectly Dr A. L. Peace played the organ part, and how the orchestral portion was also so well played, under the direction of Mr Manns.

The crowning success of this in all respects successful Festival was the grand performance, on Friday evening, of Macfarren's Lady of the Lake, and rarely, indeed, have I heard so fine an interpretation of any great choral work. Conductor, solo vocalists, chorus, and orchestra apparently were bent in giving a specially complete rendering of the cantata, and in this one and all were eminently happy. Miss Annie Marriott gave the music of Helen with great taste and expression, and was thoroughly at home in her music. She therefore, with ease to herself, carried the audience with her, and those present were not slow in giving abundant proof of their appreciation of the manner in which she discharged the arduous duties of the soprano part. Miss D'Alton's singing of the lovely "Blanche of Devan" scene was warmly received by the audience. Mr. Vernon Rigby, in exceptionally good voice, gave the solos, and still more notably in the duets and concerted numbers, as the composer himself might have desired, and his efforts in every instance received hearty acknowledgment from the numerous assembly. No small share in the honours of the evening fell to Mr Fred. King (Roderick Dhu), for whose dramatic reading of the part I confess I was hardly prepared. In full possession of his vocal means, he tried to create the greater possible effect in every-one of his scenes, success attending him throughout. If I were asked to point to his most successful effort, I would at once name the "Anathema," which he declaimed with such fervid vigour as fairly to rouse the audience, who awarded him a spontaneous burst of applause. Nor should the services of the choir be passed over. Mr Brown, choir-master, had its members almost note-perfect; but more than this, in many catchy parts of the work, they had been taught to do without looking at the music, and thus were enabled to watch every motion of the bâton and keep well knit together. This was specially noticeable in the "attacks," which were given as with one voice. What more need be said of Mr Manns and his orchestra, except that from beginning to end they were at their very best. Indeed, no small share in the happy result was due to the eminent conductor at Sydenham, who at the rehearsals spared no pains in getting all sections to work harmoniously.

The brilliant festival came to a close on Saturday evening with a second miscellaneous concert, the programme of which contained, amongst other things, the overture to La Gazza Ladra; Andante and March from Joachim Raff's symphony, Leonore; Ponchielli's "Dance of the Hours," from Gioconda; overture to Tannhäuser; Cowen's Gavotte in A, No. 5, from The Language of the Flowers; and August Manns' own Kólâttam ("Indian Plait-Dance"). The chorus sang the "Hunting Chorus" from The Lady of the Lake, the "Coronach" from the same, and Handel's "Hallelujah." The vocalists were Miss Annie Marriott and Mr Robert Hilton. Further comment is unnecessary. The large hall was crowded by an enthusiastic assembly, who left evidently delighted with the evening's proceedings.

AN ORSON VALENTINE.*

What's to thee a Valentine?
Thoughts of past, that are not mine;
Ne'ertheless I send my writing,
Though I'm not good at inditing.

If we look back many years,
Times of joy and times of tears,
What a Valentine 'twould make,
Yet our faith would never shake.

Hope was first, the early bloom;
Then came Faith in afternoon,
Ripen'd fruit in Charity
Brought result of Industry.

In these three Graces we believe,
But we want a semibreve—
Or at least a great long stop;
Allons donc! we shut up shop.

X. T. R., Junior.

* The only one I've had this year.—Dr Blimp.

The Theatrical Dinner at Marlborough House.—As much interest is taken in this dinner, given by the Prince of Wales to the dramatic profession in London, and as misstatements have been promulgated with regard to the persons invited, it may answer a useful purpose to publish the exact list of visitors:—Duke of Beaufort, Lord Carrington, Lord Aylesford, Prince Leiningen, the Hon. Ponsonby Fane, Mr Pigott, Lord Torrington, General Probyn, Hon. H. Tyrwhitt-Wilson, Earl of Fife, Colonel Farquharson, Mr George Lewis, Lord Lytton, Sir George Wombwell, Mr F. Knollys, Mr G. A. Sala, Mr F. Burnand, Mr H. Calcraft, Mr Charles Hall, Dr W. H. Russell, Lord Londesborough, Mr H. Irving, Mr J. L. Toole, Mr D. James, Mr J. Hare, Mr W. H. Kendall, Mr E. Bruce, Mr J. Hollingshead, Mr C. Coghlan, Mr H. Vezin, Mr S. Brancroft, Mr H. Neville, Mr G. Grossmith, Mr A. Cecil, Mr C. Wyndham, Mr L. Brough, and Mr J. Clayton. Mr Byron was asked, but was too ill to attend.—Daily News, Feb 21, 1882.

Digitized by Google

SCRAPS FROM PARIS.

(From a Correspondent.)

Unlike singers, dancers need no more dread coughs, colds, and sore throats than the mass of ordinary mortals; but, if they happen to have a more than usually troublesome corn, or to sprain an ancle or a big toe, farewell for a time to entrechats, pirouettes, and other Terpsichorean tours de force, which always bring into play the opera-glasses of the regular—or perhaps we might say: irregular—frequenters of the stalls and excite the applause of the general public. The truth of this assertion concerning dancers has, much to M. Vaucorbeil's mortification, doubtless, just been exemplified in the case of Mdlle Rita Sangalli. Owing to that young lady's having hurt her foot, the first performance of the long expected ballet of Namouna, by MM. Nuitter and Petitpa, with M. Lalo's music, did not take place as announced on the 13th inst., but had to be postponed till the 6th March.

Ch. Gounod's Philémon et Baucis, first brought out in 1860 at the Théâtre-Lyrique, with Mad. Carvalho as Baucis, has been revived at the Opéra-Comique. On the present occasion, the heroine is impersonated by Mdlle Merguillier, who made such a hit in the Toreador, and reached, at one spring, as it were, so high a position in public favour. Her success in the new character was complete, and the public applauded her lustily. She was, moreover, congratulated by the composer. M. Nicot was Philémon; M. Taskin, Jupiter; and M. Belhomme, Vulcan. On the day he revived Ch. Gounod's work, M. Carvalho produced a novelty in the shape of a one-act trifle, entitled: Attendez-moi sous l'orme. The book, by MM. Jules Prével and de Bonnières, adheres pretty closely to Regnard's comedy of the same name, on which it is founded. Nearly all the librettists have done is to abbreviate, without altering, the text, and interpolate the various pieces intended to be set to music. The composer, M. Vincent d'Indy, already favourably known by his symphonic poem, La Forêt enchantée, and other works, has written an excellent score, but one rather above the subject it is intended to illustrate. Fearing, probably, not to do enough, he has done too much, and more simplicity in his music would have imparted to it a charm it now wants. The cast included Mdlle Thuillier—who was encored in her rondo: "Gardons nos moutons, liron, lirette," the gem of the piece—Mdlle Molé, MM. Barré, Piccaluga, and Barnolt.

Hervé's old buffo-opera, Le Petit Faust, has been revived as a grand spectacular extravaganza at the Théâtre de la Porte Saint Martin. Siebel has been written up into importance for a great public favourite, Mdlle Gélabert; fresh couplets have been composed for Méphisto; and new ballets have been introduced in the first and third acts. The scenery, dresses, and appointments are splendid.

At his concert of the 12th inst., in the Théâtre du Château-d'Eau, Ch. Lamoureux included in his programme the first act of Wagner's Lohengrin. The experiment proved an indisputable success. The applause was frequent and hearty, so hearty, indeed, after the prelude, that the number in question had to be repeated. The execution was good all round, and everyone concerned, solo-singers, chorus, orchestra, and conductor, highly distinguished themselves.—Mad. Carlotta Patti and C. Heymann, the pianist, took part in the thirteenth Popular Concert, the lady singing an air from Samson, the gentleman playing Weber's "Concertstück" and Liszt's "Tarentelle."

A marble bust, executed by Desprez, of Mad. Cinti-Damoreau, has been presented to the Grand Opera by her daughter, Mad. Marie Cinti-Damoreau, and also a medallion in terra-cotta of Rossini, the donor being the artist who modelled it — H. Chevalier.—Victor Koning has retired from the management of the Renaissance, and been succeeded by Gravière, previously manager of the Theatre in Geneva. — According to report, Cœdès, the composer, who had, in consequence of mental alienation, to be confined at Charenton, is better, and hopes are entertained that he will shortly be released from restraint.—Joseph Wieniawski began a fresh series of concerts at the Salle Herz on the 21st inst.

DRESDEN.—Joseph Erl, member of the operatic company at the Theatre Royal, met his death on the 9th inst. through falling down the stairs at his own house. "He was," says the Neue Berliner Musikzeitung, "an excellent artist, though never able to achieve the importance of his brother Anton."

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The students' Chamber Concert, given on Saturday evening, February 18th, in the Concert Room of the Academy, was honoured by the attendance of H.R.H. the Princess Louise, who, on her arrival, was received by Professor Macfarren (principal), the professors of the Institution, and Mr John Gill (secretary). On being conducted to her seat by Mr J. P. Goldberg (professor of singing to H.R.H.), Her Royal Highness was presented with a handsome bouquet. The following is the programme of the music, with which Her Royal Highness expressed herself much pleased, as well as with the performances of the students:—

Motets, "Adoramus Te" (Palestrina) and "O quam gloriosum (Vittoria)—the Choir; Allegro Moderato con Spirito, from Sonata in A flat, Op. 39 (C. M. von Weber)—pianoforte, Mr Thomas B. Knott, pupil of Walter Macfarren; Song, "The Ivy" (F. K. Hattersley)—(Balfe scholar)—Miss Florence Norman; Terzetto, "Le faccio un inchino," Il Matrimonio Segreto (Cimarosa)—Carolina, Miss Mary Beare, Elisetta, Miss Clara Ingram, Fidalma, Miss Constance Griffiths; Sonata, in B flat, Op. 65, No. 4 (Mendelssohn)—organ, Mr A. Lake; Song (MS.), "The Reaper and the Flowers" (Annie Cantelo)—(student)—Miss Hilda Wilson (Westmoreland scholar); Fuga Scherzando, in A minor (J. S. Bach)—pianoforte, Miss Lilian Munster, pupil of Mr Eyres; Duetto, "Qual Anelante" (Marcello)—Miss Charlotte Thudichum (Parepa-Rosa scholar), and Miss Florence Norman; Mehr Langsam als Zurückhaltend and Markirt und Lebhaft, from "Nachtstück," Op. 23 (Schumann)—pianoforte, Master Septimus Webbe, pupil of Mr. Westlake; Psalm xxiii., "The Lord is my Shepherd" (Pauer)—female voices, solos, Miss Thudichum (Parepa-Rosa scholar), Miss Florence Norman, Miss Christina Cross, and Miss Hilda Wilson (Westmoreland scholar)—pianoforte obbligato, Mr. Alfred Izard; Andante and Allegro, from MS. Sonata, in E minor (Charles S. Macpherson)—Sterndale Bennett scholar)—pianoforte, Mr. Charles S. Macpherson; Song, "The Wanderer" (Schubert)—Miss Ada Iggulden; Introduction and Allegro, in D (MS.) (W. G. Wood—Potter exhibitioner)—organ, Mr W. G. Wood; Sonata, in G (Porpora)—pianoforte accompaniment by Ferdinand David—violin, Miss Kathleen Watts, pupil of M. Sainton; Song (MS.), "Whither" (Dora Bright)—(student)—Miss Mary Chamberlain; Presto, from Sonata, in D, Op. 10, No. 3 (Beethoven)—pianoforte, Miss Cecilia Lancelot, pupil of Mr F. B. Jewson; Duetto, "Mille Volte" (Randegger)—Miss Christina Cross and Mr Hirwen Jones; Madrigal, "All Creatures now are merry-minded," The Triumphs of Oriana (Benet).

The accompanists were Miss Annie Vale, Messrs Ernest Ford, and Alfred Izard. Mr William Shakespeare conducted. The room was crowded.

BIRMINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL.—The definitive scheme of the Birmingham Festival of August next was submitted and adopted on Wednesday at a meeting of the general committee held in the lecture theatre of the Midland Institute under the presidency of Lord Windsor. The scheme submitted by the orchestral committee was briefly as follows:—On the Tuesday morning Elijah; in the evening a miscellaneous concert, including Sir Julius Benedict's new cantata, Graziella, "Grande Marche Nuptiale," for organ and orchestra, composed by M. Gounod, at the command of Her Majesty, for the marriage of his Royal Highness the Duke of Albany, and Mr Cowen's Suite de Pièces. On Wednesday morning, M. Gounod's oratorio, Redemption; on the same evening, Mr Gaul's new cantata, The Holy City, an orchestral serenade by Mr Villiers Stanford, and the overture to Benvenuto Cellini by Hector Berlioz. On Thursday morning, Handel's Messiah; in the evening, Herr Gade's new cantata, Psyche, and several instrumental pieces, including the popular overture to William Tell. On Friday morning, Cherubini's Mass in C, Mozart's Symphony in G, Brahms' Triumphlied, and Beethoven's Mount of Olives. On Friday evening the committee propose to repeat M. Gounod's Redemption. The leading artists will be—sopranos, Mdme Albani, Mdme Marie Roze, and Miss Anna Williams; contraltos, Mdme Patey and Mdme Trebelli; tenors, Mr Lloyd and Mr Maas; baritones, Mr Santley and Mr F. King; bass, Signor Foli. A proposal having been made by Messrs R. W. Winfield & Co. to light the Town Hall during the festival with the electric light under the newly-perfected Crompton-Winfield system, the committee recommended its acceptance.

MILAN.—Bianca da Cervia, the new four-act opera performed for the first time on the 7th inst at the Scala, achieved only a moderate success, though on the first night the composer, A. Smareglia, was honoured with fifteen calls! The leading characters were sustained by Teodorini, Colonnese, Aldighieri and Vecchioni.

Digitized by Google

WAGNER, CARLOTTA PATTI, AND CHARLES HEYMANN IN PARIS.

The Paris Figaro says:—

M. Pasdeloup, who is always found at the head of the movement, has advanced as far as the third Wagnerian incarnation: he has given the public the famous Prelude and the last scene of Tristan und Isolde, the most apocalyptic of all the works by the composer of Bayreuth, and last Sunday he gave a fragment from Die Götterdämmerung. In the case of Tristan und Isolde, he hit upon a very good idea. He had a short "explanation" of what the audience were going to hear printed on the back of his programme. Here is the version of the celebrated Prelude, which has made the tour of the world, without anybody's ever knowing what the author desired to express: "Tristan, who has espoused Isolde in the name of his King, is already enamoured of her, but suppresses his disloyal passion. A philter which the two drink by mistake renders them oblivious of everything. They confess their love for each other. Insensible thenceforth to every other sentiment, they plunge into their passion without seeing ought around them. This love, first timid, then bolder, then violent, and then unbridled, is what the author has meant to depict in the Prelude." Thanks to the above notice, the Prelude, which, it is true, was very well executed, afforded greater satisfaction than we ever knew it to do before. For very many ears there still remains an inextricable and entangled mass of chromatic desinences, irritatingly persistent, and a series of progressions heaped up and grafted on each other, their equilibrium being an enigma for even many musicians; still this astonishing page was rendered more intelligible than it previously had been to a great number of persons. It was applauded without protestation, and so was the final scene: Death and Transfiguration of Isolde. This is a composition of very elevated tone, but it must be acknowledged that the effect is obtained by the same means as in the Prelude: progressions and crescendos. Moreover, the orchestra has an inconvenient way of absolutely crushing the singer's voice, so that that excellent artist, Mad. Panchioni, perceiving her declamatory efforts were useless, thought she had better conclude her scene by a little bit of ecstatic pantomime, which here and there raised a smile. Last Sunday, the "Funeral March for the Death of Siegfried," a fragment from the Götterdämmerung, was received very coldly. M. Pasdeloup was wrong in not drawing up a programme for the occasion. A short musical recapitulation, setting forth that the bits of themes which appear in the course of the March are so many reminiscences of the events the hero has gone through, would have been favourable to the effect of the fragment which derives from the tessitura of the deepest of the brass instruments an exceedingly striking heroic and sombre character.

At this last concert, M. Pasdeloup again introduced that marvellous pianist, M. Charles Heymann, of whom we shall speak on another occasion; he likewise treated his audience with the rentrée of Mad. Carlotta Patti, who had not been heard in Paris for some years. She sang, with obbligato trumpet accompaniment, the air from Handel's oratorio, Samson. It is a most ticklish piece, and to have selected it must have called into requisition all her daring and confidence. Every effect permissible in a composition of such high style, each note of which is a difficulty to be surmounted, was obtained by Mad. Carlotta Patti with the authority of one who possesses all the secrets of the art of singing. Her success was very great. It is, however, but just to associate M. Franquin with this success. He executed the trumpet part with astounding certainty and rare felicity. Though re-called several times Mad. Carlotta declined to comply with the desire of the audience and repeat the air; despite her modesty, she felt she could not be more than perfect."

M. de Thémines, the critic of another leading paper writes:

"Sunday last, at the Cirque d'Hiver, song glided for a moment into the midst of grand symphonic music. It was represented by Mdme Carlotta Patti de Munck, the exceptional vocalist, who has at last returned from her brilliant pilgrimage across the two hemispheres. May she remain some time at least among us! It is quite enough that America should take her sister, Adelina. Carlotta Patti, or 'Carlotta,' as she is generally called in the artistic world, unwilling to do aught not in keeping with the programme of the Popular Concerts directed by M. Pasdeloup, and specially devoted to the imperishable beauties of the great German masters, chose for her re-appearance here a sublime page of Handel, the German whom England ended by making her own: the air from the oratorio of Samson. She sang it with that pure and penetrating voice of hers, of so fine a pitch and of such admirable suppleness that facility of execution is mere child's play for her, and, more than all, she sang it in the grand style indispensable for everything emanating from the fertile and authoritative pen of the illustrious composer. Hanging on her lips, the audience—and we know how difficult to please is the audience of the Cirque d'Hiver—admired simultaneously her incomparable organ and her prodigies of vocalization, as well as that correct and irreproachable method which alone enables a singer not to injure or impair, even after long years, the limpid crystal of the voice. She had an ovation as enthusiastic as largely merited. And now that she has revealed her presence here, let us hope she will not be contented with a single appearance. The public have welcomed her; she surely will not reply to their welcome by a card with 'P.P.C.' upon it."

REVIEWS.

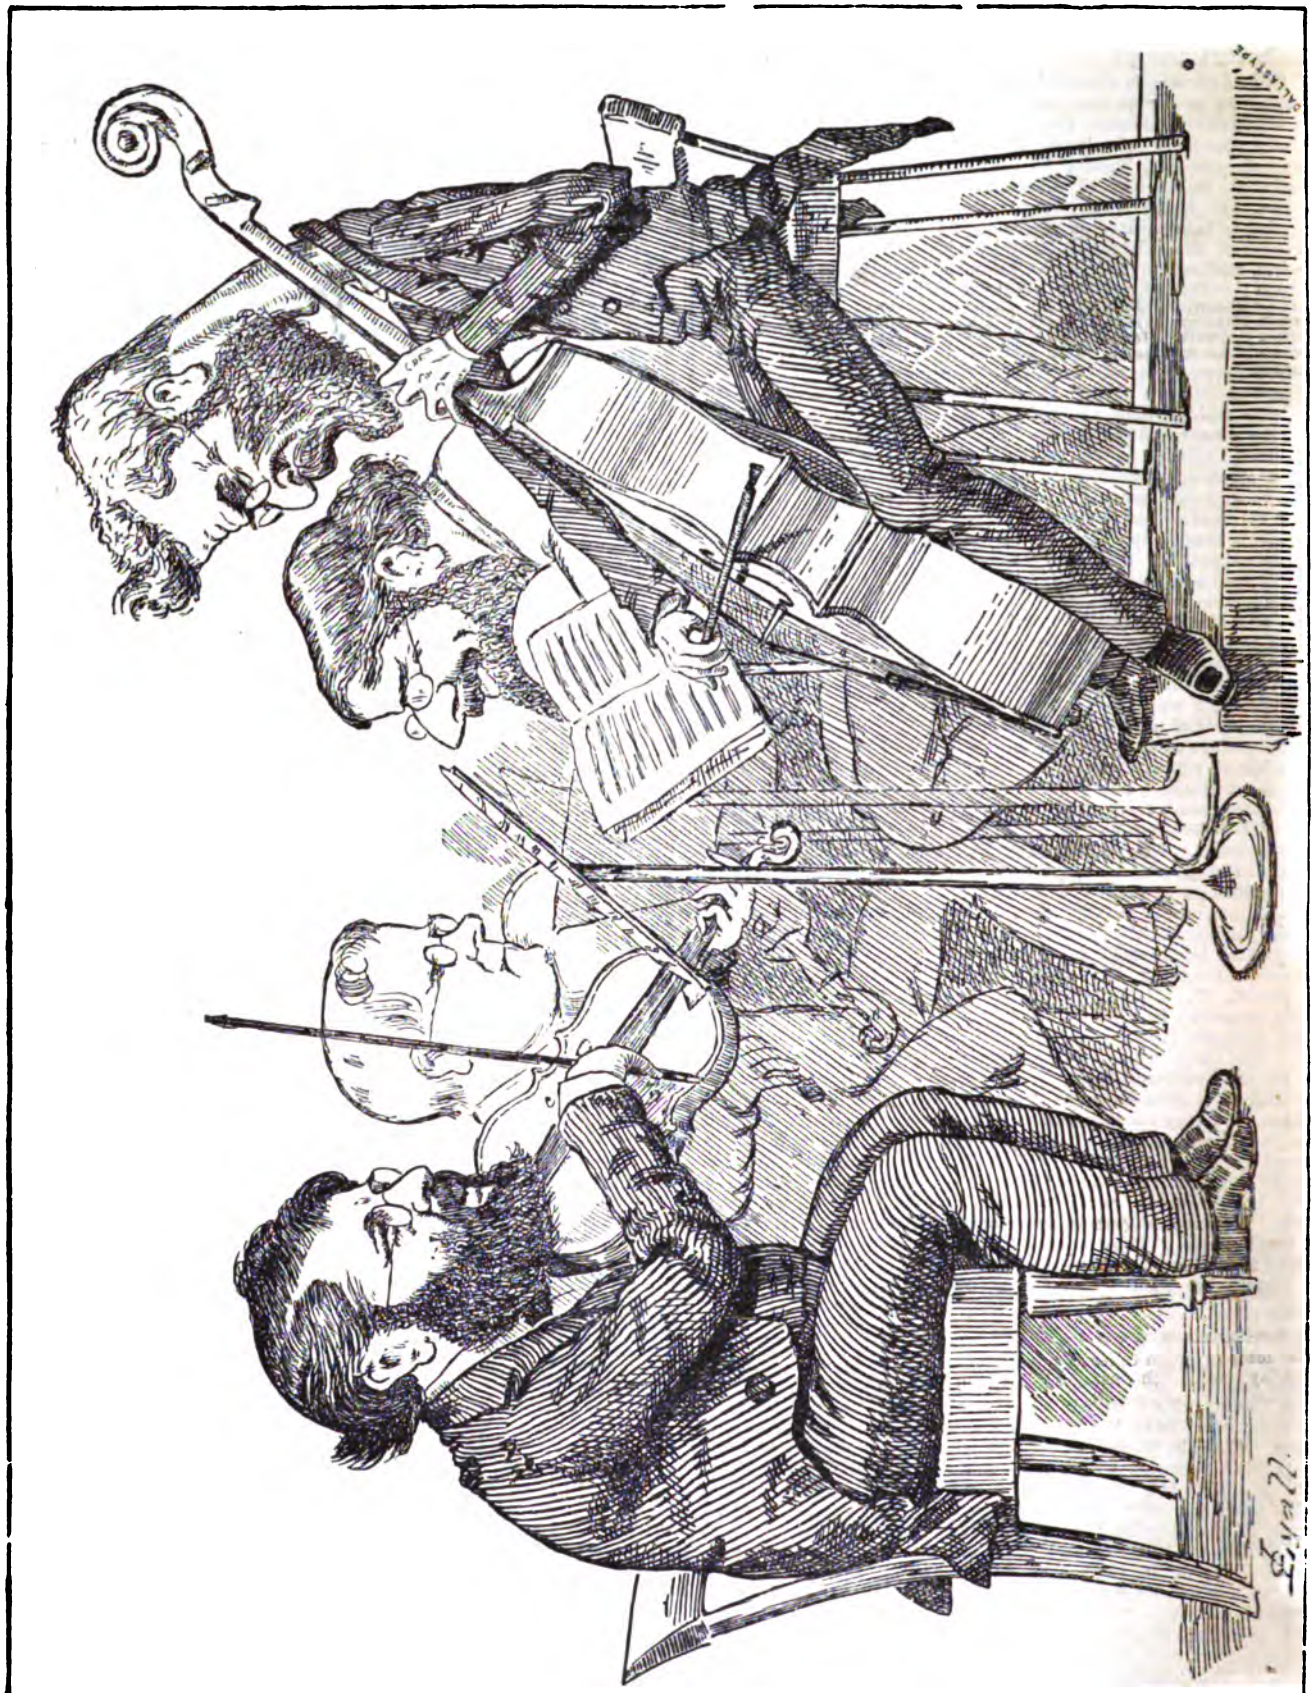
Te Deum, set to music in the key of A flat major, by E. J. Hopkins.

The skill, taste, and judgment of the organist of the Temple Church are often made manifest outside the precincts of the building, to the fame of which his musical gifts have been devoted, by compositions which quickly travel far and wide, and are certainly destined to hold a place in the future by the side of works of musicians, who, from the Reformation downwards, have never let the Church, in any generation, lack appropriate strains. There has been a continuity of song, a continuity that has retained, through musical fashions and developments, not only a unity in feeling, but also in form of expression. Take for instance three settings of the Te Deum, Tallis's, Rogers', and Hopkins', far apart in time, and different as they are in many respects, yet one spirit pervades them; and more, the same kind of framework encloses the varied musical thoughts. It is to be regretted that some young church composers seem to hold up the "part song" as their model, instead of the learned and venerated anthem. Mr E. J. Hopkins has shown in his latest setting of the Te Deum that it is possible to do something new without destroying old forms. In the printing of the Te Deum he has called attention to the divisions it naturally presents. The opening lines, part 1st, he terms the doxology to the Father; the 2nd part commencing "Thou art the King of Glory," the doxology to the Son; the 3rd, "We believe," the advent; the 4th "O Lord save Thy people," the daily prayer and thanksgiving; the 5th "Vouchsafe, O Lord," the prayer for purity; the 6th, "O Lord, let Thy mercy," the prayer for continued grace. The resolution of the ancient Hymn into its constituent parts directs the mind to its comprehensive beauty, and makes clear the truth of the musical setting. It will be seen that the phrases of each part reflect and express the varied nature of the holy utterances. But really one character, that of subdued devotion, pervades the whole, giving it thereby a unity seldom found. It need not be said that Mr Hopkins has written scholarly, he could scarcely do otherwise, at the same time he has confined himself to a simplicity that renders the Te Deum suitable for choir or congregation, with or without accompaniments.

Art and Letters.—This illustrated magazine, conducted by Mr Comyns Carr, now reaching its sixth number, fully sustains the interest, and substantiates the promise made on its introduction last October. The engravings are excellent in choice of subject, and skill in execution; whilst the letterpress, written in capital style, affords interesting and valuable information concerning the artists whose works are reproduced. In the first number Jean François Millet, the "peasant-painter" has the post of honour, which his life and works fully deserved. At the present time the necessity of individuality cannot be too much enforced, for artists more and more congregate in the great centres of European Society, and therefore are continually exposed to the temptation of moving in the same grooves. Millet, leaving Paris and its artificiality, found in humble scenes of village life, subjects more suitable to his simple truthful nature. He gave proof that the painter, seeking with earnest heart, never wants for appropriate themes. Attention is directed in the second and third numbers to the remarkable Spanish artist Mariano Bernardo Fortuny, who, after a brief, but brilliant career, died in Rome in 1874 at the age of thirty-seven, two years more of life than that allotted to the English Frederick Walker, laid to rest in Cookham churchyard in 1875. The genius of each of those gifted men is illustrated by engravings of merit. Nos. 4 and 5 are made interesting by articles on the military painters of the day. The Frenchmen, Edouard Detaille, and A. Neuville, appear to have made obsolete the battle pieces of former days, when a panoramic view of opposing hosts was drawn with a formal accuracy impossible to realism. The painter's old bird's eye view of war has passed away with the musician's "Battle of Prague." The French artists have had personal experience of the horrors of modern carnage, and with vividness have depicted the episodes and combats that actually came under their own eyes, and saddened their own hearts.

PENCERDD GWFFYN.

Digitized by Google



Before the Concert.

After the Concert.
Veni — vidi ——— Vinci!

For Zerbini read Strauss.—[illegible].

Digitized by Google

ST JAMES'S HALL.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS,

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON, 1881-82.

DIRECTOR—MR S. ARTHUR CHAPPELL.

THE THIRTY-FIRST CONCERT OF THE SEASON

WILL TAKE PLACE ON

MONDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 27, 1882,

At Eight o'clock precisely.

Programme.

PART I.—Quartet, in D major, Op. 44, No. 1, for two violins, viola, and violoncello (Mendelssohn)—MM. Joachim, L. Ries, Hollander, and Piatti; Song, "Where'er you walk" (Handel)—Mr Abercrombie; Nachtstück, Op. 23, No. 4 (Schumann), and Waltzes, Op. 39 (Brahms), for pianoforte alone—Miss Agnes Zimmermann.

PART II.—Trio, in E flat, Op. 100, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (Schubert)—Miss Agnes Zimmermann, MM. Joachim, and Piatti; Song, "Celia" (Sa'aman)—Mr Abercrombie; Hungarian Dances, Nos. 17, 15, 20, 21, for violin and pianoforte (Brahms and Joachim)—Miss Agnes Zimmermann and Herr Joachim.

Accompanist—Mr ZERBINI.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 25, 1882,

At Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

Quintet, in D major, No. 8, for two violins, two violas, and violoncello (Mozart)—MM. Joachim, L. Ries, Hollander, Zerbini, and Piatti; Song, "Connais tu le pays" (Thomas)—Miss Santley; Sonata, in B flat minor, Op. 35, for pianoforte alone (Chopin)—Mdme Marie Krebs; Adagio, in E major, for violin, with pianoforte accompaniment (Viotti)—Herr Joachim; Song, "Sing on, ye little birds" (Waley)—Miss Santley; Sonata, in C minor, Op. 30, No. 2, for pianoforte and violin (Beethoven)—Mdlle Marie Krebs, and Herr Joachim.

Accompanist—Mr ZERBINI.

CRYSTAL PALACE SATURDAY CONCERT, THIS DAY, at Three. The programme will include Symphony, "The Power of Sound" (Spohr); Violoncello Concerto in D minor, Andante and Finale (Piatti); Academic Festival Overture, Op. 80 (Brahms). Vocalist—Mdme Patey. Solo Violoncello—Herr Robert Hausmann. Conductor—Mr AUGUST MANNS. Seats, 2s. 6d., 1s. 6d., 1s., and 6d.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Owing to pressure on our space, several continued articles, amongst which are "Form or Design in Vocal Music," "Cherubini," &c., are unavoidably left over.

DEATH.

On the 21st. Dec., at Alfred Street, Bow, JANE, the beloved wife of EDWARD WOOLLEY, many years orchestral violinist, Sacred Harmonic Society, London.

MDME CHRISTINE NILSSON'S husband, M. Auguste Rouzaud, died in Paris on Wednesday morning, of paralysis of the brain, brought on by over-excitement during the late panic on the Bourse.

MISS STEPHENS (Dowager Countess of Essex), the once popular vocalist, died on Wednesday morning in her eighty-eighth year, of bronchitis and congestion of the lungs, at her residence in Belgrave Square. Miss Stephens was aunt to the esteemed professor, Mr Charles E. Stephens.

DEATH OF MDME CELESTE.—Another link in a long chain of dramatic memories, connecting the present with a fresh generation of playgoers, has been broken by the death of that once highly popular actress Mdme Celeste, who expired at her residence in Paris on Sunday, the 12th inst., her last hours being solaced by the affectionate care and solicitude of her daughter, Mrs N. E. Elliott. Mdme Celeste was born at Paris on August 6, 1811, and at a very early age was admitted as pupil at the Académie Royale, where such rapid proficiency was attained that when scarcely sixteen she accepted an engagement for the United States, and during her stay she married an American gentleman named Elliott, who died years ago. Returning to England in 1830, Mdme Celeste appeared at Drury Lane and other metropolitan theatres, and won a distinguished position. In 1844 she was leading actress and directress of the Adelphi, where her impersonation of the Indian girl Miami, in Buckstone's drama, The Green Bushes, became identified with her popularity. In this character and at this theatre, she took her farewell (October, 1874), after an engagement of 12 nights. In November, 1859, Mdme Celeste became lessee of the Lyceum, a position she held for two years.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.'S, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). Advertisements not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1882.

DR BEARD (loquitur).—We have got him back at last. All hail to the master!

To J. J.

Hoch!

Hail! mighty monarch of the bow,
A sceptre truly wieldest thou
Within the realm of Art:
Here willing subjects gladly join
To pay thee in thy kingdom's coin—
The homage of the heart.

Again we welcome to our strand
The potent magic of thy wand,
Which brooks no rival near;
As round thy brows the bay we twine,
Enchanter, wake those strains divine,
And reign without compeer.

WETSTAR.

THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

Herr Joachim's first appearance for the season was attended by the usual circumstances—that is to say, an overflowing audience and great enthusiasm. Connoisseurs looked for these things with assured eyes, albeit arguing from experience in other cases, the time has come for lukewarmness, if not indifference, to show itself. Thirty-eight years have passed since Herr Joachim, then a boy of thirteen, appeared amongst us as a candidate for favour. While he grew in stature and experience admiration of his talents grew also, but it is hard to suppose that even his warmest admirers anticipated so long a stretch of supremacy as that which the Hungarian violinist has actually enjoyed. The future is always big with possibilities; nature loves to show that she can improve upon efforts hitherto accounted her best; popular applause is fickle, and the foothold of a public favourite is ever uncertain. But Herr Joachim seems to enjoy an immunity from besetting dangers. Rivals come and go, leaving him unaffected, and in the realm of his art no Laodicean exists. We can account for this only by reference to the permanent authority of genius, and to the powerful charm of natural gifts consecrated to the highest uses. In all such instances, however, analysis is of little avail. There are the facts, and if we cannot exactly explain them, we know that they are rightful, and our own sensations make us glad of them.

Digitized by Google

When Herr Joachim arrives the star of Beethoven, always in the ascendant, begins to shine with double brightness. So it shone on Monday night, when two of the master's works were performed with singular finish and beauty of effect. The well-known quartet in F (Op. 59) came first of these, followed by the trio in G major (Op. 9). for strings only. In the adagio of the quartet, Herr Joachim, ably supported by Messrs Ries, Straus, and Piatti, was great as ever, It seems the peculiar privilege of this artist to divine the spirit of Beethoven's slow movements—those in which the composer's genius, like some lark of strong and daring wing, reaches the very gate of heaven. With what reverence Herr Joachim interprets the master's utterances! How careful he is to avoid all self-assertion, all appearance of thrusting his personality between composer and audience! Herein lies a part of his secret. Because of the very clearness with which we see Beethoven do we recognize the presence and work of Joachim, and so gratitude mixes with admiration. Besides introducing his favourite master on two occasions, Herr Joachim played his own Romance in B flat (Op. 2) and Paganini's Caprice in E major, to the intense delight of the audience, who cheered this exhibition of "virtuosity" with even more vigour than they acclaimed the less readily comprehensible work done in the concerted pieces. Henceforth to the end of the season the tide of success at Mr. Chappell's concerts will run high and strong. The pianist was Miss Krebs, whom we must congratulate upon a very able and appropriate rendering of Chopin's Nocturne in C minor and Impromptu in F sharp minor. The subtle flavour of the Polish composer's music is not discerned, much less communicated by every artist that plays it. In this essential matter, however, Miss Krebs was notably fortunate. She executed her task with as much delicacy and esprit as fluency, and gave unqualified satisfaction to an audience whose good opinion was decidedly worth having. The vocalist, Miss Annie Marriott, introduced Handel's pretty, though difficult song, "Lusinghe più care," and, with Miss Edith Millar, sang, to English words, one of the same master's Italian duets, being in each case ably accompanied by Mr Zerbini, who also took the pianoforte part in Herr Joachim's solo pieces.—D. T.

HERR JOACHIM.—Herr Joachim has returned to London for the season and appeared for the first time at last night's Monday Popular Concert. He was the leader in Beethoven's quartet for strings in F (Op. 59), and had selected as his solo pieces his own romance for the violin and Paganini's Caprice in E. His playing has never been more perfect, and his reception on the part of a crowded audience was as enthusiastic as on any previous occasion. Mdlle Krebs was the pianist of the concert, one of the features of which was the exquisite rendering of Handel's duet, "How lovely is the face," by Miss Annie Marriott and Miss Edith Millar.—Times, Feb. 21.

TO OAKES OF THE ORKNEYS.

SIR,—The Variations Sérieuses of Mendelssohn were composed at Leipsic in 1841, the only reference to them occurring in his "Letters" being the subjoined:—

"Do you know what I have recently been composing with enthusiasm?—Variations for the piano—actually eighteen—on a theme in D minor; and they amused me so famously that I have already begun others."

Here Mendelssohn refers to the Variations on Themes in B flat and E flat respectively.—I am, sir, your obedient servant,

Abraham Saveke Silent.

Silent.

Upon a hill's last crags, some mighty firs
Wailed out grim music to the wild sea-wind.
The place was cool and dim. The sun had set.
And there I put an end to wandering;
And lay me down, for being tired to death;
And heard a sighing all about my ears,
And then great stillness: and I slept and dreamed.
I dreamed that in deep sleep, there softly strayed,
Across my eyelids, fingers beautiful
That opened them to glamour of the wood,
And then a girl most wonderfully fair.
She never spoke, albeit once her lips
Unclosed a little in a little smile
Which lit her face up as the moon might do
To broken lilies drifting from the shade.
I never heard her heart beat, but she came
In lingering wise that told of slow heart beat.
Meantime a spell so bound me that I slept
And could not move my hand, nor say a word.
Great were her eyes and grey, and held large light,
Restless and wan and with headachy look:
And, when a weariness too heavily
Upon them weighed, the long dark lashes fell;
And then her head would droop like some lone flower
Careworn and finding nothing worth its care.
How my brain strove and tried to hold back time!
How every breath I drew parched up my lips!
How my heart sank for dread lest she should go!
Her clustered silken locks; her forehead pale;
Her pale, and exquisitely fashioned face;
Her little nose and mouth; her cheek, whereon
A faint blue vein was just discernable;
Her ears for butterflies to kiss and die;
Her delicate light eyebrows, like two clouds,
Two streaks of almost gold, the weak south wind
Traces ere dying in the day's decline
Over the moon and tranquil evening sea:
All these I clung to with a dizzy brain.
And, from sheer pleasure, even shut my eyes
One moment. When I looked again. Nothing.
Without one word to link my soul and hers,
She was no more before me, was quite gone.
And thereupon I sought with bitter grief,
Saying, "God, give me back those eyes again,"
"That face of hers, half cold, half sad and sweet."
But nothing answered, save the firs, which hissed
And cried with a hollow crying at the gale.

Pelham.

BÖHM.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—You most kindly afforded space for my own recollections concerning the invention of the Böhm flute, and have shown a yet wider liberality in reproducing Dr. Schafhäutl's exhaustive paper upon the same subject.

At the risk of inviting obvious remarks about "flute lores," I venture to appeal to you to give a hearing to Böhm himself; after which, if you grant my request, I will not again trespass on your good nature.

Since I last wrote Mr Carte, whose firm originally held Böhm's patent, and who still makes his flutes most excellently, has sent me a very interesting English manuscript, written in Böhm's, to me, familiar hand; and relating the history of those gradual improvements which, beginning with the "ring-keyed" flute and its fingering—alleged to have been borrowed from Gordon—culminated in the cylindro-conical instrument patented in England and France about 1846 (I think?).

Digitized by Google

Böhm fully details his relations with Gordon; but the pamphlet (which will, I hope, be published) has an interest quite distinct from all personal questions. I can especially recommend its perusal to those who are prepared to proclaim Böhm an impostor, and who may therefore be glad to know something of the rudiments of that science upon which his imposture is founded.

I have epitomised and extracted as briefly as possible those passages which refer to the disputed invention.—I am, Sir, very obediently yours,

W. S. Broadwood.

London, Feb. 18, 1882.

Böhm says:—Being myself a skilled mechanist, I had always either made or modified the flutes on which I played. In 1828 I established a flute manufactory of my own at Munich.

In 1831 I played both at Paris and London on a flute of the old system made, and in some details improved, in my factory at Munich.

While in London on this occasion, I was struck by the tone of Nicholson's large holed flute; while the ingenious though unsuccessful attempts to improve mechanism of Mr Gordon (an amateur whom I then met for the first time) set me thinking whether I could not myself design a flute, which should combine the advantages of large holes, with those of improved mechanism. I had long meditated something of the kind; now, on my return to Munich, I proceeded to carry out my plan.

"I considered Gordon's mechanism too complicated; and the holes of his flute wrongly placed. He used, among others, one 'ring key to avoid the F lever.' 'The E hole of his flute was bored lower down and covered with a key. He had also on his Flute a number of keys and levers made, some of which were ingeniously devised; but they were much too complicated, and of no use, as the instrument wanted throughout a correct accustical (sic) basis.'"

I began a series of experiments from which resulted a system of holes novel as to number, size, and position. To these I adapted a wholly novel system of fingering, carried out by means of ring keys (explained in detail). My ring keyed flute was completed in the beginning of 1832. I played upon it in London in public in 1833.

In that same year Gordon wrote to me from Lausanne (the letter is quoted in extenso, in French), ordering of me a flute on his system of fingering, and enclosing for my guidance a table of fingering. Eventually he came to Munich to superintend the execution of this order. He soon however discarded the system he had thus far used; and took to another, parts of which were copied from my flute, as he acknowledges in the introduction subsequently published with his table of fingering for a Diatonic flute (this is the introduction already referred to by Dr Schafhäutl.)

After a year's work in my manufactory at Munich, Gordon completed his diatonic flute (lithographs of Gordon's flute, and of Böhm's ring-keyed flute are appended to the manuscript. There is no sort of resemblance between them).

"This diatonic flute, 'from what I know, was neither imitated nor played by any one else; and, afterwards, when I met him again in London, Gordon wished to have one of my flutes, as he was not satisfied with his own. I have the proofs of all these facts in my hands. How, then, could my flute be an imitation of his, which was made more than a year after mine had been completed?

"'Mr Gordon had made use of essential parts of my instrument when he constructed his; but he, a gentleman in every respect, always legally acknowledged it.

"'I, myself, had never placed a high value on this, my invention' says Böhm of his fingering). 'Without the repeated appeals made to me, I would scarcely have considered it worth while to claim its authenticity; as all the discussions on this subject refer merely to the key mechanism, which is usually judged of by individual views, each one thinking that the best which suits his tastes or fingers. I only valued my own system of fingering so far as I found in its contrivance the most simple means for the attainment of my object; which was, the improvement of the flute as to its accustical (sic) proportions. For this is the chief foundation of the higher or lower degree of perfection in all instruments, their mechanism being but of secondary importance. It is also much easier to construct keys, than to improve notes.' 'From 1833 till 1841 I was more occupied in steel and iron works' (he had been appointed an inspector of mines) 'than with music; but the surest proof of the authenticity of my invention may be a statement of my motives for constructing a new flute, and the explanation of the accustical (sic) and mechanical principles I made use of. For he alone is capable to produce a rationable (sic) work, who is able to give account for every detail, from its conception to its completion.'

"Böhm then gives an outline of the acoustical principles applicable to the manufacture of wind instruments in general, and to that of the flute in particular. After which he describes the various experiments by which he proceeded, till he finally completed and patented the Cylindro-conical Flute, which gained prizes in so many exhibitions, and which is now in general use."

[Copied or epitomized from Böhm's autograph manuscript, Feb. 18, 1882.—W. S. B.]

Irresistible.

Don Kensington of the South (persuasively).—"La ci darem la mano, &c."

Miss Hanover Tenterden (coyly).—"Vorrei—e--non vorrei, &c."

(Curtain.)

CONCERTS.

Bach Society.—The first of two concerts proposed to be given by this society during the present season took place in St James's Hall on Thursday evening Feb. 16 and was attended by a large number of well-known connoisseurs, whose gathering together is always a sign of some particular interest. In this case the attraction was due to a group of Church composition, more or less representing three different schools—the English, the German, and the Italian. Here our own land has no reason to dread rivalry. English Church music, from the time of the great intellectual and religious revival under the Tudors, to the present day, holds its own in comparison with any other, and is an invincible argument in the mouths of those who, like Prince Leopold at Manchester, contend that we are not au fond an "unmusical nation." The work chosen for performance on Thursday fairly represented the average merit of their class, as all must admit who know Byrd's six-part anthem, "Sing joyfully unto God our strength," Dr. Greene's "I will sing of Thy power," and Sir Gore Ouseley's "Great is the Lord." It will be observed that these compositions belong respectively to the seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth centuries. Hence their performance supplied an excellent opportunity of observing, not so much evidence of marked change as of stability in all that may be regarded as fundamental points. Of late years certain English Church writers have yielded to the influences of Mendelssohn or Gounod, and familiarized us with "prettinesses" not much akin to the grave and dignified outpourings of their elders. To this school Sir Gore Ouseley does not belong, nor can the path of English Church music be yet said to have swerved from the line that stretches back to the Tudor musicians. Accepting the Oxford professor's anthem, therefore, as representing our century, it was curious to note how comparatively little change has come about in three hunderd years. We do not say that the fact is surprising. The tendency of ecclesiastical art, as of ecclesiastical matters generally, is to "mark time," or, if ground be unconsciously gained, to retire with a burst of fervid devotion to things as they were. In this case, perhaps, there is a distinct advantage in marking time, since it is hard to conceive worship music more noble and appropriate than the best effusions of our old English masters. That Bach's double chorus, "Nun ist das Heil," worthily illustrated the kindred art of Lutheran, Germany needs no saying, nor could a word have been chosen more distinctive of Italian Church music at the beginning of its best days than Palestrina's "Missa Papæ Marcelli," which was heard on Thursday for the first time in an English concert-room. Apart from the historic interest of this Mass, as proceeding from the official action of the Sacred College with a view to much-needed reform, the music is a singularly beautiful example of Palestrina's skill. It must not, of course, be judged by comparison with the music of our own day. Such a course would not only be illogical but unfair. It would have its counterpart in a duel fought between a matchlock man of Elizabeth's time and a modern rifleman. Palestrina, though perhaps not conscious of his disability, was tied and bound by rules that kept him within narrow limits; whereas the Church composer of our day is almost free to do as he pleases. The marvel is that with so few chords available, such a narrow range of modulation, and so few admissible devices for avoiding the monotony of simple diatonic harmony, Palestrina was able to sustain the interest of his work. At the time when it was written, the "Missa Papæ Marcelli" must have seemed as though it had fallen from heaven, and even now, as we mark the steady flow of its sweet and massive chords, varied by play of fancy and the devices of an age which over-elaborated everything within the narrow bounds to which pedantry confined its ingeniousness, we cannot help but admire. The Bach Society did well to let us hear this Mass, and might with advantage rescue many kindred works from the oblivion in which we have permitted them to remain. Other notable features of the programme were Bach's Sonata in E flat, for pianoforte and flute, played by Messrs Svendsen and Kemp, Boccherini's Sonata for violoncello, in which Signor Piatti once more charmed every listener, and—not to speak of madrigals and part-songs—Handel's duet, "Conservate," capitally sung by Miss Robertson and Mdme Fassett, who had no difficulty in securing proper attention and regard for a very interesting example of the master. The solo passages in the Mass were given to the ladies just named, with them being Messrs Shakspere, Kempton, and Tremere. Mr Pettit well discharged important duties at the organ, and Mr Otto Goldschmidt conducted with his customary care and success.—D. T.

Digitized by Google

The Kilburn Musical Association gave its second concert of the season at the Town Hall, Kilburn, on Tuesday, the 21st inst. Mendelssohn's Elijah was given, the principal artists being Miss Florence Norman, Miss Allitsen, Mr F. Wood, and Mr F. Penna, vocalists; Mrs Wake, Miss Gollmick, and Mr Victor Gollmick presiding at the piano and harmonium. Owing to the absence of Mr Adolph Gollmick, through illness, Mr Walter F. Clare conducted. The performance throughout was creditable to all concerned, and a large audience testified their appreciation by frequent applause and encores. The indulgence of the audience was craved for Miss Allitsen, who was suffering from a severe cold. This notwithstanding, she sang with her accustomed purity, taste, and tenderness, and received unanimous encores for "Woe unto them" and "Oh, rest in the Lord." The fresh, resonant voice of Miss Florence Norman told well in the soprano solos, &c., and, as upon previous occasions, was much applauded. Mr F. Wood, manifestly oppressed with cold, struggled through the tenor music manfully, and created quite a favourable impression by the artistic and expressive manner in which he sang. Mr Fred. Penna had much to do in the bass part, and did it well, more especially the recit. and aria "It is enough." The trio, "Lift thine eyes," was re-demanded. The chorus gave evidence of careful rehearsal, and were kept well in hand throughout by Mr Clare, who conducted like a veteran. The accompaniments were all that could be desired. The audience were hearty in their acknowledgments, and showed good taste by remaining till the last note of the last bar was sung.—W. H.

Professor Michael Bergson gave his second séance musicale on Monday evening, Feb. 20th. The following is the programme:—Duet, Grand Sonata in E flat for the pianoforte, by Moscheles, played by Miss Eugenie Sturmfels and Mr Bergson; Song, "Dying Embers," the words by Percy Mocatta, music by Lindsay Sloper, effectively sung by Mdme St. Ives; "Grande polonaise heroïque," for violin, by M. Bergson, played with great success by Mr Pollitzer; "Midnight Chimes" (words by Maria X. Hayes), and "The Better World" (words by Mrs M. A. Baines), music by M. Bergson, charmingly sung by Miss Jessica O'Brien (violin obbligato by Mr Mori). Fragment of Sylvia by Leo Delibes, for the pianoforte (Miss Mary Fowel); Scena and Aria from M. Bergson's opera, Luise de Monfort, arranged for clarinet, effectively played by Mr J. E. Turrell: Mélodie composed for the violoncellist Hollman, transcribed for the pianoforte and performed by the composer, Mr P. Mocatta; "Serenade Moresque" (words by M. X. Hayes) and "Il Ritorno" (Rondo Valse), by M. Bergson, brilliantly sung by Miss Bertha Foresta; "When thou art near" (Sullivan), and "Close to the Threshold" (H. Parker), sung by Mr W. Broughton; and "Saltarello," from Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony, arranged for the pianoforte by Stephen Heller, played by Miss Lavinia O'Brien. Miss Minnie Bell gave two agreeable recitations, and Professor Bergson terminated the soirée by playing three of his favourite pianoforte pieces:—"Danse favorite de Maria Lesczynska," "Un Souvenir" (reverie), and "Un Orage dans les Lagunes." Mr Nicholas Mori conducted.—K. L.

Mr J. T. Hutchinson gave his annual concert on Tuesday evening, February 14, at the Holborn New Town Hall. The singers were Misses Larkcom, Cockburn, and Burton; Messrs Taylor and Hutchinson. There was a choir of 150, the organist was Mr E. H. Turpin, and the pianist, Mr W. G. Wood. Mr William Lemare conducted. The pièce de résistance was Mr J. Francis Barnett's cantata, The Ancient Mariner, which was excellently rendered both by soloists and chorus. A miscellaneous selection followed, including Rossini's overture to Guillaume Tell, capitally played on the organ by Mr E. H. Turpin; a part song by Mr Lemare, "Whispering Leaves;" the Scotch ballad, "Robin Adair," sung by Miss Cockburn (encored); "Montrose's Love Song," energetically delivered by Mr Hutchinson, &c. The concert concluded by Mr Lemare's choir singing Eaton Faning's characteristic part-song, "The Vikings."

Mr Frederic Penna gave his illustrated lecture on the "Art of Singing" at the Marlborough Rooms on Thursday evening, Feb. 9, before a fashionable and artistic audience. Our contemporary, The Morning Post, alluding to the lecture, says:—"Mr F. Penna, an excellent vocalist and teacher, on Thursday read a lecture at the Marlborough Rooms on the "Art of Singing," with rules from the formation of a tone to everything that a singer ought to know, to do, and to be. His remarks were illustrated with vocal pieces, given by himself and his accomplished daughter, Miss Catherine Penna, and accompanied by Mr W. Ganz on the pianoforte. Many of the observations, drawn from a long experience, and marked by sound common sense, are of such value that they ought to be widely known. Young students would be greatly benefitted by them, and many teachers would find them of great advantage as an aid and incentive to the higher claims of art."

Mdlle Alice Roselli, the accomplished vocalist, gave an "At Home" on Tuesday evening, February 14th, at Lady Frances Warburton's mansion, South Kensington. There was a large and fashionable audience, all of whom evidently enjoyed the varied musical programme provided for them. Mdlle Roselli's fine dramatic voice and thorough artistic singing were heard to advantage in the duets "Una Notte a Venezia," with Mr W. H. Cummings, and "Quis est Homo," with Miss Helen Meason, as well as in the quartet "Mezza notte," with Miss Meason, Messrs W. H. Cummings and Thurley Beale, and in Mr Marzials' ballad, "Leaving yet Loving." Mr. Cummings pleased everyone with his own charming ballad, "Just as of old." Mr Thurley Beale sang Gounod's "Maid of Athens," and Miss Helen Meason the same composer's "O that we two were Maying." Mr Cusins and Mr Sydney Smith played some brilliant pianoforte solos, and Miss Minnie Bell recited two dramatic pieces. Miss Beata Francis and Mr and Mrs Furlong also assisted as vocalists. Mr Lindsay Sloper and Signor Li Calsi accompanying with their usual ability. Mdlle Roselli may be congratulated upon the éclat with which this agreeable evening passed off.

Clerkenwell Popular Ballad Concerts.—The concerts which the committee of the "Popular Ballad Concerts" have given each week at the Foresters' Hall, Clerkenwell Road, have been thus far well attended, particularly by the poorer classes—for whom the committee specially cater—the prices being very moderate. On Monday evening, Jan. 30th, the singers were Misses Winthrop and Tennyson, Messrs Blandford and Thorndike. Mrs Fairfax gave a "recitation," Mr John Payne (M. Sainton's clever young pupil) played a couple of violin solos, and Mr Brinley Richards contributed some of his well-known pianoforte pieces—Mr W. Henry Thomas being the conductor. At the concert on Monday evening, Feb. 6th, the singers were Mrs Osborne Williams, Misses Adela Vernon and Touzeau, Messrs Fulkerson (who also recited in the absence of Mr Harrison) and Theo. Marzials. The instrumentalists were represented by Mr Foster Cooke (violoncellist) and Mr W. Henry Thomas, who played several pianoforte solos and also accompanied the singers. At the third concert (Feb. 13th) the artists were Miss Beebe, Mdmes de Vaney, Florence Winn, Miss Laurence, Messrs Rivers, St George, and Bennett (violin)—Mr W. Henry Thomas again acting as conductor. On Monday, Feb. 20th, an attractive programme was interpreted by Lady Campbell, Miss Wigan, Mr Lazarus, and other notabilities. Among the artists for next Monday (27th Feb.) we observe Mdlle Liebhart, Miss Emily Paget, and Mr John Radcliff, of the Royal Italian Opera.—M. A. G.

Digitized by Google

MESSRS FERDINAND AND HERMANN CARRI gave a concert on Thursday, February 23, at Steinway Hall. The one a violinist and the other a pianist, both of considerable talent. The following is the programme, each number being received with unanimous and deserved applause.

1, Sonata for piano and violin, D minor, Op. 21, (Gade); 2, First Grand Concerto for violin, (Paganini); (Cadenza by Ferdinand Carri); 3, Fantasia, "Lucia di Lammermoor," for piano, (Liszt); 4, Walther's Prize Song from Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg for violin, (Wagner); 5, Transcription for the pianoforte of "O Du mein holder Abendstern" (L'Etoile du soir") from Wagner's Tannhäuser, (Liszt); Etude, "Eroica," (Henselt); and Gavotte for the left hand alone (Bach); 6, Fantasia, "Othello" for violin, (Ernst); 7, Polonaise, A flat, for piano, (Chopin); 8, Sonata for piano and violin, G major, Op. 18, (Rubinstein).

The room was well attended and the concert-givers, who, we understand, "hail from America," will, no doubt, be often heard during the ensuing season.

PROVINCIAL.

CANTERBURY.—The performance for the first time in this city of Dr Longhurst's new cantata The Village Fair at the Music Hall, on Monday evening, Feb. 6th, met with an enthusiastic reception, says the Canterbury News, and we heartily congratulate our talented Cathedral organist upon the brilliant success which his latest composition has achieved. It was but natural that the performance of a work which has received such favourable criticism and roused so much interest in musical circles in this district should attract as large and fashionable an audience as that which attended the concert. The assemblage included nearly all the prominent musicians in the district and therefore was gratifying to Dr Longhurst, as indicating the unanimous feeling of a critical audience. Of the general execution of the work we can speak in the highest terms. About fifty ladies constituted a very effective and well balanced chorus. The performance of both band and chorus indicated that the minutest details in the preparation of the work had not escaped the attention of the conductor. The principal singers were Miss Jessie Royd, Mdlle Van Senden and Miss Jessie Griffin, (a young and promising student of the Royal Academy of Music, London). The second part of the programme consisted of Sterndale Bennett's May Queen which, though often heard in Canterbury was never more effectively rendered than on the present occasion. The singers were the choir and the ladies who sang in Dr Longhurst's cantata, assisted by Messrs H. Guy and R. Rhodes.

CHELTENHAM.—The last of the promenade concerts of the present season took place on Saturday, and proved, like its predecessors, a success. Mr Ricardo Linter, who was the pianist, played four solos in brilliant style, and received encores for two of them. In the absence of Mr Von Holst (who was unable to attend, through a severe domestic affliction), Mr Linter accompanied Miss Catharine, the vocalist of the concert, in her songs. The concert was a great success from a musical point of view, and we trust the season has proved remunerative to the spirited caterers.—Cheltenham Examiner.

BIRMINGHAM.—The attractions of the following programme for the fourth concert of the present series of Mr S. S. Stratton's Popular Chamber Concerts brought together a thoroughly representative gathering in the Masonic Hall.

Quintet—Pianoforte, flute, clarionet, horn, and bassoon, (C. S. Heap); Sonata in G (Op. 78)—pianoforte and violin, (Brahms); Fantasiestücke, "Abends," "Aufschwung," and "Novellette" in E. (Schumann), Romance—piano and flute, (F. E. Bache); Septet in E flat (Op. 20), (Beethoven).

Dr Heap's quintet was admirably played, says the Birmingham Post, and received quite an enthusiastic burst of applause at the conclusion. Brahms' Sonata was played by Mr T. M. Abbott and Dr Heap in a manner worthy of the piece. The three pieces by Schumann had the requisite care bestowed upon their performance by Dr Heap, and Mr Gregory with the help of Mr Stratton played the charming romance for pianoforte and flute, by one of the best remembered names in Birmingham, the late Mr F. E. Bache, with musicianly skill and encouraging success. The septet, which concluded the concert—one of the best Mr Stratton has yet given—was entrusted to Messrs Abbott, Griffin, Owen, Heath, Pountney, Probin, and Edwin, and was most ably interpreted.

WOLVERHAMPTON.—The third subscription concert of the Festival Choral Society was given in the Agricultural Hall on Wednesday evening, Feb. 8th. The principal singers were Miss Eva de Farbstein, Messrs J. D'Arcy Ferris and J. H. Blower. The instrumentalists were Mr T. M. Abbott (violin) and Herr Van Biene (violoncello), Messrs J. Anson (contra basso), H. Nicholson (flute), Dubrucq (oboe), A. Probin (horn), with Dr C. S. Heap as pianist and conductor. The Choral Society contributed glees, part-songs, &c., including Mendelssohn's setting of the 43rd Psalm, Pinsuti's "Stars of the Summer night" and the same composer's "Lullaby of Life," Dr Heap's "Who is Sylvia?" (composed for and dedicated to the Wolverhampton Choral Society), and other well-known compositions. Among the interesting pieces in the programme was a Gavotte and Courante, for the pianoforte, by Stephen Heller (Op. 115), played by Dr Heap. Mendelssohn's St Paul is announced to be given at the next concert on April 24th.

TAUNTON.—The committee of the Taunton Philharmonic Association were unfortunate in fixing the date of their first concert. Compelled to postpone it from last month, they selected the evening of all others when the borough election would be proceeding, and when the great Liberal meeting was held in the Castle Hall, they courageously determined to proceed, and were rewarded with what must, under the circumstances, be regarded as a very good house. The work selected was Macfarren's cantata, The Lady of the Lake, which had been carefully rehearsed under the able guidance of Mr T. J. Dudeney. Departing from the established rule, the committee decided this year to engage a professional artist to sing the principal soprano music, and in Miss Catherine Penna the audience found a lady qualified in every way to do justice to the principal character. She was well supported by members of the Philharmonic class, and the choral music was capitally rendered by a well-trained body of voices, under Mr Dudeney's bâton. Miss French, of Bath, took the part of Malcolm Græme (contralto), at short notice, and she acquitted herself, as usual, in a thoroughly competent manner. The other characters in the cantata were well sustained by members of the association. The concert was admitted on all hands to have been a gratifying musical success.

BRIGHTON.—At the Aquarium on Saturday afternoon last a new and original operetta was produced, entitled A Storm in a Tea-cup; or, The Art of Navigation, composed by Mr Frederick Corder, who is rapidly coming to the front as a composer. It may be remembered what success his Symphony in E flat met with at the last Norwich Musical Festival. The music in the operetta (the scene of which is laid on board a yacht) is bright and sparkling throughout, and was enthusiastically received—in fact, so much so, that the directors had it repeated in place of the opera set down for the evening's performance. The singers were Mdme Alice Barth as Lady Sylvia, Miss Kate Leipold as Maggie, Mr Faulkner Leigh as Ernest Gale, Mr Eric Lewis as the Steward, and Mr Theodore Distin as Harry Fairweather, owner of the Sea Gull. Mr Faulkner Leigh was very successful in the music assigned to him, being unanimously called upon to repeat a barcarolle in the second act. The piece was well mounted, and there was a good band conducted con amore by the composer. W. S.

DEATH OF SELIGMANN, THE VIOLONCELLIST.

Hippolyte Prosper Seligmann, highly reputed as violoncellist and composer for his instrument, died suddenly at Monte Carlo a short time since. Born at Paris, on the 28th July, 1817, he entered, when old enough, the Conservatory. Here he studied solfeggio under Alkan; the violoncello under Norblin; and composition under Halévy. After carrying off, in 1836, the prize for the violoncello, he began to play in public. He then undertook long professional tours in France, Italy, Spain, Belgium, Algeria, and Germany, being everywhere extremely successful. He also, at one period, obtained general acceptance as violoncellist at the concerts of the Musical Union. He wrote numerous compositions for the violoncello, various vocal pieces, and some criticisms. The body was transported to Paris and buried in the Jewish Cemetery at Montmartre.

MR GANZ'S ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS.—The prospectus of the forthcoming series of concerts to be given by Mr Ganz at St James's Hall has been issued. Mr Ganz promises us five of Beethoven's symphonies, besides compositions by Mozart, Schumann, Schubert, Spohr, Mendelssohn, as well as a repetition of Berlioz's Symphonie Fantastique, which, by the bye, was first presented to the English public at one of Mr Ganz's concerts. Liszt's Symphony, called after Dante's Divina Commedia (for orchestra and female chorus), will be given in England for the first time, as well as a new Symphony by Signor Sgambati, an Italian composer, pupil of Liszt. Mr Ganz also promises to give Gluck's Iphigenia in Tauris. Mr Pollitzer will lead the band, and Mr Ganz will, doubtless, secure the best available talent to perform the difficult works he has announced.

Stern's Vocal Association are studying Haydn's Seasons, which will be followed by a new choral work, Schwestertreue, from the pen of Arno Kleffel.

Digitized by Google

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

A meeting, preliminary to the large meeting to be held at St James's Palace on Tuesday next, the 28th inst., in connection with the proposed Royal College of Music, was held at Marlborough House yesterday afternoon, and was attended by the Lord Mayor and representatives of the Corporation of the principal City companies, on the invitation of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. The Prince of Wales was accompanied by his Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, K.G., Lord Charles Bruce, M.P., Sir Henry Thring, K.C.B., and Sir Philip Cunliffe Owen, K.C.M.C., C.B.

The Prince of Wales explained the object which he had in view with reference to the national movement for the advancement of musical education throughout the Empire, expressing a hope that he might have the support of the City of London and of the City guilds in the same manner as had been so generously afforded in the cause of technical education. After which the Lord Mayor and Sir Sydney Waterlow suggested a course of proceeding by which they had every reason to believe that the Corporation and City companies would take into favourable consideration the wishes of his Royal Highness in this matter, and without pledging themselves for the Corporation or for the City companies, they felt confident that his Royal Highness's appeal for support would receive special attention.

—o—

WAIFS.

Saint-Saëns has been playing in Berlin.

Aïda has just been performed for the first time in Riga.

Suppé's Doña Juanita will shortly be performed in Brussels.

A new Magyar musical paper, the Harmonia, has been started in Pesth.

Lecocq's last work, Le Jour et la Nuit, has been performed in Ghent.

A new Mass, by Cagnoni, has been performed at the Cathedral, Novara.

There is some talk of performing Boïto's Mefistofele at the Teatro Nuovo, Pisa.

Max Erdmannsdörfer, is appointed conductor of the Russian Concert Society, Moscow.

The Teatro Goldoni, Modena, was recently sold by auction for the modest sum of 4,500 lire.

Massenet is in Milan, superintending the rehearsals of his opera, L'Hérodiade, at the Scala.

Before appearing at the Milan Scala, Bianca Bianchi fulfils a short engagement at Turin.

Jules de Swert's opera, Die Albigenser, will be performed at Antwerp in March, for the first time in that city.

Pietro Milani, of Naples, is appointed director and first violin of the Quartet Society, Buenos Ayres.

The Italian operatic season in Moscow begins on the 28th inst., and terminates on the 18th March.

A grand organ, from the factory of Locatelli, Bergamo, has been erected in the new Synagogue, Florence.

Galli-Marié has been well-received as Mignon, in Thomas's opera of that name, at the Teatro Real, Madrid.

Wagner's Tannhäuser with a Russian version of the libretto, was produced on the 28th January in Moscow.

Popper, the violoncellist, was among the performers at the last Museum Concert, Frankfort-on-the Maine.

The Pagliano, Florence, re-opens in Lent. The first opera will be Bizet's Carmen, with Preziosi as the heroine.

Rokitansky, of the Imperial Operahouse, Vienna, has been appointed Imperial Austrian Chamber-Singer.

The foundation of the New York Chorus Society was inaugurated on the 28th ult. by a concert at Steinway Hall.

The girl violinist, Teresina Tua, will probably give some concerts in Buenos Ayres during the National Exhibition.

It is said that Faure, Capoul, Achard, and other French artists are heavy losers by the late financial crisis in France.

A fire broke out recently in Giuseppe Mola's pianoforte manufactory, Turin. The damage is estimated at 20,000 lire.

The Emperor Wilhelm has conferred on Herr Hubert Ries, Concertmeister, Berlin, the title of Royal Prussian Professor.

It is said that Gounod himself will conduct his Faust, interpreted by Albani, Faure, Maurel, and Gayarre, at Monte Carlo.

Another child phenomenon, Ilona Eibenschütz, a pianist not yet nine years of age, has appeared in the musical firmament.

Sophocles' Œdipus Tyrannus, with music by Professor Paine, of Harvard, has been performed at Booth's Theatre, New York.

It is in Bologna and not Milan, as erroneously stated by some papers, that Bottesini's new work, Babele, will first be produced.

Carl Albrecht, Inspector of the Moscow Conservatory, has been decorated by the Emperor of Russia with the Order of St Anne.

Under the title of La Guerra allegra, Johann Strauss's last buffo opera, Der lustige Krieg, is announced at the Teatro Fiorentini, Naples.

At Frankfort, Hamburgh, Brunswick, Bremen, and other large towns, Rheinthaler's Kätchen von Heilbronn has met with equal success.

Gomes, whose Guarany will be remembered at Covent Garden, has been to Parma, superintending the production of his opera, Salvator Rosa.

At the approaching centennial recurrence of the "Sicilian Vespers," Verdi's opera founded on that event will be performed at the Politeama, Palermo.

The regular five-months' season at the Vice-Regal Theatre, Cairo, having terminated, the manager, Larose, has taken the company for six weeks to Alexandria.

Clotilde and Adelaide Milanollo, violinists, and nieces of the celebrated Theresa Milanollo Parmentier, took part a short time since in a concert at Ghent.

Heinrich Hofmann's new opera, Wilhelm von Oranien, was performed for the first time at the Stadttheater, Hamburgh, on the 5th inst., with doubtful success.

At the express wish of Massenet, it is Moriamé (Italianized: Moriami), a Belgian artist, who will sustain the part of Herod in L'Hérodiade at the Milan Scala.

Meyerbeer's Etoile du Nord has, after a lapse of twelve years, been revived at the Operahouse, Frankfort-on-the-Maine. The performance was conducted by Herr Dessoff.

Dr Filippo Filippi, the well-known musical critic, will shortly visit Buenos Ayres, for the purpose of writing on musical matters connected with the National Exhibition.

A young American violinist, Master Benner, whose playing is said to be of "phenomenal merit" was to make his début at the New York Symphony Society's fourth concert.

The Duke of Meiningen has bestowed the Cross of the Order of Merit for Art and Science on Dr Angelo Förster and Herr Angelo Neumann, both of the Stadttheater, Leipsic.

An Italian operatic company, under the management of Ciampi, whilom of the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, will play in Odessa from the 27th February to the 12th May.

Der Landsknecht, a "cantata of songs" ("Liedercantata"), by W. Taubert, will be performed in Berlin, for the first time, on Monday next, the 27th inst., the chief executants being Lilli Lehmann, Betz, and the Royal Orchestra.

On being repeatedly re-called, after playing, in Vienna, in uninterrupted succession sixteen long pianoforte pieces by Brahms, Hans von Bülow addressed the audience as follows: Ladies and gentlemen, if you go on applauding, I will perform the last fugue again!" (Mirabolant!—Dr Blidge.)

Archdeacon Dunbar is to preach on "Society Papers" next Sunday evening at his church, St Barnabas, Ferndale Road, Brixton Station. On and after next Sunday (excepting the first twelve rows of sittings) the whole church is to be free and open. In the morning, Pergolesi's Stabat Mater will be sung (soprano, Miss Jessie Royd; contralto, Mdme Le Bretton), and in the evening, Rossini's Stabat Mater. Morning and evening, Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer" and Gregorio Allegri's Miserere (the Sistine Miserere—the 51st psalm in English) will be sung every Sunday in Lent. The Sistine Miserere is sung by four male voices, unaccompanied.

A Musical Cat.—On Sunday morning the service at St John's Church ran great risk of being seriously interrupted. At the opening voluntary some of the notes of the organ appeared to be out of tune, which the organist corrected by shutting off several stops, and the service proceeded without further interruption; but afterwards, on opening the organ to ascertain the cause, it was found a cat was quietly reposing between the trackers of the organ, and before it could be released some of the woodwork had to be unscrewed, and even then pussy seemed to resent being moved from her imprisonment, having been evidently soothed and not frightened by the music.—Southern Times.

Roskilde (near Copenhagen).—H. Mathison-Hansen celebrated on the 31st January the 50th anniversary of his appointment as organist at the Cathedral. Congratulations were forwarded on the occasion from the King, Queen and other members of the Royal family.

Pesaro.—Bazzini having declined the Directorship of the Liceo-Musicale, Rossini, the Municipality are said to have decided on electing either Lauro Rossi, Platania, or Bottesini. (Can there be a choice among the three?—Dr Blidge.)

Digitized by Google

The only Gold Medal for Wind Instruments with Keys, in the Paris Universal Exhibition of 1878, was unanimously awarded by the Jury to Messrs P. Goumas & Co., for the fine quality of tone and finish of their Instruments.

SPECIAL MANUFACTORY OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS
FOR
CLARIONETS, FLUTES, PICCOLOS, OBOES, BASSOONS, COR ANGLAIS, FLAGEOLETS, AND SAXOPHONES.

P. GOUMAS & Co.
(Late Buffet, Crampon & Co.),
Established 1830.

Nine Prize Medals have been awarded to Goumas & Co. for general excellence and improvements in the Manufacture of Wind Instruments with Keys.
Manufacturers of all kinds of Wood Wind Instruments for Military Bands, Musical Instrument Makers to Her Majesty's Army and Navy, and to the Armies, Navies, and Conservatoires of France, Belgium, Italy, Russia, Austria, Spain, America, &c.
Manufactory at Mantes (Seine et Oise), France. Paris: Passage du Grand Cerf, 18 et 20.
LONDON: 39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET.
Price Lists sent free on application.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,
MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF
ALL KINDS OF MUSIC STRINGS FOR ALL MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Sole Depôt for Signor Andrea Ruffini's (of Naples) Celebrated Strings for Soloists, manufactured by him on a system invented by Mons. J. B. Vuillaume, of Paris.
Sole Agent for Charles Albert's (of Philadelphia, U.S.) new Patent Improved Chin Rest; also his improved String Gauge.
39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, W.
Price Lists free on application.
All kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner on powerful machines made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE
(COLEMAN'S). A Delicious Beverage and Tonic.
Made from Port Wine, Liebig's Extract of Meat, and Extract of Malt; Nutritious, Strengthening, Stimulating, Flesh-forming, Health Restoring, suitable for the Robust in Health as well as the Invalid. Strongly recommended by the Medical Faculty. An Immediate Benefit is experienced after taking it; the Frame is Invigorated, and no ill effects follow.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Testimonials.

Sir,—A short time since I was induced by the novelty of the title to send for a bottle of your Liebig's Extract of Meat and Malt Wine. I was perfectly acquainted with the value of the Extractum Carnis, and not quite a stranger to the invigorating and fortifying properties of malt wine, and therefore felt a natural curiosity to test them when combined. Men who work hard, as I do, not muscular hard work, but that which is quite as exhausting, viz., brain work, very often experience the need of, and have sometimes an almost irresistible craving for, a "pick me up;" and very often the panacea for a time for lassitude, and that state of mind which renders work irksome, are alcoholic stimulants, the use of which must sooner or later end disastrously. The man who can furnish a remedy sure, certain, and harmless, for the lassitude which follows constant brain work is a benefactor of his species, and may be said to have added many years of usefulness to the lives of useful men. Your extract, if a success, and when more generally known, will be used by all toilers of the mind.—Yours faithfully,
O. D. RAY.
Thorpe Hamlet, Norwich, February 23rd, 1881.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Queen's Crescent, Haverstock Hill, London, March 5th, 1881.

Dear Sir,—Some time since, being greatly fatigued with over-work and long hours at business, my health (being naturally delicate) became very indifferent. I lost all energy, strength, and appetite, and was so weak as to be scarcely able to walk. As you are aware, I sent for a dozen of your Extract of Meat and Malt Wine, which, in a few days, pulled me up marvellously. Three or four glasses of it daily have quite altered and restored me to better health than ever, "without the assistance of a doctor." I am now giving it to my son, twelve years of age, whom we have always thought consumptive, and from a puny, ailing boy, he seems to be fast growing into a strong, healthy lad. Enclosed you have cheque. Please send me two dozen of the "Extract." With thanks for your prompt attention to my last, I am, Sir, yours truly,
GEORGE A. TYLER.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Granspound, February 25th, 1881.

Mrs Coulson thanks Mr Coleman for the book and stamps, and she has no doubt but that "the tonic" is a good one. Mrs C. encloses twelve stamps for basket.
Mr Coleman.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Vicarage, Kingsbridge, Devon, January 25th, 1881.

Dear Sir,—We are ten miles from the railway, and have been snowed up, consequently the wine has only just arrived. I enclose a cheque for £2 11s. 6d. I like the wine, and will recommend it.—Yours faithfully,
A. N. KINGSTON.
Mr Coleman, Norwich.

Pints, 30s. per dozen: Quarts, 50s. per dozen. Carriage paid to any Railway Station in Great Britain. Sample Bottle sent for 33 stamps.
P. O. Orders to be made payable to
COLEMAN & CO., MUSPOLE STREET, NORWICH.
Cheques crossed "London and Provincial Bank."
Sold by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the United Kingdom, in Bottles, 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. each. Ask for Coleman's Liebig's Extract of Meat and Malt Wine, and "See that you get it."

CHAPPELL'S
VOCAL LIBRARY
OF
PART-SONGS, &c.

		Composed or Arranged by	Price
1.	Dulce Domum. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
2.	Down among the Dead Men. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
3.	The Girl I've left behind me. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
4.	British Grenadiers. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
5.	Long live England's Future Queen. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
6.	My task is ended (Song and Chorus). A.T.B.B.	... Balfe	4d.
7.	Thus spake one Summer's Day. S.A.T.B.	... Abt	2d.
8.	Soldiers' Chorus. T.T.B.B.	... Gounod	4d.
9.	The Kermesse (Scene from Faust)	,,	6d.
10.	Up, quit thy bower. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	4d.
11.	Maidens, never go a-wooing. S.S.T.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
12.	Fagot Binders' Chorus	Gounod	4d.
13.	Sylvan Hours (for Six Female Voices)	Joseph Robinson	6d.
14.	The Gipsy Chorus	... Balfe	4d.
15.	Ave Maria	Arcadelt	1d.
16.	Hark! the Herald Angels sing. S.A.T.B.	Mendelssohn	1d.
17.	England Yet (Solo and Chorus). S.A.T.B.	Jules Benedict	2d.
18.	The Shepherd's Sabbath Day. S.A.T.B.	J. L. Hatton	2d.
19.	Thoughts of Childhood. S.A.T.B.	Henry Smart	2d.
20.	Spring's Return. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
21.	An old Church Song. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
22.	Sabbath Bells. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
23.	Serenade. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
24.	Cold Autumn Wind. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
25.	Orpheus with his Lute. S.S.S.	Bennett Gilbert	2d.
26.	Lullaby. S.A.A.	,,	1d.
27.	This is my own, my native land. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
28.	March of the Men of Harlech. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
29.	God save the Queen. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
30.	Rule, Britannia. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
31.	The Retreat. T.T.B.B.	L. de Rille	2d.
32.	Lo! morn is breaking. S.S.S.	Cherubini	2d.
33.	We are Spirits. S.S.S.	G. A. Macfarren	4d.
34.	Market Chorus (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	Auber	4d.
35.	The Prayer (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
36.	The Water Sprites. S.A.T.B.	Kücken	2d.
37.	Eve's glittering Star. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
38.	When first the Primrose. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
39.	O Dewdrop bright. S.A.T.B	,,	1d.
40.	Sanctus from the Messe Solennelle. S.A.T.B.	Rossini	4d.
41.	Nine Kyries, Ancient and Modern	,,	2d.
42.	Sun of my soul. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	2d.
43.	'Twas fancy, and the ocean's spray. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
44.	A Prayer for those at Sea. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
45.	O Thou whose power (Prayer from Mose in Egitto)	Rossini	2d.
46.	The Guard on the Rhine. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
47.	The German Fatherland. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
48.	The Lord is my Shepherd (Quartet). S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
49.	Te Deum in F	Jackson	2d.
50.	Te Deum in F	Nares	2d.
51.	Charity (La Carita). S.S.S.	Rossini	4d.
52.	Cordelia. A.T.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	4d.
53.	I know. S.A.T.B.	Walter Hay	2d.
54.	Chorus of Handmaidens (from Fridolin)	Randegger	4d.
55.	The Offertory Sentences	Edmund Rogers	4d.
56.	The Red Cross Knight	Dr. Callcott	2d.
57.	The Chough and the Crow	Sir H. R. Bishop	3d.
58.	The "Carnovale"	Rossini	2d.
59.	Softly falls the moonlight	Edmund Rogers	4d.
60.	Air by Himmel	Henry Leslie	2d.
61.	Offertory Sentences	E. Sauerbrey	4d.
62.	The Resurrection	C. Villiers Stanford	6d.
63.	Our Boys (new Patriotic Song) H. J. Byron and W. M. Lutz		4d.
64.	The Men of Wales	Brinley Richards	2d.
65.	Dame Durden		1d.
66.	A little Farm well tilled	Hook	1d.
67.	There was a simple maiden	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
68.	Fair Hebe	,,	1d.
69.	Once I loved a maiden fair	,,	1d.
70.	The jovial man of Kent	,,	1d.
71.	The oak and the ash	,,	1d.
72.	Heart of Oak	,,	1d.
73.	Come to the sunset tree	W. A. Philpott	4d.
74.	May. S.A.T.B.	W. F. Banks	2d.
75.	Pure, lovely innocence (Il Roi de Lahore—Chorus for Female Voices)	G. Massenet	4d.
76.	A Love Idyl. S.A.T.B.	E. R. Terry	2d.
77.	Hail to the Woods! A.T.T.B.	J. Yarwood	2d.
78.	Near the town of Taunton Dean	Thomas J. Dudeney	2d.
79.	Our merry boys at sea	J. Yarwood	2d.
80.	The Shepherd's Farewell. S.A.T.B.	Berlioz	3d.
81.	When the sun sets o'er the mountains (Il Demonio)	A. Rubinstein	3d.
82.	Hymn of Nature	Beethoven	3d.
83.	Michaelmas Day (Humorous Part Songs, No. 1)	Walter Maynard	4d.
84.	Sporting Notes (Humorous Part Songs, No. 2)	Walter Maynard	4d.
85.	Austrian National Hymn	Haydn	4d.

LONDON:
CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND STREET, W.
City Branch—14 & 15, Poultry.

Digitized by Google

SYDNEY SMITH'S
FOUR NEW PIECES.

SPERANZA.

ANDANTE ESPRESSIVO.

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

NONCHALANCE.

CAPRICE DE CONCERT.

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

I PIFFERARI.

MUSETTE MODERNE.

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

NABUCO.

GRAND FANTASIA ON THE OPERA OF VERDI.

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

SYDNEY SMITH'S NEW PIANO DUETS.

		s.	d.
SEMIRAMIDE.	Fantasia on Rossini's Opera	6	0
ROSE LEAVES.	Morceau Élégant	5	0
BACCHANALE		5	0
LE RETOUR DE L'ARMÉE.	Morceau Militaire	5	0

LONDON: ASHDOWN & PARRY, HANOVER SQUARE.

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, & SPALDING, at 3 and 5, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, February 25, 1882.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 60.—No. 9. SATURDAY, MARCH 4, 1882. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.
LAST WEEK.

MONDAY, March 6, Only Evening Performance of WAGNER'S "RIENZI." TUESDAY, March 7, Last Time of "CARMEN." WEDNESDAY, March 8, "TANNHÄUSER." THURSDAY, March 9, Last Time of BALFE'S "BOHEMIAN GIRL." FRIDAY, March 10, Last Time of "TANNHÄUSER." SATURDAY Morning, March 11, at Two, Last Matinée, "FAUST;" Evening, at Eight, Final Performance "FLYING DUTCHMAN."

POPULAR PRICES.

For full Particulars see Daily Papers. Box Office open Daily from 10 till 5.

CRYSTAL PALACE SATURDAY CONCERT, THIS DAY,
March 4th, at Three. The programme will include Symphony, in D, "Reformation" (Mendelssohn); Concerto for Pianoforte and Orchestra, in C sharp minor (F. Ries), first time at these Concerts; "Siegfried Idyll" (Wagner). Vocalist—Signor Foli. Solo Pianist—Miss Marie Krebs. Conductor—Mr AUGUST MANNS. Seats, 2s. 6d., 1s. 6d., 1s., and 6d.

WEDNESDAY NEXT.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERT.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERT, ST JAMES'S HALL, WEDNESDAY next, at Eight.
Artists: Mdme Marie Roze and Miss Mary Davies, Mdme Antoinette Sterling and Miss Damian; Mr Edward Lloyd and Mr Santley, Mr F. Barrington Foote and Mr Maybrick. The South London Choral Association of sixty voices, under the direction of Mr L. C. Venables. A Selection of Songs by Dr ARTHUR SULLIVAN will be given. Conductor—Mr SIDNEY NAYLOR. The programme will include the following: "Let me dream again," "Softly sighs the voice of evening," and "Pretty Mocking Bird" (Mdme Marie Roze); "Birds in the Night," "Orpheus with his Lute," and "Uncle John" (Miss Mary Davies); "The Chorister," "The Willow Song," and "Caller Herrin'" (Mdme Antoinette Sterling): "Golden Days" and "Sleep, my Love" (Miss Damian); "Once Again," "Distant Shore," and "The Anchor's Weighed" (Mr Edward Lloyd); "A weary lot is thine," "O ma charmante," and "The Boatswain's Story" (Mr Santley); "The Little Hero" (Mr Maybrick); "If Doughty Deeds," and "Leaving, yet Loving" (Mr F. Barrington Foote). Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Family Tickets (to admit Six to Stalls), £2; Area, 4s. and 2s.; Balcony, 3s.; Gallery and Orchestra, 1s.; to be had at Austin's, St James's Hall; the usual Agents; and of Boosey & Co., 295, Regent Street.

WALTER MACFARREN'S ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS,
ST JAMES'S HALL.—SECOND CONCERT, SATURDAY Evening, March 11. Conductor—Mr WALTER MACFARREN. Beethoven's Overture to Leonora (No. 3); Mendelssohn's Overture, Scherzo, Notturno, and Wedding March, A Midsummer Night's Dream; and Walter Macfarren's New Symphony in B flat; Piatti's Fantasia Romantica—Violoncello, Signor Piatti; Sterndale Bennett's Concerto, in C minor—Pianoforte, Mr Charlton T. Speer. Tickets at popular prices, 3s., 1s., and 7s. 6d.,

BONAWITZ'S GRAND EVENING CONCERT, ST JAMES'S
HALL, on TUESDAY next, March 7th, at Eight o'clock, in aid of the Princess Frederica's Convalescent Home. "REQUIEM" (BONAWITZ), conducted by the Composer, and Miscellaneous Programme. Tickets at Mr Austin's Ticket Office, Chappell's, Mitchell's, &c.

TO CONCERT GIVERS, &c.

THE LONDON ART GALLERIES, 23, BAKER STREET,
W.—These Galleries are available in the Evenings for High-Class Chamber Concerts, Rehearsals, Readings, &c., for which their acoustic properties are eminently suited. For terms address—ADAM F. HARDY, Secretary, as above.

LONDON CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.—
Principal—Mr LANSDOWNE COTTELL.

The Directors invite attention to the recent extension and increased accommodation, residential and otherwise.

Fees from Two Guineas per term, residential from Fourteen Guineas, inclusive of the Musical and Fine Art Lectures.

Free Tuition is awarded to talented young artists unable to pay fees by fund granted for this purpose.

Prospectus (one stamp), Hon. Sec., 6, Tavistock Square.

SCHUBERT SOCIETY. President—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT.
Founder and Director—Herr SCHUBERTH. Sixteenth Season, 1882. Members are informed that the arrangements for March are as follows, viz.:—The 103rd and 104th Soirées Musicales on Wednesdays, 15th and 29th March, due notice of which will be given. The Second Concert (70th since formation of Society—Schumann's Compositions in first part of programme), will take place at the Langham Hall, on Wednesday, 19th April. Ladies and Gentlemen desirous of joining the Society may have prospectus and full particulars on application to H. G. HOPPER, Hon. Sec., 214, Regent Street, W.

MR and Mdme BODDA'S (Miss LOUISA PYNE) ACADEMY
FOR SINGING, Operatic and Miscellaneous. "BONALLY," 85 and 87, Cambridge Gardens, Notting Hill. Professional and Amateur. In and Out-Door Students. Studies—Singing (Private Lessons), Elocution, Piano, Deportment, Choral Practice, Italian. Prospectuses as above, or Mr STEDMAN, 12, Berners Street.

MISS ADELAIDE ARNOLD
PROFESSOR OF THE HARP,
34, CANONBURY SQUARE, N.

MR FREDERIC PENNA (ten years Solo Bass at High Mass at the Oratory) can now accept ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, &c. For terms address—Mr PENNA, at 44, Westbourne Park Road, W.

LESSONS WANTED on mutual terms, by Baritone
Vocalist, compass low E to G, good Reader, and accustomed to Concert-Singing and Playing. Would accept Engagements at once if required. Address—"BARITONE," care of Mr Horton, 48, Smith Street, Mile End, E.

ORGANIST WANTED, who will also act as CHOIR-
MASTER, for the Baptist Chapel, West Street, Rochdale. Salary £30. Instrument new, three Manuals, thirty-nine Stops.—Applications, with testimonials, to be sent in not later than March 11th to Mr RICHARD WATSON, Thrum Hall, Rochdale, ORGAN FOR SALE.—Built by Messrs BRYCESON, in 1867.

Dimensions: 37 feet high, 25 feet wide, 16 feet deep. Has four complete Manuals, compass CC to A, 58 notes, viz., Solo, Swell, Choir, and Great Organs; independent Pedal Organ, CCC to F, the largest pipe being CCCC, 32 ft. May be seen at the Grand Concert Hall, Brighton. Apply for further particulars to Messrs HALSE, TRUSTRAM & Co., Solicitors, 61, Cheapside, E.C.; and 17, Old Burlington Street, W.

THE PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, AND KNIGHTAGE
OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE for 1882. By JOSEPH FOSTER.

Early in January. In one or two volumes, royal 8vo, cloth gilt, price 42s. The Peerage or Baronetage separate, each 21s.

The THIRD EDITION, for 1882, containing all new Creations, has been considerably enlarged, and carefully corrected throughout. It is illustrated by upwards of 1,400 Engravings of Arms, &c., and contains fuller pedigrees than any other work.

Westminster: NICHOLS & SONS, 25, Parliament Street.
CHAPMAN & HALL, Limited, 11, Henrietta Street, W.C.

PARIS UNIVERSAL EXHIBITION, 1878, CLASS XIII.
Gold and Silver Medals, Paris, 1878. Gold Medal, Paris, 1879.
Gold Medal, Rome, 1880, and two Diplomas.

ARTISTIC HOUSE,
PARIS—10, RUE DU FAUBOURG-POISSONNIÈRE, 10—PARIS.

CH. J. B. COLLIN-MÉZIN,
Stringed Instrument Maker.

The celebrated VIOLINS and VIOLONCELLOS for SOLOISTS, which, since the adoption of the new system, are the only approved, recommended and played by the greatest Masters; among others, Messrs Sivori, Marsik, Hollmann, Léonard, Armingaud, Miss Marie Tayau, &c., &c.; Messrs Massart, Sauzay, Dancla, Franchomme, Maurin, Chevillard, Jacquard, &c., Professors at the Conservatoire of Music, Paris.

PRICES:—
Violin, £12; Tenor, £14; Violoncello, £20.
BOW in Pernambuco, Silver Mounted, first class, £1 4s.; Collin-Mézin, £1 12s.
Catalogues and Testimonials post free on application.

Digitized by Google

THE STUDENT'S DREAM.

PRELUDE FOR THE PIANOFORTE AND HARMONIUM, OR ORGAN.

Composed by

G. GARIBOLDI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

POLKA ET VALSE.

POUR LE PIANOFORTE.

No. 1. FOLICHONNE POLKA ... ... Price 4s.
No. 2. SOUVENIR DE JEUNESSE VALSE ... ... Price 4s.

Composées par

BENTAYOUX.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"PARADISE LOST." An Oratorio. Composed by ANTON RUBINSTEIN, on the Poem of MILTON. The English version of the words by JOSIAH PITTMAN. Paris: GÉRARD, 2, Rue Scribe.

"KILLARNEY."

MISS BEATA FRANCIS will sing BALFE'S popular Song, "KILLARNEY," at Mr Hayes' Benefit at Drury Lane Theatre, Tuesday Afternoon, March 14.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR GEORGE COX will sing ASCHER'S popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" at Mr Wm. Carter's Concert at the Albert Hall, on March 1st.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR ARTHUR HOOPER will sing (by desire) ASCHER'S popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" on March 6th, at Mr John Cheshire's Concert at Hammersmith.

"THE PRISONER'S LAST SONG."

MISS ALLITSEN will sing "THE PRISONER'S LAST SONG" (by J. P. GOLDBERG), at Miss Agabeg's Concert, Steinway Hall, March 14th.

PLAYED BY MDLLE KREBS.

LISZT'S "TARANTELLE DE LA MUETTE DE PORTICI" ("MASANIELLO"). 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"TANNHÄUSER."

"O THOU MOST LOVELY EVENING STAR."

LISZT'S TRANSCRIPTION of "L'ETOILE DU SOIR" ("O THOU MOST LOVELY EVENING STAR"—"ABENDSTERN"). 3s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NEW SONG BY J. L. HATTON.

THE GOOD SHIP ROVER. Words by JOHN STEWART. Music by J. L. HATTON. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

THE BETTER WORLD.

Words by Mrs. M. A. BAINES.

Music by

MICHAEL BERGSON.

Composed expressly for and sung by Mdme MARIE ROZE; sung also by Miss JESSICA O'BRIEN.

Price 4s.

London: STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

Just Published.

L'AMANTE.

VALZER, PER VOCE DI MEZZO-SOPRANO.

Musica di

G. MURATORI

(The English Version of the words by MARIA X. HAYES).

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

THE LOVERS' WALTZ

(L'AMANTE).

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By

G. MURATORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

THE VOICE AND SINGING.

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

VOCAL EXERCISES COMPOSED BY FRANK MORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by the late FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

New Edition of "LE PETIT SOLFEGE."

LE PETIT SOLFEGE. Vingt Solfèges pour Voix de Messo-Soprano. Par Jos. CURCI. Price 6s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

"This work for educational purposes will be found of inestimable value, since it is one of the very few which confines itself to the cultivation of the middle of the voice; and whilst the phrases are admirably adapted to develop the breathing powers and volume of the voice, the melodies are so exquisitely harmonized that they must prove of great benefit in the improvement of the taste and ear of a student in singing."—Pictorial World.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE.

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdme Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklein, and other successful Vocalists.

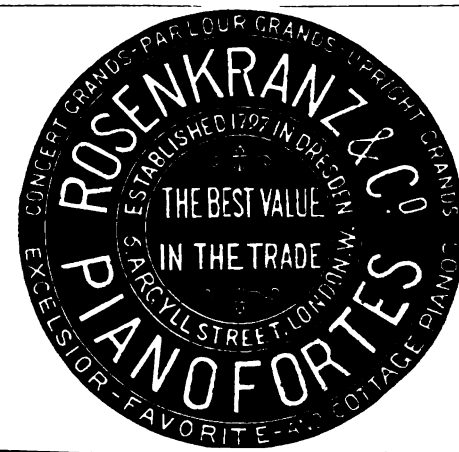
Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis, of Basingstoke, says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.) they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.



ROSENKRANZ & CO
ESTABLISHED 1797 IN DRESDEN
THE BEST VALUE
IN THE TRADE
ARGYLL STREET, LONDON, W.
PIANOFORTES
CONCERT GRANDS · PARLOUR GRANDS · UPRIGHT GRANDS
EXCELSIOR · FAVORITE · COTTAGE PIANOS

LA POMPA DI FESTA. Grande Marche, pour Piano, à Quatre Mains. Par IGNACE GIBSONE. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"HER VOICE."

"HER VOICE." IGNACE GIBSONE'S popular Song (poetry by "A Soldier's Daughter"), sung by Mdme ENRIQUEZ, is published, price 4s., by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NEW VOCAL QUARTET.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" Arranged for Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, and Bass by G. B. ALLEN. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

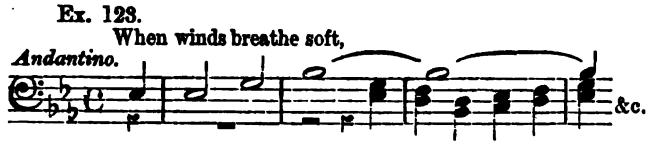
FORM, OR DESIGN, IN VOCAL MUSIC.

The Glee.

(Continued from page 70.)

In Webbe's "When winds breathe soft," the voices enter separately with imitative passages:

Ex. 123.



The first short movement is all in E flat. The second modulates:

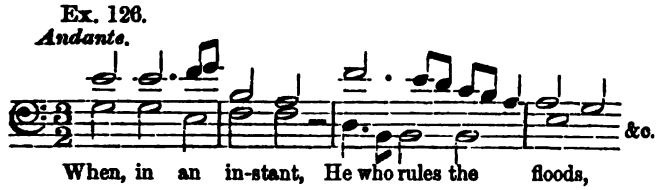
Ex. 124.

but settles down in B flat with a close:

Ex. 125.

forming a sort of second subject and half-way rest. From thence it modulates further away, as in a second part, and returns to E flat. A half close in that key leads into the third movement in the same:

Ex. 126.



which ends with a full close. Up to this point the grouping of the movements resembles the first movement of a sonata. A fourth movement follows entirely in B flat:

Ex. 127.

the full close of which leads naturally into the final movement in E flat, B flat being its dominant.

Ex. 128.

This last movement is complete in itself, with tonic and dominant strains, with return to the main key and with coda, in which is an allusion to the subdominant key. The constant returns to the main key hold together this glee as a group of movements in one design.

Bishop's use of the glee restored one of the characteristics of the original glee of Playford's time, though it was enlarged in its application. Writing as he did for the stage he had a band at his command, and he, doubtless, found the advantage of the additional variety of accompaniments and interludes which he put to most of his glees. These were, most likely unknown to himself, an enlargement of the independent bass part of elder times, written for the lute, and to be filled up, as was the custom for many years, by the skill of the performer. The dialogue form of Bishop's glees was the natural outcome of the stage use; for the music was to be sung by the characters and the words were taken from the situation in the drama.

Bishop's glee, "Blow, gentle gales," from the opera of The Slave, is a single movement with accompaniment throughout, and with the keys arranged in a simple rondo form; it has principal subject, episode in the key of the dominant, return to principal key, and coda. The words and music are continuous. A short instrumental symphony introduces the soprano voice with the first subject:

Ex. 129.

This coming to a close the same melody is harmonized for the whole quintett. For the episode short broken phrases of question and answer are given, and returned between different voices in solo, duet, and quartet:

Ex. 130.

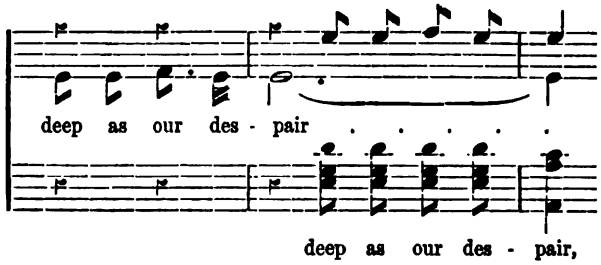
The return of the principal key brings more continuous thoughts both of words and music:

Digitized by Google

Ex. 131.

In the coda is an effect which is always beautiful; the alto holds a note while the rest of the voices sing a passage, which in this case is an imitation of the previous notes of the alto:

Ex. 132.



OLIVERIA PRESCOTT.

(To be continued.)

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The novelty at the concert given in St. James's Hall on Thursday evening, February 23, was Hungaria, one of Liszt's so-called "symphonic poems," ninth of the twelve which the great pianoforte virtuoso has been good enough to write. We are almost compelled to take a comic view of this piece, and the circumstances attending it. For example, it was an act of waggery on Liszt's part to throw such a tone-riddle to the world with no more of key to its solution than a proper name in geography. He must have done so with his tongue in his cheek, or with a wink of the eye to some boon companion of the old Weimar days, since he could not be ignorant of a fact pointed out by the ingenious and anonymous annotator of the Philharmonic programme—namely, that in presence of a symphonic poem there is a "craving of the human mind" to know what it is all about. Liszt has frequently condescended to gratify this very natural desire. But with Hungaria he preferred his little joke. Perhaps he wished to amuse himself with the vain efforts of his admirers in their agony of interpretation, or wanted a conspicuous proof of the impotence of music to convey a definite pictorial idea. Whatever the fact, Hungaria came out as a puzzle, and a puzzle it was thought to remain, till a wonderful chance revealed what we are asked to accept as a "semi-official" solution. Mr C. A. Barry, it appears, was providentially led to rescue from the limbo of waste-paper a stray copy of a German periodical called Anregungen, and printed thereon he found—oh, joy!—an analysis of Hungaria by Herr Dräseke, a friend and admirer of the composer. We are not told whether Mr Barry cried "Eureka!" and sacrificed beeves. Most likely not, because Liszt is, happily, living, and his generous heart would hardly steel itself against consuming anxiety to know his meaning at less cost. The analysis was a true "find" all the same, and from it we learn that the work represents a sad and solemn Hungarian prairie, over which storms a band of Magyars, fighting for their country, and coming out of the conflict victorious. We are not, however, bound to this interpretation, "semi-official" though it be. Rather does the Philharmonic annotator encourage us to imagine one for ourselves, and no doubt some of the audience took the hint, ranging from nation-shaking battles to a menagerie at feeding time, with all the beasts terribly hungry. We give our vote for the menagerie. Does this strike the reader, innocent of the ways of Liszt, as a harsh judgment. Then we urge in justification the fact that even the authorised spokesman of the Philharmonic Society—which thought the piece worth a lot of trouble—owns his unwillingness to "defend, or even explain, some of the harmonic combinations before a grave assembly of professors of the classical school." This is one way of stating what we choose to express in plainer terms. Hungaria is simply a flagrant offence, not only against the canons of art, but the most elementary notions of what constitutes the beautiful—we will go so far as to say the permissible—in music. Is the whole thing a joke? Dealing with Hungarian melodies and rhythms, Liszt must have strained his energies to avoid some kind of attractive result, and could only have done so of set purpose. Be this as it may, while the orchestra writhed and groaned and shrieked on Thursday night, while brass blared, drums thundered, cymbals clashed, and the tam-tam threw into this worse than witch's cauldron a spice of genuine barbarism, it was easy to see the composer making fun of his very respectable and astonished audience. The programme annotator anticipated this, and entered into the humour of the thing with spirit. That is to say, he appealed from the very respectable and astonished audience to the verdict of a Hungarian gipsy fiddler. Here is another Daniel come to judgment! We are all supposed to exist with the consciousness that the eyes of an "intelligent foreigner" are upon us, while some who look very far into the future are in dread of Macaulay's New Zealander. But the Hungarian gipsy fiddler is a novelty. Of course he is a joke as well; nevertheless such a reductio ad absurdum often does good. By all means then let us adopt the Hungarian gipsy fiddler, and learn to like what he likes. In such manner did Society act towards the yokel married by the titled heroine of one of Mr Gilbert's Bab Ballads, and it brought into fashion a primitive taste for smock-frocks and hob-nailed boots. Between the two cases, however, there is a difference. The yokel turned out to be the son of a lord, and, as no efforts could "keep the dreadful secret from the public and the press," Society was disenchanted; whereas our musical glass of fashion and mould of form, being a genuine article, will remain a gipsy fiddler to the end of the chapter. The performance of Liszt's extraordinary composition showed that very great pains had been taken in rehearsal. This was right, and we are not disposed to find fault with the Philharmonic Society for producing the work. According to Pope, there are things "that to be hated need but to be seen." We have now looked on Hungaria, and, as remarked the Rev. Rowland Hill, when met coming out of a theatre, we "know what and why to condemn." Nevertheless, it is hard to keep down regret that the skill of a fine orchestra has been wasted on a subject so utterly unworthy.

The other purely orchestral compositions in the programme were Beethoven's Leonora overture and Mozart's Jupiter symphony, as to which there was no need to ask, "What is it all about?" A better performance of the symphony than that actually given might have been expected; but it is easy to suppose that Liszt, not Mozart, had the lion's share of rehearsal. The concerto was Schumann's for the pianoforte, played in brilliant, if somewhat exaggerated style by Herr Xaver Scharwenka, who also introduced short solos by Mendelssohn, Chopin, and himself. Herr Scharwenka was cordially welcomed and much applauded. The vocalists were Mdme Marie Roze and Mdme Trebelli, who made their mark respectively in Gluck's fine air, "Divinités du Stix" and Mozart's "Voi che sapete." Mr Cusins, who conducted throughout, deserved large and special credit for the admirable rendering of Hungaria.—D. T.

MISS STEPHENS.

The funeral of the late Dowager Countess of Essex (formerly the celebrated vocalist, Miss Stephens), who died on Ash-Wednesday, took place in the Catacombs, at Kensal Green Cemetery, on Tuesday, February 28th. The relatives who followed were her nephews, Mr Charles V. Stephens, formerly of the Bank of England; Messrs Samuel J. and Charles E. Stephens, both members of the profession in which the deceased was so distinguished; and Miss Johnstone, her orphan niece and life-long companion. The other mourners were the present Earl of Essex, and his son, the Hon. Reginald Capel; Lady Malden, and Mrs Ford, of the Essex family; Sir Francis and Lady Seymour; the Hon. Granville Lennox Berkeley; Sir Reginald Barnswell; Mr Cockerell; Mr Augustus Stephens (not a relative); Mr. Hassard, the Countess's solicitor; and the whole retinue of her servants. The carriages of the Baroness Burdett Coutts, the Countess of Arran, Mr Harvey Drummond, &c., completed the cortége, testifying to the wide-spread esteem in which the deceased lady was held.

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE.—The Fifty-ninth Musical Festival of the Lower Rhine will be held here on the 28th, 29th, and 30th May. Dr Franz Wüllner, Royal Saxon Chapelmaster, of Dresden, has undertaken the direction. The works selected for the first two days are: Symphony in G minor, Mozart; Joshua, oratorio, Handel; "Sanctus" and "Ojanna," from Mass in B minor, J. S. Bach; scenes from the opera of Armida, Gluck; the Erste Walpurgisnacht, Mendelssohn; and the Ninth Symphony, Beethoven.

Digitized by Google

LISZT'S "HUNGARIA."

(From the "Daily News.")

The specialty of this selection (in point of novelty, not of value) was the orchestral piece by Liszt, one of a set of twelve movements, under the general heading of Symphonische Dichtungen; each intended to illustrate poetical or dramatic subjects, some of them drawn from Victor Hugo, Lamartine, and Shakspere. Most of these have been given at London concerts, but that produced on Thursday was now heard for the first time. As we have commented on all that had hitherto been performed here, and as each is distinguished by similar characteristics, however different the implied character of the pieces, but little need be said about Hungaria. Like the others, it displays a violent struggle to be original and impressive by alternations of eccentric frenzy and maudling sentiment, with an utter disregard of musical form or coherent thought, its best passages being the few reflecting closely that distinctive nationality of rhythm which gives piquant individuality to Hungarian music. In these—the Quasi andante marziale, and especially the final Presto giocoso assai—there is much appropriate character; but the boisterous march and the involved maundering which follows it (forming a large proportion of the whole work) leave no other impressions than those of senseless noise and incoherent mutterings. The use (or rather abuse) of strong orchestral effects, with sudden and violent contrasts (in which respect Liszt is a copyist of Berlioz at his worst), may serve to dazzle many into the belief that such music deserves to be regarded as composition, whereas, intrinsically, it is really but very commonplace manufacture, and can only be otherwise recognized when all the music of the great masters of the past shall be ignored. One good purpose will be served by the excessive reproduction of the works of Berlioz and Liszt which has lately taken place here—it will enhance, through comparison, the appreciation of what is good and true in musical art by those who need such teaching, and are capable of distinguishing what is real from what is false.

—o—

THE REGENCY CLUB CONCERT.

When the rise and fall of the London clubs of the nineteenth century shall be written by some future historian, the formation and growth of the Regency Club will certainly not be left unrecorded. For a long time the want of a club, where music should be the leading characteristic and chief rallying point, had been felt. Whilst nearly every other branch of society had its meeting place, so that the habits and inclinations of most men could find congenial quarters, yet still in all the town there was no established home for the musician, no ark whereunto he could carry his particular olive branch. To meet the need, some few professors and lovers of the art, notably Messrs Maybrick, Lloyd, and Santley, set earnestly to work, in 1880, to start the "Regency" in Saville Row. The appeal made by them, to friends and acquaintances, was eagerly responded to, and in a few weeks the success of the enterprise was placed beyond doubt; and before many months had elapsed it was found that the rooms were not large enough to accommodate the increasing number of the members. The house was too crampt for comfort, so like a young and lusty northern race, they began to look about for some neighbour's place, and soon stumbled upon a "sick man," and without much ado took possession of him "bag and baggage." In other words, the "Westminster," an old and respected club, was at the point of dissolution, when the committee of the "Regency" stept in and took the premises in Albemarle Street, and incorporated into their society members of the elder body qualified and desirous of keeping to the old quarters. At the present moment the "Regency" has 430 members, with the names of fifty gentlemen down for election. The president is Mr Tom Chappell; the vice-presidents Mr C. Santley and Mr Henry Irving. Mr Maybrick is chairman of the committee; Mr Cunningham Bridgman, secretary; and Mr Preston, proprietor. The large addition of members may, perhaps, give rise to fear that the prime element, music, will eventually become swamped by other influences—like city companies that no longer represent the original trades. But for the present there need be no cause for alarm, for whilst musicians such as Maybrick, Lloyd, Santley, Boyle, Abercrombie, Parker, Walker, Bache, and W. Henry Thomas are strong and active, the art they represent will not slumber. The first musical evening, at their new quarters in Albemarle Street, was given on Thursday, Feb. 23rd, and a better start could scarcely be desired. About 200 members attended, and "for this occasion only" appeared in evening dress. The rooms were illuminated by the "British Electric Light," under the superintendence of Professor Forbes. The brilliancy of this advanced method of using electricity was much enjoyed, and the coolness attending it gave unwonted charms to the occupations of burning tobacco, whilst listening in a crowded room to music. It was pathetic to see the old gas jets slighted, like an old singer or discarded love, for a newcomer. There can be no doubt that Professor Forbes' arrangement will be one of the most popular methods adopted at theatres, concert-rooms and club-houses. Little need be said concerning the music of the opening smoking concert, for the artist-members who performed are so well known and appreciated by the general public. It will be taken for granted that Mr Lloyd charmed every one present; that Mr Santley's songs of Irish priest and English parson provoked hilarity; and that Mr Boyle secured unanimous favour. It should, however, not be forgotten that the visitors, MM. Musin and Bisaccia, rendered delightful service by solos on the violin and pianoforte. Signor Ghilberti and Mr Sidney Naylor also assisted, and the popular actors Messrs Odell and Fernandez favoured the company with recitations. During the evening there were repeated calls for Mr Maybrick, but it was sometime before he could oblige, for he had the important duties of Chairman of the meeting upon his shoulders. Eventually he sang his own song "The little hero," which was thought somewhat appropriate, for there could be no doubt but that he was the hero of the evening. So much was this felt that the acrostic, quoted below, was written by the secretary and poet to the establishment, in his honour.

PENCERDD GWYFYN.

AN ACROSTIC.

Addressed to Members of the Regency Club, Thursday, 23rd February, 1882.

M ay I, your humble instrument and pen,
I ntent on rend'ring thanks where thanks are due,
C anvass the suffrage of all grateful men
H aving the welfare of our Club in view,
A nd ask you now to fill and drink with me,
E ach one and all in good sincerity,
L ong live the father of famed "Nancy Lee."

M ay Michael Maybrick, Chairman of our choice,
A nd friend of all who need a friend sincere,
Y et many years, with noble heart and voice,
B e spared to lead our merry meetings here.
R ich are the virtues which in him we find;
I n judgment wise, in conversation witty,
C andid with all, and yet with candour kind,
K ing of good chaps, and Chairman of Committee.

CUNNINGHAM BRIDGMAN,
Secretary.

—o—

MUSIC AT BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The first "Soirée Intime" of the Société Philharmonique took place on Monday last at the Hotel des Pompiers. There was a good assembly, also a good programme, including a grand Quatuor by Fesca, "pour piano, deux violins, et violoncelle" (rather over-played by the pianist); two choruses, sung by the members of the Society—"Les Bohémiens" (Shuman) and "Plaisirs d'Amour" (Martini). A prominent feature in the concert was the style in which Mdlle Dubout rendered her part in the duo from Le Trouvère. She is young, possesses a fine rich-toned voice, and sings well in tune. Mdme Spiers (the pianist in the quartet) played in the second part of the concert, to the satisfaction of her audience, a Fantasia by Chopin. Herr Reichardt was not present, but he sent from the South of France, where he is sojourning at present, some "souvenirs" in the form of handsome bouquets, which were handed round to the fair members of the Society of which he is the President—Fondateur!

X. T. R.

Boulogne-sur-Mer, March 1, 1882.

ST PETERSBURGH.—On the occasion of her benefit, Mdme Sembrich was re-called thirty-six times after the "Mad Air," in Lucia. (Three hundred and sixty times.—Dr Blitz.)

Digitized by Google

THE LATE MR JOHN HILES.

By the death of Mr John Hiles, on the 4th ult., aged seventy-two, the musical world has lost a very sound and industrious musician. As long ago as 1835 he occupied successively the posts of organist of the Abbey, Trinity and St Julien's Churches, Shrewsbury, and during his residence in that town was mainly instrumental in the formation of a choral society, which continued in existence for some eighteen years, and of which he was musical director. During this time many first-class concerts were given under his auspices, at which Grisi, Alboni, Mario, Sims Reeves, and many other artists of reputation appeared. Mr Hiles' services on these occasions, involving as they did much loss of time, trouble, and anxiety, were purely gratuitous. In 1853 he left Shrewsbury and settled in Portsmouth, where he was organist of St Thomas's Church until 1860, when he left Portsmouth and was selected from upwards of seventy candidates for the post of choirmaster and organist of All Saints' Church, Brighton. In 1874 he removed to London, and became organist of Christ Church, Gipsy Hill. A few years ago the hard and almost ceaseless work he had been engaged in for so many years began to tell on him, and ill-health and feebleness compelled him to resign his post and cease his labours, and for more than a year before his death he was a sad invalid.

Mr Hiles was the author of a very large number of arrangements and educational works on musical subjects—works which, in spite of a very large circulation, brought in comparatively little profit, whilst involving a considerable amount of industry and research. Of these works, one, "A Catechism for the Pianoforte Student," reached a fifteenth edition, or a circulation of 65,000 copies; and another, "A Dictionary of 12,500 Musical Terms," is now in its fifth edition. It is probable, however, that as "Travis," the arranger of "The Amateur Organist," he will be most widely known.

Among other works by Mr Hiles may be mentioned catechisms of "Simple Counterpoint," of "Double Counterpoint and Imitation," of "Canon and Fugue," and of "Instrumentation," "Short Voluntaries for the Organ" (four vols.), and "Catechism of the Organ" (now used as a text-book by the College of Organists).

C. D.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

The concert given by this society in St James's Hall on Friday week had a varied programme, of more modern character than usual. It began with Mendelssohn's setting of Psalm xlii., "As the hart pants after the water-brooks"—one of that master's best known contributions to sacred art. Music so familiar needs no comment of an explanatory nature; nor can it be necessary to insist upon the fact that, in this psalm, Mendelssohn shows himself more unequal than is his wont. The opening chorus, "As the hart pants," is altogether lovely and pathetic, while in the final movement, "Why, my soul, art thou sore vexed?" the composer, calling upon his forces for a supreme effort, is answered by them as fully as heart could wish. It is clear, however, that between these points something of dulness creeps in, and the listener finds his attention beginning to flag, as a natural result of the drooping of the music. Still, the psalm is a precious thing, despite the flaws that show themselves in the best of human work. The Sacred Harmonic Society did well to revive it, therefore, and to secure for it a performance which was hardly less excellent because the most important vocalist, Miss Beebe, took no part, owing to a misconception of the time fixed for commencing. Mrs Sutor chanced to be in the hall, and she, always willing and able to render services, filled the absent lady's place with general acceptance.

The psalm was followed by a setting of the "Te Deum," never before heard in public. It is the work of Mr W. G. Cusins, who conducted the performance. Of this composition we desire to speak with all the respect due to a lofty aim, and to an obvious striving after results produced in no common way. Whatever may be said against Mr Cusins' "Te Deum," it is not an ordinary work, cast in a mould many times used, and having no distinctiveness. As to this we may commend irrespective of aught else. Every composer should be encouraged to show what individuality there is in him. It may be objectionable when shown, and then is the time for purifying or annihilating criticism; on the other hand it may not, and then art has gained a point in her eternal struggle for the evolution of beauty. True conservatism in music is never repressive. It encourages growth, but takes care to pull up weeds. The distinctive character of Mr Cusins' work lies partly in its melodic, partly in its harmonic structure; chiefly in the last named. As to melody, it is only in certain movements that the composer appears to place any reliance upon that most obvious and powerful resource. Moreover, his themes—no doubt designedly—have a flavour of ecclesiastical archaism, owing to the frequent omission, in ascending passages, of the third and seventh of the scale. Examples of this elsewhere will occur to the musical reader, whose thoughts may revert, for instance, to a well-known point in Mendelssohn's "Reformation" Symphony. Mr Cusins' use of the ancient form is emphatic; indeed, the first four vocal bars contain a complete pentatonic scale. The effect, of course, can be no other than marked; we must look, however, to the harmonic method of the work for its greatest peculiarity. Here, it would seem, Mr Cusins has been largely influenced by Herr Brahms, as that master appears in his "German Requiem." We note the same emphatic reliance upon the effect of harmonic progressions as distinct from harmonized melody; and the same freedom in the employment of chords without reference to their tonal affinity; also a very liberal use of inverted chords, particularly of the six-four, and a frequent resort to pedal points. It would be absurd to cry out against this per se. The question is as to the effect produced, since in music it may be allowed that the end, when worthy and successfully gained, sanctifies the means employed. We cannot pretend to admire every result in the present case. In some instances the word "ugly" suggests itself by way of fitting comment; as when the male voices have a unison theme in C major, with a "half-close" to its first section, yet with no more accompaniment than a tonic pedal. On the other hand, examples of far greater daring are striking and impressive. Such is the treatment of the thrice repeated "Holy," which, coming after a passage in A major, is given first as a chord of the sixth on F natural, next as a six-four-two on G natural, and next as the common chord of F, a harp cadence following each. This would have made the queues of old masters stand on end; but in its particular connection it is appropriate and therefore good. Certain parts of the "Te Deum" are treated contrapuntally with success, the final verse above all. The composer has here hit upon a good diatonic subject, and works it with freedom and effect, though not elaborately, since few of the recognized devices of fugal work are employed. To sum up. While we cannot accept many things in this "Te Deum," there are many others of undeniable merit, and the general intention pleads with power for respectful consideration. The performance, though conducted by Mr Cusins himself, was not better than the difficulties to be overcome made probable, and in one instance a complete collapse seemed for a moment or two inevitable. Miss Beebe, Mr Lloyd, and Mr King did all that was necessary for the solo passages; but the work as a whole met with a cold reception. At this we were not surprised. The music needs to become familiar in order to be understood.

Mr Sullivan's Martyr of Antioch brought the concert to an end. In this now well-known work the solos were taken by Miss Annie Marriott, Mdme Patey, Mr Lloyd, Mr King and Mr Cross. Let us congratulate Miss Marriott upon her appearance as the priestess-victim. She sang with high intelligence and abundant feeling. Mdme Patey's rendering of "The love-sick maiden" was again a perfect example of true art-work; while Mr Lloyd, by his charming talent, enhanced the beauties of the Prefect's two songs. The performance, as that of Mendelssohn's Psalm, was conducted by M. Sainton, who once more demonstrated that his position as Sir Michael Costa's locum tenens is no violation of the "fitness of things." M. Sainton, presiding on the Sacred Harmonic platform, is eminently that once much-talked-of person, "the right man in the right place."—D. T.

CAUSERIES DE COULOIR.

No. I.

Madame Labelle.—Pardon, Monsieur; Je ne vous remettais point.

Monsieur Lelaid.—Madame, vous me faites trop d'honneur.

Petipace of Minchelsea.

Rome.—Matters looked very unpromising recently at the Teatro Apollo. Discouraged by the difficulties with which he had to contend, the manager almost decided, it is said, to forfeit his caution money and close the theatre. People even spoke, too, of a telegram from Gayarre, saying he could not break his engagement with the manager at Monte Carlo. The crisis has now been surmounted. Gayarre has formally announced that he will arrive on the 11th inst., and, after a few rehearsals, sing in Il Duca d'Alba—the "posthumous" opera of Donizetti.

Digitized by Google

BALFE'S ETOILE DE SEVILLE.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—In connection with the recent production of Balfe's opera of Moro, allow me to inquire what has become of Elvira, an opera with Italian words, produced at Trieste when Balfe was in the height of his popularity? Can this be the same work as Moro?

Again, and this is an inquiry of more moment, why is L'Etoile de Seville, composed for the "Grand Opéra," not unearthed? I was assured by one of the best musical judges of Paris that the lasting success of this opera was only prevented by a cabal. It was composed shortly after the production of Les Quatre Fils d'Aymon (our Castle of Aymon), which, as everybody knows, had a grand success at the "Comique," in spite of intrigues, and made the round of Europe. Balfe told me himself that when he was at Vienna it was being played in three theatres at once, and well did it deserve its success, with its admirable "Sentinelles!" the lovely romance, "The shades of night were falling fast"; the charming song for the soprano; and, perhaps, above all, the delightful concerted piece at the close of the second act, which Balfe looked upon, he told me, as his chef d'œuvre.

Everybody knows that Balfe did not take as much trouble as he might to do his best. Full of vivacity and fire, he lacked, alas! artistic conscientiousness, and was too apt to value things more for their pecuniary success than real worth, and see through the public's eyes. And he was, unfortunately, vulgarized by the ambitious twaddle and long heroic couplets of Mr Alfred Bunn, whose idea of writing for recitative was to imitate Byron's Corsair and Lara. This it is which dragged down, and more or less spoilt, The Bondman, and other well-meant productions. But for once, in composing The Star of Seville for what was supposed to be a highly critical public, Balfe really exerted himself. I imagine that there may have been something objectionable in the subject, as in his Puits d'Amour; but that alone would not account for the practical failure. I was told that it was sacrificed to Donizetti's Favorita, to which it was really superior—less languishing, and more fiery. Ought this Star of Seville to suffer permanent eclipse?

My liking for Balfe is partly personal. He came to Paris to see and meet his daughter the Duchess, married to a very wealthy grandee of Spain, to whom he seemed devotedly attached, and who appeared as fond of him. He read me, I remember, a most charming letter of hers, previous to her arrival, in which she gave him a very graphic account of an aristocratic hunting expedition which she and her husband had just organized in Spain. I saw Balfe on two occasions at Paris. On the last, he passed an entire winter there in a charming apartment provided for him by his child, he having come to Paris partly to pass some months with her, and partly to superintend the production of a rather laboured "refacimento" of his Bohemian Girl at the Theatre Lyrique, with the part of the Queen of the Gipsies largely developed, a whole act of choruses and ballets in honour of the Gipsy wedding, and a new last act. I thought the dramatic and in parts fine music of the new parts a little out of keeping with the easy ballad-character of the original. It seemed like grafting, were that possible, grapes on raspberry bushes, and the result was an anomaly. However, Balfe interested me so much by his bonhomie, simplicity, and tender affection for his daughters, that I wrote two or three books of operas, specially "at his intention"—Namouna, a tale of Samarand; The Feast of Roses; and Olympia the Flowergirl—and I have a letter from him, from England, written only a month before his death, in which he tells me, with his usual good-nature, that whenever he felt in rather low spirits he took these out and refreshed his soul by reading them again.

It is a great pity that so much of his time and genius was wasted on bad and essentially unmusical subjects, most unmusically treated. This does not apply to his last opera, though the third act of that is very undramatic also.

Still I do not think that we are half proud enough of Balfe, and I see it is too much the fashion to talk as if genuine melody grew on every bush! This is one of the bad effects of the Wagner panic for formlessness and noise. Allow me to say that I acknowledge Wagner's inspiration at his best, but he might as well set a column of the Times newspaper to music as the leading long speeches he places on the lips of emperors, heralds, &c. Bigness frequently impresses the world as greatness, and proves only an inflated wind-bag after all. About Balfe there is no pretension. Certainly he has not as strong a dramatic faculty as Wagner, but he deals far less in noise and thunder, trumpets, drums, and effort; he has, when he likes, almost all the grace of Auber at his best. I am not sure that he has produced anything so purely poetical as Loder's Night Dancers, and certainly he is inferior in orchestral power to Macfarren, or even Wallace. Still Balfe is Balfe, the scatterer of countless musical flowers, a very fountain of light and happy melody. The time will come when giant formlessness will cease to monopolize attention. Fireworks blaze and vanish. The stars shine on. I do not say that the best parts of Tannhäuser, Lohengrin, the Flying Dutchman, &c., will not live. They will. And there is sufficient merit in Wagner's vast cyclus to justify the forthcoming production of it. He has large and bold conceptions, great ideality marred by a Philistine love of noise, and a dramatic faculty which recalls "Gluck," but without the latter's exquisite tact and intense refinement. Wagner's is a comparatively plebeian muse; witness his early subjects, which recall the "Sturm und Drang Periode" of The Robbers and Fiesco, which we had hoped to have left behind us. But no man understands the orchestra as he does, or produces such marvellous effects. He is one of the grandest of hydrangeas, so to speak, by whose side Balfe's music seems like a violet or heartsease, while Gounod alone is the stately lily.—Your faithful servant,

ARCHER GURNEY.

Rhayader Vicarage, Feb. 28.

—o—

MR SIMS REEVES' CONCERTS.

At his concert on Tuesday night Mr Reeves was, unfortunately, unable to appear, owing to a sudden attack of hoarseness and sore throat. For this disappointment a written apology was distributed in the room and elsewhere, stating, in consequence, that Mdme Trebelli and Mr Santley "had kindly consented to sing extra songs—the lady the 'Habanera,' from Carmen, and the gentleman Schubert's 'Erl King' (in place of the duet, 'All's Well,' intended to be sung with Mr Reeves)." Both artists were warmly received. Mdme Trebelli was obliged to repeat the "Habanera," and Mr Santley was heartily "called" after Schubert's dramatic scena. Misses Santley, Spenser Jones, and Carlotta Elliott, with Mr Herbert Reeves, were the other singers. Miss Santley's singing of "Wapping Old Stairs" (repeated "by desire"), in which the charming young artist made so great an impression at Mr Reeves' previous concert, made no less an impression on the occasion under notice; and Miss Spenser Jones earned well-merited applause for her delivery of the Irish ballad, "My lodging is on the cold ground." Mr Herbert Reeves was most successful in Donizetti's charming romance, "Una furtiva lagrima," which is especially suited to his sympathetic voice; Mdme Trebelli was twice "called" after the brindisi from Lucrezia Borgia; and Mr Santley could do no less than return, after the hearty applause he received for "The Vicar of Bray," and treat his audience to "Father O'Flynn." The Anemoic Union gave selections from Macfarren's Robin Hood, as well as the andante and finale from Mozart's Quintet in E flat; Mr Lazarus played his own arrangement, for the clarinet, of Scotch airs, winning a unanimous "call"; and Mr Sidney Naylor accompanied the songs with his well-known ability.

—o—

MAD. ALBANI AT MONTE-CARLO.

On Saturday, the 18th inst., we were present at the first performance of Rigoletto, with Mesdes Albani, Scalchi, MM. Maurel and Gayarre. Let us at once say with legitimate pride that never was Verdi's work more finely rendered at any theatre in the world. The 4th act especially was given with incomparable maestria. After the quartet, the house was electrified and presented a superb sight. When we beheld the audience standing up, applauding and recalling the artists, while the stage was strewn with flowers, we thought of the grand nights when Faure, Mad Carvalho, and Mad. Adelina Patti sang on the same stage. The quartet was encored.

It was the first time of Mad. Albani's appearing here. Gifted with a voice of large compass, mellow, supple, and agreeable in quality, the lady, who is a consummate musician, proves herself a great actress by the dramatic manner in which she renders the character of Gilda. She imparts to her singing a real and scholarly expression of the sentiments of love and anguish which the composer wished to depict when he penned the thrilling pages of his opera. Next Tuesday, we shall have occasion to return to the subject and discuss the various aspects of Mad. Albani's great talent as exhibited in Faust.—Journal de Monaco, Feb. 21*st.*

PIACENZA.—Salvatore Auteri-Manzocchi's opera, Il Negriero, has been well received at the Teatro Municipale. Though written for, and produced at, Barcelona some years ago, it was new to Italy.

HAMBURGH.—Saint Saëns' opera, Samson und Dalila, with a German version by E. Pohl of Ferdinand Lemaire's French libretto, will be the next novelty at the Stadttheater. The cast includes Mad. Sucher and Herr Winkelman, Dr Krauss, Herren Kögel, Sedlmeyer, and Ehrke.

Digitized by Google

Knights of the Swan.

Sub Mapleson.

(Sub Rosa.)

"Strange that such difference should be
'Twixt Tweedledum and Tweedledee."

MR CHARLES OBERTHÜR has returned from Paris.

MR J. T. CARRODUS is engaged as solo violinist by Miss Roselli, for her concert at Cheltenham next week.

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN has been graciously pleased to accept the dedication of Moro, the Painter of Antwerp, Balfe's latest published opera.

SIR JULIUS BENEDICT has completed the music he has been composing for Mr Irving's revival, on Wednesday next, of Shakspere's Romeo and Juliet.

MDME LIEBHART undertakes the direction of the Ballad Concert to be given at the Royal Victoria Hall on Thursday next, March 9th.

Digitized by Google

ST JAMES'S HALL.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS,

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON, 1881-82.

DIRECTOR—MR S. ARTHUR CHAPPELL.

FIRST APPEARANCE OF MDME SCHUMANN

ON

MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 6, 1882,

At Eight o'clock precisely.

Programme.

PART I.—Quartet, in E minor, Op. 59, No. 2, for two violins, viola, and violoncello (Beethoven)—MM. Joachim, L. Ries, Straus, and Piatti; Song, "Lascia ch'io pianga" (Handel)—Miss Spenser Jones; Fantasia, in C major, Op. 17, for pianoforte alone (Schumann)—Mdme Schumann.

PART II.—Chaconne, in D minor, for violin alone (Bach)—Herr Joachim; Song, "On every tree that blossoms" (Schubert)—Miss Spenser Jones; Trio, in C minor, Op. 9, No. 3, for violin, viola and violoncello (Beethoven)—MM. Joachim, Straus, and Piatti.

Accompanist—MR ZERBINI.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 4, 1882,

At Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

Quintet, in C major, Op. 29, for two violins, two violas, and violoncello (Beethoven)—MM. Joachim, L. Ries, Straus, Zerbini, and Piatti; Song, "Love in her eyes" (Handel)—Mr Harper Kearton; Presto, Pastorale, and Scherzo, for pianoforte alone (Scarlatti)—Miss Agnes Zimmermann; Duo Concertante, in A minor, Op. 67, No. 1, for two violins (Spohr)—MM. Joachim and Straus; Song, "The Centurion's Song" (J. F. Bridge)—Mr Harper Kearton; Trio, in D minor, Op. 63, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (Schumann)—Miss Agnes Zimmermann, MM. Joachim and Piatti.

Accompanist—MR ZERBINI.

DEATHS.

On Friday, Feb. 24th, at 31, Great Cumberland Place, Hyde Park, ELIZABETH, the dearly-beloved wife of CHARLES BENTLEY BINGLEY, of Stanhope Park, Greenford (formerly of Regent Street), aged 62 years.

On March 1st, at 8, Marlborough Place, St John's Wood, ALICE, the dearly beloved wife of JOHN FRANCIS BARNETT, aged 28.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.'S, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). Advertisements not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 4, 1882.

MUSIC IN EGYPT.

We copy the subjoined from the Egyptian Gazette (Alexandria, Feb. 8th) :—

> "We (the Alexandria Musical Society) are requested to remind performing members of the above Society that the last three Practices for the forthcoming Concert, which is to take place on Friday the 17th inst. are to be held in the Salle Storari as follows :—
>
> 'Saturday the 11th inst. with full choir and orchestra at 2.30 p.m.
>
> 'Tuesday the 14th inst. with full choir and piano at 5 p.m.
>
> 'Thursday the 16th inst., General Rehearsal with full choir and orchestra, at 2.30 p.m.'
>
> "We understand that Mr Arthur Sullivan, the celebrated English composer, has signified his intention of being present at the Concert, and that the Conductor of the Society has offered his bâton to the eminent composer and conductor for this occasion. We believe that there is every probability of the offer being accepted."

[It has been accepted. The programme comprises Mozart's Twelfth Mass, and a large selection from Handel's Messiah. Well done, Egypt! Well done, Arthur Sullivan! Let our countrymen win the ear of the young Khedive, and the rule of the Pharaohs will come back. Arthur will be Prime Minister, transmitting corn and wine to his famished countrymen at home, in the shape of AN EGYPTIAN SYMPHONY. This will be looked for at his hands; for no musician is more impressionable than he. Be chesm! On my eyes be it!—Otto Beard.]

—o—

A Prompt Decision.

(Behind the curtain at Her Majesty's.)

MANAGER (impetuously).—Lyall!

MR C. LYALL.—"I am here," as Fechter used to say in a drama which Balfe afterwards set to music for Louisa Pyne and Harrison and ——

MANAGER (furiously).—Bother all that! I heard "Hungaria" last night.

MR C. Lyall.—And your impression?

MANAGER.—My impression was that it would be advisable to put off Cellini.

MR C. LYALL.—Ben trovato!

MANAGER.—No.—Benvenuto.

—o—

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

DEAR SIR,—In your issue of December 31st, 1881, I find an article from your New York correspondent criticizing my way of doing business this season, and, at the same time, reflecting on the reputation of the artists of my company. It is evident from the article in question that your correspondent is either wilfully malicious or has been misinformed. My company consists of some of the best artists known on the Italian stage, amongst whom I may mention Mdlle Leslino, Mdme Prasini, Signori Giannini, Lazzarini, Perugini, Ciapini, Sweet, Mancini, and Carboni; with all of whom Mdme Gerster has expressed herself perfectly satisfied, and all of whom have been accepted by the New Orleans public, one of the most fastidious in America. I pay them as good salaries as any manager in the world is willing to give them —salaries for which they themselves have stipulated, and which by no means are what your correspondent seems fit to call starvation prices. I have never played, nor will play, opera in barns, but always give my performances in the best theatres obtainable, and my prices of admission range from 3 to 50 dols. — the usual prices charged in this country for Italian opera. Finally, I give seven performances a week, and not four only, as your correspondent also erroneously remarks.

You will therefore observe that your correspondent has grossly abused me and my company, and I would beg you that, in justice to myself and to them, you would kindly publish this letter, and oblige yours truly,

MAX STRAKOSCH.

New Orleans. La., February 8th, 1882.

THE Morning Post informs us that Mario is in London with his married daughter, Mrs. Pearce. "He has," says our contemporary, "been going a round of the London theatres, and experienced a cordial reception from some old friends by whom he was recognized at the Savoy one evening last week. He looks hale and hearty." [Strange I should not have come across, or encountered him.—Dr Blimp.]

Digitized by Google

From Hungaria.

FUGITIVE.—Mille bombes de bombes! Sapristie!

—o—

Symphonic Poem.

MAJOR WHALE (groaning).—Oh! Oh! Oh! When will Dr Sprat arrive?

DR SPRAT.—Here I am. What's the matter with you now?

MAJOR WHALE.—I've been to the Philharmonic and heard "Hungaria." Oh! Oh!

DR SPRAT.—I warned you of it. Here swallow this poemetic.

MAJOR WHALE.—Oh! (swallows poemetic, and, feeling revived, unconsciously swallows Dr Sprat.) Oh! I am much better. Thank ye, Doctor. I'll have no more Hungarian.

—o—

CONCERTS.

CRYSTAL PALACE SATURDAY CONCERTS.—The attendance at the Palace on Saturday, Feb. 25th, was very large, drawn by the two-fold attraction of light and music; and perhaps there was a third, royalty, for the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh honoured the "International Electric Exhibition" by their presence on that afternoon. The nave and transepts were illuminated with wonderful brilliancy. Monster lamps, hung on high, threw out searching rays far and wide, while below tiny beams, struggling through ferns and flowers, were seen to shed a mild radiance upon the glass and china of a dining table. The place and the day seemed dedicated to Apollo, the god of light and music. The ancient heathen myth, uniting the two attributes in one deity, was not, after all, very far wrong, for does not modern science support the notion? Tyndale, in his lectures, published under the title "Fragments of Science," labours to prove that light and sound are identical in origin, both being caused by vibrations of molecules. As far, however, as the ordinary concert attendant was concerned, the eighty good players in the orchestra were the only agents recognised in the manufacture of sweet sounds. Beethoven's overture, Leonora, No. 2, opened the concert on Saturday, and renewed the delight former hearings had given. Amongst the few things in life that weary not by familiarity must be placed the music of that great man. It seems to give ability to appreciate as well as the materials for enjoyment. The overture, played in perfection, operated upon the ear as a flash of lightning upon the eye; it took some time before the sense could regain its accuracy of perception. The symphony was Spohr's Power (or Consecration) of Sound, which had not been performed at the Palace since 1875. How much the melancholy Jaques would have enjoyed the entrances and exits of the many strains whilst wandering in the forest of Arden! He would have thought, in the allegro of the first movement, that the birds had been granted a fresh music master, enabling them thus to combine their varied notes and trills into such embracing concord. In listening to the cradle song he could scarcely have kept from rocking himself to and fro in sympathy with the strains lulling the "mewling and puking infant;" nor, grave as he pretended to be, would his feet have kept still when the dance of the "whining school boy" struck up holiday pleasures. Doubtless resentment would have flashed from the fantastic pessimist as the violoncello sobbed out the "woeful ballad." Where would he have been, however, when the martial music thundered along in barbaric splendour? Surely the cynical laugh would have changed into a cry of ecstacy, and, like a truant school-boy, he would have marched away alongside the troops to the beat and measure of drum, trumpet, and fife, giving himself up for the moment to the delirium of heroic strains. And when, in the larghetto, the sighs and wailings of mourners were heard mingling with the dirge of choir, then poor Jaques would have felt the utter desolation of the final stage of "this strange eventful story." It need hardly be said that the entire symphony was, under the able direction of Mr Manns, interpreted most admirably. Without being guilty of presumption it may be hinted that the beginning and ending of the symphony are felt to be not altogether satisfactory. The logic of the untutored mind will not receive the idea that music can be employed to depict the "silence of Nature before the birth of sound;" and in the finale the gloom of the grave calls for a glimpse, at least, of its sequel—the effulgence and harmony of heaven. The andante and finale from a concerto for violoncello and orchestra, in D minor, Op. 26 (MS.), by Signor Piatti, afforded Herr Hausmann a good opportunity of showing his dexterity, fine tone, and breadth of phrasing, making thereby a favourable impression, afterwards confirmed by renderings of solos by Schumann and Fitzenhagen. Madame Patey, in excellent voice, introduced to the palace audience a recitative and air, "Why is thy countenance sad," from a sacred cantata by J. Caldicott, brought out at the recent Worcester Festival. The melodious excerpt, well sung, procured the artist a unanimous recall. Brahms' Academic Festival Overture concluded the concert.—PENCERDD GWYFYN.

CLERKENWELL POPULAR BALLAD CONCERTS.—In our last impression we alluded to the attractions of the concert given on Monday evening, February 20th. It was successful in every way. The appearance of Lady Colin Campbell excited great interest, and her singing of Salaman's "I arise from dreams of thee," and Gounod's "O that we two were maying," afforded delight. Her beautiful contralto voice and cultivated method did justice to the compositions, and secured the applause of the audience. Miss Wigan also pleased greatly by her rendering of Gounod's "Worker," and (in the place of Miss Lawson), the "Serenade" by the same composer. An important feature of the concert was the introduction of several songs with clarinet and violoncello obbligati, the performers being Mr Lazarus and Mr Vollmar. The tenor vocalist was Mr Lake, the barytone being Mr Isidore de Lara. Mr W. Henry Thomas proved again an able conductor.

A VERY enjoyable réunion was held in the London Art Galleries on Tuesday evening, the 28th ult., under the auspices of the Robert Burns' Club. The following was the concert programme, given under the leadership of Mr Sinclair Dunn:—"When the tide comes in" (Barnby), sung by Miss Delia Harris; "Behind yon hills" (Burns), by Mr Sinclair Dunn; "The Yeoman's Wedding" (Poniatowski); Quartet, "Ye banks and braes" (Burns)—arranged by S. Dunn—Miss Hall, ——, Messrs Dunn and Grimshaw; "And ye shall walk in silk attire," Miss Ella Hall; "My darling of old" (Diehl), Mr Sinclair Dunn. The accompanist was Mr W. G. Wood.

Digitized by Google

The students of Mr M. H. St John Robinson's Musical Academy gave their first concert this season at the Principal's residence, Blomfield Crescent, Westbourne Terrace, on Thursday evening, Feb. 9th, when a long and yet agreeable programme was gone through with more or less effect. Among the pianists who "came to the fore" were Miss Marie Power, Mdme Matilde Dembowski, and Mr Sumpter, who respectively played Wollenhaupt's "Caprice Ærien," a Scherzo by Chopin, Mendelssohn's "Rondo Capriccioso," &c. Among the singers the most effect was made by Miss Keble in Wellington Guernsey's "Beacon," Miss Constance Richards in Schubert's "Adieu," Miss Jessie Cobb in Holmes' "Fisher Lad," and Miss Swinnerton in Sir Robert Stewart's "We two passed by." The concert, which was ably conducted by Mr St John Robinson, concluded with the National Anthem. The rooms were fully and fashionably attended.

Kensington Popular Concerts.—The eighth of these concerts was given on Tuesday evening at the New Town Hall, and the audience was considerable; those who availed themselves of the "twopenny" and "sixpenny" tariff being, as usual, the most enthusiastic. This was as it should be, inasmuch as the indications it gave of musical susceptibility among a class to whom such names as Mendelssohn, Mozart, Chopin, and Bach, could hardly be supposed to interest, speaks well for the instinct which it has been the province of these meetings to stimulate and instruct. This concert was the last of the present series, and it can but be hoped that the efforts of Mr Ridley Prentice, aided as they have been by the influential countenance and the valuable amateur services afforded him, have not been without the moral and humanizing reward anticipated. Of the financial results of the concerts now terminated, we know nothing, but the attendance in the reserved section of the room when we have been present certainly suggests that there has been substance as well as sentiment in the patronage of the undertaking. The leading features of the programme of Tuesday were Mr Geaussent's choir (some thirty in number), the singing of Miss Marian McKenzie, and the pianoforte, violin, and violoncello playing of Mr Ridley Prentice, Mr Burnett, and M. Libotton. The choir was heard to attractive advantage in Mendelssohn's grand psalm, "Judge me, O God," Gounod's "Ave verum," part-songs by Henry Smart and Leslie, and other works. Miss McKenzie, in spite of a semi-comic apology made for her on the grounds of indisposition, sang Barnby's charming ballad, "When the tide comes in," Pinsuti's duet, "Venezia" (with Mr Robertson), and the piquant song, "Peggy and Robin," in her own popular manner; and Mr Ridley Prentice, in Mozart's quartet in G minor, evinced his customary ability and intelligence as an exponent of music in one of its most beauteous forms. Nor should Mr Burnett remain unmentioned as his coadjutor in the violin part of the quartet, in which, as well as in Bach's "Gavotte" (from the Suite in D), he displayed much superior accomplishment. Songs by Mr Robertson and a pianoforte solo by Mr Fuller Maitland were among the remaining incidents of the programme, which, it will be seen, was full of good and varied matter.—H.

Athenæum, Camden Town.—The sixth annual concert of the Athenæum Amateur Orchestral Society took place at this hall on Wednesday evening, 1st inst., and, notwithstanding the inclement state of the weather, the room was well filled. A somewhat classical programme was provided, with which the audience were evidently well pleased. The vocalists were Mr Lance Calkin and Miss Damian, who sang Cowen's ballad "Regret," and "Good-bye," by Tosti, this last with such feeling and expression that an "encore" was the result. The orchestra of about forty members performed the overture to Zauberflöte, Schubert's unfinished symphony in B minor, adagio from Mendelssohn's Scotch Symphony, &c., also the accompaniment to Mozart's pianoforte concerto in D minor, the solo instrument being ably undertaken by Mr F. Manby. Doppler's duet for flute and oboe, played by Messrs J. Rooke and Varniss, was well received. Great praise is due to the accompanist and conductor, Mr David Beardwell, for the energy and pains taken in training the members to such a state of efficiency. W. A. J.

A concert was given in the Town Hall, Kilburn, on Monday evening, Feb. 20, in aid of the church expenses fund of St Paul's. Miss Edith Kelly (amateur), a pupil of Mr Sydney Smith, began the concert by playing, with taste and ability, Wollenhaupt's "Marche heroique." Mr Sydney Smith also gave his valuable assistance playing for the first time his two new pieces, "Speranza," and "Nonchalance," with which the audience were so pleased that Mr Sydney Smith was compelled to return to the platform, when he favoured his audience with a charming little gavotte of his own composition. Mr Smith afterwards delighted his hearers by playing two of his most popular pieces, "Rhapsodie," and "Marche Militaire," ("En Route"). The audience had also the pleasure of hearing Mr Oberthür play some of his admired compositions for the harp, including his "Clouds and Sunshine," his "Cascade," and his fantasia on Martha. Among the vocal successes were those of Miss Catherine Penna in the waltz song from Gounod's Romeo et Juliet, Miss Helen Meason in Stephen Adams' "Children of the City," and Mr Trelawny Cobham in "Tom Bowling." The concert concluded with the late Sir Henry Bishop's trio, "Maiden fair," sung by Miss Catherine Penna, Messrs Trelawny Cobham and May. We hear that, besides his valuable services, Mr Sydney Smith has contributed handsomely to the Church Fund.

PROVINCIAL.

Edinburgh.—On Thursday, Feb. 23, being the 197th anniversary of Handel's birth, the first portion of Sir Herbert Oakeley's programme was appropriately filled by selections from the great master's works. The organ and platform were decorated with evergreens, and seventy-two volumes, all full scores, of Handel's works, crowned with laurel, were exhibited, giving some idea of the astonishing number of compositions which were produced by the "Saxon giant." A fac-simile copy of the autograph of the original score of The Messiah, photographed by permission of her Majesty from the copy at Buckingham Palace, was also shown. The three selected choruses were admirable specimens of Handel's genius. The "Nightingale" chorus (which was loudly encored) was followed by the "Hailstone," and both contrasted effectively with the third—"Then round about the starry throne." The Professor's song, "The Troubadour," was brilliantly given, and was very heartily re-demanded. The classroom was crowded, and amongst the general audience were Lady E. Carnegie and Hon. E. Elphinstone, Lady Louisa and Miss Wardlaw Ramsay, the Hon. Mrs Montgomery and the Dean of Edinburgh, Lady Stewart of Murthly, &c.—Edinburgh Courant.

Leeds.—The Free Organ Concerts are to be resumed this (Saturday) evening, at the Town Hall, when the following compositions will be played by Dr Spark (organist to the corporation):—Grand Marche Cortège, Irene, (Gounod); Andante, F major, from the Sonata in C major, No. 7 (Mozart); Two Bourées, B minor and G major (J. S. Bach); Recit. and Air, "Orynthia, my beloved" ("The Pilgrim of Love") (Bishop); Fantasia and Variations on Mendelssohn's popular Volkslied (George Hepworth); and Organ Sonata, D major (Lemmens). These concerts appear to be thoroughly appreciated by thousands of the lovers of organ music who abound in Leeds.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—The last concert of the season promoted by the Chamber Society was given on Tuesday night, Feb. 14. The artists were Messrs Carrodus, Nicholson, Doyle, and Howell. Mr Carrodus, a pupil of Molique, and the most distinguished English violinist at the present time, is a great favourite in this town; his coadjutors are also artists of high rank, their quartet playing was therefore one of those rare musical treats not easily to be forgotten by people who can appreciate perfection in music. The programme included Beethoven's quartet in C minor, Op. 18; the andante in G, and scherzo in E major, from Mendelssohn's quartet, Op. 44, and Haydn's quartet, in G, No. 82. This quartet was performed at the first "Popular Chamber Concert" given this season. All those who have frequented these concerts, where artists of reputation have been performing the best works of the old composers, will no doubt look forward eagerly to another season, when they will be resumed. It would be well if chamber concerts were more supported by various grades of society, on account of their beneficial influence in educating the popular taste for abstract music of the highest order. A feature in the programme was Mr Carrodus's fine rendering of the adagio from Spohr's ninth violin concerto. No composer ever knew better than Spohr how to write for an instrument of which he was himself such a consummate master.

Sheffield.—Messrs. Peck and Wainwright's "Saturday Popular Concert" came off on February the 25th, at the Albert Hall. The programme consisted of instrumental music only, comprising organ solos by the best writers, played by Miss Anna Vogt (pupil of the Rev. Scotson Clarke), the performances of a small but efficient orchestra, and of Mr. John Cheshire on the harp. Mr. Cheshire gave several compositions of his own, and was re-called three times after his second solo. The interest of the programme was so well sustained throughout, that the omission of a "vocal star" was as prudent as it was to dispense with inferior singers, of which there is a surfeit just now; thanks to the daily growing facilities amateurs have of obtaining a "so-called" musical education, and to the frequent opportunities for public display. This public amateur element is, I humbly think, much to be deprecated.—A. B.

Stockton.—The first of two dramatic and musical entertainments was given in the Exchange Hall, on Thursday evening, Feb. 16th. The attraction of two distinguished amateurs, Lady Monckton and

Digitized by Google

Sir Charles Young, was powerful enough to bring together a very large and brilliant assembly. The entertainment commenced with a solo on the pianoforte by Mdlle Felicia de Bunsen, and a violoncello solo by H. Hollmann, each of whom showed perfect mastery of their respective instruments, and at once won the warm approbation of their audience. The dramatic sketch which followed—the composition of Sir Charles Young—was entitled Yellow Roses. The conception and working out of the sketch is exceedingly clever, and the fine acting of Lady Monckton and Sir Charles Young lent an additional interest to it. Mrs Hutchinson, of the Monday Popular Concerts, took the place of Victoria de Bunsen (who, we regret to learn, has been laid up for some time by a severe illness but is now recovering). She possesses a rich and beautifully clear voice, sang several times, and each time was honoured by an encore.

DEVIZES.—Mr. Millington gave his subscription concert here on February 20th, and at Trowbridge on the 21st. The vocalists were Misses Gwynne (Guildhall School of Music) and Myers. Messrs. Millington were respectively the pianist and violinist, and Mr. John Cheshire solo harpist. The programmes were attractive and the attendance unusually good.

—o—

More Persuasion.

MISS KENSINGTON SOUTH.—Come live with me and be my love.

MR TENTERDEN HANOVER.—No-a, no-a, I can't.

MISS KENSINGTON SOUTH.—Why not?

MR TENTERDEN HANOVER.—You live too far off. Besides, I'm a member of the Arts Club, and H.R.H. is coming to dine with us.

MISS KENSINGTON SOUTH.—Oh treachery! Next door to the "R.A.M."—What after, I wonder! (Loosens her gripe on Mr Hanover and returns in an omnibus.)

MISS KENSINGTON SOUTH (in omnibus.)—Never mind, we've got 10,000.

—o—

LONDON BALLAD CONCERTS.

The twelfth of Mr John Boosey's Ballad Concerts at St James's Hall took place on Wednesday evening, and was fully attended. The singers were Misses Mary Davies and Carlotta Elliot, Mdmes Trebelli and Antoinette Sterling, Messrs Edward Lloyd, Frank Boyle, Signor Foli, and Mr Santley, together with The South London Choral Association, under the direction of Mr L. C. Venables. The successful songs were an old song "The Clear Cavalier," Bucalossi's "Storming the Breach," and Edward Loder's "Brave old oak," sung by Signor Foli (encored); an old song "The leather Bottèl" (encored, and "The Barkshire Tragedy" substituted), "The Friar of Orders Gray," and Villiers Stanford's "New Cavaliers' Song," sung by Mr Santley; Goring Thomas's serenade, "The keen stars were twinkling," Alexander Lee's "Soldier's Tear," (encored, and Balfe's "Come into the garden, Maud" substituted), together with "Sally in our Alley (encored), sung by Mr Edward Lloyd; Louis Diehl's "My darling of old," sung by Mr Frank Boyle (encored); Sullivan's "Looking Back," Meyerbeer's canzonetta, from Dinorah, "Fanciulle che il core," and Offenbach's bolero, from Les Bavards, "C'est L'Espagne," sung by Mdme Trebelli; Cowen's "Never Again," Molloy's "Darby and Joan," sung by Mdme Antoinette Sterling; and "The Ash Grove," sung in the Welsh language by Miss Mary Davies. The South London Choral Society gave some of the most popular part-songs, and Mr Sidney Naylor was the accompanist. The concert altogether gave general satisfaction. The last concert but two of the present series is announced for next Wednesday evening.

—o—

WALTER MACFARREN'S ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS.

The present musical season will be memorable for its wealth of orchestral concerts. Presently they will come thick and fast, in numbers embarrassing to the public, and, perhaps, inconvenient to themselves; wherefore, it may be, those are best off which put in an appearance early. In such a case we may congratulate Mr Walter Macfarren, the first of whose three performances took place in St James's Hall on Saturday evening, and was attended by a very large concourse of professors and amateurs, all eager to show their sympathy with a musician for whom personal qualities and artistic skill have won general favour. As far as can be gathered from the programmes already published, Mr Walter Macfarren leaves to others the task of bringing forward works belonging to what their admirers, with amusing assumption, call the "advanced school." Apart from a few of his own compositions—which will certainly betray no affinity with the school in question—he confines himself to the music of the great classical masters. Than this English amateurs ask nothing better. A concert-room where such music is to be heard affords them a rallying point, and a place where they can steady themselves against the advances of a pernicious propaganda that, with its unabashed sensuousness, tempts them as Venus tempted Tannhäuser.

The acknowledged masterpieces in Saturday's programme comprised the overtures to Oberon and Die Zauberflöte, Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, and Beethoven's Symphony in C minor. Our business obviously lies, not so much with these happily familiar and treasured works, as with their performance, which was generally of a superior character. Mr Walter Macfarren has engaged a superb orchestra of seventy players, nearly all of them English by birth or adoption. In this number are included Messrs Sainton (chef d'attaque), Burnett, Viotti Collins, Nicholson, Doyle, E. Howell, White, Svendsen, Barrett, Horton, Lazarus, Wootton, Mann, Harper, and Hughes, to the mention of whose names nothing need be added. We may say, however, that the violins are particularly brilliant, and more effective than a much larger number is often found to be. Here we have one advantage resulting from the engagement of Englishmen, who, as a rule, work with good tools. In Mendelssohn's Concerto the solo instrument was played with astonishing verve by M. Sainton, whose exertions on the previous day as conductor of the Sacred Harmonic Society were not the best conceivable preparation for such a task. It is always interesting to hear a work of this kind performed by M. Sainton, whose temperament colours all he does, and who could not by any possibility proffer a coldly correct, cut-and-dried version, modelled in the school of Mrs General, of "prunes and prism" fame. His performance was distinctly individual; brilliant and impulsive, yet tender and, above all, sympathetic to the point of extreme delicacy of sympathy. This gave the always charming work a new attraction—such an attraction as, in one form or another, is never wanting when a true artist, and not a mere executive machine, holds the instrument. M. Sainton was received with hearty applause and recalled with enthusiasm.

The programme contained two novelties from the pen of the concert-giver, namely, the "Concertstück," for pianoforte and orchestra, dedicated to Miss Kuhe, and played by her at Brighton in February, 1881, and the overture to Shakspere's King Henry V., composed for the Norwich Festival of last year. Mr Walter Macfarren is happy in the Concertstück, the interest of which, beginning with the first bar, ends only with the last. Its principal movement, led up to by an introduction in freer style, is observant of the ordinary form; but this does not hinder the composer from making large use of opportunities afforded by the nature of the means employed. The movement, however, carefully avoids diffuseness; and to the consequent variety is due much of the strength with which it holds attention. Perhaps the two principal themes lack sufficient contrast; but so agreeable is their melodic character and so gracious their treatment that no one will seriously urge this objection. The solo part was played by Miss Margaret Gyde, pupil of Mr Macfarren at the Royal Academy of Music. Miss Gyde made a promising first appearance, although she felt the responsibility of a débutante. She played with correctness and taste, showed ample command of the key-board, and manifested the intelligence which is the sine quâ non of an artist. The young lady was loudly applauded and re-called at the close of her task. The prelude to King Henry V. having been fully noticed in these columns on the occasion of its production at Norwich, it will suffice now to say that Mr Macfarren's work confirmed the favourable impression made in the first instance. It is a bright, pleasing, and musicianly overture, not to be heard without admiration for itself and respect for its author. The vocalists were Miss Mary Davies and Mr Santley, each of whom—need it be said?—was very successful; the lady in "I rejoice in my youth" (St John the Baptist) and Spohr's "Rose, softly blooming," the gentleman in "Non più andrai" and "O ruddier than the cherry"—piccolo obbligato capitally played by Mr Barrett. Mr Walter Macfarren, conducting throughout from memory, showed high qualifications for his important post, amongst others clearness, decision, and untiring watchfulness.—D. T.

Digitized by Google

—o—

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—The Daily News of the 24th inst. gave an interesting sketch of the public career of the late Dowager Countess of Essex. May I supplement that with two or three facts which, if they furnish not a slight proof that voice and musical ability run in families, may not be without interest to your readers. The elder sister of the "more famous" Miss Stephens, afterwards Mrs John Smith (referred to in the sketch), made her début as Mandane in Dr Arne's opera, Artaxerxes (that being the character in which most of Tom Welch's pupils made their first appearance), and a brilliant success her début was. She was a public singer for little more than a year, for she married and retired from the profession; but during the short period that she practised as a vocalist she often had the honour of singing duets with the Prince of Wales, afterwards George IV. She became the mother of two sons and three daughters (all now dead, save one), who were musicians or singers. Some of your readers will remember the great success achieved at the St James's Theatre when the celebrated John Braham, its builder and owner, was also its manager, by the Misses Smith, who became the most popular, as well as the most perfect (if we allow perfection to admit of degrees), duet-singers of the day. For reasons I need not refer to they left London for Edinburgh and Glasgow, where they remained for some years. In Scotland and also in Ireland the echoes of their very great popularity have hardly yet ceased to resound. To one of these young ladies at the St James's Theatre Mr Braham (who had sung in all the great opera-houses in Italy) said, "Of all the beautiful voices I ever heard in my life, not one was comparable with that of your aunt; it was like a beautiful instrument—once heard, never forgotten." This niece was the god-daughter of the celebrated vocalist and the mother of a soprano singer now before the people, alike remarkable for her ability to sing the most difficult music a prima vista.—I am, Sir, faithfully yours,

FREDERIC PENNA.

Feb. 27, 1882.

WORDS FOR MUSIC.*

I whispered my love to the driving clouds,
Drifting away to the sea,
But a sorrowful wind encompassed it round,
And wafted it back to me;
And ever, forever the sad wind sighs:—
Take thy love to thy heart again,
For the driving clouds beyond the sea,
Would breathe it to her in vain.
For the driving clouds, &c.

I whispered my love to the moaning wave,
As it restlessly broke on the shore;
But swiftly an echo murmured it back
To my heart forever-more;
And my soul is full of a love that is vain!
Of a love that will live till death!
For the love of a man is the love of a life,
And speaks in his dying breath.
For the love of a man, &c.

* Copyright. HERBERT J. MELVILLE.

MDME SCHUMANN has arrived, and will appear at the Popular Concert of Monday evening.

A NEW overture, by Mr F. Corder, is promised for the third Philharmonic Concert, as well as Brahms' "Choral Ode," Nänie (for the first time in England).

MILAN.—Massenet's Hérodiade has been produced at the Scala, for which it was expressly written. Its success is reported as very decided. Three pieces were encored and there were some twenty calls. M. Massenet was present with his librettist, M. Paul Milliet. (Two hundred calls.—Dr Blitz.)

INTERESTING SALE IN PARIS.

A short time since the musical works belonging to the late Léon Escudier were offered for sale by Maitre Cherrier, notary. Nearly all the publishers of the capital, as well as several composers and artists, were present. The whole stock was estimated at 530,000 francs, but many of the works were not sold, as the prices were considered too high, but, having been fixed by the Court, could not be lowered. They will be offered again when the upset prices have been legally altered. The sale embraced the plates, the copies in stock, and the French copyright. The score of Rigoletto, put up at 54,000 francs, was knocked down to M. Léon Grus for 62,000, while La Traviata was purchased for 72,000 by M. Benoit. MM. Choudens bought for about 40,000 francs a number of Verdi's scores, including Giovanna d'Arco, Attila, Aroldo, I due Foscari, Luisa Miller, Macbeth, I Masnadieri, Alzira, La Battaglia di Legnano, Il Finto Stanislas, and Stiffelio; MM. Heugel, Verdi's Ballo in Maschera, and M. Leo Delibes Le Roi l'a dit; M. Lemoine, Bazin's Maitre Pathelin; and M. Bathlot, Grisar's Bon soir, Monsieur Pantalon, as well as Offenbach's Ba-ta-clan. Arban's Méthode de Piston fetched 32,000 francs.

Among the works not sold were Verdi's Aida (upset price, 90,500 francs), and Requiem Mass (5,500); four scores by M. Ambroise Thomas—Le Caïd, Le Songe d'une Nuit d'Eté, La Tonelli, and Raymond ou le Secret de la Reine (37,000 francs); Verdi's Don Carlos, Ernani, La Forza del Destino, Les Vêpres Siciliennes, and Jerusalem; Auber's Gustave III., Premier Jour de Bonheur, Rêves d'Amour, La Fiancée du Roi de Garbe; Halévy's Magicienne; Donizetti's Dom Sebastian; the Brothers Ricci's Crispino e la Comare and Una Folia a Roma; Prince Poniatowski's Pierre de Medici, &c.

—o—

VIENNA.

(Correspondence.)

Referring to the revival of Gluck's Orpheus at the Imperial Opera-house, the papers give some interesting facts connected with the composer's career in this capital. The "Court Theatre in the Ball House" was opened on the 14th May, 1748, with his opera Semiramis, for which he received the sum of 412 florins. After the German actors returned in 1763 to the Kärntnerthor Theater, French comedy alternated at the Burgtheater with Italian opera. His Orfeo ed Euridice was performed there for the first time in 1764; his Alceste, in 1768; and his Paride ed Helena, in 1772. The Burgtheater was leased to Afflisis and Gluck as managers (deed of partnership, 11th October, 1769). The debts of the undertaking amounted to 110,000 florins. In a letter to Prince Kaunitz, Gluck complains bitterly of the losses he had suffered through Afflisis. He says that nearly the entire fortune of himself and his wife had been "sakrifised" ("Zugebrockt"), and that his wife's health was ruined in consequence. On the 26th July, 1780, a new operetta from his pen, Die Pilgrime von Mekka, and on the 23rd October, 1781, his Iphigenie auf Tauris were given for the first time in Vienna, the latter being repeated on the 30th October, at a "free performance."

FROM a statistical return we learn that in 1880 the Grand Opera, Paris, took 3,087,414 francs; the Théâtre-Français, 1,863,044; the Châtelet, 1,591,523; the Opéra-Comique, 1,396,968; the Hippodrome, 1,201,802; the Porte Saint Martin, 1,133,739; the Variétés, 1,120,604; the Folies Bergère, 968,233; the Cirque Franconi, 845,107; the Renaissance, 803,541: the Vaudeville, 802,364. Then came the Gaîté, the Palais Royal, the Folies Dramatiques, and the Nouveautés, which took above 700,000 francs each; the Gymnase, 590,000; the Ambigu, 521,000; the Odéon, 473,410; the Château-d'Eau, 308,414; the Bouffes, 386,363; the Nations, 324,943; the Cirque Ferdinand, 193,773; the Fantaisies Parisiennes, 197,152; Cluny, the Panorama, the Theatres of Belleville, the Batignolles, Grenelle, the Gobelins, and Montmartre, above 100,000 each. Finally, the receipts were less than the above at each of the following theatres: Tour d'Auvergne, Athénée, the Villette, Montparnasse, the Folies Marigny, Déjazet, and Des Arts. In 1880, Paris spent 22,614,018 francs on theatrical amusements.

Mdme Trebelli and M. Musin's tour on the continent commences on March the 7th at Nice, from whence they proceed on the 17th to Stuttgart. On the 20th they will be at Dresden, on the 22nd they are due at Cologne, and on April 2nd at Paris, where M. Musin will appear at M. Broustet's grand concerts in the Champs Elysees.

Digitized by Google

WAIFS.

At the third Philharmonic Concert (next Thursday) Herr Joachim will play—let us hope his own Hungarian Concerto.

In the absence of Herr Strauss, the post of leading violin at the first and second Philharmonic Concerts was held by that intelligent and experienced artist, Herr Wiener.

We understand that Professor F. F. Rogers, of Malvern, is at present engaged on a sacred cantata, entitled Deborah; Mr J. Stewart a frequent contributor to these columns, having supplied the libretto.

Bizet's Carmen has been given at Carlsruhe.

Sarasate, the Spanish violinist, is giving concerts in Vienna.

Mdme Gerster will sing this month in Italian opera at Chicago.

Artôt Padilla and her husband have been giving concerts at Tilsit.

August Wilhelmj was giving concerts a short time since in New Zealand.

A new Vocal Association, the Orphéon français, has been founded at Santiago.

The father of Bilbaut-Vauchelet, of the Paris Opéra-Comique, died recently.

Bianca Bianchi has met with a flattering reception at the Teatro Reggio, Turin.

A new musical society, the Nuevo Liceo, has been founded at Valencia, Spain.

Amalie Stahl, formerly of the Imperial Operahouse, Vienna, is engaged at the Milan Scala.

Mdlle Donadio will shortly appear at Genoa as Ophelia in Ambroise Thomas's Hamlet.

Theresa Singer has been singing at Palermo. She is engaged for next winter at St Petersburgh.

The subscriptions for the re-erection of the Teatro Communale, Trieste, already exceed 200,000 florins.

Emile Fournier, horn player and director of several vocal associations, has died in Lyons, aged forty-four.

A director of the Istituto Musicale Rossini, Pesaro, has at length been chosen; Carlo Pedrotti is the person.

The 2nd September next will be the centenary of the opening of the Stadttheater, Frankfort-on-the-Maine.

Anton Rubinstein's Dämon was to be performed, under the composer's direction, on the 1st inst. in Cologne.

The death of M. Alfred Jaell, the pianist, is announced as having taken place, suddenly, in Paris on Tuesday last.

Emil Scaria, of the Imperial Operahouse, Vienna, has sung three nights at the Stadttheater, Frankfort-on-the-Maine.

Jenco Hubay has been appointed to succeed Vieuxtemps as Professor of the Violin in the Brussels Conservatory.

Ambroise Thomas' Hamlet, with Bianca Donadio as Ophelia, has been performed sixteen times at the San Carlo, Naples.

The Common Council of Marseilles have voted the Theatre, by twenty-one votes against five, a grant of 250,000 francs.

Anton Rubinstein has completed the music of a ballet and is far advanced with that of a comic opera, Madame Don Quixote.

El Numero fatal, buffo opera, music by Mangiagalli, has been tolerably successful at the Teatro de las Variedades, Madrid.

Hans von Bülow has given a concert in Pressburg, and handed over all the proceeds towards erecting a monument to Hummel.

Anton Rubinstein's Symphony in G minor was performed, under Rheinthaler's direction, at the fifth Subscription Concert, Bremen.

A one-act comic opera, words by Clément Michaëls, music by M. Van Synghel, is to be produced at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, Brussels.

Capoul intends making a second trip to America. He will, however, previously visit Nice, and then undertake a tour in Spain and Portugal.

Anton Rubinstein's Symphony in G minor was performed, under the direction of Herr Lüstner, at the eighth Curhaus-Concert, Wiesbaden.

The fiftieth anniversary of its foundation, on the 13th February, 1832, was recently celebrated at the Brussels Conservatory by a special concert.

The Persai of Æschylus, with music by C. B. (Duke Ernest of Saxe-Meiningen), has been performed at the concert of the Academical Vocal Association, Jena.

We regret to announce the death, on Wednesday last, of the wife of Mr John Francis Barnett, a lady highly esteemed by all who had the pleasure of her acquaintance.

Le Capitaine Noir, three-act comic opera, book by M. Gustave Lagye, music by M. Joseph Mertens, has been successfully produced at the Theatre Royal, the Hague.

Franz Tewele has retired from the management of the Carl-Theater, Vienna, and will be succeeded by Steiner. Meanwhile, the Theatre is carried on by the company.

New York soon hopes, says Kunkel's Musical Review, to have in the Wood College of Music an institution that will rival, if not surpass, the College of Music, Cincinnati.

Il Conte di Chatillon, a new opera by a young composer, Niccolo Massa, formerly pupil of the Milan Conservatory, has met with a favourable reception at Reggio (Emilia).

Willem Brand, chapelmaster at the Church of the Redemptorists and director of the Vocal Association, Het Vlaamsche Volk, died in Antwerp, on the 2nd ult., aged only 29.

The Belgian Government has entrusted to the new Society of Music the task of organizing the fifth Musical Festival, to be held in August at the Palace of Fine Arts, Brussels.

Pauline Lucca commences her engagement at the Royal Operahouse, Berlin, on the 10th April. In June she will appear for ten nights at the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden.

After witnessing at the Carlo Felice, Genoa, Mdlle Sarah Bernhardt's impersonation of Adrienne Lecouvreur, Verdi went on the stage and warmly congratulated the famous actress.

The Musical Society of Antwerp, now studying an oratorio by Haydn, has included in its programme for next season Emil Mathieu's Hoyoux. ("An" oratorio by Haydn! Good.—Dr Blinge.)

Napravnik has resigned the directorship of the Society-Concerts, St Petersburgh, a post he held for many years. At the eighth concert of the present series Davidoff, the violoncellist, conducted.

Mdlle Epstein, of the Stadttheater, Frankfort-on-the-Maine, and Mdme Basta, of the Theatre Royal, Munich, have been invited to give a series of performances at the Imperial Operahouse, Vienna.

The funeral of M. Rouzaud, the husband of Mdme Christine Nilsson, took place on Friday, last week. The religious ceremony was held in the Church of St Eloi, and the burial in the Pieput Cemetery, Paris.

Pedro Sarmiento y Verdejo, who enjoyed a high reputation as a flautist, died at Madrid on the 5th ult. He was professor at the National School of Music and one of the original members of the Society of Concerts.

A one-act comic opera, Nichette, was recently produced at the Grand Théatre, Ghent. The music is by an artillery officer, M. Carman, son of the ex-baritone Carman, now a professor at the Royal Conservatory, Liége.

Mr Charles E. Stephens was unable to be present at the conference at St James's Palace on Tuesday, on the subject of the proposed Royal College of Music, having to attend the funeral of his aunt, the late Dowager Countess of Essex, which took place on that day.

Mr Frederic Penna's Lecture on "The Art of Singing.—Mr Frederic Penna has had the honour to receive a letter from Claremont expressing His Royal Highness the Duke of Albany's entire concurrence with all his (Mr Penna's) views upon the Art as conveyed by Mr Penna to His Royal Highness.

It is rumoured that Mr Gladstone intends to offer a peerage to Sir Moses Montefiore. Every Englishman will hope that the rumour is true. Mr Gladstone could not pay a more graceful compliment to the distinguished man, who is not only beloved by the Hebrew race throughout the world, but has earned the respect and esteem of everyone who has heard his name. And who has not?

Ess and Esses.—"So you have finished your studies at the seminary? I was much pleased with the closing exercises. The author of that poem—Miss White, I think you called her—bids fair to become known as a poet." "We think the authoress will become celebrated as a poetess," remarked the young lady pertly, with a marked emphasis on two words of the sentence. "Oh!—ah!" replied the old gentleman, looking thoughtfully over his spectacles at the young lady. "I hear her sister was quite an actress, and under Miss Hosmer's instructions will undoubtedly become quite a sculptoress." The young lady appeared irritated. "The seminary," continued the old gentleman, with imperturbable gravity, "is fortunate in having an efficient board of managereseses. From the presidentess down to the humblest teacheress unusual talent is shown. There is Miss Harper, who as a chemistress is unequalled, and Mrs Knowles has already a reputation as an astronomeress. And in the department of music few can equal Miss Kellogg as a singeress." The young lady did not appear to like the chair she was sitting on. She took the sofa at the other end of the room. "Yes," continued the old gentleman, as if talking to himself, "those White sisters are very talented. Mary, I understand, has turned her attention to painting and the drama, and will surely become famous as a painteress, and even as a lecturess." A loud slamming of the door caused the old gentleman to look up, and the criticess and grammarianess was gone.—Abroath and Kansas Sheet.

Digitized by Google

The only Gold Medal for Wind Instruments with Keys, in the Paris Universal Exhibition of 1878, was unanimously awarded by the Jury to Messrs P. Goumas & Co., for the fine quality of tone and finish of their Instruments.

SPECIAL MANUFACTORY OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FOR

CLARIONETS, FLUTES, PICCOLOS, OBOES, BASSOONS, COR ANGLAIS, FLAGEOLETS, AND SAXOPHONES.

P. GOUMAS & Co.

(Late Buffet, Crampon & Co.),
Established 1830.

Nine Prize Medals have been awarded to Goumas & Co. for general excellence and improvements in the Manufacture of Wind Instruments with Keys.

Manufacturers of all kinds of Wood Wind Instruments for Military Bands, Musical Instrument Makers to Her Majesty's Army and Navy, and to the Armies, Navies, and Conservatoires of France, Belgium, Italy, Russia, Austria, Spain, America, &c.

Manufactory at Mantes (Seine et Oise), France. Paris: Passage du Grand Cerf, 18 et 20.

LONDON: 39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET.
Price Lists sent free on application.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF

ALL KINDS OF MUSIC STRINGS FOR ALL MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Sole Depôt for Signor Andrea Ruffini's (of Naples) Celebrated Strings for Soloists, manufactured by him on a system invented by Mons. J. B. Vuillaume, of Paris.

Sole Agent for Charles Albert's (of Philadelphia, U.S.) new Patent Improved Chin Rest; also his improved String Gauge.

39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, W.
Price Lists free on application.

All kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner on powerful machines made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S). A Delicious Beverage and Tonic.

Made from Port Wine, Liebig's Extract of Meat, and Extract of Malt; Nutritious, Strengthening, Stimulating, Flesh-forming, Health Restoring, suitable for the Robust in Health as well as the Invalid. Strongly recommended by the Medical Faculty. An Immediate Benefit is experienced after taking it; the Frame is Invigorated, and no ill effects follow.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).

TESTIMONIALS.

Sir,—A short time since I was induced by the novelty of the title to send for a bottle of your Liebig's Extract of Meat and Malt Wine. I was perfectly acquainted with the value of the Extractum Carnis, and not quite a stranger to the invigorating and fortifying properties of malt wine, and therefore felt a natural curiosity to test them when combined. Men who work hard, as I do, not muscular hard work, but that which is quite as exhausting, viz., brain work, very often experience the need of, and have sometimes an almost irresistible craving for, a "pick me up;" and very often the panaces for a time for lassitude, and that state of mind which renders work irksome, are alcoholic stimulants, the use of which must sooner or later end disastrously. The man who can furnish a remedy sure, certain, and harmless, for the lassitude which follows constant brain work is a benefactor of his species, and may be said to have added many years of usefulness to the lives of useful men. Your extract, if a success, and when more generally known, will be used by all toilers of the mind.—Yours faithfully, O. D. RAY.

Thorpe Hamlet, Norwich, February 23rd, 1881.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).

Queen's Crescent, Haverstock Hill, London, March 5th, 1881.

Dear Sir,—Some time since, being greatly fatigued with over-work and long hours at business, my health (being naturally delicate) became very indifferent. I lost all energy, strength, and appetite, and was so weak as to be scarcely able to walk. As you are aware, I sent for a dozen of your Extract of Meat and Malt Wine, which, in a few days, pulled me up marvellously. Three or four glasses of it daily have quite altered and restored me to better health than ever, "without the assistance of a doctor." I am now giving it to my son, twelve years of age, whom we have always thought consumptive, and from a puny, ailing boy, he seems to be fast growing into a strong, healthy lad. Enclosed you have cheque. Please send me two dozen of the "Extract." With thanks for your prompt attention to my last, I am, Sir, yours truly, GEORGE A. TYLER.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).

Granspound, February 26th, 1881.

Mrs Coulson thanks Mr Coleman for the book and stamps, and she has no doubt but that "the tonic" is a good one. Mrs C. encloses twelve stamps for basket. Mr Coleman.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).

Vicarage, Kingsbridge, Devon, January 25th, 1881.

Dear Sir,—We are ten miles from the railway, and have been snowed up, consequently the wine has only just arrived. I enclose a cheque for £2 11s. 6d. I like the wine, and will recommend it.—Yours faithfully,
Mr Coleman, Norwich. A. N. KINGSTON.

Pints, 30s. per dozen: Quarts, 50s. per dozen. Carriage paid to any Railway Station in Great Britain. Sample Bottle sent for 33 stamps.

P. O. Orders to be made payable to

COLEMAN & CO., MUSPOLE STREET, NORWICH.

Cheques crossed "London and Provincial Bank."

Sold by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the United Kingdom, in Bottles, 1s. 9d. and 2s. 6d. each. Ask for Coleman's Liebig's Extract of Meat and Malt Wine, and "See that you get it."

CHAPPELL'S VOCAL LIBRARY OF PART-SONGS, &c.

		Composed or Arranged by	Price
1.	Dulce Domum. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
2.	Down among the Dead Men. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
3.	The Girl I've left behind me. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
4.	British Grenadiers. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
5.	Long live England's Future Queen. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
6.	My task is ended (Song and Chorus). A.T.B.B.	... Balfe	4d.
7.	Thus spake one Summer's Day. S.A.T.B.	... Abt	2d.
8.	Soldiers' Chorus. T.T.B.B.	... Gounod	4d.
9.	The Kermesse (Scene from Faust)	,,	6d.
10.	Up, quit thy bower. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	4d.
11.	Maidens, never go a-wooing. S.S.T.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	3d.
12.	Fagot Binders' Chorus	Gounod	4d.
13.	Sylvan Hours (for Six Female Voices)	Joseph Robinson	6d.
14.	The Gipsy Chorus	... Balfe	4d.
15.	Ave Maria	Arcadelt	1d.
16.	Hark! the Herald Angels sing. S.A.T.B.	Mendelssohn	1d.
17.	England Yet (Solo and Chorus). S.A.T.B.	Jules Benedict	2d.
18.	The Shepherd's Sabbath Day. S.A.T.B.	J. L. Hatton	2d.
19.	Thoughts of Childhood. S.A.T.B.	Henry Smart	2d.
20.	Spring's Return. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
21.	An old Church Song. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
22.	Sabbath Bells. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
23.	Serenade. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
24.	Cold Autumn Wind. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
25.	Orpheus with his Lute. S.S.S.	Bennett Gilbert	3d.
26.	Lullaby. S.A.A.	,,	1d.
27.	This is my own, my native land. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
28.	March of the Men of Harlech. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
29.	God save the Queen. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
30.	Rule, Britannia. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
31.	The Retreat. T.T.B.B.	L. de Rille	2d.
32.	Lo! morn is breaking. S.S.S.	Cherubini	3d.
33.	We are Spirits. S.S.S.	G. A. Macfarren	4d.
34.	Market Chorus (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	Auber	4d.
35.	The Prayer (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
36.	The Water Sprites. S.A.T.B.	Kücken	2d.
37.	Eve's glittering Star. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
38.	When first the Primrose. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
39.	O Dewdrop bright. S.A.T.B	,,	1d.
40.	Sanctus from the Messe Solennelle. S.A.T.B.	Rossini	4d.
41.	Nine Kyries, Ancient and Modern	,,	2d.
42.	Sun of my soul. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	2d.
43.	'Twas fancy, and the ocean's spray. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
44.	A Prayer for those at Sea. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
45.	O Thou whose power (Prayer from Mose in Egitto)	Rossini	2d.
46.	The Guard on the Rhine. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
47.	The German Fatherland. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
48.	The Lord is my Shepherd (Quartet). S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
49.	Te Deum in F	Jackson	2d.
50.	Te Deum in F	Nares	2d.
51.	Charity (La Carita). S.S.S.	Rossini	4d.
52.	Cordelia. A.T.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	4d.
53.	I know. S.A.T.B.	Walter Hay	2d.
54.	Chorus of Handmaidens (from Fridolin)	A. Randegger	4d.
55.	The Offertory Sentences	Edmund Rogers	4d.
56.	The Red Cross Knight	Dr. Callcott	2d.
57.	The Chough and the Crow	Sir H. R. Bishop	3d.
58.	The "Carnovale"	Rossini	2d.
59.	Softly falls the moonlight	Edmund Rogers	4d.
60.	Air by Himmel	Henry Leslie	2d.
61.	Offertory Sentences	E. Sauerbrey	4d.
62.	The Resurrection	C. Villiers Stanford	6d.
63.	Our Boys (new Patriotic Song)	H J. Byron and W. M. Lutz	4d.
64.	The Men of Wales	Brinley Richards	2d.
65.	Dame Durden		1d.
66.	A little Farm well tilled	Hook	1d.
67.	There was a simple maiden	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
68.	Fair Hebe	,,	1d.
69.	Once I loved a maiden fair	,,	1d.
70.	The jovial man of Kent	,,	1d.
71.	The oak and the ash	,,	1d.
72.	Heart of Oak	,,	1d.
73.	Come to the sunset tree	W. A. Philpott	4d.
74.	May. S.A.T.B.	W. F. Banks	2d.
75.	Pure, lovely innocence (Le Roi de Lahore—Chorus for Female Voices)	...G. Massenet	4d.
76.	A Love Idyl. S.A.T.B.	...E. R. Terry	2d.
77.	Hail to the Woods! A.T.T.B.	...J. Yarwood	2d.
78.	Near the town of Taunton Dean	Thomas J. Dudeney	2d.
79.	Our merry boys at sea	...J. Yarwood	2d.
80.	The Shepherd's Farewell. S.A.T.B.	Berlioz	3d.
81.	When the sun sets o'er the mountains (Il Demonio)	A. Rubinstein	3d.
82.	Hymn of Nature	Beethoven	3d.
83.	Michaelmas Day (Humorous Part Songs, No. 1)	Walter Maynard	4d.
84.	Sporting Notes (Humorous Part Songs, No. 2)	Walter Maynard	4d.
85.	Austrian National Hymn	Haydn	4d.

LONDON:

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND STREET, W.

City Branch—14 & 15, Poultry.

Digitized by Google

NEW VOLUMES of the ROYAL SERIES.

THE SONGS OF SCANDINAVIA
AND NORTHERN EUROPE.
EIGHTY-THREE NATIONAL AND POPULAR SONGS.

THE SONGS OF EASTERN EUROPE.
ONE HUNDRED VOLKSLIEDER OF AUSTRIA, HUNGARY, BOHEMIA, SERVIA, &c.

WITH ENGLISH WORDS BY CLARA KAPPEY.

EDITED BY

J. A. KAPPEY.

Price 2s. 6d. each, paper covers; 4s. cloth.

"Messrs Boosey & Co. have done good service not only to amateurs but to art, by including in their series of volumes of national melodies 'The Songs of Scandinavia' and 'The Songs of Eastern Europe.' The first-named contains eighty-three examples; and the second, a hundred. We need not insist upon the importance of collections like these, whatever the country they represent; but we must say that no musical library is complete without the songs of Scandinavia and Eastern Europe. The editor, Mr J. A. Kappey, has taken great pains to secure melodies of a genuinely representative character, and at a time when attention is becoming more and more directed to folk-tunes as a source of new thematic ideas, the volumes in question are of peculiar value. They have our most hearty commendation, the 'Songs of Eastern Europe' more especially, since the volume contains, besides examples of Liszt, Chopin, and other masters, a very valuable collection of volkslieder from the hitherto untouched wealth of the Austrian provinces."—Daily Telegraph.

"Messrs Boosey & Co. have published two additional volumes of their National Songs, which appear likely to be the most interesting of the series. We know little of the rich repertory of Scandinavian Songs, and Mr and Miss Kappey, the editors of these books, are to be thanked for introducing some of the best specimens to public notice. Five of the Russian songs are so old as to be traditional; and in the series are to be found a beautiful Cossack lullaby by one Bachmetieff, a gipsy song by Lvoff, and several songs by Warlamoff. These and the Polish songs (all of which are traditional) may be considered among the most interesting items of a small but acceptable collection. Two ancient Lithuanian songs, a couple of Finnish, and four ancient Norwegian melodies, will likewise be found in the book. The majority of the Swedish songs are by Lindblad, that prolific song writer, who died in 1864. Tradition says that the old melody of 'The Beggar Boy' was once sung in the days when she was a poor child by the distinguished artist now known as Mdme Christine Nilsson. Included in the Danish songs is the traditional 'Dannebrog,' the music of which is attributed to one 'Bay.' It would be interesting to inquire the foundation for this statement, as the origin of the Danish National Anthem was generally understood to be unknown. The tradition of the 'Dannebrog Banner,' which, in 1719, fell down from heaven to bring victory to the Danish arms, is duly recorded in a footnote. Most of the Dutch songs given date back to the sixteenth century; and there are besides three songs by W. F. G. Nicolai, and one Flemish song. Altogether eighty-three of the national songs of northern Europe are included in this valuable and interesting book. In future editions a larger preface or more footnotes, giving further particulars of the old songs whose history is known, would be welcome. Equally interesting are the songs of Eastern Europe, recently issued by Messrs Boosey, and likewise edited by Mr and Miss Kappey. Among the thirty-four Austrian songs, the large majority are volkslieder, and they include Tyrolean, Styrian, and Polish songs, two of them by Chopin. These are followed by twenty-three characteristic specimens of Hungarian songs, giving a very fair idea of the peculiarities of Hungarian music, and comprising modern songs by Liszt, and some traditional songs of Bosnia, Moravia, and Dalmatia. The first of the Bohemian songs is the 'War-song of the Hussites,' once, it is believed, the national song of the country. A few specimens of Servian, Swiss, Greek, and even Turkish melodies. The last are very peculiar; and he peculiar intervals common to this and other Eastern music are claimed by some to have been handed down direct from the music of the ancient Hebrews."—Figaro.

LONDON: BOOSEY & CO., 295, REGENT STREET.

Digitized by Google

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, & SPALDING, at 3 and 5, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, March 4, 1882.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 60.—No. 10. SATURDAY, MARCH 11, 1882. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

CRYSTAL PALACE SATURDAY CONCERT, THIS DAY, March 11th, at Three. The programme will include Symphony, in E flat (Mozart); Violin Concerto, No. 6, in G (Vieuxtemps); Air and two Gavottes, from Suite in D (J. S. Bach); "L'Invitation à la Valse" (Weber, orchestrated by Berlioz). Vocalist—Miss Carlotta Elliott. Solo Violin—Mdme Norman-Neruda. Conductor—Mr AUGUST MANNS. Seats, 2s. 6d., 1s. 6d., 1s., and 6d.

WEDNESDAY NEXT.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERT.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERT, ST JAMES'S HALL, WEDNESDAY next, at Eight. Last Evening Concert but One. Artists: Miss Mary Davies, Miss Marian McKenzie, Miss Spenser Jones, and Mdme Antoinette Sterling; Mr Edward Lloyd, Signor Foli, and Mr Santley. Violin—Mdme Norman-Néruda. The South London Choral Association of sixty voices, under the direction of Mr L. C. Venables. Conductor—Mr SIDNEY NAYLOR. The programme will include the following: Violin Solos, Cavatina, by Raff, and Sarabande and Tambourin, by Leclair (Mdme Norman-Néruda); "There's a Bower of Roses," "When the heart is young," and "The Miller and the Maid" (Miss Mary Davies); "Sunshine and Rain," "The Three Fishers," and "John O'Grady" (Mdme Antoinette Sterling); "Uncle John" and "Peggie and Robin" (Miss Marian McKenzie); "On the Banks of Allan Water" and "Will he come?" (Miss Spenser Jones); "Alice, where art thou?" "Phillis is my only joy," and "Serenade" (Mr Edward Lloyd); "Hands All Round," "For ever and for ever," and "Simon the Cellarer" (Mr Santley); "I fear no foe," "True till Death," and the "German Drinking Song" (Signor Foli). Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Family Tickets (to admit Six to Stalls), £2; Area, 4s. and 2s.; Balcony, 3s.; Gallery and Orchestra, 1s.; to be had at Austin's, St James's Hall; the usual Agents; and of Boosey & Co., 295, Regent Street.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR EDWARD LLOYD will sing ASCHER'S popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" at the London Ballad Concert, St James's Hall, Wednesday next, March 15th.

THIS (SATURDAY) EVENING.

WALTER MACFARREN'S ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS, ST JAMES'S HALL.—SECOND CONCERT, This (SATURDAY) Evening, March 11. Conductor—Mr WALTER MACFARREN. Beethoven's Overture to Leonora (No. 3); Mendelssohn's Overture, Scherzo, Notturno, and Wedding March, A Midsummer Night's Dream; and Walter Macfarren's New Symphony in B flat; Piatti's Fantasia Romantica—Violoncello, Signor Piatti; Sterndale Bennett's Concerto, in C minor—Pianoforte, Mr Charlton T. Speer. Tickets at popular prices, 3s., 1s., and 7s. 6d.

MISS JOSEPHINE AGABEG (Pupil of Mr Ganz) begs to announce her THIRD ANNUAL EVENING CONCERT, at the STEINWAY HALL, Lower Seymour Street, Portman Square, on TUESDAY next, March 14th, at Eight p.m. Violin—Herr Ondrieék. Violoncello—M. Libotton. Pianoforte—Miss Josephine Agabeg and Mr Ganz. Vocalists—Miss Emma Allitsen, Messrs James Sauvage, Ernest Cecil, and Cecil Traherne. Conductor—Mr GANZ. Tickets—Reserved Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Stalls, 5s.; Balcony, 3s.; Admission, 1s.; to be obtained of Miss JOSEPHINE AGABEG, 133, Ledbury Road, Bayswater; and at the Hall.

MDLLE ROSINA ISIDOR'S GRAND EVENING CONCERT, SATURDAY, March 18, at Eight, ST JAMES'S HALL. Vocalists—Mdlle Rosina Isidor and Mdme Patey; Mr Joseph Maas, Mr F. Barrington Foote, and Signor Foli. Pianoforte—Herr Ernst Lœwenberg. Harp—Mr John Thomas. Harmonium—Mr Louis Engel. Flute—Mr Keppel. Accompanist—Signor Antonio Mora. Stalls, 21s. and 10s. 6d.; Balcony Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Balcony, 3s.; Admission, 1s. Tickets at the usual Agents; and at Austin's, St James's Hall.

MR and Mdme BODDA'S (Miss LOUISA PYNE) ACADEMY FOR SINGING. "BONALLY," 85 and 87, Cambridge Gardens, Notting Hill. STUDENTS' CONCERT, March 20th. Spohr's God, Thou art great (arranged for Ladies' Voices); Abt's Water Fairies. Prospectuses of Academy as above, or Mr STEDMAN, 12, Berners Street.

MR and Mdme BODDA'S (Miss LOUISA PYNE) ACADEMY FOR SINGING, Operatic and Miscellaneous. "BONALLY," 85 and 87, Cambridge Gardens, Notting Hill. Professional and Amateur. In and Out-Door Students. Studies—Singing (Private Lessons), Elocution, Piano, Deportment, Choral Practice, Italian. Prospectuses as above, or Mr STEDMAN, 12, Berners Street.

LONDON CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.—Principal—Mr LANSDOWNE COTTELL.
The Directors invite attention to the recent extension and increased accommodation, residential and otherwise.
Fees from Two Guineas per term, residential from Fourteen Guineas, inclusive of the Musical and Fine Art Lectures.
Free Tuition is awarded to talented young artists unable to pay fees by fund granted for this purpose.
Prospectus (one stamp), Hon. Sec., 6, Tavistock Square.

SCHUBERT SOCIETY. President—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT. Founder and Director—Herr SCHUBERTH. Sixteenth Season, 1882. Members are informed that the arrangements for March are as follows, viz.:—The 103rd and 104th Soirées Musicales on Wednesdays, 15th and 29th March, due notice of which will be given. The Second Concert (70th since formation of Society—Schumann's Compositions in first part of programme), will take place at the Langham Hall, on Wednesday, 19th April. Ladies and Gentlemen desirous of joining the Society may have prospectus and full particulars on application to H. G. HOPPER, Hon. Sec., 244, Regent Street, W.

THE MUSIC PUBLISHERS' ASSOCIATION.

TO THE MUSIC TRADE.

AT a General Meeting of the Association, held at Messrs Metzler & Co.'s, Great Marlborough Street, on Tuesday, the 7th inst., it was proposed by Mr Boosey, seconded by Mr Enoch, and duly carried: "That this Meeting is of opinion that the custom which prevails to some extent of Wholesale London Houses purchasing music through provincial dealers is prejudicial to the interests of the Trade, and that it is resolved by those present at this meeting to close accounts with all provincial dealers having transactions of this kind with London Houses. By order,

B. LUCAS,
Secretary.

84, New Bond Street, London.
March 8, 1882.

TO CONCERT GIVERS, &c.

THE LONDON ART GALLERIES, 23, BAKER STREET, W.—These Galleries are available in the Evenings for High-Class Chamber Concerts, Rehearsals, Readings, &c., for which their acoustic properties are eminently suited. For terms address—ADAM F. HARDY, Secretary, as above.

ORGANIST WANTED for the United Parishes of St Andrew by the Wardrobe and St Anne, Blackfriars. Salary £40 per annum. Applications, with Testimonials, to be forwarded before the 18th inst., either to Mr F. W. LEWIS FARRAR, Vestry Clerk of St Andrew by the Wardrobe, or to Mr DANIEL STOCK, Vestry Clerk of St Anne, Blackfriars, No. 171, Queen Victoria Street.

GERMAN CONDUCTOR, CHOIRMASTER, PROF. OF MUSIC.

A GERMAN Professor of Music from the Academy of Music, Berlin, pupil of Kullak, Dorn, Wüerst, seeks for a good Engagement as CONDUCTOR and (besides) as CHOIRMASTER. He is also an excellent and much-quested Pianist, Singing and Compositions Master of good name. Address send to Berlin, Post Office, No. 60, sub. A. B. F. G.

MISS ADELAIDE ARNOLD
PROFESSOR OF THE HARP,
34, CANONBURY SQUARE, N.

MR FREDERIC PENNA (ten years Solo Bass at High Mass at the Oratory) can now accept ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, &c. For terms address—Mr PENNA, at 44, Westbourne Park Road, W.

THE PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, AND KNIGHTAGE OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE for 1882. By JOSEPH FOSTER.
Early in January. In one or two volumes, royal 8vo, cloth gilt, price 42s. The Peerage or Baronetage separate, each 21s.
The THIRD EDITION, for 1882, containing all new Creations, has been considerably enlarged, and carefully corrected throughout. It is illustrated by upwards of 1,400 Engravings of Arms, &c., and contains fuller pedigrees than any other work.
Westminster: NICHOLS & SONS, 25, Parliament Street.
CHAPMAN & HALL, Limited, 11, Henrietta Street, W.C.

"PARADISE LOST." An Oratorio. Composed by ANTON RUBINSTEIN, on the Poem of MILTON. The English version of the words by JOSIAH PITTMAN. Paris: GÉRARD, 2, Rue Scribe.

Digitized by Google

"THE TIME OF ROSES."

MISS HENRIETTA BEEBE will sing MINA GOULD'S admired and popular Song, "THE TIME OF ROSES," at Mr Atherton Furlong's Concert, on Thursday evening next, March 16th.

"KILLARNEY."

MISS BEATA FRANCIS will sing BALFE'S popular Song, "KILLARNEY," at Mr Hayes' Benefit at Drury Lane Theatre, Tuesday Afternoon, March 14.

"THE PRISONER'S LAST SONG."

MISS ALLITSEN will sing "THE PRISONER'S LAST SONG" (by J. P. GOLDBERG), at Miss Agabeg's Concert, Steinway Hall, March 14th.

PLAYED BY MDLLE KREBS.

LISZT'S "TARANTELLE DE LA MUETTE DE PORTICI" ("MASANIELLO"). 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street. W.

Just Published.

THE BETTER WORLD.

Words by Mrs. M. A. BAINES.
Music by
MICHAEL BERGSON.

Composed expressly for and sung by Mdme MARIE ROZE; sung also by Miss JESSICA O'BRIEN.
Price 4s.
London: STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

Just Published.

ALICE.

TRANSCRIPTION FOR THE FLUTE AND PIANOFORTE, OF ASCHER'S POPULAR ROMANCE.
By
J. HARRINGTON YOUNG.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

THE STUDENT'S DREAM.

PRELUDE FOR THE PIANOFORTE AND HARMONIUM, OR ORGAN.
Composed by
G. GARIBOLDI.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

POLKA ET VALSE.

POUR LE PIANOFORTE.

No. 1. FOLICHONNE POLKA ... ... Price 4s.
No. 2. SOUVENIR DE JEUNESSE VALSE ... ... Price 4s.

Composées par
BENTAYOUX.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

L'AMANTE.

VALZER, PER VOCE DI MEZZO-SOPRANO.
Musica di
G. MURATORI
(The English Version of the words by MARIA X. HAYES).
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

THE LOVERS' WALTZ

(L'AMANTE).
FOR THE PIANOFORTE.
By
G. MURATORI.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"TANNHÄUSER."

"O THOU MOST LOVELY EVENING STAR."

LISZT'S TRANSCRIPTION of "L'ETOILE DU SOIR" ("O THOU MOST LOVELY EVENING STAR"—"ABENDSTERN"). 3s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NEW SONG BY J. L. HATTON.

THE GOOD SHIP ROVER. Words by JOHN STEWART. Music by J. L. HATTON. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

THE VOICE AND SINGING.

BY
ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.
Price 12s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

VOCAL EXERCISES COMPOSED BY FRANK MORI.

Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by the late FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

New Edition of "LE PETIT SOLFEGE."

LE PETIT SOLFEGE. Vingt Solfèges pour Voix de Mezzo-Soprano. Par JOS. CURCI. Price 6s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

"This work for educational purposes will be found of inestimable value, since it is one of the very few which confines itself to the cultivation of the middle of the voice; and whilst the phrases are admirably adapted to develop the breathing powers and volume of the voice, the melodies are so exquisitely harmonized that they must prove of great benefit in the improvement of the taste and ear of a student in singing."—Pictorial World.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of
A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR
THE VOICE.
By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdme Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklein, and other successful Vocalists.
Full Music Size, price 7s.
London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis, of Basingstoke, says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

LA POMPA DI FESTA. Grande Marche, pour Piano, à Quatre Mains. Par IGNACE GIBSONE. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"HER VOICE."

"HER VOICE." IGNACE GIBSONE'S popular Song (poetry by "A Soldier's Daughter"), sung by Mdme ENRIQUEZ, is published, price 4s., by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street. W.

NEW VOCAL QUARTET.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" Arranged for Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, and Bass by G. B. ALLEN. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

THE DRAMA IN PORTMAN-MARKET.

Another MINOR RECORD.

The Marylebone Theatre! Where is it? Such, probably, would be the response of any, save the most inveterate, or veteran play-goer, when interrogated as to his knowledge of the edifice in question. Yet though this modest temple of the muses—located, as its name implies, in the north-western district of the metropolis—has, for several years, relapsed into the obscurity which characterized its earlier existence, the Marylebone Theatre possesses, nevertheless, a history of its own, and, in days long past, could boast of more than one management, whose intelligent efforts to popularize the best specimens of the Poetic Drama were fully recognized, and fairly supported, by the general public.

The Marylebone Theatre, then, is situated in Church Street, a thoroughfare which connects Portman-Market with the northern extremity of Edgware Road. It was originally built by a Mr Loveridge, and opened, under the management of Mr Hyde, on Monday, the 13th November, 1837. That the new theatre was to appeal exclusively to the humbler inhabitants of its, even then, thickly populated neighbourhood, might be inferred from the nature of the first night's programme, which offered nothing better than a melodrama, entitled The Beggar's Haunt, or Fortune's Changes. The only names of any mark, in the new company, were those of Cobham—looked upon, in his time, as the Kemble of the minor theatres—and Mr J. W. Ray, who developed, later, into a comedian of more than average ability. There was a pantomime at Christmas, preceded by Lillo's old tragedy, George Barnwell, and early in the ensuing year we find such plays as Pizarro, Jane Shore, and John Bull in the bills, but the venture apparently did not prosper, and the house eventually closed for some months. It was re-opened for the winter season of 1838-9, by Mr Johnson and Mr Nelson Lee, with a company which included the names of Attwood, John Douglass, Fenton, Collins, the pantomimist, Paul Herring, Miss Thornton, and Mrs Stanley. As the results, however, did not appear to be favourable, they abandoned it, early in the summer, to Mr Fox Cooper, who did not long continue his speculation.

We have failed to discover any trace of its doings in the two following years, during which the place probably remained shut up altogether, but it seems to have been in a great measure re-constructed in 1842, and was re-opened on Monday, the 12th of December, in that year, as the New Theatre-Royal, Marylebone, under the leaseeship of Mr Douglass, and the stage-management of Mr Edward Stirling—always a reliable name. The new theatre was built to accommodate 2,300 people, and was pronounced very handsome. The list of performers comprised the names of Freer, Attwood, Rayner, and Cobham. Mr Osbaldiston and Miss Vincent played during the following week, and Mr Nelson Lee provided a new pantomime at Christmas.

The house, at length fairly started, remained, for some years, in the hands of Mr Douglass, whose management not only answered, in a pecuniary sense, but was characterized by a good deal of spirit and energy. Its more noticeable events were as follows: Mrs Waylett, a delightful singer, and actress, in her day, appeared in February, 1843, and Freer also played in Rob Roy, as well as in the now forgotten, but once famous melodrama, One o'Clock, or The Knight and the Wood-Demon; another fossil, the burlesque of Bombastes Furioso, was in the bills, a few months later; and in December, the Coriolanus of Shakspere was respectably presented. Freer, Charles Dillon, the tragedian, Mr Otway, and Mrs W. West, were the leading players throughout this year, as well as during the greater part of 1844. In March of the latter, The Castle Spectre of Monk Lewis was given, with success. On its original production at Drury Lane, in 1797, Kemble and Sarah Siddons had not felt themselves above appearing in this play, which was long the favourite ghost drama of every theatre, or even barn, throughout the United Kingdom. That it has now to a great extent become obsolete, is probably due to an improved taste, which declines to tolerate the inflated language which Mat Lewis has put into the mouths of his leading characters. Yet, to a purely melo-dramatic audience, The Castle Spectre must ever prove attractive, owing to the cleverness of the various situations, and the admirable skill with which the interest is led up to the several appearances of the ghost. Although its kind may not be of the best, the old play is still the best of its kind; and, as a matter of fact, under the slightly altered title of The Spectre of Conway Castle, it remains to this day a stock-piece in the repertory of the theatre in Portman-Market.

Wright, Paul Bedford, and Miss Emma Stanley were engaged in September, 1844, and were followed by Mr Denvil, in Lord Byron's Manfred. A Mr Hudson Kirby played on Wednesday, December 17th, for the benefit of that once popular transpontine manager, Mr Almar. For Mr Douglass's benefit, early in 1845, Wright and Paul Bedford again acted, in company with Widdicombe, Cony, Blanchard, and Mr E. F. Savile. When the theatre re-opened for the winter of this year, the celebrated mime, Wieland, was engaged to play the Imp in the ballet-pantomime, The Daughter of the Danube. In October, Mr and Mrs Honner were to be seen, in the pretty old drama, Mary, the Maid of the Inn. A Mr Grattan Dawson also "starred" in Macbeth and other plays. The clown, Paul Herring, was engaged for Easter, 1846. Mr Rayner appeared as Hamlet, in January 1847, and afterwards, the American Dwarf, Tom Thumb was exhibited. In February, Mr Bayntun Rolt played in King Richard the Third, and a transatlantic actor, Mr J. R. Scott, in Pizarro, and Damon and Pythias. Mr Charles Dillon returned at Easter, in Don Cæsar de Bazan. These efforts at legitimacy, though not without merit, were all of the rough-and-ready order, and were alternated, it may be added, with such sorry stuff as Paul the Poacher, Jack Ketch, Bone Squash, The Last Link of Love, Sarah the Jewess, or The Extorted Oath, and lastly by a piece with the imposing title, The Royal Crusader, or The Black Brand of Rome!

Mr Douglass's management terminated at the end of June 1847, and on the 1st of the following August, an announcement appeared in the daily papers that Mrs Warner, who had recently withdrawn from Sadler's Wells—then, and long afterwards, under the ever-memorable direction of Phelps and Greenwood,—had taken the Marylebone Theatre. Mrs Warner, in her preliminary circular, promised "the performance of such plays as may appear best suited to the resources of the establishment," and added that "an earnest endeavour will be made to illustrate these plays appropriately and effectively. The engagement of a company, selected with a reference to the task of duly rendering the text of the great dramatic authors, the assistance of artists of the first competence, in the scenic and mechanical departments, and the liberal and careful provision of all the other accessories to the histrionic art, will, it is hoped, enable the management to accomplish this purpose."

Having been thoroughly cleansed and re-decorated, the house opened for the season, on Monday the 30th August, with Shakspere's play, A Winter's Tale, in which it is needless to say that Mrs Warner played Hermione—one of her finest parts—in her finest manner, and was well supported by Mrs. Tyrrell, as Paulina, by Miss Angell, a pleasing young actress, from Bath, as Perdita, and by another and very clever debutante, from Birmingham, Miss Charlotte Saunders, as Mopsa. Mr Graham, a prominent member, some years previously, of Macready's company at Drury Lane, was the Leontes of the night, Mr. James Johnstone, from Liverpool, Polixenes; Mr George Vining, also from Bath, Florizel; and an excellent Autolycus was discovered, in Mr Henry Webb, who though almost unknown to London, had long enjoyed exceptional popularity, as a comedian, throughout the provinces. Generally speaking, the performance was of the most careful kind. The scenery and accessories, as promised beforehand, were rich, and in good taste, and the whole entertainment augured well for the success of the experiment.

(To be continued.)

SIGNOR PINSUTI'S NEW OPERA AT VENICE.

The following telegram from Venice reached us on Thursday morning:—

"Signor Pinsuti's new opera, Margherita, was given last night for the first time, and obtained a decided success. The house was full to excess. The performance went off splendidly, and the composer was called out eighteen times."

We sincerely congratulate Signor Pinsuti on having satisfied the exigencies of a very critical public. It is well known how severely new works are judged in Venice.

ROME.—The Russian singer, Mdlle Adler, will remain here till May, subsequently visiting London and Paris.

Digitized by Google

FORM, OR DESIGN, IN VOCAL MUSIC.

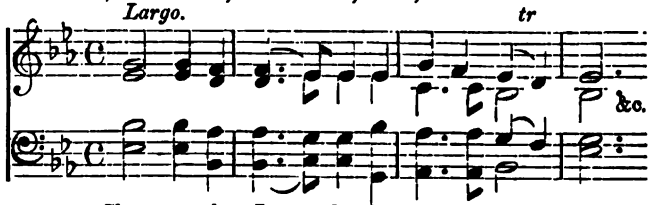
The Glee.

(Continued from page 132.)

Another glee of Bishop's, "Sleep, gentle lady," from his opera, Clari, or the Maid of Milan, is in two movements, both in the same key. The first, in slow time, is in the miniature sonata form of the ballads, a phrase beginning :

Ex. 134.

Alto, 1st Tenor, 2nd Tenor, Bass, with Accompt.



ends with a half close and a second ends with a full close. The quick movement is a miniature of the first Scarlatti form, with a modulating second part (like the Preludes of Bach described before), but with the addition of a coda. A first strain :

Ex. 135.

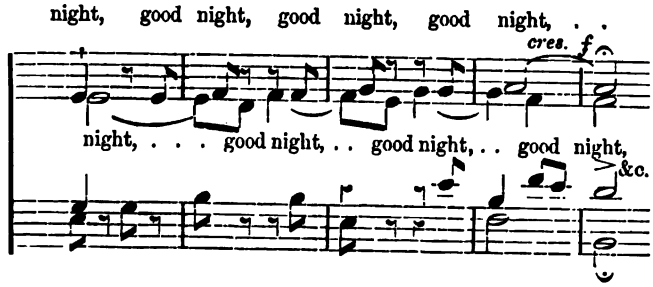
ends with a full close. After this has been repeated with a varied accompaniment, a second strain follows with modulation :

Ex. 136.

A half close brings back the original key with the first strain as at first (see ex. 135), and from the close of this a coda grows out :

Ex. 137.

night, good night, good night, good night, . .



The great success of this beautiful little piece induced Bishop to treat it in somewhat of an utilitarian manner, after a habit of his, by arranging it for other voices than the original, viz., S.A.T.B., and also for three voices.

Some say these glees of Bishop's are not glees, but concerted pieces with accompaniment. This matters very little, for we have then only to say that Bishop re-discovered or re-invented concerted pieces with accompaniment of the same kind as, but much better than, the concerted pieces with accompaniment, which Playford called glees ; that he extended the use of them for the stage, and that they were appropriated for concert and home use, and that thus his music set an example to composers of oratorios, operas, and single pieces of later years, who put some of their most beautiful thoughts into the same form, although they do not call them glees.

Oliveria Prescott.

(To be continued.)

THE REID FESTIVAL.

(Supplement—from the "Edinburgh Courant.")

It may be added that the palms, &c., in front of the platform came, by permission of Professor Dickson, from the Botanical Gardens; and that the wreaths for busts, and the button-hole bouquets with which all the members of the orchestra were decorated, were presented by the Countess of Rothes. We hear that among other floral offerings on this occasion was a box of cut flowers, addressed to Mr Frederick King, accompanied by a card on which was written, in a fair hand, "To the rising Baritone of Kings;" and some beautiful specimens of southern violets, accompanied by the following appropriate lines, were received by the Reid Professor, Sir Herbert Oakeley :—

"Sweet fragrance rising from the earth
Proclaims the purple violet's birth ;
Sweet music floats upon the air
Where all who honour Art repair
To tender homage at her shrine.
Happy, who hear those sounds divine,
Whose ears are open to discern
Her glorious thoughts that live and burn !
But yet, like all beneath the sun,
A brilliant triumph is not won,
Save at stern cost of care, and toil,
And anxious thought—a tangled coil.
The flame of much self-sacrifice
Must touch the incense ere it rise ;
And bleeding feet must lead the van
Ere hope and progress come to man.
Not for light meed of fame or praise
Such clear-eyed souls devote their days :
Enough for them if, ere they cease,
New voices raise the Hymn of Peace ;
They sow the seed with toil and pain—
Others may reap the golden grain.
Yet may the gods, propitious, bless
Such efforts with deserved success !
May all men feel that not in vain
Is raised to-night the full toned-strain :
So, as all hearts responsive thrill,
These echoes from the Heavenly Hill
Throughout the year may vibrate still !"

CAUTION.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

Sir,—Allow me to draw the attention of my musical friends to the following facts. There has recently appeared at Berlin a spurious edition of my Gavotte in A minor (from the suite dedicated to Mdme Essipoff), arranged—or rather disarranged—for four hands. Not only has the meddler and muddler spoilt my piece, but has inserted with much industry chords of his own, so that he managed to get the harmonies wrong as well. Fearing that people might think that I committed them, I now beg you, through the medium of your valuable paper, to assist me in exposing the gross injustice done to me by the publisher, Mr Erler, who refused to withdraw the edition, notwithstanding my pressing request.—I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

8, St Lawrence Road, Notting Hill, W. E. Silas.
March 5, 1882.

Digitized by Google

EMMA ALBANI.

(Condensed from the Berlin "Vossische Zeitung.")

Mdme Albani-Gye, a born Canadian, the admired prima donna of Covent Garden Theatre, possesses one of those eminently beautiful sopranos in which the metallic quality and the melting character of the tones are perfectly balanced, and which rule over the entire scale of sound-colours, from nervous energy to the gentlest breath. The voice moves through every possible gradation of strength, from forte to pianissimo, and the decrescendo especially possesses an unusual fascination. According to the accepted classification, Mdme Albani's voice is a high mezzo-soprano, which may be called full and powerful up to C, and masters the D with a light and certain head-sound; the middle and lower registers continue with perfect smoothness, and are free from any admixture of an unfeminine chest-register. The intonation is irreproachable. The lady's facility in bravura is something extraordinary. She executes the most difficult specimens with ease and perfect neatness, as well as with that rhythmically-delicate continuity without which fioriture have no artistic value. The bravura legato prevails over the staccato, just as in fact a partiality for interweaving the notes tenderly and tastefully into each other, together with the art of doing so, is a peculiarity of the fair artist. Her chromatic scales and shakes—the latter generally with rhythmical stress on the principal note, which is more difficult than the opposite plan—are incomparable. The lady's mode of expression is especially beautiful in all that is lyrical and full of deep feeling, without, however, any want of vigorous accentuation in dramatic passages. Mdme Albani is more dramatic than Etelka Gerster, if less daring and energetic than Adelina Patti. As with most vocalists trained in the Italian school whose studies are usually limited to a few parts, everything with Mdme Albani is accurately calculated beforehand. She does not abandon herself so freely and completely to the inspiration of the moment, as Pauline Lucca, but sings as a speaker who has most carefully prepared his speech. We may regret the absence of that warmth which springs from the inspiration of the moment, and might even prefer trifling technical shortcomings; but even this certainty in the impersonation has its value.

G. E.

—o—

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Although every musician present at the meeting, called by the Prince of Wales, and held in the banquetting room of St. James's Palace, on Tuesday morning, February 28th, would be justified in feeling honoured and flattered by the interest royalty and its surroundings were taking in him and his works; yet it would be as well for him to bear in mind that solicitude, not for any one, or any class of professors, but for the art itself, was the prevailing sentiment, and the actuating motive. It was decidedly instructive for him to obtain a view of his art from a different, if not a higher stand-point, than that usually occupied, and to listen to speakers regarding the subject free from the personality, necessarily attending his own perception. The follower of music, as a calling, is generally, in the first place, led to the art from sheer love of it, and for the pleasure the pursuit of it affords, and, afterwards, adopts it as a weapon to wield in the "struggle for existence." Thus the art with him is bounded by inclination and occupation. What was once a pleasure becomes a business. But the speakers at St. James's, looking beyond the individual, dwelt upon the influences of the art upon the nation at large. His Grace of Canterbury pointed out its value to the Church, and the duty laid upon her officers to encourage the cultivation of the highest gifts of harmony, so that fitting aids may be provided for public worship. The Premier, and the leader of the Opposition, meeting on neutral grounds, both eloquently insisted upon the policy of directing the musical instinct of the nation to a higher level than it now occupies; whilst the Prince of Wales extolled the practice of music as a source and means of ever-increasing enjoyment. The musical resources of the empire, he maintained, were not at present satisfactorily utilized; and he declared, that the spreading knowledge and exercise of the art, seen in town and village, in public assemblies, and private homes, called for recognition and guidance, without which talent was often wasted, and genius lost. To remedy this state of things, the Prince proposed to establish a Royal College of Music upon the model furnished by the conservatoires of the Continent, and earnestly pleaded for aid in the patriotic endeavour. As yet the response made has been fairly encouraging. But is not "aid to the cause of music" a somewhat new cry? Is not the recipient of favours too near home for the exhibition of that spontaneity which now and again moves the world to admiration? Whatever the result, loyal affection will be felt by musicians generally to the Heir to the throne for the able advocacy of their cause, and the lead he has taken in a movement made on behalf of their art.

If the Prince then is worthy of honour and thanks for care and interest manifested, he certainly commands sympathy for the many difficulties that beset his undertaking. There can be no manner of doubt that he is the very last man in the world capable of bearing harshly upon a deserving institution that stands in the way of his projects. Yet circumstances seem to lead him to that unpalatable occupation—for is not the Royal Academy of Music in peril of losing by his action some of its hard earned advantages? It played an up-hill game for a long time, and only a few years back the professors had to make sacrifices in order to keep the good ship afloat. Now, however, it has, in a very large degree, secured the confidence of the public. The crowded state of the class-rooms testifies to the good management of the directors, as well as to the ability of the professors; and it may be said that there is scarcely a musical man living who is held in greater respect, or worthier of it, than the Principal of the Royal Academy of Music. Therefore, any loss of prestige or diminution of success sustained by the institution would be felt by some as little less than a public misfortune, and, by a large majority, the differences, seemingly irreconcilable, that keep the Academy and College apart, are sincerely regretted. Other difficulties are in the way of the promoters of the new School. One is the doubt of it getting a wise management—a doubt engendered by witnessing the collapse of the earlier founded "Training School," and confirmed by the remarkably able letters by "Amateur" upon the subject in the Daily Telegraph, and reproduced a few weeks back in the columns of the Musical World. Besides, does not the musical profession, in great part, withhold at present its full confidence, and particularly members resident in the provinces? They are naturally jealous of a centralization likely to work them mischief, and contend that the clever pupils will be attracted more than ever to London. The announcement that degrees will be granted by the proposed college scarcely relieves their anxiety, for already they complain of the system, largely adopted in the country, of examination of pupils by London professors, and fears are entertained that the new college will increase the evil by flooding the country with certificated teachers. Consideration should certainly be shown, by any body of men entrusted with the power of bestowing degrees, honours, and certificates, towards country music-masters, not a few of whom would successfully stand a general comparison, if not a special examination, with their town-dwelling judges. It should be borne in mind that many of them received their training in cathedrals scattered over the country, where the most solid education was to be found that England afforded. Yet fear is felt that such a practical class of men will be affected by regulations of a central body taking no heed of isolated modes, and scant opportunities of combined efforts in the musical education of past times. To hear of these matters the Prince of Wales did not at the meeting think fit to call upon musical professors for speeches. Perhaps he was wise therein. The professor is often, particularly if he hail from the north,* found gifted with a sustaining eloquence that neither halts nor fails, and had such an one addressed the meeting the disputed clôture would have had a chance of proving its merits. Still, it is desirable that a conference of London and provincial musicians should be held, not to cavil at, much less to oppose, the proposals of our Prince, but rather to assist, by clear statements and sage councils, in the establishment of an institution honestly and generously intended for the good of national art and its professors.

PENCERDD GWFFYN.

[That institution might be founded without prejudice to the Royal Academy of Music, Mr Gwffyn. The public would soon find out where the best teaching is to be got.—D. B.

NEW YORK.—Returned from her concert-tour in the Southern States, the ineffable Adelina Patti was to appear in opera at the Germania Theatre. The works selected are Il Barbiere, La Traviata, Il Trovatore, La Sonnambula, and Dinorah.—[In all of which she is without compeer.—Dr Blidge.]

PARIS.—On Friday, the 3rd inst., Frédéric Szarvady, who died, aged 60, at his residence on the Boulevard Malesherbes, was conveyed to his last home. He was connected with music by his union with Wilhelmine Clauss, who now bewails his loss. Hungarian by birth, Szarvady had been mixed up in the politics of his native land, but for many years was settled in Paris.

* Or sou'-east by sou'.—Dr Blidge.

Digitized by Google

THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

St James's Hall was filled to the doors on Monday night, and a number of people greatly desiring an entrance were turned away. The axiom that an effect has always a sufficient cause applies in this case as in every other, but the sufficiency must be more than commonly obvious when it is considered that Mdme Schumann, now a rare visitor to this country, made her first appearance for the season. Robert Schumann's widow, and the great artist who, more than a generation ago, made the name of Clara Wieck famous, will command increasing interest as long as she appears before the public. It is natural that this should be. The period she more particularly represents is rapidly receding towards that point in the past where venerated traditions begin to form, and where a nimbus of heroism akin to that of divinity encircles with a growing radiance illustrious heads. Besides, every year brings forward those to whom, on account of their youth, Mdme Schumann is little better than a name, and who desire a fuller knowledge while the opportunity of it remains. Consideration of these facts gave peculiar and touching interest to the reappearance of the great pianist on Monday night. It explained the eagerness with which her advent was awaited; the applause that greeted her presence, and the almost religious attention with which every note she produced was heard. Mdme Schumann played only once, but in doing even that she taxed her physical powers with a severity best appreciable by those who know what is involved in a performance of her late husband's Fantasia in C major (Op. 17). The chance of hearing this piece interpreted by the single artist who can do so with supreme authority was the more precious because the composition is not likely to be often attempted. It demands, besides rare manipulative skill, uncommon patience and perseverance of study, while the effect is, to say the least, uncertain upon other than a special audience. Mdme Schumann hid away the difficulties and the occasional crudities of the work under an easy masterfulness that brought out every element of beauty. It would be idle to say that the now venerable lady showed all her old power. The greatest in art lies as open as the least to the influence of Time, which, like the grim spectre that dogs its steps, knocks at all doors. But when an illustrious artist reaches this stage, he resembles some ancient temple—

> "Before decay's effacing fingers > Hath swept the lines where beauty lingers."

—a temple made the more lovely for the mellowing influence of years. Mdme Schumann's performance was a model of purity in style, of reverence for the author, and of modest self-pretension. Aiming at nothing but a simple translation of the composer's thoughts into sound, it achieved everything that legitimately crowns the work of interpretive art. That the opportunity of hearing Mdme Schumann on future occasions will be eagerly sought is a safe prophecy.

The programme contained, besides the Fantasia in C, Beethoven's Quartet in E minor, most exquisitely played by Messrs Joachim, Ries, Straus, and Piatti; the same master's string Trio in C minor, and Bach's Chaconne for violin alone, the last named once more serving Herr Joachim for a marvellous effect. Miss Spencer Jones was the vocalist, and sang with marked acceptance.—D. T.

—o—

CRYSTAL PALACE.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—The programme selected for last Saturday's Crystal Palace Concert was eminently classical, but—excepting one or two numbers of the programme—eminently dull. After "God save the Queen" had been played, in allusion to the recent attempt to shoot her Majesty, the band gave a fine performance of Spontini's overture, Olympie—a work which, despite their efforts, struck the public ear, now accustomed as it is to blare and flare, rage and roar, mystic utterances, and nothing much to utter—as a faded piece of tapestry would appeal to the public eye after the bright oil-paintings of the most glaring English colourists. Mr Manns and his devoted orchestra went for their losing game with a will; it was no fault of theirs that Spontini's voice was the voice of a slow period, that the Mendelssohn of the afternoon was a Samson bound by the Delilah of religious opposition, or that, as in the case of the national Hungarian "Rsgoczy" March—quoted from Berlioz's Faust—they could not transform themselves into Hungarians for that occasion only. The enthusiasm of the performers, individually and collectively, saved the concert from entirely crushing the spirits of the audience, as, less perfectly rendered, such a programme must inevitably have done. The "Reformation" Symphony, which followed Spontini's overture, might be described by non-appreciators of the great subject as a long-drawn-out lugubriosity—by faithful adherents thereof and consequently swearers-by the good John Bunyan—as a musical Pilgrim's Progress. The spirit which changed the fanciful flights of a Meyerbeer into the grovelling groanings of the Anabaptists, might well curb the magnificent ideality of a Mendelssohn! A spirit, perhaps, of centering, causal, good, but whose rays alone, and whose substance never, could penetrate into art, the monarch of abstraction. Causes and art will never, can never, be amalgamated, any more than water and oil. Art is essentially homogeneous with effect. It is not the cause, but the effect, which links the subject with the artist. It is this which but too often enlists the artist on the wrong side; for beautiful causes have hideous effects, and vice versâ. In the case of the Reformation, however grand, lofty, pure the cause, the effects were undeniably antagonistic to art. Mendelssohn's soaring spirit must have been attracted by the bold simplicity of his subject. To imagine he would embody a theme which could not compel that spirit's allegiance would be a dastardly insult flung upon his revered and respected grave. But, on approaching his subject it is evident that he was thrown back upon the very mental fount of his being, that fount which is out of the pale of expression. Cause alone can deal with cause, and from the effects of the Reformation his power of expression shrank. For, artistically speaking, what were they? Stripped churches, rudely whitewashed,—pictures, statues, every graceful art adornment destroyed, dreary discourses from black-robed, in many cases illiterate, men, instead of gorgeous ritual and polished addresses. The delicacies of life, fitting attire, house-decoration, politeness, all the subdued glitter of well-appointed society cast aside as "filthy rags;" instead, the bare human being glorying in uncouth ugliness and savagely upright as a John the Baptist! In but one instance was the great master himself, where, in the scherzo in which musical thought naturally becomes more puerile and feminine, he seemed to dream of some inaccessible Margaret, some fairhaired Puritan maiden whose mind, spotless as her coif and kerchief, was fixed as steadily upon her spinning-wheel as were her peaceful eyes. The dissatisfaction of the composer with his work is manifest in its close, which, attempting a climax, fails for very want of heart. "Eine feste Burg ist unser Gott," might tell, sung with rugged fervour by Puritan choirs, but played by a nineteenth century orchestra, it is a sham.

If Wagner's Siegfried Idyll—a long domestic wail of sad bliss—had been applied as a final trial to patient Grisel, the chances are the good old tale would have been related otherwise. Frau Cosima must have a long-suffering soul, and Herr Wagner is to be congratulated on the possession of a son (the effort was made on behalf of his male infant), who, if he has not yet "learnt to labour," has evidently "learnt to wait," perhaps a more useful quality in the human young.

The soloists in this strange musical representation of the darkly dreary in life were Signor Foli (vocalist), and Miss Marie Krebs (instrumentalist). Signor Foli, who, to judge by the seemingly increasing bulk of his voice, should have a throat the size of the Tun of Heidelberg, gave Caspar's famous Aria, "Taci, Taci," from Weber's Freischütz, and Gounod's "She alone charmeth my sadness," the latter contribution doubtless creating a wish among the audience that there could really be present some "she" potent enough to charm away a growing sadness which even the bright, brilliant performances of Miss Marie Krebs failed to dispel. This clever German pianist chose to play an antiquated concerto of Ferdinand Ries, of which the best which can be said is, that the good old master looking into his mind, turning it upside down even, for a drain, and finding it empty, went out into the fields and tried to transcribe from the pleasant sounds provided us by Nature. Nature, perhaps, has appreciated the compliment, and has brought Miss Marie Krebs to be the interpreter of her acknowledgment. But even the long-practised fingers of the German lady failed to give life to the reflections of rustic scenes in the dimmed mirror held up by Herr Ferdinand Ries. Miss Krebs gave for her solos a ballo and bourrée by Gluck, and a charming "Octave Study" by her late father, Herr C. Krebs, her unusual mechanical skill earning her a well-merited re-call. The audience, indeed, in spite of their evident dejection, gratefully acknowledged the manifest efforts of the soloists by re-calling them after each of their performances; they also burst into applause at the sudden blaze of the Edison electric light, a new interest which revived them almost into an animated retreat, when the "Ragoczy" March brought the sorrowful concert to a close. ASTUR.

[I should like to have been at the concert described in such funereal hues, if only for the sake of that dear old Reformation Symphony ("bless it!"). No doubt, if our highly esteemed contributor (who sat the programme out, by the way) applied to Abbé Liszt, that famous laye(c)lastic, would re-arrange (or derange) the peccant work, which might thenceforth be announced as

Symphony in D—"Reformation"——MENDELSSOHN-LISZT.

The improvement would be impetuously manifest.—OTTO BEARS.]

Digitized by Google

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

Balfe's opera, Moro; or the Painter of Antwerp, was given on Saturday morning instead of Rienzi, as originally announced. The cast was the same as heretofore, with the difference only that Mr Betjemann, with his usual readiness, performed the part of Orsini instead of Mr D'Egville. In the other parts Miss Burns, Mr M'Guckin, and Mr Crotty especially distinguished themselves, and the audience, fully impressed with the beauty and freshness of the melodies, received the work most cordially and applauded very heartily at every possible opportunity. The melodies of Balfe, in spite of what may be said, still find their way to the hearts of all lovers of music, and prove that he was possessed of the divine art of "finding out musical tunes," and had he been anything else but a child of Great Britain his countrymen would have given more honour than has yet been paid to him. At present "he lives in the people's hearts" chiefly, but it may be hoped that justice will speedily be rendered to him, and that at least a memorial tablet will be allowed a place in the National Walhalla, Westminster Abbey.

No other English musician has been so highly esteemed at home or abroad for his artistic powers as Michael William Balfe. No other single musician, English or foreign, has written for the best theatres in France, Italy, Germany, and England operas to libretti in the several tongues, many of which hold a good place in the repertoires of the lyric stage to this day. It is true there is a fine statue of him in the vestibule of Drury Lane Theatre, the home of so many of his triumphs, but something more is wanted. The memory of the man who has given many thousands of his fellow-countrymen a series of the purest pleasures of sweet melody during his lifetime should be honoured by some national recognition in some spot hallowed by the relics of a thousand worthies in art, literature, and music, and the sooner this is done the sooner will one cause of reproach be lifted away from among us. Englishmen are not ungrateful to their heroes, excepting those in music.—Morning Post.

—o—

Wagner's Ring in London.

(Communicated.)

On the 5th day of May next there will begin at Her Majesty's Theatre in London the performances of Richard Wagner's Der Ring des Nibelungen. This grand work of music, which extends over four nights, will be represented four times. It is out of the question to give more than these four Cycles in England, since director Angelo Neumann has to return to Germany with his distinguished troupe of artists at the end of May. It will no doubt be of considerable interest to the musical public, to know something further about the artists who are going to take part in these remarkable performances. They are in fact the élite of all the most eminent and famous singers of the whole of Germany. On the top of the list stand Herr and Frau Vogl, who form the chief ornament of the Opera at Munich which is famous for possessing the very best singers in existence. The first appearance of this couple of singers in Berlin gave a striking proof of their unresisting power, which carries all before them. It is no wonder then, that Richard Wagner has entrusted Herr Vogl with the chief part in the ensuing performances of Parsifal at Bayreuth. To this artist is joint Herr Albert Niemann, Opera Singer to H.M. the King of Prussia, who is acknowledged by the whole musical world to be the foremost representative of Tannhäuser and Lohengrin. Besides his art in singing, Herr Niemann possesses also an uncomparable talent for dramatic action, which renders him of the highest value for Wagner's Music-dramas. The two prima-donnas, Frau Hedwig Reicher-Kindermann and Frau Sachse-Hofmeister, are stars of uncommon splendour; both were discovered by Herr Neumann; both have carried the Leipzic Opera to an unprecedented height of excellency; and both have created the loudest enthusiasm on the occasion of their appearance in Berlin. Herr Emil Scaria of Vienna possesses a base voice of such extraordinary power that he creates a sensation wherever he appears; in the characters of Wotan and Wanderer in the Nibelung's Ring he gained the highest admiration at Berlin last Spring. Herr Otto Schelper and Herr Heinrich Wiegand are both prominent members of the Leipsic Opera and rank equal in their artistic speciality with the two singers from Munich: Herr Theodor Reichmann and Herr Carl Schlosser, the former is a great favourite with the public wherever he goes and the latter was the celebrated "Mime" at the Bayreuth Festival Plays. Among Herr Neumann's Wagner Opera Company the following artists of excellent reputation must further be mentioned: Mesdames Antonie Schreiber; Orlanda Riegler; Auguste Kraus and Katharina Klafsky as well as Herr Eilers. The direction of the Orchestra is placed in the hands of Herr Anton Seidl who has won the favor of Richard Wagner in the highest degree through the mastery with which he interprets his works. As Mr Neumann has been favoured with the special permission from H.M. the King of Bavaria to use all the splendid scenery, costumes, armours, &c., which were employed at Bayreuth he hopes to render the representations in London even superior to those in Berlin. The Crown-prince of Germany at the time of the Nibelungen performances in Berlin expressed his conviction to Herr Neumann, that such perfect representations of this unique work would be sure to find full appreciation in London.

—o—

WALTER MACFARREN'S ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS.

(Condensed from the "Brighton Guardian.")

When a real musician, composer, and pianist takes the responsibility of directing a series of concerts, we are bound to listen; but when that composer brings together seventy of the best instrumentalists of the day, entrusting the lead to a veteran like M. Sainton, and standing himself forward as conductor, we admire not only his pluck, but his reliance upon the public for support. Mr Macfarren presents us with orchestral concerts at popular prices, and after attending the first of these concerts what answer have we to give him? Are we to stand coldly looking on, or to applaud his motive and the manner in which his ideas have been carried out? No one can imagine that a tried and experienced man of the world, and a musician, believes that in a venture like this he sees profit. Mr Macfarren can have had but one object in view—a desire to show what can be done in music by earnest application and assiduous preparation. We have not too many good conductors at the present day, and this gentleman's appearance in front of his orchestra, without music or desk, directing Beethoven's C minor Symphony, was of itself noteworthy. Was it not Titian to whom a young artist exhibited a picture he had painted with his finger, and was received with this gentle reprimand, "Why did you not take your brush?" We may find some exclaiming that composers frequently give concerts to bring their own works before the public. On the present occasion, however, the Concertstück for pianoforte and MS. overture to King Henry V. did not exhibit any large amount of egotism, and Mr Walter Macfarren merits our thanks. Such a concert as he gave in St James's Hall is a gain to art and a boon to a music-loving people, who congregate most where moderate charges are demanded. Go to Carl Rosa's performances and look through all parts of the house, even the pit and the gallery, and afterwards tell us where you find the most commonplace people. It will assuredly not be in the cheaper parts of the house. Mr Macfarren has fixed his prices so low that every class imbued with a love for music can be gratified. Opening with the overture to Oberon, including Mendelssohn's violin Concerto, the MS. overture to King Henry V., Mozart's Zauberflöte overture, and the C minor Symphony of Beethoven, the orchestra had plenty to do. The performance was all good, and some of it remarkably so. Mr Macfarren's Concertstück in E, for pianoforte, has been heard on several occasions, and bids well to become a concert-room favourite. Miss Margaret Gyde did full justice to the pianoforte part. There was no attempt at display, but thoroughly correct execution was combined with genuine taste. M. Sainton played Mendelssohn's concerto. The vocalists were Mr Santley and Miss Mary Davies.

PHOSPHOR.

TIME.*

Time may rob the eye of brightness,
Take from nimble feet their lightness,
Sunny locks may turn to gray,
Cheeks may wither, health decay;
But time can never, never part,
The true love from a faithful heart.

Time may bring us joy and gladness,
Or may change our mirth to sadness;
Who knoweth as each day comes round
If 'tis for weal or woe we're bound?—
But this we know can ne'er depart—
The true love of a faithful heart.

Time, alas! we know must sever,
For we cannot live for ever;
But still the recollection's sweet,
We live in hopes on High to meet;
For never, never can depart
The true love of a faithful heart.

* Copyright.

EMILY JOSEPHS.

The Carl Rosa Opera Company opens at the Royal Standard Theatre on Monday evening with Mignon, the caste being the same as at Her Majesty's Theatre.

Digitized by Google

ST JAMES'S HALL.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS,

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON, 1881-82.

DIRECTOR—MR S. ARTHUR CHAPPELL.

THE THIRTY-FIFTH CONCERT OF THE SEASON

WILL TAKE PLACE ON

MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 13, 1882,

At Eight o'clock precisely.

Programme.

PART I.—Quartet, in D minor, Op. 161, for two violins, viola, and violoncello (Schubert)—MM. Joachim, L. Ries, Hollander, and Piatti; Song, "Oh! had I Jubal's lyre," Joshua (Handel)—Miss Santley; Sonata Quasi Fantasia, in E flat, Op. 27, No. 2, for pianoforte alone (Beethoven)—Mdme Schumann.

PART II.—Fantaisie-Stücke, Op. 88, pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (Schumann), first time—Mdme Schumann, MM. Joachim, and Piatti; Song, "Zuleika" (Mendelssohn)—Miss Santley; Quartet, in G major, Op. 64, No. 4, for two violins, viola, and violoncello (Haydn)—MM. Joachim, L. Ries, Hollander, and Piatti.

Accompanist—MR ZERBINI.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 11, 1882,

At Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

Quartet, in A major, Op. 41, No. 3, for two violins, viola, and violoncello (Schumann)—MM. Joachim, L. Ries, Hollander, and Piatti; Song, "Ständchen" (Schubert)—Mdlle Kufferath; Sonata, in E flat, "Les Adieux, l'Absence, et le Retour," for pianoforte alone (Beethoven)—Mdme Schumann; Kol Nidrei (Hebrew Melody), for violoncello, with pianoforte and harp accompaniment (Max Bruch)—Signor Piatti; Songs, "Das Veilchen" (Mozart), and "Frühlingslied" (Mendelssohn)—Mdlle Kufferath; Quartet, in D major, Op. 64, No. 1, for two violins, viola, and violoncello (Haydn)—MM. Joachim, L. Ries, Hollander, and Piatti.

Accompanist—MR ZERBINI.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

O. P.—Good; but to publish your letter would be high treason.

SHEEPSHANKS OF THE SHETLANDS.—When you talk about Mendelssohn you should never talk about Schumann—and vice versâ. They had absolutely nothing in common. Ask Omega of the Orkneys.

MARRIAGES.

On Jan. 24th, at Tarbes (France), JULES LASSERRE, violoncellist, director of the Musical Union, London, to MARIE, daughter of Antoine Clarens, Inspecteur des Ecoles, Tarbes, France.

On March 7th, at Holy Trinity Church, Brompton, by the Rev. W. Conington, M.A., Vicar, FREDERICK AUGUSTUS, eldest son of FREDERICK BOWEN JEWSON, Esq., of 21, Manchester Street, Manchester Square, to HARRIETT, only daughter of the late HENRY DUNBAR PERKINS, Esq., of 16, Ovington Gardens, South Kensington.

DEATHS.

On March 1st, at Jessamine Cottage, Boxmoor, Hants, JESSIE MILLAR, daughter of the late ANDREW THOMSON, of Glasgow, in her 56th year.

On March 6th, at 23, Wells Street, W., JOHN KELLY, R.A.M., for forty years a member of the Orchestras of Her Majesty's Theatre and Royal Italian Opera, aged 62.

Sonnet.

Marsile! I writ thee letters full of import,
Whereunto thou hast payèd no attention.
Yet, held they matters worthier of mention
Than usually are found within a shrimp port.
They were not noticeable for their trim port,
Nor for such wit as should deserve a pension,
And yet they never asked for a subvention
Of any kind—And yet—However, n'importe.

I find that when I write to thee a letter
Longer than others, I receive scant answer,
And know not, therefore, how to act.—On Monday
I fare me back to Paris, where I met her,
And where I trust to meet thee, passing one day
To Parzival, what time the world's in Cancer.

TURPIN L'ARCHEVÈQUE.

Hech! sirs, fine feathers ne'er mak' guid singin' birds.
HAL-O'-THE-WYND.

(At a Hostelry in the Nethergate, Dundee. SAM., the waiter, and BOOTS owre a dram). SAM. loquitur:—

Ye heard yon birkie frae the Sooth
Wha sang sae sweet yestreen,
Eh! man, he left his Sawbath claes
Awa' in Aberdeen.

It seems thae porters i' the North
Hae fa'en intae a mess—
They packed his boxes i' the van
That gaed tae Inverness.

He'd jist arrived at sax o'clock,
An' in anither 'oor
The concert room, quoth he, will be
Cramm'd tae the verra door.

The coat he wore was heather tweed,
His waiscot, breeks, an' a';
Withoot his swally-tail, he vow'd
He couldna sing ava'.

An' whan the "half-past sax" cam' in
Withoot his traiv'lling kist,
My verra hert gaed tae my moo
Tae see him shak' his fist.

His curly pow bleezed in a low,
His e'en sic daigers gleamed,
I thocht the birkie had gane wud,
He raved, he bann'd, he screamed.

He spak' o' fifteen hunner poun'
The Company wad pay
For keepin' back his Sawbath claes,
Or sendin' them astray.

Weel, whan the storm was at its hicht,
The landlord he cam' doon,
But stood dumfoondered at the door
Tae see the gyted loon.

Oor landlord is a ready chiel,
An' ne'er was kent tae fail;
He winks his e'e, "Come, Sam," says he,
"Strip aff yir swally-tail."

"Na, na," quoth I, "I'm sax fut twa,
Ye ken that winna dee,
The birkie in his stockin' soles,
Stan's only five fut three."

"Come, come," says maister, "strip yir coat,
An' shorten't wi' some steeks,
Gang up the stair at ance, an' bring
My pair o' Sawbath breeks.

"Yir waiscot's noo a wee thing glazed,
An' mine's a mile owre big,
Gang doon the yaird, get ostler Jim's;
We'll mak' a sonsie rig."

"Nae suner said than dune," quoth I
We dressed him in a trice,
It micht ha'e been his weddin' suit,
He looked sae sprig an' nice;

Folks winked and smiled, some said he'd come
Frae Poole's, dressed tae a T,
Sent doon by speshal telephone
Tae chairm us in Dundee.

WEETSTAR.

Digitized by Google

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.'s, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). Advertisements not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.
LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 11, 1882.

WAGNER'S KUNDRY.

OF all the characters Richard Wagner has imagined, that of Kundry, in Parsifal, is incomparably the greatest. To say that it might figure in the Gallery of Shakspere's women, and fairly hold its place among them, is but unvarnished truth. Whoever represents Kundry at Bayreuth will have to undergo a trying ordeal. Now that Rachel has left us, we can only imagine one Kundry—Sarah Bernhardt. Think what we may about Wagner as musician, those who fail to recognize in him a mighty poet, a poet to be named with any, from Æschylus to Shakspere, had better rub up their intellectual spectacles, and take a clearer view. In music he is Satan, if you please; in poetical drama quite the other thing. In either instance he is a man to be looked at with mixed curiosity and awe—a phenomenon, in short, whether for good or for evil our postcursors may instruct us by Telephone.

—o—

Who shall decide? &c.

St James's Hall.

ANAXIMANDER.—Well—now, what do you think of the Mephisto-Walzer? Bache knew how to conduct it.

ANAXIMENES.—Confound the Mephisto-Walzer! Give me a waltz by Strauss.

ANAXIMANDER.—You are incorrigible. From what I have gathered, you don't catch the ineffable subtlety of "Hungaria."

ANAXIMENES.—I nearly caught the tritolus after hearing it.

ANAXIMANDER.—What is the tritolus?

ANAXIMENES.—Such a combination of eccentric frenzy and involved maundering as makes up "Hungaria" invites tritolus.

ANAXIMANDER.—I thought you went enchanted.

ANAXIMENES.—Yes—enchanted to go.

[Exeunt severally.

AN ACADEMY OF MUSIC FOR SCOTLAND.—At a meeting held in Edinburgh on Wednesday last it was resolved to establish an Academy of Music for Scotland. Subscriptions of £500 each have been promised by the Duke of Buccleuch and Earl Rosebery.

CONCERTS.

A CONCERT, under the patronage of the Duchess of Leeds and other ladies of rank, given by the South Kensington Ladies' Choir in aid of the Lily Mission, Notting Hill, took place on the 21st ult. at the Vicarage room, Kensington. Oberthür's pretty and graceful cantata, The Red Cross Knight, was performed by the choir, the principal soli parts being taken by Mdme Worrell and Miss Spenser Jones. Besides this, the lady amateurs sang Henry Smart's part song, "The Honey Bee," and Schumann's "Gipsy Life," arranged by Arthur O'Leary for ladies' voices only. In all these pieces the choir evinced, as result of their training, a precision and certainty, combined with so much musical vrve, that the fashionable and numerous audience was fairly taken by surprise. The result must be as highly gratifying as it is creditable to the musical enthusiasm of Mrs Arthur O'Leary, under whose direction the concert took place. Lady Benedict, who was warmly received, kindly gave her valuable assistance, and played "Pappendieck's Minuet" and Chopin's "Valse Posthume." Mdme Worrell sang Gounod's "Worker," and Rosetta O'Leary, "I know my love lovesme," the last being warmly applauded. Miss S. Jones gave "The Banks of Allan Water," and Mr W. Bolton, Tosti's "For ever and for ever," together with Barri's "The King of the Company." The concert concluded with Herr Oberthür's arrangement for harp and piano of airs from Lucrezia Borgia, excellently played by the composer and Miss Frances Smith, which proved a spirited wind-up to a highly successful afternoon. Miss Foskett and Mrs E. Fowles assisted in accompanying the songs.

HERR RIECHELMANN, for many years organist of St Paul's, and director of a successful series of popular concerts in Malta, where he achieved a deservedly high reputation as a musical professor, is now resident in this country, where he has instituted a similar series of concerts, the first two being held at New Cross, and the third at Forest Hill. The programme of the last concert included two of Herr Riechelmann's compositions, the first, a song entitled "The Easter Robe," sung with true artistic feeling by Mdme Crewe-Riechelmann, with organ obbligato (Mr A. Crockford); and the second, a pianoforte solo entitled "The Volunteer's Farewell," which, with a "Nocturne" by Chopin, afforded Herr Riechelmann an opportunity for the display of his ability as a pianist. His performance was thoroughly appreciated. Mdme Crewe-Riechelmann, in addition to gaining an encore for "The Easter Robe," gave "Caller Herrin'," and "The Miller and the Maid" (Marzials), which were both heartily encored. Gifted with a soprano voice of unusual compass, Mdme Riechelmann sings with judgment and ability, and cannot fail to secure due recognition in the world of music. Her rendering of the favourite old Scotch song was especially praiseworthy, and the song substituted as an encore, "Within a mile of Edinboro' Town," was no less acceptable.

HAMMERSMITH.—Mr and Mrs John Cheshire gave a concert at the Broadway Lecture Hall on Monday evening, March 6. The artists were Mesdames Frances Brook and Frith; Misses Georgina Burns and Helene Arnim; Messrs Arthur Hooper, Alfred Moore, and Edwyn Frith; Mrs John Cheshire (pianist), and Mr Cheshire (harp). The programme consisted of songs, duets, &c., chiefly by modern composers, and though long, nearly every piece was redemanded. Herr Lehmeyer very ably accompanied the vocal pieces, and the attendance was satisfactory.

HERR BONAWITZ gave an evening concert on Tuesday, March 7th, at St James's Hall, in aid of the funds of Princess Frederica's Convalescent Home. He was assisted by Mr William Carter's choir and orchestra, and by the Misses Annie Marriott and Helen D'Alton, Mr William Shakespeare and Signor Foli (vocalists); Mdlles Bertha and Cecilie Brousil, Messrs Alvis and Adolph Brousil (instrumentalists). The first part was taken up by the performance (under Herr Bonawitz's direction) of that composer's Requiem, a clever work abounding in contrapuntal skill, which obtained favour on a previous occasion when introduced to the musical world of London. The Requiem was first produced by Mr Faulkner Leigh (for whom the tenor music was originally written), at St Matthias Church, Earl's Court, on March 11th, in last year (see The Musical World of March 19th, 1881). The subject necessitates a certain dreariness of theme. Herr Bonawitz, doubtless feeling how easily he might be dull where he would most wish to be sublimely solemn, has chosen short subjects and treated them shortly. If he has thus temporarily clipped the wings of his muse that she might not soar into the heights of post-mortem thought where Verdi revelled, the effect upon the hearer is that Herr Bonawitz is a modest as well as a clever man. Perhaps he is heard at his best in the second of the two movements of his Quintet in G minor, which he played in conjunction with the Mdlles and Messrs Brousil. In this essentially charming scherzo, or rather intermezzo (an allegretto with a flowing legato subject), there is imagination, pathos, and fanciful and suggestive thought, which can hardly be said of the equally masterly Requiem. The second part of the concert included songs by Misses Marriott and Helen D'Alton, Mr William Shakespeare and Signor Foli, all of whom were applauded and recalled, Signor Foli obtaining a perfect ovation for his magnificent rendering of "Qui sdegno." Signor Bonawitz appeared, late in the evening, in the capacity of solo pianist, playing the first movement of Schumann's Fantasia and Chopin's Polonaise in A flat.

Digitized by Google

On Tuesday evening the Schubert Society held their 102nd Soirée Musicale. The locale was the Marlborough Room, which was completely filled by an enthusiastic audience. Want of space compels us to omit details. Suffice it that all exerted themselves con amore. Herr Schuberth, the energetic director, must be congratulated on the success of the soirée.

—o—

PROVINCIAL.

Edinburgh.—Before the weekly practising of the University Musical Society on Friday week at the Music Class-room, Sir Herbert Oakeley said—The first piece in our concert programme which ought to be sung to-day by loyal subjects of the Queen, represented by students who come to the University of Edinburgh from most parts of an empire on which the sun never sets, is "Here's a health unto her Majesty," and, before we separate, the National Anthem. When I heard in London of the atrocious attempt, I determined to return in time for this meeting to hear you sing "God save the Queen," and perhaps to convey your indignation at what has occurred, and your thankfulness for what has been mercifully averted. I need hardly ask you, gentlemen, to rejoice at the providential prevention of that which might have been a terrible calamity. The practice "went" with unusual spirit, and at its close the National Anthem was sung by the students, to the full power of the organ, with the utmost loyalty and enthusiasm. The following telegram was sent:—"Herbert Oakeley, Edinburgh, to General Sir Henry Ponsonby, Windsor Castle. A choral class of students now assembled respectfully desire to express horror at dastardly attempt, and gratitude at its frustration. National Anthem just sung with loyal devotion. God save the Queen!"

Rochester.—The number of successful concerts given by the Rochester Choral Society has been increased by that of Monday evening, Feb. 20th (the twenty-ninth subscription concert, and second of the present season). The band consisted of some of the best players attached to the famous Crystal Palace orchestra, led by Mr Jacques Rosenthal, and the principal singers were Mdme Patey and Mr Abercrombie, the lady winning unanimous approbation and an encore for M. Watson's "Winter Story" (harmonium obbligato, the Rev. W. H. Nutter), and the gentleman for Handel's "Where'er you walk." The band, ably conducted by the Rev. W. H. Nutter, played, among other pieces, the overture, scherzo, and Wedding March from Mendelssohn's Midsummer Night's Dream, together with Schubert's overture to Rosamunde remarkably well; and the chorus "scored" a success with a concerted piece from Rossini's Guillaume Tell. Mr Rosenthal, the highly-esteemed leader of the orchestra, played the andante and finale from Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, and acquitted himself to perfection. He was most ably accompanied by the band, and, at the conclusion, compelled to return and bow his acknowledgments for the hearty applause awarded to his performance. Mr F. E. Gladstone's nautical chorus, "A wet sheet and a flowing sail," which concluded the first part of the programme, was capitally rendered by the members of the Society, conducted by the composer, who, at the conclusion, received quite an "ovation." The successful performance by the band of Herr A. J. Kappey's gavotte, "Stella," must be chronicled. It was admirably conducted by the Rev. Mr Nutter, in the unavoidable absence of the composer. This was followed by Mr Gaul's setting of Longfellow's "Silent Land," so well sung by the choir that it met with general approbation. Miss Kappey and the Rev. Mr Nutter accompanied the songs.

Cambridge University Musical Society.—A new Symphony (MS.) in D minor, "Elegiac," by C. Villiers Stanford, organist of Trinity College and conductor of the University Musical Society, was brought to a first hearing in public on Tuesday evening last, at the Society's Lenten terminal orchestral concert in the Guildhall, Cambridge. Its entitlement, "Elegiac," is to be accounted for by the fact that it is intended to reflect the ideas and emotions embodied in Tennyson's lines (in his In Memoriam), "I cannot see the features right"; but how far it does so, or whether it might not with equal reason be entitled "Tragic" or "Heroic," may best be left to future discussion, especially as it is by no means improbable that shortly it will be heard in London, and that thus an early opportunity of reverting to it will be accorded. For the present it suffices to state that full justice was done to it in performance by an excellent band brought from London, led by Messrs A. Burnett and R. Gompertz, conducted by the composer himself; and that the general impression it made, and the reception it met with, were most favourable. The programme of the rest of the concert, which was exclusively orchestral, was a highly exemplary one, including, as it did, Beethoven's overture, Coriolanus, Wagner's Siegfried Idyll, Brahms' Violin Concerto, and Joachim's Variations for Violin and Orchestra; Herr Joachim, the "lion" of the evening, being the incomparable exponent of the last two named works.—C. A. B.

—o—

CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.

With the Flying Dutchman, Tannhäuser, and Lohengrin at hand, it was not expected that Mr Carl Rosa would in any serious degree commit the fortunes of his present enterprise to Herr Wagner's Meyerbeer-cum-Spontini opera, Rienzi—the work of a time when the master was casting about to get on in the world, and could not feel the weight of principles he had not formed. Rienzi was given on Monday night for the first and last time this season, with Herr Schott as the Roman tribune, and Madame Alwina Valleria as a new representative of Irene. The general performance lacked nothing of scenic effect, for the stage manager, upon whom the work so much depends, did his best with the means supplied by a liberal entrepreneur. All was pomp and show—a series of pictures elaborate in design, brilliant in colour, and varied in character. Neither as to music nor drama, perhaps, would Herr Wagner, condescending to notice this outcome of his artistic "wild oats," have been completely satisfied; but neither could he have blamed with more than light and passing words, seeing that the representation was an ephemeral feature of the season, holding the boards for a night only. We have no new criticism upon Herr Schott's Rienzi. As a vocal effort it remains somewhat painful, and the fact consoled us for the loss of the prayer in the final act; that and much other having to be omitted owing to the lateness of the hour. As a dramatic effort it claims higher rank, perhaps, than before. Herr Schott certainly makes a hero of the strange mediæval man, who, at one moment, promised to revive the glories of ancient Rome. Dignified and noble in bearing, generous in prosperity, and brave in adversity, he enables an audience to comprehend the marvellous fortune of the character, and throws into high relief the fickleness and ingratitude which since history began have prompted mobs to destroy the erstwhile objects of their worship. The German tenor once more made a great "hit" as an equestrian. A clear stage was kept for him by the Roman forces, and he witched every looker-on with noble horsemanship, those excepted, perhaps, who being near were terrified by such unwonted caracolings. The steed, it must be owned, was neither fiery nor impatient. Piebald of aspect, appropriately Roman as to nose, and contemplative in point of mood, Herr Schott's charger preferred to stand still and regard with mildly speculative eye the appearance of Mr Randegger. But the rider had armed heels, and with these he produced a semblance of equine vigour highly becoming a war-horse whose neck should be clothed with thunder and whose voice should respond "Ha, ha!" to the trumpets. Altogether the exhibition was a grand success, and when, in obedience to a re-call, Herr Schott dashed on to the stage with seeming intent to leap the orchestra, triumph reached a climax. As Irene, Mdme Valleria showed how competent she is to represent Wagnerian heroines. The part is not a very important one, and some of the best music was, for the reason already stated, left out on Monday night; nevertheless, Mdme Valleria, by her intelligent acting and sympathetic singing, invested the Tribune's sister with a charm greater than might have been anticipated. Among recent incidents in the record of the lyric stage none is more noteworthy than the powerful use this gifted lady has made of her opportunities. She now occupies a position not less enviable than deserved, and one all the more to be prized because it has been gained by a steady course of development before the eyes of those among whom her lot is cast. Miss Yorke made good use of her opportunities in the really important part of Adriano, and gained much applause after her chief pieces; while characters of inferior consequence were sustained more or less well by Miss Clara Perry (Messenger of Peace), Mr W. Bolton (Orsini), Mr H. Pope (Raimondo), Mr Dudley Thomas (Baroncelli), and Mr Snazelle (Cecco). The performance was conducted by Signor Randegger with extreme care and corresponding success. No point seemed to escape his watchfulness either in the orchestra or on the stage.—D. T.

Friedrich Grützmacher will, in compliance with the request of the committee, play Raff's Violoncello Concerto at a concert of the Philharmonic Society, Pesth. He will afterwards visit professionally other Hungarian towns.

Digitized by Google

MR BACHE'S CONCERT.

Regarding the works performed at Mr. Bache's concert in St James's Hall, on Thursday evening, and as to the manner of their execution, there is very little to be said. Liszt was the only composer favoured by his devoted and self-sacrificing pupil, while the pieces chosen from the catalogue of that master—and Liszt is a master of his own peculiar theory and practice—were not given for the first time. The "Mephisto-Walzer" and the "Faust Symphony" had been heard and discussed on a previous occasion, which fact may have supplied a reason to most people why they should not come forward again, and is certainly a justification for present silence about their particular character and claims. Uncommon merit in performance goes without saying. Having made his choice, Mr Bache is not the man to spare any effort or outlay demanded by the exigencies of the music. This is right enough and praiseworthy; the wonder, of course, lies in such a selection as that we have indicated. But "so many men, so many minds," and there never yet has been a monstrous or eccentric development in art without plenty of otherwwise sensible people to swear by it.

Talk is occasionally heard of a change now going on in musical taste amongst us. We do not believe that it exists. Somewhat more curiosity appears to be felt with regard to novelties, and the sign is a healthy one, while the demonstrations made on first nights by the German colony give an appearance of enthusiasm which might easily be mistaken for English. It would, no doubt, be absurd to contend that the strange developments of modern music are supported in this country by foreigners alone. There are plenty of Englishmen who put their faith in the gospel of incoherence, noise, and vulgarity. But they are a very small minority, and thus far no sign of successful proselytizing appears. Mr Bache, assuredly, cannot boast of success as Liszt's missionary. For years he has been "instant in season and out of season;" yet, under the most favourable circumstances, he is unable to fill St James's Hall. We are sorry for him. His endeavour is pathetic in its constancy, and deserves a better fate as well as a better cause. But we cannot pretend to feel regret on account of art. Who weeps when a good ship, paying no heed to false lights that would lure to destruction, goes safely on to her appointed harbour? As far as the good ship music is liable to be affected by Liszt's "symphonic poems," there is even special reason for gladness, since those works exemplify all that is most harmful in the fantastic ideas we are now-a-days asked to accept as advanced. Taking Liszt's "symphonic poems" at the estimate formed of them by their admirers, the noblest function of music belongs to the past. The "divine maid" has no longer a mission of her own to which she, of herself, is competent. "C minor" symphonies are out of fashion, together with the appeal they make to the seat of feeling and imagination, and the power with which they lift a sympathetic hearer above material things into a world which words cannot describe or thought compass. We are far from saying that programme music is illegitimate. It has a rightful place; but, while allowing this, we contend that the place is, by comparison, a humble one. Programme music can rise no higher than its subject, and at what a low level that subject is often found! It even bids us descend lower and lower as time goes on. Sebastian Bach was satisfied to deal with a family incident, but in their eagerness to gratify the sensationalism of the age, the great master's latest successors drag music through charnel-houses; make her associate with dancing skeletons, the very rattle of whose bones she is called upon to imitate; put her on horseback with galloping fiends, and soil her purity with the filth of the stews. Everyone knows that this is so. Examples are frequently before us, and are held up to our admiration, in the name of liberty and progress. The war against such things, and the principles from which they spring, should be a war to the bitter end. There can be no compromise consistent with fidelity to the pure art so prostituted and made ashamed. As regards the method of Liszt in his orchestral music enough is known. The piano virtuoso, thanks to Mr Bache, no longer stands upon his trial, nor can less than the blindness of the typical fanatic refuse to see the justice of condemnation. To this end the concert of last Thursday served, and was, therefore, not without good. Apropos, let us congratulate ourselves that Liszt is far from being a very dangerous foe to orchestral art. He comes in no disguise, nor need we ask for the touch of Ithuriel's spear to reveal his true nature. This is something, because an evil discerned is half disarmed.—D. T.

NO "TEACHIN POWER" IN ENGLAND.

* * * * * *

Mr Charles Hallé, in moving a resolution approving the scheme for the establishment of a National Conservatoire, said England was the only country in Europe which did not possess such an institution, and yet it was the most music-loving, as distinguished from music-making, country in the world. There was a great lack of competent teaching power in the country,* and there were no means by which young people who promised to become good musicians could be trained, unless their parents were possessed of ample means. The lack of teaching power would be met by the proposed institution, which would create a number of thorough musicians. It was intended to give education gratuitously to all pupils at the Conservatoire, but they would be bound to go through the full course of five or six years' study. In this respect the Conservatoire would differ from existing institutions, where pupils paying fees could enter for as many terms as they pleased. There would be more English vocalists and more musicians in the front rank if they could complete their education at home. A Frenchman, a German, a Swede, a Dutchman could complete his education in his own country, but an Englishman had to be sent abroad to finish his musical education.† This would no longer be necessary when the Conservatoire was established, and he believed it would be so beneficial in its effects that it would change the musical face of the country completely.

BERLIN.—Marianne Brandt, who leaves the Royal Operahouse on the 1st May, has had offers from managers in Germany and abroad. In May and June she is engaged for six weeks at the Imperial Operahouse, Vienna. She then goes to London for a brief period. In July and the first half of August, she will be in Bayreuth, to "create" the part of Kundry, in Wagner's Parsifal. In October and November, she gives a series of performances at the Theatre Royal, Munich. For December of the present year and March, 1883, she has signed with Angelo Neumann for his Wagner-representations; with Stägemann, of Leipsic, she is engaged for four weeks, and among other impersonations she includes Lea in Rubinstein's Maccabäer.—To fit themselves for appearing at the Royal Operahouse, several Italian "stars" are studying German. Among the gentlemen may be named the tenor, Sylva, while among the representatives of the gentler sex is the too fascinating Belocca, expected to appear in May. At present, the gifted lady is at St Petersburgh.

* Who taught Sterndale Bennett?

† Because the Germans wont let them stay at home.

Digitized by Google

LONDON BALLAD CONCERTS.

Mr John Boosey's Ballad Concert (the last evening concert but two of the present series), given on Wednesday evening at St James's Hall, met with the usual success of these very popular entertainments, the singers being Mdmes Marie Roze and Antoinette Sterling, Misses Mary Davies and Damian, Messrs Frank Boyle, Barrington Foote, and Santley, together with the South London Choral Society. The first part of the programme chiefly consisted of Mr Arthur Sullivan's compositions, the exceptions being the grand scena from Der Freyschütz, "Softly sighs the voice of evening," given with dramatic fervour by Mdme Marie Roze, who was twice called back to receive the well-merited applause she deserved, Bishop's "Pretty mocking bird" (flute obbligato, Mr Nicholson), sung by the same lady, and unanimously encored; and Marzials' "Leaving yet loving" (Mr Barrington Foote, "re-called"). In the second part, repetitions of Stephen Adams' "Children of the City" (Miss Damian); the same composer's "Little Hero" (Mr Maybrick); Sullivan's "Chorister" (Mdme Sterling); Molloy's "Boatswain's Story" (Mr Santley, who then gave "Gipsy John"); and Harrington's part-song, "Dame Durden" (South London Choral Society), were insisted on, and acceded to with becoming politeness by the several artists named. At the concert on Wednesday next, a new patriotic song by Tennyson, entitled "Hands all round," the music arranged by Mr Villiers Stanford, will be sung by Mr Santley. Mr Sidney Naylor was, as usual, accompanist, and the hall was fully and fashionably attended.

—o—

MR AND MRS GERMAN REED'S ENTERTAINMENT.

A more ambitious effort than has hitherto been made by that clever company of dramatic vocalists giving a distinctive character to the entertainments presented at St George's Hall, Langham Place, is to be recognized in a recent addition to their always inviting programme. Under the title of The Head of the Poll, a drawing-room operetta in two acts now occupies the place of the light musical sketches formerly furnishing a couple of hours' agreeable diversion, and the sustained interest shown by the audience in the novelty claiming their close attention through a longer period than usual affords the best testimony to the histrionic as well as vocal ability displayed by those engaged in the representation. This lively musical comedy, written by Mr Arthur Law, is associated with some tuneful compositions by Mr Eaton Faning, whose ballads and concerted pieces have at least the recommendation of falling pleasantly on the ear. Mr Jeremiah Upshotte, a wealthy man of low origin and high ambition, employs his money to secure a place in Parliament and a private secretary to write his speeches. Speedily he finds a desire to distinguish himself without the ability to sustain his position has created a series of terrible embarrassments, and he at last perceives that to be at the "head of the poll" is not to attain the height of human felicity. Mr Alfred Reed very humorously depicts the attributes of this aspiring vulgarian, while Mr Corney Grain, as an artful fortune-hunter known as Colonel Deeplock, presents a careful study of character remarkable for force of expression and finish of detail. Miss Fanny Holland prominently appears in the cast as the shrewd Mrs Lovell, who ingeniously contrives to unmask the schemes of the mercenary adventurer; and Mdme Alice Barth and Mr North Home satisfactorily fill their respective positions as the pretty niece, Arabella, and her ardent admirer, Charles Wardale, whose disinterested attachment is suitably rewarded. A humorous song, admirably rendered by Miss Fanny Holland, and a pretty ballad, sung by Mr North Home, naturally invite demands for a repetition. The woodland glade, in which the bustling incidents of the last act take place, is a remarkably effective sylvan scene. Mr Corney Grain's new musical sketch, called Not at Home, introduced for the first time on Saturday afternoon to the very numerous audience assembled on the occasion, is a most important feature of the re-constituted programme, and, under the influence of this accomplished interpreter of the language of music, nearly every note struck on the piano becomes the signal for a peal of hearty laughter. Explaining that once in his bachelor chambers he had declared himself "not at home," he proceeded to show how the perpetration of this very venial fib was punished by the intrusion into his apartment of a series of tiresome visitors, who would not accept a society phrase in a literal fashion. Among his several persecutors, whose distinct peculiarities are all most graphically depicted, is numbered a popular "entertainer," who insists on giving a portion of a musical monologue offered to the public under the title of "Grigsby's Grins." How Mr Corney Grain sings a polyglot ballad in English, German, French, and Italian; imitates a violoncello solo interrupted by the sound of a saw and the popping of soda-water bottles; trolls forth an exhilarating laughing song running through the whole gamut of merriment; adds a Scotch ditty with marvellous mimicry of the bagpipes; and winds up with "Jumbo," a minstrel melody of the approved "Moore and Burgess" school, will soon become pleasant subjects of comment in many social circles. Not at Home exhibits refined humour and artistic skill once more most happily commingled.—D. T.

—o—

THEODOR KULLAK.

By Alb. Friedenthal.

A sad piece of intelligence will spread from Berlin over the entire musical world: that great artist and incomparable professor of the pianoforte, Theodor Kullak is no more. The celebrated master was suddenly and unexpectedly carried off by apoplexy in the 64th year of his age. On the day before his death, he was teaching in his Academy till 6 o'clock, p.m.; he then attended a concert got up by his lady-teachers; went to bed in good health, and rose in good health next morning, the 1st inst. He was just about to begin giving his lesson, at half-past 7 a.m., when he suddenly felt ill. The fit followed—and he breathed his last. The writer of these lines has seen him in his coffin. There lies the man we shall never forget; his features wear a pleasing, mild expression, without a sign of pain. His burial will take place with due solemnity next Saturday afternoon.* Let us cast a glance over his life.

Theodor Kullak was born on the 12th September, 1818, at Krotoszin, not far from the Russian frontier. His father, who held a secretaryship there, directed his earliest studies. The boy showed wonderful talent when he was only five, being able to play any melody he had once heard. When in his seventh year, he composed a march, which was publicly performed by the military bands in Meseritz. Shortly afterwards he went to Posen, and became known to Prince Anton Radziwill, who soon took a lively interest in him. He here had musical lessons of an excellent master, named Agthe. Prince Radziwill then sent him to Berlin, where he created an extraordinary impression at Court, especially on the King. Unfortunately Prince Radziwill died not long subsequently, and the pecuniary assistance afforded by him stopped, so the boy, then twelve years old, was sent to the Gymnasium at Züllichau, where he remained seven years. After passing his examination, he went to study medicine in Berlin. He was then in very bad circumstances. He industriously pursued, however, his musical studies under Dehn, and his former master, Agthe, who had settled in the Prussian capital. He quickly once again attracted the attention of families of distinction. A Mdme von Massor sent him on a successful artistic visit to Austria, and in Vienna he completed his musical training under Czerny, Sechter, and Nicolai. He was then recalled to Berlin to give lessons at Court. He was soon teacher to all the Princes and Princesses of the Royal Family, especially the Crown Prince and the Crown Princess Victoria. In 1846, he was appointed Pianist to the Court. In 1850, he founded, in conjunction with Stern and Marx, a Conservatory, but, in 1855, took the sole direction of it himself. He called it the New Academy of Music (Neue Akademie der Tonkunst), and two years ago celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of its existence. It is, probably, the largest art-academy in the world, being attended by about 1,200 pupils, and employing some 100 teachers. Kullak taught there for twenty-seven years, from early in the morning to late in the evening, only taking a holiday-trip of from six to eight weeks in the summer. At present, there he lies, the great master to whom pupils flocked from all parts; the great master who formed so many pianists and music-teachers, now scattered about in all quarters of the globe; there he lies—in his coffin!

Leipsic.—Compelled by a severe nervous attack, Arthur Nikisch, conductor at the Stadttheater, has gone to Sorrento to recruit his health. In consideration of his meritorious services, the Town Council voted him a special grant for expenses.—The programme of the Bach Society's second Sacred Concert contained: "The Forty-second Psalm for Chorus and Orchestra," Handel; "Toccata in D minor for Organ," and cantata, "Halt im Gedächtniss Jesum Christ," J. S. Bach. Degenhardt presided at the organ.

* The 4th inst.—Ed. M. W.

Digitized by Google

MR WALTER (FRANZ) BACHE (LISZT).

(From the "Daily News.")

This event (last week) gave fresh evidence of Mr Bache's enthusiastic belief that Liszt is a great composer, this year's concert having been a still stronger demonstration of Mr Bache's conviction than any of the previous occasions, inasmuch as the programme consisted only of Liszt's music. As every one of the pieces then performed has before been commented on, and as we have several times recorded our opinion that Liszt's ambition far exceeds his power, and that he frequently mistakes aggressive self-assertion, contempt of all classical models, and incoherent frenzy for original genius and genuine musical inspiration, we need merely record this fresh effort of Mr Bache to gain wider acceptation of his favourite composer. Mr Bache has the merit of being the first to enable an English public to form a judgment of Liszt's orchestral works by the hearing of fine performances, but this has usually been done in association with works by recognized masters. The departure this year from that course argues an impression either that such a mixed programme would offer comparisons unfavourable to Liszt (a very likely result), or that his music is so great as to command undivided and prolonged attention. Opinions differ on this last point, and will probably long continue at variance. At all events, Mr Bache's concert drew a large number of hearers, most of whom listened attentively, if not admiringly, to the Festival March composed for the commemoration of Goethe's birthday, at Weimar, in 1849; the Mephisto-Walzer (from Liszt's musical illustrations to scenes from Lenau's Faust), and the Faust Symphony, this last occupying upwards of an hour in performance. Of this monstrous piece of exaggeration the best that can be said is that the least disagreeable portion is the second division, illustrative of Margaret's love scenes, which may compare advantageously with the preceding Faust movement, and the closing Mephistopheles division. The tenor solo was well declaimed by Mr Barton M'Guckin, and the "chorus mysticus" efficiently sung by a choir of about eighty voices—tenors and basses. The orchestral playing was excellent.

Mr Bache conducted with a zeal and care that would have been more worthily bestowed on better music.

—o—

ALFRED JAELL.

The obsequies of this pianist, one of our most renowned "virtuosos," took place last week. He was the son of a violinist of repute, and first saw the light in Trieste on the 5th March, 1832. After coming out between the acts of an opera at the Teatro alla Scala, Milan, he commenced a course of travels, which made his talent known throughout Europe and even America. For some years, however, he was settled in Paris, and, without abandoning the career of a travelling artist, devoted himself especially to teaching. He married one of his most brilliant pupils, Mdlle Trauttmann, whose playing formed an interesting contrast to his own. He was no less distinguished and respected as a man than as a musician. His loss is deeply regretted by those who counted among his friends; and they were many. In his volume dedicated to contemporary "virtuosos," our eminent musicographic professor, Marmontel, has reserved for Alfred Jaell a place of honour. Among the biographical details, we find the following interesting lines:—

Little Alfred Jaell began learning the violin as soon as he was five years old. His progress was so rapid that, when he was six, he played in public Rode's Concerto in A minor. Ole Bull, the Norwegian violinist, who was passing through Trieste, where he enjoyed the confraternal hospitality of Jaell Senr., was astounded by the child's precocious virtuosity; Alfred tried to imitate Ole Bull and discover the secret of his mechanism. A long illness, however, obliged him to give up the violin. When he was seven, he entreated his father to give him pianoforte lessons, his delicate organization interdicting him from studying the instrument of his choice. His father held out long, but at length yielded. The infant prodigy made such progress that, when only eight years old, he took part in a concert given by his father. At ten, he played at the Scala, Milan, and subsequently at Venice, Genoa, and Florence. Finally, his father, feeling that the boy required for his special education a master of the highest authority, left Trieste and took him to Vienna, where he studied under Czerny, a master universally consulted. After some years under Czerny, Jaell undertook a tour through Austria, Germany, Holland, and Belgium; being everywhere welcomed as an infant prodigy. On passing (in 1845) through Stuttgart, Liszt gave him a kind greeting, and presented him to the Court of Wurtemberg. In 1846, Jaell first went to Paris, where he received advice from Chopin—then approaching the last period of the disease which ended in his too early death. Jaell preserved a grateful recollection of these relations of his youth. Chopin's memory and works were still for him the beau idéal. In 1817, the Gazette Musicale and the Journal des Débats, speaking with the authoritative voice of Hector Berlioz, published a eulogistic notice of the two concerts given at the Salle Erard "by a young pianist of fifteen, named Jaell." Berlioz, who seldom praised "virtuosos," said that the boy possessed all the mastery of a "virtuoso" of fifty, "who had practised fifteen hours a day!" —(Le Ménestrel.)

—o—

THE CENTENARY OF AUBER.

(From the "Musical Times.")

The celebration of the centenary of the birth of the composer Auber, which has recently taken place in Paris, was the occasion of one of those fêtes which are so thoroughly in harmony with the genius of the French people, and into the spirit of which they enter with such adorable enthusiasm. In doing honour to the memory of their most representative composer, the Parisians were not merely discharging a debt due to a most eminent musician, a Frenchman, and, above all, a Parisian of the Boulevards; they honoured also the genius of comedy, both as exemplified in the animated dramatic works of Scribe, and in the rare genius of the master of opéra comique. In the quaint town of Caen, so typical to Englishmen of all that is Norman, there is to be unveiled next May a statue by M. Delaplanche of Daniel François Esprit Auber, to be placed between those of Elie Beaumont and Malherbe. The father of Auber has been variously represented as having been a dealer in prints in Paris and in charge of the royal preserves, the latter being probably his occupation at the time of the birth of the composer; it is certain that his illustrious son was born at Caen on Jan. 29th, 1782, and that he died in Paris on the 11th of the melancholy May of 1871. With the exception of a short sojourn in London when a youth, in the uncongenial atmosphere of an office, Auber lived the whole of his long existence in Paris, and in an extremely circumscribed area of that city, mostly in the Rue Georges, frequenting the Boulevards, and occasionally varying his rides and drives in the Bois de Boulogne with an excursion to St Germain. His love of Paris and city life was as consistent and remarkable as Johnson's love of Fleet Street. He was in the habit of noticing the return of summer, the long days of which season he heartily disliked, by replacing the curtains and hangings of his room with those of lighter texture and colour, remarking that his collaborateur, Scribe, brought to him in his plays all of the country he found requisite for his purposes. When the rigorous exclusiveness of this town life is considered, the unvarying and delightful freshness of his compositions is most remarkable; it would seem that he possessed in an eminent degree one faculty of the poet, that power of complete self-absorption and clear command over the creatures of his reveries, for he was by nature a visionary. The large expressive eyes of the musician and the strong development of the temples, as are well shown in his portraits, indicate his possession of the idealizing faculty. The freshness and fecundity of his inspiration are alike marvellous. It is notable how throughout his long and successful career the same wonderful freshness of melody, the engaging charm of his style, the facile spontaneity of phrase, are always apparent: from the production of his first successful work, La Bergère Châtelaine, in 1820—from the climacteric periods that witnessed the success of La Muette de Portici and Fra Diavolo—down to the work of his old age, Le Premier Jour de Bonheur, these qualities are more or less present in all his works. That the operas of Auber are little performed now in England is partly owing to the caprice of fashion, partly to the fact that opéra comique has never found but a very temporary home in our uncongenial atmosphere; we find, as a people, infinite solace and delight in the lofty and dignified works of MM. Offenbach and Hervé, whereas the frivolities of Le Domino Noir and Dieu et la Bayadère are an offence to our gravity. The very even tenor of Auber's life was broken by nothing more exciting than a première at the Opera and the usual réunions in his artistic circle; and it is probable that the last weeks of his life were more fraught with trial to the venerable composer than any period of his existence. In the circumstances of his death it is a touch of irony that he who had made the heart of Paris to be merry for half a century, and with such success, should die in the midst of the discordant and convulsive throes of the Commune.

Digitized by Google

It is curious to mark that, at a time when the influence of Wagner was making itself powerfully apparent in the works of other composers, the French alone seemed to be beyond that influence. The cause is not far to seek; for, with all their cosmopolitanism in art, they have ever been in music the most intensely national of music-producing people. Auber, the most characteristic of Parisians, did not set himself a great moral and regenerating task as Wagner had done; he was possessed by no theories, and no passion for the illustration of them, nor for the formation of a propaganda for their promulgation. He produced, in surprising and bewildering abundance, his exquisite melodies, even as Béranger and Burns produced their songs, impelled only by an uncontrollable exuberance of lyrical emotion. He never felt that his works required the dubious moral support of pamphlets, and knew that their justification consisted in their very abandon and pure unaffected nature; and his appeal for recognition was not made to any one school, or in the diseased hope and fatuous ambition of proselytism, but to the whole heart of humanity. It is easy to affirm of many popularities that they are ephemeral, and that vox populi often proves to be vox diaboli; but the old reading of the proverb is far more often true than otherwise, and in Auber's case its judgment is beyond quibble or doubt. His insusceptibility to foreign influence has been very helpful in assuring to him his firm place among the great composers; his services to the muse of Comedy were purely voluntary, and the product of his own unassisted genius; and it is his special praise that he has revivified and exalted the opéra comique, which, but for him, might have sunk into the abysmal depths of farcical bouffe and the infamy of burlesque. Through the whole of his long life he was ever true to the instincts of his own genius, and if, in the astonishing fertility of his fancy, he framed some works that do not rise above mediocrity, he has only erred in that direction with most other opera composers. It is true that it has been reported by one who knew him, M. Blaze de Bury, that on the occasion of the last performance before the war of his greatest work, La Muette de Portici, he expressed his acute sense of dissatisfaction and disappointment, affirming it was not the creation he had imagined, and hinting that he would write it in a far different style had he to undertake the theme once more; but we have here merely another instance, added to others familiar to all, of a great author's usual retrospective view of his work, a view which has always something of pathos in its incomplete sense of vision. It is almost absolutely certain that had Auber reconstructed the setting of the incomparable melodies of this work, and substituted for the existing orchestral accompaniments others more elaborate and recondite, and possibly Wagnerian in form, La Muette would no longer be what it is, the glory of French opera. It would have been nothing less than a disaster had the aged composer set to a work of revision, under the domination of Wagner's genius, after having from his youth upwards produced his compositions with the unerring instincts and unembarrassed facility of an improvisatore. The evil effect of the influence of the master-mind of modern music upon one who never can be en rapport with that spiritual force is clearly discernible in a recent production of Verdi: the Wagnerian element in Aïda is too often suggestive of an unholy alliance, or, at least, it exists as an incongruity which strikes the hearer with a sense of pain, and makes him recall, with an avidity of compensating appreciation, the masterly force and originality of Rigoletto. It is far otherwise when such an influence is exerted over the first productions of genius, when there exists, as in the case of Boito, a natural affinity between the dominating force and the plastic and fecund imagination that is conscious of the divinity that temporarily overawes it. This has ever been—Wagner himself not having been exempt from this natural law, as a study of Beethoven's symphonies and Meyerbeer's operas suffices to show; and it is through this subtle and spiritual interchange of influence that the philosophic historian of music is enabled to trace, in the diverse compositions of the great masters, the ethereal and protean links of a mighty chain of intellectual and sensuous production that has ever been in progress towards its sublime completion and fruition in the future. It is idle to talk of the music of the future as if music had no past, or were self-existent independent of that past; equally futile and uncritical is it to deplore Auber's comparatively narrow compass of creative power. His work as an artist is essentially his own, and his place is as irrevocably decreed to him, and with as much certainty, by fate as that of far greater men; and no foolish regrets that he was not such an one as this writer or that, and no pamphleteering, will affect his position or cause any settling in the pedestal of his statue in the temple of fame. It is not a little thing to make one of the vestibules of that mighty temple sweet with tenderest reminiscences of unsophisticated melody; and this is the glory of Auber.

HEREFORD MUSICAL FESTIVAL, 1882.

Programme (subject to revision).

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 11TH.
Rehearsal in the Cathedral		10 a.m.
Rehearsal in the Shirehall		7.0 p.m.
TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 12TH.
"ELIJAH"	Mendelssohn.	1.0 p.m.
Miscellaneous Concert		8.0 p.m.
WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 13TH.
Judas Maccabæus	Handel.	11.30 a.m.
Symphony in B flat	Beethoven.
137th Psalm	Goetz.
Magnificat in D	Bach.
St Paul	Mendelssohn.	8 p.m.
THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 14TH.
The Shunammite	Dr. Garrett.	11.30 a.m.
Mass in C	Beethoven.
Abraham	Molique.
Miscellaneous Concert		8 p.m.
FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 15TH.
THE "MESSIAH"	Handel.	11.30 a.m.
Chamber Concert		8 p.m.

LANGDON COLBORNE, Conductor.

—o—

WAIFS.

Tamberlik is with his company at Santander.

Berlioz's Requiem has been performed at Boston (U.S.)

The eminent pianist, Alfred Jaell, died recently at Paris.

New York is to have three Italian opera-companies playing at the same time.

The new Singakademie in Halle lately gave a performance of Handel's Judas Maccabæus.

Beethoven's ballet, Die Geschöpfe des Prometheus, has been revived at the Theatre Royal, Hanover.

Handel's Messiah has been given by the vocal Union, Cleves, under the direction of C. Fiedler.

Mdlle Dore Desvignes, a young contralto of reputation on the continent, has arrived in London.

A new theatre, which will probably be called the Teatro Calderon, is in course of erection at Madrid.

Lefèvre's lyrical drama, Judith, has been performed, under the direction of Peter Benoit, in Antwerp.

A young tenor named Fenaroli has made a hit as Radamès, in Aïda, at the Teatro Principal, Valencia.

Masini (the tenor of Verdi's Mass) is in Madrid, where he made his first appearance as Raoul in the Hugnenots.

The first performance of Mihalovich's Hagbar und Signe is fixed for the 14th March, at the Theatre Royal, Dresden.

A new opera, El Asedio de Medina, by Joaquin Espin y Guillen, will be produced next season at the Teatro Real, Madrid.

Ernestine Gindele, formerly of the Imperial Operahouse, Vienna, is now engaged—to M. Alexandre Guillaume, of Bordeaux.

Clarus, formerly at the Victoria Theatre, Berlin, has been appointed choral director at the Ducal Theatre, Brunswick.

Von Reichenberg, basso of the Theatre Royal, Hanover, has been invited to sing in August at the Imperial Operahouse, Vienna.

Tichatscheck, the Nestor of German tenors, has had a slight apoplectic fit, but hopes are entertained of his prompt recovery.

The members of the orchestra at the Monnaie, Brussels, have petitioned the Municipality to increase its annual grant to the Theatre.

The Strakosch Italian operatic season at Booth's, New York, with Mad. Gerster as the star, began on the 20th ult., and was to last a fortnight.

Götz's Bezähmung der Widerspenstigen has been performed at the Imperial Operahouse, Vienna, with a new ending by Gericke. (Oh! —Dr Blitge.)

Soamarin, an actor of Moscow, has had the cross of St Stanislaus, third class, conferred on him. He is the first of his profession ever decorated in Russia.

In consequence of some disagreement among the shareholders, the Liceo, Barcelona, will not be opened, for the present, at any rate, except for masked balls.

The Baltimore (U.S.) Oratorio Society, numbering 600 members, recently gave a performance of Handel's Messiah. Among the solo singers were Aline Osgood and M. W. Whitney.

Digitized by Google

The only Gold Medal for Wind Instruments with Keys, in the Paris Universal Exhibition of 1878, was unanimously awarded by the Jury to Messrs P. Goumas & Co., for the fine quality of tone and finish of their Instruments.

SPECIAL MANUFACTORY OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS
FOR
CLARIONETS, FLUTES, PICCOLOS, OBOES, BASSOONS, COR ANGLAIS, FLAGEOLETS, AND SAXOPHONES.

P. GOUMAS & Co.
(Late Buffet, Crampon & Co.),
Established 1830.

Nine Prize Medals have been awarded to Goumas & Co. for general excellence and improvements in the Manufacture of Wind Instruments with Keys.
Manufacturers of all kinds of Wood Wind Instruments for Military Bands, Musical Instrument Makers to Her Majesty's Army and Navy, and to the Armies, Navies, and Conservatoires of France, Belgium, Italy, Russia, Austria, Spain, America, &c.
Manufactory at Mantes (Seine et Oise), France. Paris: Passage du Grand Cerf, 18 et 20.
LONDON: 39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET.
Price Lists sent free on application.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,
MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF
ALL KINDS OF MUSIC STRINGS FOR ALL MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Sole Depôt for Signor Andrea Ruffini's (of Naples) Celebrated Strings for Soloists, manufactured by him on a system invented by Mons. J. B. Vuillaume, of Paris.
Sole Agent for Charles Albert's (of Philadelphia, U.S.) new Patent Improved Chin Rest; also his improved String Gauge.
39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, W.
Price Lists free on application.
All kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner on powerful machines made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE
(COLEMAN'S). A Delicious Beverage and Tonic.
Made from Port Wine, Liebig's Extract of Meat, and Extract of Malt; Nutritious, Strengthening, Stimulating, Flesh-forming, Health Restoring, suitable for the Robust in Health as well as the Invalid. Strongly recommended by the Medical Faculty. An Immediate Benefit is experienced after taking it; the Frame is Invigorated, and no ill effects follow.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Testimonials.

Sir,—A short time since I was induced by the novelty of the title to send for a bottle of your Liebig's Extract of Meat and Malt Wine. I was perfectly acquainted with the value of the Extractum Carnis, and not quite a stranger to the invigorating and fortifying properties of malt wine, and therefore felt a natural curiosity to test them when combined. Men who work hard, as I do, not muscular hard work, but that which is quite as exhausting, viz., brain work, very often experience the need of, and have sometimes an almost irresistible craving for, a "pick me up;" and very often the panacea for a time for lassitude, and that state of mind which renders work irksome, are alcoholic stimulants, the use of which must sooner or later end disastrously. The man who can furnish a remedy sure, certain, and harmless, for the lassitude which follows constant brain work is a benefactor of his species, and may be said to have added many years of usefulness to the lives of useful men. Your extract, if a success, and when more generally known, will be used by all toilers of the mind.—Yours faithfully, O. D. RAY.
Thorpe Hamlet, Norwich, February 23rd, 1881.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Queen's Crescent, Haverstock Hill, London, March 5th, 1881.

Dear Sir,—Some time since, being greatly fatigued with over-work and long hours at business, my health (being naturally delicate) became very indifferent. I lost all energy, strength, and appetite, and was so weak as to be scarcely able to walk. As you are aware, I sent for a dozen of your Extract of Meat and Malt Wine, which, in a few days, pulled me up marvellously. Three or four glasses of it daily have quite altered and restored me to better health than ever, "without the assistance of a doctor." I am now giving it to my son, twelve years of age, whom we have always thought consumptive, and from a puny, ailing boy, he seems to be fast growing into a strong, healthy lad. Enclosed you have cheque. Please send me two dozen of the "Extract." With thanks for your prompt attention to my last, I am, Sir, yours truly, GEORGE A. TYLER.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Granspound, February 25th, 1881.

Mrs Coulson thanks Mr Coleman for the book and stamps, and she has no doubt but that "the tonic" is a good one. Mrs C. encloses twelve stamps for basket.
Mr Coleman.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Vicarage, Kingsbridge, Devon, January 25th, 1881.

Dear Sir,—We are ten miles from the railway, and have been snowed up, consequently the wine has only just arrived. I enclose a cheque for £2 11s. 6d. I like the wine, and will recommend it.—Yours faithfully,
Mr Coleman, Norwich. A. N. KINGSTON.

Pints, 30s. per dozen: Quarts, 50s. per dozen. Carriage paid to any Railway Station in Great Britain. Sample Bottle sent for 33 stamps.
P. O. Orders to be made payable to
COLEMAN & CO., MUSPOLE STREET, NORWICH.
Cheques crossed "London and Provincial Bank."
Sold by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the United Kingdom, in Bottles, 1s. 9d. and 2s. 6d. each. Ask for Coleman's Liebig's Extract of Meat and Malt Wine, and "See that you get it."

CHAPPELL'S
VOCAL LIBRARY
OF
PART-SONGS, &c.

		Composed or Arranged by	Price
1.	Dulce Domum. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
2.	Down among the Dead Men. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
3.	The Girl I've left behind me. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
4.	British Grenadiers. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
5.	Long live England's Future Queen. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
6.	My task is ended (Song and Chorus). A.T.B.B.	Balfe	4d.
7.	Thus spake one Summer's Day. S.A.T.B.	Abt	2d.
8.	Soldiers' Chorus. T.T.B.B.	Gounod	4d.
9.	The Kermesse (Scene from Faust)	,,	6d.
10.	Up, quit thy bower. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	4d.
11.	Maidens, never go a-wooing. S.S.T.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
12.	Fagot Binders' Chorus	Gounod	4d.
13.	Sylvan Hours (for Six Female Voices)	Joseph Robinson	6d.
14.	The Gipsy Chorus	Balfe	4d.
15.	Ave Maria	Arcadelt	1d.
16.	Hark! the Herald Angels sing. S.A.T.B.	Mendelssohn	1d.
17.	England Yet (Solo and Chorus). S.A.T.B.	Jules Benedict	2d.
18.	The Shepherd's Sabbath Day. S.A.T.B.	J. L. Hatton	2d.
19.	Thoughts of Childhood. S.A.T.B.	Henry Smart	2d.
20.	Spring's Return. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
21.	An old Church Song. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
22.	Sabbath Bells. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
23.	Serenade. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
24.	Cold Autumn Wind. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
25.	Orpheus with his Lute. S.S.S.	Bennett Gilbert	2d.
26.	Lullaby. S.A.A.	,,	1d.
27.	This is my own, my native land. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
28.	March of the Men of Harlech. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
29.	God save the Queen. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
30.	Rule, Britannia. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
31.	The Retreat. T.T.B.B.	L. de Rille	2d.
32.	Lo! morn is breaking. S.S.S.	Cherubini	2d.
33.	We are Spirits. S.S.S.	G. A. Macfarren	4d.
34.	Market Chorus (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	Auber	4d.
35.	The Prayer (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
36.	The Water Sprites. S.A.T.B.	Kücken	2d.
37.	Eve's glittering Star. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
38.	When first the Primrose. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
39.	O Dewdrop bright. S.A.T.B	,,	1d.
40.	Sanctus from the Messe Solennelle. S.A.T.B.	Rossini	4d.
41.	Nine Kyries, Ancient and Modern	,,	2d.
42.	Sun of my soul. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	2d.
43.	'Twas fancy, and the ocean's spray. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
44.	A Prayer for those at Sea. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
45.	O Thou whose power (Prayer from Moss in Egitto)	Rossini	2d.
46.	The Guard on the Rhine. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
47.	The German Fatherland. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
48.	The Lord is my Shepherd (Quartet). S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
49.	Te Deum in F	Jackson	2d.
50.	Te Deum in F	Nares	2d.
51.	Charity (La Carita). S.S.S.	Rossini	4d.
52.	Cordelia. A.T.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	4d.
53.	I know. S.A.T.B.	Walter Hay	2d.
54.	Chorus of Handmaidens (from Fridolin)	A. Randegger	4d.
55.	The Offertory Sentences	Edmund Rogers	4d.
56.	The Red Cross Knight	Dr. Callcott	2d.
57.	The Chough and the Crow	Sir H. R. Bishop	3d.
58.	The "Carnovale"	Rossini	2d.
59.	Softly falls the moonlight	Edmund Rogers	4d.
60.	Air by Himmel	Henry Leslie	2d.
61.	Offertory Sentences	E. Sauerlrey	4d.
62.	The Resurrection	C. Villiers Stanford	6d.
63.	Our Boys (new Patriotic Song) H. J. Byron and W. M. Lutz		4d.
64.	The Men of Wales	Brinley Richards	2d.
65.	Dame Durden		1d.
66.	A little Farm well tilled	Hook	1d.
67.	There was a simple maiden	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
68.	Fair Hebe	,,	1d.
69.	Once I loved a maiden fair	,,	1d.
70.	The jovial man of Kent	,,	1d.
71.	The oak and the ash	,,	1d.
72.	Heart of Oak	,,	1d.
73.	Come to the sunset tree	W. A. Philpott	4d.
74.	May. S.A.T.B.	W. F. Banks	2d.
75.	Pure, lovely innocence (Il Roi de Lahore—Chorus for Female Voices)	G. Masenet	4d.
76.	A Love Idyl. S.A.T.B.	E. R. Terry	2d.
77.	Hail to the Woods! A.T.T.B.	J. Yarwood	2d.
78.	Near the town of Taunton Dean	Thomas J. Dudeney	2d.
79.	Our merry boys at sea	J. Yarwood	2d
80.	The Shepherd's Farewell. S.A.T.B.	Berlioz	3d.
81.	When the sun sets o'er the mountains (Il Demonio)	A. Rubinstein	3d.
82.	Hymn of Nature	Beethoven	3d.
83.	Michaelmas Day (Humorous Part Songs, No. 1)	Walter Maynard	4d.
84.	Sporting Notes (Humorous Part Songs, No. 2)	Walter Maynard	4d.
85.	Austrian National Hymn	Haydn	4d.

LONDON:
CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND STREET, W.
City Branch—14 & 15, POULTRY.

Digitized by Google

SHORT PIECES FOR THE ORGAN.

EDITED AND ARRANGED BY

WILLIAM SPARK, Mus. Doc.,

Organist of the Town Hall, Leeds.

PRICE OF EACH BOOK, FOUR SHILLINGS.

CONTENTS OF BOOK I.

PRAYER	Arcadelt
ANDANTINO D major	Batiste
LARGHETTO	Spohr
ALLA MARCIA, D major	Chopin
ANDANTINO, F major	W. Spark
ANDANTE, C major	W. H. Nichols

CONTENTS OF BOOK III.

ADAGIO RELIGIOSO, "Hymn of Praise"	Mendelssohn
ADAGIO, F major	Pleyel
SARABANDE, D minor	J. S. Bach
GAVOTTE, D major	J. S. Bach
PRELUDE	E. W. Healey

CONTENTS OF BOOK V.

MODERATO and ALLEGRO, from the 7th Concerto	Corelli
ANDANTE GRAZIOSO	Dussek
ANDANTE, from the Concerto in G minor	Mendelssohn
ANDANTE, from Op. 83	Stephen Heller
"BUT THOU DIDST NOT LEAVE"	Handel

CONTENTS OF BOOK VII.

TRUMPET VOLUNTARY	Purcell
DUET, from the "Vater unser"	Spohr
ICH GROLLE NICHT, Song	Schumann
ANDANTE, from the 12th Symphony	Mozart
MINUET and TRIO, from do.	Mozart

CONTENTS OF BOOK IX.

VOLUNTARY, Andante, A major	Samuel Wesley
CHORUS "So shalt thou gain" ("Hercules")	Handel
ANDANTINO, F major	S. Neukomm
INTRODUCTION to the Third Part of "The Creation"	Haydn
ANDANTE, Air for Soprano	Lindpaintner

CONTENTS OF BOOK XI.

ROMANZA, from the Second Concerto	Mozart
QUINTETT, "Giuri ognuno"	Rossini
ADAGIO CANTABILE, Sonata Pathétique	Beethoven
BOURRÉE, D major	Handel

CONTENTS OF BOOK XIII.

LORD, REMEMBER DAVID	Handel
L'ADDIO	Schubert
DIAPASON MOVEMENT	J. P. Kirnberger
CARO MIO BEN	Giordani
O SALUTARIS HOSTIA	Auber

CONTENTS OF BOOK XV.

AVE VERUM	Mozart
MARCH, C major	Purcell
ANDANTINO, G major	Dussek
ANDANTE MAESTOSO, Overture, "Tannhäuser"	Wagner
CONCLUDING VOLUNTARY, C major	Hesse

CONTENTS OF BOOK XVII.

ADAGIO, B flat, "La Malinconia"	Beethoven
AIR, "Verdi prati"	Handel
LARGHETTO, Theme from Op. 9	Dussek
LARGHETTO, F major	W. Kauss
ANDANTE SOSTENUTO, C minor	F. Hiller

CONTENTS OF BOOK XIX.

ARIETTA CON CORO, "Invano alcun desir"	Gluck
O SALUTARIS	Batiste
PRELUDE, C major	Beethoven
ANDANTE, F major	Mozart

CONTENTS OF BOOK II.

VOLUNTARY	J. S. Bach
ADAGIO	Louis Spohr
ANDANTINO	D. Hemingway
MARCH in "Scipio"	Handel
PRELUDE	E. W. Prevost

CONTENTS OF BOOK IV.

ANDANTE, "Julius Cæsar"	Handel
PRAYER, Larghetto Maestoso	Bellini
MARCIA RELIGIOSO	Gluck
ANDANTE CANTABILE, Trio, C minor	Beethoven
PRELUDE	August Wilhelm Bach

CONTENTS OF BOOK VI.

MARCH, from the Second Set of Sonatas	Handel
PRELUDE	Gebhardi
ANDANTE MOLTO CANTABILE, from Sonata, Op. 109	Beethoven
LARGHETTO	Weber
ANDANTE SOSTENUTO	Mendelssohn

CONTENTS OF BOOK VIII.

AVE MARIA	Cherubini
ADAGIO, from the Symphony in G major. No. 16	Haydn
ALLA MARCIA	Michael Haydn
ANDANTE QUASI LARGHETTO	Dussek
INTERMEZZO	W. Spark

CONTENTS OF BOOK X.

MARCH, D major	Hummel
PIE JESU, from the "Requiem Mass"	Cherubini
MELODY, F major	Adolphe Nordmann
AIR, "Ne men con l'ombri" ("Xerxes")	Handel
ANDANTE MODERATO, C major	F. Lachner

CONTENTS OF BOOK XII.

CHANT DE BERCEAU, from Op. 81	Stephen Heller
ANDANTE, G minor, from a Sonata	Haydn
ADAGIO, D major, from a Sonata	Pinto
TRÄUMEREI, Lento, F major	R. Schumann

CONTENTS OF BOOK XIV.

SPIRTO GENTIL	Donizetti
MODERATO, Alla Marcia	Donizetti
MINUET, E major	Handel
LARGHETTO, 7th Concerto	Mozart

CONTENTS OF BOOK XVI.

THEME, C major, from Concerto, Op. 64	Mendelssohn
CHORUS, "Les Huguenots"	Meyerbeer
RECITATIVE, "Armida dispietata" / ARIA, "Lascia ch'io pianga"	Handel
MINUET, D major	Haydn
VOLKSLIED, G major	Old German

CONTENTS OF BOOK XVIII.

AVE MARIA, Soprano Air	Batiste
ADAGIO, E flat	J. S. Bach
ANDANTE GRAZIOSO, D major	Beethoven
FUGUE, C major	H. Jaeschke

CONTENTS OF BOOK XX.

ORGAN THEME, A flat	A. Hesse
THEME, A flat	F. Schubert
CHORUS, "We therefore pray Thee" (Dettingen "Te Deum")	Handel
VOLKSLIED, "Hope"	Mendelssohn
ANDANTINO, F major	Gluck

LONDON: ASHDOWN & PARRY, HANOVER SQUARE.

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, & SPALDING, at 3 and 5, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, March 11, 1882.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 60.—No. 11. SATURDAY, MARCH 18, 1882. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

CRYSTAL PALACE SATURDAY CONCERT, THIS DAY, March 18th, at Three. The programme will include Concert-Overture, in G (Joachim); Violin Concerto (Brahms); Symphony, in B minor, unfinished (Schubert); Duo-Nocturne, "Bénédict et Béatrice" (Berlioz); Kaiser-March (Wagner). Vocalists—Mrs Hutchinson and Miss Hope-Glenn. Solo Violin—Herr Dr Joachim. Conductor—MR AUGUST MANNS. Seats, 2s. 6d., 1s. 6d., 1s., and 6d.

WEDNESDAY NEXT.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERT.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERT, ST JAMES'S HALL.—The LAST EVENING CONCERT, WEDNESDAY next, at Eight. Artists: Miss Mary Davies, Miss Santley, Mdme Antoinette Sterling, and Miss Damian; Mr Edward Lloyd, Mr Santley, Mr Oswald, and the South London Choral Association of sixty voices, under the direction of Mr L. C. Venables. Conductor—MR SIDNEY NAYLOR. Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Family Tickets (to admit Six to Stalls), £2; Area, 4s. and 2s.; Balcony, 3s.; Gallery and Orchestra, 1s.; to be had at Austin's, St James's Hall; the usual Agents; and of Boosey & Co., 295, Regent Street.

MORNING BALLAD CONCERT, ST JAMES'S HALL, WEDNESDAY, March 29, at three o'clock. Artists: Miss Mary Davies, Miss Blandy, Miss Santley, and Mdme Antoinette Sterling; Mr Edward Lloyd, Mr Maybrick, and Mr Santley. The South London Choral Association of sixty voices, under the direction of Mr L. C. Venables. Conductor—MR SIDNEY NAYLOR. Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Family Tickets (to admit Six to Stalls), £2; Area, 4s. and 2s.; Balcony, 3s.; Gallery and Orchestra, 1s.; to be had at Austin's, St James's Hall; the usual Agents; and of Boosey & Co., 295, Regent Street.

MARLBOROUGH ROOMS, 307, REGENT STREET
(Adjoining the Polytechnic).

ON TUESDAY, MARCH 28th, 1882, AT THREE O'CLOCK,

MISS ROSA KENNEY

(Daughter of the late Charles Lamb Kenney)

Will give a RECITAL, which will include ALFRED TENNYSON'S NEW POEM,

"THE CHARGE OF THE HEAVY BRIGADE AT BALACLAVA,"

And a Selection from

"THE PASSING OF ARTHUR,"

Assisted by Distinguished Artists, Vocal and Instrumental.

Tickets, 10s., 5s., and 2s. 6d., to be obtained of Mr Mitchell, 38, Old Bond Street.

MR SIMS REEVES has the honour to announce that his LAST CONCERT, previous to resuming his farewell tour in the provinces, will take place, at ST JAMES'S HALL, on TUESDAY next, March 21st, at Eight o'clock. Artists: Mdme Patey, Miss Clements, and Miss Spenser Jones; Mr Herbert Reeves, Mr F. Barrington Foote, and Mr Sims Reeves. Pianoforte—Mdme Arabella Goddard (who has kindly consented to appear on this occasion). Conductor—MR SIDNEY NAYLOR. The Anemoic Union (under the direction of Mr Lazarus). Flute—Mr H. Nicholson. Oboe—Mr Malsch. Clarionet—Mr Lazarus. Horn—Mr T. E. Mann. Bassoon—Mr T. Wotton. Pianoforte—Mr S. Naylor. Tickets, 10s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 3s., and 1s., at Austin's Ticket Office, St James's Hall, and usual Agents.

WALTER MACFARREN'S ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS, ST JAMES'S HALL.—Herr Joachim, Miss Cantelo (her first appearance), and Miss Clara Samuell, at the LAST CONCERT, SATURDAY Evening Next, March 25th. Spohr's Symphony, "The Power of Sound," Beethoven's Violin Concerto, Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto, and Overtures, Mendelssohn's Ruy Blas, Walter Macfarren's Hero and Leander and King Henry V. (by desire). Band of Seventy performers. Principal Violin—M. Sainton. Conductor—MR WALTER MACFARREN. Tickets at Popular Prices, 7s. 6d., 3s., and 1s.

MR WALLWORTH'S BENEFIT will take place at the ROYAL ADELPHI THEATRE, on SATURDAY Morning Next, March 25, when "KEVIN'S CHOICE," an Operetta in Two Acts (Music by T. A. WALLWORTH), will be performed. Principal characters by Mdme Edith Wynne, Miss Lucy Franklein, Mr H. Walsham, Mr Wallworth (who will appear on this occasion only), and Mr H. Pyatt. The Opera will be preceded by a CONCERT, in which Mr Joseph Maas (specially engaged), Mr Redfern Hollins, Mr J. T. Carrodus, and other Artists will appear. To commence at Two o'clock precisely. Prices as usual.

HERREN CARL WEBER (Pianoforte) and ALEX. KUMMER (Violin), in connection with Monsieur B. Albert (Violoncello). FOUR CONCERTS of CHAMBER MUSIC, on WEDNESDAY Evenings, at the ROYAL ACADEMY CONCERT ROOM, March 22nd, April 5th, April 19th, and May 3rd, at Eight o'clock precisely. Programme, First Concert:—Trio, in F, Op. 42 (Gade); Prelude and Fugue in E flat minor, for pianoforte (Sgambati); Fantasiestücke, for violin and pianoforte (Schumann); Quartet for strings, No. 5, in A (Mozart). Vocalist—Mdme Fassett. Subscription Stalls for the Four Concerts, £1 5s. Stalls, 7s. 6d.: Tickets, 3s. and 1s. Chappell & Co., 50, New Bond Street, and 15, Poultry; Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., 84, New Bond Street; and at the Royal Academy of Music.

MR and Mdme BODDA'S (Miss LOUISA PYNE) ACADEMY FOR SINGING, "BONALLY," 85 and 87, Cambridge Gardens, Notting Hill. STUDENTS' CONCERT, March 20th. Spohr's God, Thou art great (arranged for Ladies' Voices); Abt's Water Fairies. Prospectuses of Academy as above, or MR STEDMAN, 12, Berners Street.

MR and Mdme BODDA'S (Miss LOUISA PYNE) ACADEMY FOR SINGING, Operatic and Miscellaneous. "BONALLY," 85 and 87, Cambridge Gardens, Notting Hill. Professional and Amateur. In and Out-Door Students. Studies—Singing (Private Lessons), Elocution, Piano, Deportment, Choral Practice, Italian. Prospectuses as above, or MR STEDMAN, 12, Berners Street.

LONDON CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.—
Principal—MR LANSDOWNE COTTELL.

The Directors invite attention to the recent extension and increased accommodation, residential and otherwise.

Fees from Two Guineas per term, residential from Fourteen Guineas, inclusive of the Musical and Fine Art Lectures.

Free Tuition is awarded to talented young artists unable to pay fees by fund granted for this purpose.

Prospectus (one stamp), Hon. Sec., 6, Tavistock Square.

SCHUBERT SOCIETY. President—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT. Founder and Director—Herr SCHUBERTH. Sixteenth Season, 1882. Members are informed that the arrangements for March are as follows, viz.:—The 104th Soirée Musicale on Wednesday, 29th March, due notice of which will be given. The Second Concert (70th since formation of Society—Schumann's Compositions in first part of programme), will take place at the Langham Hall, on Wednesday, 19th April. Ladies and Gentlemen desirous of joining the Society may have prospectus and full particulars on application to H. G. HOPPER, Hon. Sec., 214, Regent Street, W.

A nearly new beautifully made CHAMBER ORGAN, in elegantly Carved Ebonized Case, with plain metal front, built by F. RIEGER & SÖHNE, of Jagerndorf, Silesia, and exhibited at the Paris Exhibition of 1878. It is 11 ft. high, 5 ft. 4 in. wide, 3 ft. 4 in. deep, and has 2 Manuals of 5 Octaves, C to C, 2½va of Pedals, CC to D, 8 Draw Stops, 2 Combination Pedals, 1 Swell Pedal, 2 Foot Blowers, and Hand Blower at side. The Upper Manual Stops are: (1) Salcional, 16 feet tone; (2) Salcional, 8 feet tone; (3) Flöte, 8 feet tone; (4) Flöte, 4 feet tone. Lower Manual Stops: (1) Tremolo Forté; (2) Pedal Coppel; (3) Phys Harmonika, 8 feet tone, free reeds; (4) Expression Phys Harmonika. A Manual Coupler (pedal), Forté (pedal), Crescendo and Decrescendo Swell Pedal (balanced).

MESSRS OSBORN & MERCER will include the above valuable Instrument in their SALE of Furniture (removed from Woodfield House), at the WELSH HARP, Hendon, on Thursday next, March 23rd. Can be viewed any day, between 10 and 4 o'clock, at Woodfield House, Kingsbury Lane, one mile from the Welsh Harp or Hendon Stations, on presentation of Card. Offices—16, Dover Street, Piccadilly, W.

A valuable ORGAN by HUGHES, with 1 Manual, 9 Stops, 2 Octaves of Foot Pedals, in handsome Rosewood Case.

MESSRS E. & H. LUMLEY will include the above in their SALE by AUCTION, at 60, AVENUE ROAD, St John's Wood, on March 22nd. Catalogues of LUMLEY, Land Agents and Auctioneers, St James's Street, Piccadilly.

TO CONCERT GIVERS, &c.

THE LONDON ART GALLERIES, 23, BAKER STREET, W.—These Galleries are available in the Evenings for High-Class Chamber Concerts, Rehearsals, Readings, &c., for which their acoustic properties are eminently suited. For terms address—ADAM F. HARDY, Secretary, as above.

MISS ADELAIDE ARNOLD
PROFESSOR OF THE HARP,
34, CANONBURY SQUARE, N.

Digitized by Google

PARIS UNIVERSAL EXHIBITION, 1878, CLASS XIII.
Gold and Silver Medals, Paris, 1878. Gold Medal, Paris, 1879.
Gold Medal, Rome, 1880, and two Diplomas.

ARTISTIC HOUSE,
PARIS—10, RUE DU FAUBOURG-POISSONNIÈRE, 10—PARIS.

CH. J. B. COLLIN-MÉZIN,
Violin, Violoncello, and Bow Maker.

The celebrated VIOLINS and VIOLONCELLOS for SOLOISTS, which, since the adoption of the new system, are the only approved, recommended and played by the greatest Masters; among others, Messrs Sivori, Marsik, Hollmann, Léonard, Armingaud, Miss Marie Tayau, &c., &c.; Messrs Massart, Sauzay, Dancla, Franchomme, Maurin, Chevillard, Jacquard, &c., Professors at the Conservatoire of Music, Paris.

PRICES:—
Violin, £12; Tenor, £14; Violoncello, £20.
BOW in Pernambuco, Silver Mounted, first class, £1 4s.; Collin-Mézin, £1 12s.
Catalogues and Testimonials post free on application.

A YOUNG LADY (Royal Academy of Music), Pupil of Sir Julius Benedict, RECEIVES PUPILS for the PIANOFORTE, and is open to ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, Musical Evenings, &c. Terms on application. Address—C. E. F., care of Mrs Jackson, 3, Conduit Street, Regent Street, W.

GERMAN CONDUCTOR, CHOIRMASTER, PROF. OF MUSIC.

A GERMAN Professor of Music from the Academy of Music, Berlin, pupil of Kullak, Dorn, Wüerst, seeks for a good Engagement as CONDUCTOR and (besides) as CHOIRMASTER. He is also an excellent and much-quested Pianist, Singing and Compositions Master of good name. Address send to Berlin, Post Office, No. 60, sub. A. B. F. G.

"THE WRECK," BY GUGLIELMO.

MR THOS. P. POWER will sing GUGLIELMO'S admired Song, "THE WRECK," at Lancaster Hall, Bayswater, on Wednesday Evening, March 15.

"THE MESSAGE."

MR JOSEPH MAAS will sing BLUMENTHAL'S popular Song, "THE MESSAGE," at Mdme Isidor's Concert, at St James's Hall, This (Saturday) Evening, March 18.

"PARADISE LOST." An Oratorio. Composed by ANTON RUBINSTEIN, on the Poem of MILTON. The English version of the words by JOSIAH PITTMAN. Paris: GÉRARD, 2, Rue Scribe.

PINSUTI'S and CAMPANA'S most successful modern Songs:
"OLD SCARS,"
"ONE WORD," and
"SAPPHO AT HER LOOM."
2s. each net.
"Three songs by Pinsuti command serious attention. All are good, but the last is the best, and deserves to become a favourite."—Telegraph. "'One Word' is a charming love song."—Graphic. "'One Word' should form part of every singer's repertoire."—Pictorial World.
FABIO CAMPANA'S Last Compositions—Songs:
"ALONE, ALONE,"
"COURTSHIP,"
"LAND AHEAD,"
"OUR LAST GOOD-BYE,"
"WINGED WISHES."
2s. each net.
London: ALFRED HAYS, 26, Old Bond Street, and 4, Royal Exchange Buildings, Cornhill, E.C.

THE PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, AND KNIGHTAGE OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE for 1882. By JOSEPH FOSTER.
Early in January. In one or two volumes, royal 8vo, cloth gilt, price 42s. The Peerage or Baronetage separate, each 21s.
The THIRD EDITION, for 1882, containing all new Creations, has been considerably enlarged, and carefully corrected throughout. It is illustrated by upwards of 1,400 Engravings of Arms, &c., and contains fuller pedigrees than any other work.
Westminster: NICHOLS & SONS, 25, Parliament Street.
CHAPMAN & HALL, Limited, 11, Henrietta Street, W.C.

NEW SONG BY J. L. HATTON.

THE GOOD SHIP ROVER. Words by JOHN STEWART. Music by J. L. HATTON. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.
THE BETTER WORLD.
Words by Mrs. M. A. BAINES.
Music by
MICHAEL BERGSON.
Composed expressly for and sung by Mdme MARIE ROZE; sung also by Miss JESSICA O'BRIEN.
Price 4s.
London: STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

THE VOICE AND SINGING.
BY
ADOLFO FERRARI.
THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING,
Price 12s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.
"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

VOCAL EXERCISES COMPOSED BY FRANK MORI.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.
N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by the late FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

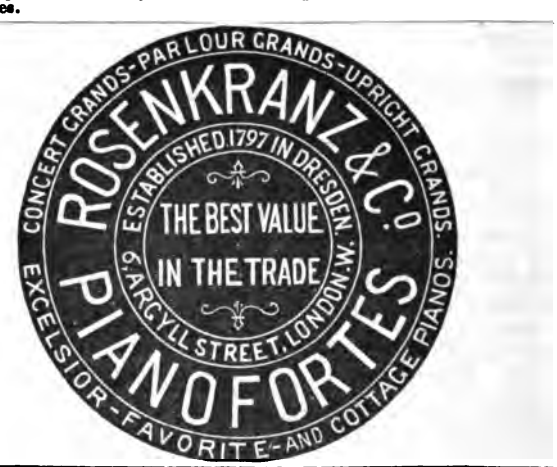
New Edition of "LE PETIT SOLFEGE."

LE PETIT SOLFEGE. Vingt Solfèges pour Voix de Mezzo-Soprano. Par JOS. CURCI. Price 6s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.
"This work for educational purposes will be found of inestimable value, since it is one of the very few which confines itself to the cultivation of the middle of the voice; and whilst the phrases are admirably adapted to develop the breathing powers and volume of the voice, the melodies are so exquisitely harmonized that they must prove of great benefit in the improvement of the taste and ear of a student in singing."—Pictorial World.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of
A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR
THE VOICE.
By T. A. WALLWORTH.
A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdme Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklein, and other successful Vocalists.
Full Music Size, price 7s.
London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.
For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.
DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis, of Basingstoke, says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.



LA POMPA DI FESTA. Grande Marche, pour Piano, à Quatre Mains. Par IGNACE GIBSONE. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"HER VOICE."

"HER VOICE." IGNACE GIBSONE'S popular Song (poetry by "A Soldier's Daughter"), sung by Mdme ENRIQUEZ, is published, price 4s., by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NEW VOCAL QUARTET.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" Arranged for Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, and Bass by G. B. ALLEN. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

THE DRAMA IN PORTMAN-MARKET.

Another MINOR RECORD.

(Continued from page 147.)

A Winter's Tale was followed by The Hunchback and The School for Scandal, both of which were acted and mounted with equal propriety, and on Monday, the 11th of October, Hamlet was produced in a very artistic manner. Mrs Warner, herself, did not disdain the part of Gertrude, and Ophelia was judiciously performed by Miss Huddart. The Hamlet of Mr Graham had many good points, and Mr James Johnstone exhibited no mean elocutionary power, as Claudius. Mr Belton was the Laertes, Mr Harvey, Polonius. Mr. Henry Webb developed a rich fund of humour as the First Gravedigger, and all the subordinate parts were well filled. The mise-en-scène was of the most creditable description, and, in particular, the comings and goings of the Ghost were so ingeniously contrived as to make this revival, for the time being, quite the talk of the town. The Ghost itself, by the way, found an efficient, though rather youthful representative, in the person of Mr George Vining. The Gamester, The Jealous Wife, and The Provoked Husband, with Mrs Warner as Mrs Beverley, Mrs Oakley, and Lady Townly, respectively, were next given, in addition to The Bridal,—as Sheridan Knowles's not very felicitous alteration of Beaumont and Fletcher's pathetic Maid's Tragedy was called—with Mr George Vining as Melantius, Miss Angell, Aspatia, and the Manageress, Evadne—a part which she might be truly said to have made her own.

On Monday, the 29th of November, an almost unique experiment was made in the revival of Beaumont and Fletcher's comedy, The Scornful Lady, skilfully purified, and adapted to the modern stage, by Mr T. J. Serle. The Scornful Lady had not been seen in London, since March, 1746, when it was given at Drury Lane, for Mrs Woffington's benefit—if we except a version under the title of The Capricious Lady, produced, for the celebrated Mrs Abington, at Covent Garden, in 1783. The heroine of this fine comedy is a lady—anonymous—who, from pride, conceals in public, the love which she really cherishes for her admirer, the Elder Loveless. Loveless having kissed her in the presence of company, the lady banishes him, for a year's travel in France. Apparently complying, he departs, leaving his house and estate to the care of a spendthrift brother, the Younger Loveless, who is under the surveillance, however, of his steward, Savil. The steward proves unfaithful to his trust, and mingles with the younger brother and his boon companions—a Captain, a Traveller, a Poet, and a Tobacco-man—in every description of wild revelry. Meanwhile the elder brother returns, disguised as a mariner, and introduces himself as a friend of the exiled lover, whom he describes as having been drowned at sea. This intelligence induces a usurer, Morecraft, to offer a sum of £6,000 to the prodigal, as the price of his brother's estate. The lady, meanwhile, has detected her lover's disguise, and retorts on his stratagem by affecting a willingness to console herself by accepting another suitor, Wilford. The Elder Loveless then declares himself, and the lady repeats her sentence of banishment. He retaliates by laughing at her, and the lady swoons. Worked upon by this, Loveless is unable to maintain his show of indifference. Whereupon the lady recovers, and overwhelms him with ridicule. He forthwith affects to abandon his suit altogether, and goes so far as to introduce Wilford, in the disguise of a woman, as the mistress whom he intends to marry. This last device brings the scornful lady to terms. She consents to an immediate union, and Welford is compensated with the hand of her sister, Martha. There is also an amusing underplot—very coarse, in the original version—bearing upon the courtship of the Lady's curate, Sir Roger, and her waiting-gentlewoman, Abigail. The cast at the Marylebone was as follows :—

Elder Loveless, Mr Graham; Younger Loveless, Mr Belton; Welford, Mr George Vining; Morecraft, Mr Harvey; Savil, Mr George Cooke; Sir Roger, Mr Henry Webb; Captain, Mr James Johnstone; Traveller, Mr Potter; Poet, Mr Saunders; Tobacco-man, Mr Rolfe; Abigail, Miss Charlotte Saunders; Martha, Miss Huddart; the Lady, Mrs Warner.

Everyone of these characters was thoroughly well played, and the Scornful Lady of Mrs Warner stood out, as a histrionic portrait, which will long remain a tradition in the annals of the modern stage.

The manner in which this fine comedy was mounted, reflected, no less than its presentment, the highest credit on the management. The scenery, dresses, and decorations were remarkable for their correctness, in a day when research and accuracy were so far less sought after, than is the case at the present time. The interiors, in which the action was laid, were all compiled from historical sources, and one truly magnificent scene, the Lady's Parlour, with its chimney-piece of white Carrara marble, china vases, clocks, and the then luxury—at 1616, the date of the play—of small carpets, was simply a marvel of completeness and refined taste. The grand old play proved worthy of its mounting, and was unanimously received, by a house filled to overflowing with artists, critics, and litterati, with every token of the most unqualified success.

The Scornful Lady ran up to Christmas, when an excellent pantomime, by Mr E. L. Blanchard, entitled Eyes, Nose, and Mouth, was brought out, with Tom Matthews, the acknowledged legitimate successor of Grimaldi, as clown. The Lady of Lyons, in which Mr George Vining performed Claude Melnotte, was given in January, 1848, and on the last day of that month, Massinger's A New Way to Pay Old Debts was put up. Here, Mr Graham, as Sir Giles Overreach, had to measure weapons with Mr Gustavus Brooke, who, then in the first flush of his metropolitan fame, was playing the same character at the Olympic—and was not worsted in the encounter.

The Wrecker's Daughter, by Sheridan Knowles, with Mrs Warner in her original part of Marian, was the next revival, and, subsequently, Shiel's Damon and Pythias, Sothern's Isabella, or The Fatal Marriage, and Lovell's beautiful play, Love's Sacrifice—with Miss Fanny Vining as Margaret Aylmer—were given, as well as a new fairy extravaganza, The Enchanted Tower, by Mr Charles Selby, in which the more juvenile members of the company were exhibited to advantage.

Mrs Warner now made another raid upon the Elizabethan Drama, and produced, on Monday, the 2nd April, Beaumont and Fletcher's tragedy, or, rather, tragic melodrama, The Double Marriage, with the subjoined cast :—

Juliana, Mrs Warner; Martia, Miss Fanny Vining; Lucio, Miss Charlotte Saunders; Ferrand, Mr Lacy; Virolet, Mr Graham; Brissonet, Mr James Johnstone; Camillo, Mr Tindall; Rouvere, Mr Potter; Villio, Mr Henry Webb; Castruccio, Mr George Vining; Pandulpho, Mr Clifford; Duke of Sesse, Mr Johnstone; Ascanio, Mr Belton; Boatswain, Mr George Cooke; Master, Mr Howell; Gunner, Mr Saunders.

The story is as follows :—

Virolet, a Neapolitan noble, plots with some friends to effect the downfall of Ferrand, King of Naples, but is betrayed by Rouvere, and concealed by his wife, Juliana, who, in consequence, is put to the torture. He is then liberated and sent on a maritime expedition. This brings the first act to a conclusion. In the second, Virolet is captured by a proscribed Duke of Sesse—now turned pirate—brought on board his ship, and drawn into contracting a second marriage—unknown to her father—with the Duke's daughter, Martia. He escapes with his new wife in one of the ships boats, and is forthwith pursued by the pirates. The third act finds them all assembled at Naples; depicts the various phases of court-life, and the humours of a royal favourite, Castruccio, who has been given permission to assume, for one day, the robes and authority of the King. Next occurs a stormy meeting between Juliana, Martia, and Virolet. A divorce is arranged between Virolet and his first wife, but the second is simultaneously informed that her marriage must remain merely nominal. Meanwhile, the Duke and his band conspire to revenge themselves on Ferrand, Virolet, and Martia, at once. At the beginning of the fourth act we find the pirates enrolled as guards in the service of the King. Martia visits Juliana for the purpose of insulting her, and threatens to be revenged upon Virolet, for her disappointment. Juliana seeks Virolet to warn him of his danger. Their interview is broken in upon by Martia, who disdainfully gives him back "his love, his vow," and then proceeds, with Rouvere, to sell her honour to the King, as the price of his assistance, in her scheme of vengeance. The Duke and Virolet, in the meantime, have formed a counter-plot against Ferrand, and the latter assumes the dress of Rouvere in order to obtain access more easily to his sovereign, whom he intends to slay. But Juliana had also conceived the purpose of assassinating Rouvere, and, encountering her husband, wounds him mortally by mistake. The popular commotion, set on foot by the pirates, now grows higher, and in the midst of it the King himself is killed by Sesse. Then lastly comes the terrible interview between the Duke and his infamous daughter, which is ended by the Boatswain stabbing the latter, and excusing the act thus:—

Digitized by Google

"I confess
That she deserved to die; but by whose hand?
Not by a father's. Double all her guilt,
It could not make you innocent, had you done it;
In me 'tis murder; in you 'twere a crime
Heaven could not pardon. Witness that I love you!
And in that love I did it."

This formed a striking and unlooked for dénoument, which brought the piece to a triumphant conclusion.

This play, re-arranged with much ability by Mr Serle, cannot be considered as amongst the author's best. As may be inferred from the above description, its plot has no lack of incident. But the incidents are over-crowded, and for the most part revolting, whilst the characters, from the weak-minded, vacillating Virolet to the worthless Martia, are one and all repulsive, if we except the devoted and deeply-wronged Juliana, pourtrayed, on this occasion—specially in the torture-scene—with powerful and admirably sustained skill by Mrs Warner, who had been rarely seen to greater advantage. The Double Marriage, nevertheless, abounds in effective situations—Beaumont and Fletcher were complete masters of stage-effect—more particularly the scenes between Juliana, Virolet, and Martia, which were followed with unmistakable interest by the audience. As a whole, however, the impression which it made was not equal to that of The Scornful Lady, though, as a theatrical curiosity—it had not been given in London since 1683—it was interesting to amateurs, and did not detract from, if it did not add to, the high reputation won by Mrs Warner for her management. The drama was superbly mounted, and the scenery of Mr Cuthbert, which included the deck of the ship—a very elaborate set—the Pirate Chief's cabin, an antique chamber in the palace, and a view of Naples, seen through a ruined archway, was universally admired.

(To be continued.)

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The concert given by this society in St James's Hall on Thursday evening, March 9, was one of decided interest, arising from the presence of novelty. Not that new works, per se, are entitled to rank as kindlers of interest. We have met with a good many lately that inspire a different emotion. On this occasion, however, something at least of sympathetic feeling was warranted by the contents of the programme, among which figured first and foremost a concert-overture, Ossian, by Mr F. Corder. The composer of Ossian was once a holder of the Mendelssohn scholarship, and is now engaged as conductor of music at the Brighton Aquarium, where he has done good service by carrying on, with success, an annual series of classical concerts. He belongs, it is said, to the most "advanced" school of modern musical faith and practice. He translates Wagner, professes to comprehend the ravings of Liszt, and with his little Brighton orchestra attacks their works in the most gallant manner. He is ambitious, too, in other matters, having composed two operas, a cantata, and an orchestral suite, besides Ossian, which was originally intended to prelude a lyric drama on the subject of Fingal. So much energy and daring bespeak a man who should be heard at once, since he will be heard sooner or later, and we may now assure any who recognize the duty, but are disposed to shrink from it, that Ossian is not the formless and incoherent thing which, taking note of Mr Corder's reputed sympathies, might have been expected. Happily, it is sometimes the case that our young composers belie in practice their enthusiasm for theories which, because they are new and affect to be progressive, captivate their undiscerning and inexperienced minds. Mr Corder, for example, has written an overture having very little in common with "progress" up to date. It is guilty here and there of exaggeration in point of style, and some cloudiness of expression, but it adheres mainly to recognized form; its themes are tuneful, as well as tinted with "local colour," and the general effect is one that commands attention. Definite judgment upon such a work after a single hearing would be absurd, but even a slight acquaintance serves to show that the composer's high aim is not entirely unwarranted by his resources. Let Mr Corder persevere. He may do something yet, and, should his faith and his practice diverge still more, the public, having the results of the one, will not greatly care about the other. Mr Corder conducted the performance, making a mistake in so doing. He is certainly not a born chef d'orchestre, and his overture would have gained in the more experienced hands of Mr Cusins. The work was received favourably. A second novelty—Brahms's setting of Schiller's Nänie—proved to be a disappointment, made all the more decided by comparison with Hermann Goetz's lovely music to the same text. Herr Brahms is a thoughtful man, and may have some good reason for associating the German poet's lines with a long string of harmonic progressions very interesting in themselves, but just as interesting without words as with them. Be his reason what it may, we entirely fail to see it. It must be very profound, indeed, because the poetry has a decided character and is picturesque withal, standing, so to speak, a thousand miles away from music which resembles an experimental exercise in chords on a great organ. The Nänie of Brahms will certainly not extinguish that of Goetz, but rather make its pure and beautiful radiance shine the brighter. We cannot compliment the Philharmonic choir on their performance, which, however, we have no difficulty in excusing.

The third novelty was a scena, (MS.), "Che vuoi, mio cor," for contralto, with an accompaniment of strings. No particulars respecting this work were given in the programme-book, but we gather from the catalogue appended by Dr Julius Rietz to "Mendelssohn's Letters," that it was composed in 1824, when its author was only in his fourteenth year. This fact should clearly have been given to the Philharmonic audience, because, without it, they had a difficulty in understanding the weakness of the music. Doubtless, every bar written by a great composer should be accessible, but risk of misjudgment is always incurred when the important matter of date is kept back. As the work of a mere child, we can admire the contralto scena; as the work of a man—and a great one—it is not worth a thought. It naturally derived immense advantage from the singing of Mdme Patey; but even that excellent artist failed to breathe into it the breath of life. There are no miracles now-a-days. Last of the unwonted array of unfamiliar things at this concert came a contralto solo and chorus, "The Water Nymph," by Herr Rubinstein. Here the Russian composer presents himself, as Agag did to Samuel, "delicately," not as a "son of thunder," nor with the smallest disposition to the Ercles vein—"the vein to tear a cat in, to make all split." "The Water Nymph" is a very pretty and attractive piece, with an expressive solo, most beautifully sung by Mdme Patey, charming choral passages, and all the glamour of muted strings and mysterious orchestration. It met with great favour, and received thus no more than its due. The rest of the programme comprised the "Eroica" symphony, Mendelssohn's violin concerto, played in his old and often-eulogised manner by Herr Joachim, and the overture to Jessonda.—D. T.

COLOGNE.—Anton Rubinstein's opera, Der Dämon, has been well received at the Stadttheater. On the first two nights, the composer himself conducted.

BRUSSELS.—First produced in 1853, at the Paris Théâtre-Lyrique, and then, after being remodelled and abridged, performed at the Opéra-Comique, Grisar's Amours du Diable has been revived at the Théâtre de la Monnaie. It will probably not remain long in the bills.—The following works will constitute the programme of the Musical Festival to be given in August at the Palace of the Fine Arts: "Alexander's Feast," Handel; an Overture, Beethoven; Requiem, Johannes Brahms; a composition (not yet definitively selected), Benoit; and another (ditto), Samuel. Kraus and Faure, soprano and barytone, are in the list of vocalists.

NEW YORK.—Mdme Chatterton-Bohrer's concert, at Chickering Hall, took place on Saturday night, Feb. 18. There were many popular attractions elsewhere, but the hall was nevertheless well filled. That Mdme Bohrer played well "goes without saying." She received able assistance from the famous artist, Mdme Anna Bishop. There was much of interest in the concert; but to the lovers of music there was an attraction in the singing of Mdme Anna Bishop entirely distinct from the rest of the programme. The appearance of this great artist suggests the reflection that the singers of to-day would do well to listen to her, and to seek to imitate her method. That her method is perfect there can be no doubt, and it is indisputable that Mdme Anna Bishop, after singing in every part of the world, can afford to smile at the efforts of her followers, who were not born when she was at the highest of her fame. She sang "With verdure clad" (Creation) with the expression of an experienced artist. There were, of course, occasional lapses; but, on the other hand, there was beautiful vocalization and some genuine soprano notes that it was a delight to listen to. It was interesting to hear her, and confirmed the theory that artists good in youth will never offend critical taste though years or sickness may impair their original powers.—Abridged from the "New York Times."

Digitized by Google

FORM, OR DESIGN, IN VOCAL MUSIC.

RECITATIVE.

(Continued from page 148.)

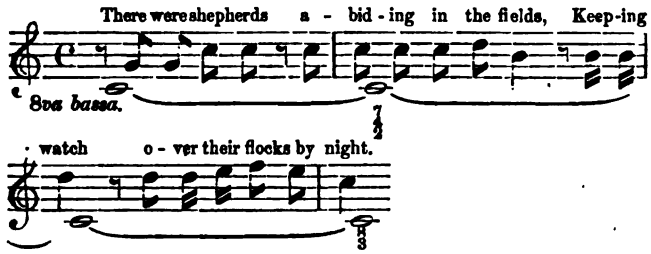
Recitative is in its nature without form. It is without the rhythm of parallel phrases and is rhythmic only in the sense that each individual bar has its accent, both primary and secondary, and that each individual phrase or section is complete. It has key-form only in the sense that each key is made complete and clear before another is touched. It has form of idea only in the sense that each phrase is clearly stated before another is suggested, and that in some cases the intrumental interludes form connecting links between the phrases of the voice, and are expressive of the poetical thought. Beyond this, musical form is absent from recitative. Everything hangs on the declamation; on the accent or value of each word and the meaning of each sentence. It is the music of the orator rather than of the poet, and may be called prose in song, as ordinary rhythmic music is verse in song.

Varieties of recitative may be reckoned under three heads: speaking recitative, accompanied recitative, and recitative in time.

The distinction between the two first kinds lies chiefly in the accompaniment. In old times the written accompaniment of speaking recitative was nothing more than a bass note filling up the time of, perhaps, several bars, then changing to another, perhaps, for several bars more. An unbroken chain of tradition from Handel, through Joah Bates and Sir Geo. Smart, tells us that this by no means represented the part to be played on the harpsichord, which was the usual accompanying instrument, but was a sort of shorthand or memorandum from which the player was to fill up as seemed best. Thus the harpsichord-player was to "sprinkle" chords at the points which require emphasis; sometimes on an important word, but more often in the rests of the voice, so as to mark the commas, semicolons, and full-stops of the words.

In such a way is the accompaniment of the short recitative in Handel's Messiah:

Ex. 138.



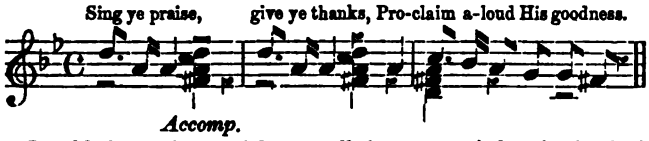
The harpsichord, or cembalo, had even less power of sustaining sound than the pianoforte, therefore it was impossible for these accompaniments to have been played as they were written.

A partial indication of the manner of filling up these memoranda is at the end of the accompanied recitative, "Comfort ye," in The Messiah. In this, the band, having had the accompaniment throughout, keeps it when the voice breaks into speaking recitative, and the chords are written as to be played, viz., single crotchets with rests.

In some music the chords accompanying speaking recitative have been written as short notes, but still something has been left unexpressed for the player to regulate with his own intelligence, namely, that the chords were written on the accents of the bars though they were to be played in the manner described above.

Of late years the chords have been written in the place where the composer intended them to be played, whether after or on the accent of the bar, as the following example from Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise will show:

Ex. 139.



In old times, that which was called accompanied recitative had the band for its accompaniment—not the harpsichord. This gave more importance to the accompaniment, which was written of old as it is now, in full; and instead of the simple chords which accompanied the speaking recitative, interludes of interest and expression appropriate to the words were brought in between the vocal phrases. These were necessarily in time, though the time of the vocal phrases still remained, as it does now, at the will of the singer.

The third kind, recitative in time, was, and is now, frequently interchanged with the other kinds. This is not free as to time, but it retains the characteristic declamation and the absence of rhythm of phrases, and, as a consequence, becomes tedious if carried on very long.

OLIVERIA PRESCOTT.

(To be continued.)

E. D'ALBERT IN VIENNA.

Last Sunday, after a seven weeks' pause, the Philharmonic Society resumed their Orchestral Matinées with this programme: Mozart, Symphony in C major (composed in 1783 at Linz); D'Albert, Pianoforte Concerto in one movement (new), performed by the Composer; and Berlioz, Symphony, Harold en Italie. The selection of Mr d'Albert's novelty was, as it were, a piece of improvisation, to fill up a gap occasioned at the eleventh hour, so to speak, by a message from Herr de Swert, who should have played a new violoncello concerto of his own composition, saying he could not attend. It is necessary to premise this, because generally we should be obliged, on principle, to protest against such items in a programme as the Pianoforte Concerto above mentioned. Mere pupils' efforts, no matter what talent, accomplishment, and readiness they may exhibit, are out of keeping in the scheme of the Philharmonic Concerts, the object of which is, above all things, to cultivate the classical element, that is, what is artistically thoroughly mature. E. d'Albert, however, the composer of the Pianoforte Concerto we recently heard, is yet a learner; he is only seventeen—from his appearance he might be taken for still younger—and he is said to have been no more than fourteen when he wrote the oft-named Concerto. If we consider his youth, and not what he has done, as something of itself, (which, as we have said, is not the proper standard to be adopted in the case of the Philharmonic Concerts), we must certainly wonderingly admire the Concerto less on account of its thematic fancy—for among the leading thoughts the very graceful second melody alone is entirely the young composer's own, the first theme belonging to the most hackneyed phrases of the Mendelssohn-Schumann school (let anyone only call to mind the commencement of Schumann's A minor concerto and Mendelssohn's Lied ohne Worte, 5th book, in G minor), while towards the conclusion Richard Wagner is most evidently copied—than on account of the lightness, certainty, and jauntiness with which it is all put together; on account of the spontaneous and uniformly continuous current with which the stream flows on from beginning to end. There speaks from out the novelty the most amiable affection and love for composition, the most genuine enthusiasm for the noble play of tone—factors which of themselves are guarantees of a certain amount of talent, which in this case only critical short-sightedness or intentional ill-feeling could overlook. Young d'Albert's gifts are displayed much more strikingly as a reproductive artist, as a virtuoso on the piano; the tender lad, with his frank open look, really expands to man's full growth when he touches the keys; such impetuous zeal, nay, enthusiasm, inspires, lends wings to, and heightens his powers of execution, already very considerable, though now and then—as is only natural—too youthfully precipitate, and his brilliant bravura. His appearance at the Philharmonic concert recalled to our mind in many respects the early fulminating feats before the public of Carl Tausig, who died so soon; whether in d'Albert's case, as in Tausig's, the gold will gradually be purified from the dross, the frothing be changed to generous, clear wine, is something the future must decide. The young Anglicised Frenchman, who enjoys in London the tuition of that esteemed virtuoso and pianoforte teacher, Ernst Pauer, but for some weeks has been the guest of Hans Richter here, was rewarded by most of the audience with loud applause, which we cordially endorse as well deserved by the sympathetic musical Hotspur—in so far as he receives it not as unreserved appreciation of what he absolutely did in his double capacity of composer and executant, but as kindly encouragement to him to continue his fresh and joyous work of creating, or rather, of learning, more.—Wiener Signale, 4th March.

FRANKFORT-ON-THE-MAINE.—According to the returns prepared for the general meeting of shareholders in the New Theatre Company, the total receipts amounted to 1,314,566, and the expenditure to 1,295,254 marks, leaving a surplus of 19,312 marks.

Digitized by Google

CHERUBINI.

(Continued from page 94.)

We see by the above reminiscences of an artist who was born in Florence, and who, being himself mixed up with the musical life of the town, was in a position to know and appreciate things, that Cherubini's first masters were not unworthy of their pupil's high intelligence. It is certain that his first steps were so guided as to set him in the right path, and that vigorous and solid instruction prepared him for profiting by the noble and powerful faculties which Nature bestowed on him; consequently, after only four years' study, spent under the direction of the two Felicis, he came out as a composer with an important work—a four-part mass with orchestra (in D), which was performed in one of the churches of Florence. This was in 1773, and Cherubini was, therefore, barely thirteen. A fact like this, which would be remarkable at any time, was particularly so at an epoch when musical instruction, especially in Italy, was singularly imperfect and laborious—not from the fault of the masters, but from that of the methods of teaching, or, rather, from the absence of any method at all, the systems followed being entirely empirical. With reference to this, Picchianti, whom I quoted above, has drawn a curious and sometimes striking picture of the manner in which musical studies were then conducted there. The fragment is too full of interest, and the facts adduced by the writer are too little known for me not to think myself bound to reproduce it here:—

"The reading of music," says Picchianti, "was always taught through the medium of solfeggio with nuances, or according to the pretended system of Guido d'Arezzo;* modern modality was mixed up and confounded with the ancient modality of plain-song; no exact rule, no appropriate mechanical exercises had been devised to facilitate the study of the harpsichord; nor had harmony reached the point where we behold it to-day, when it is presented to us as a systematic science. Despite the impetus given in the opening years of the century to the new theory of music by the celebrated Rameau, and subsequently by various illustrious Italians, the theory still remained enveloped in the physical phenomena of sound, and continued to be based upon calculations and geometrical demonstrations referring only to the mathematical determination of the number of vibrations that is, of the volume or other elements of the sonorous body, whence it resulted that such and such intervals were admissible in musical compositions. The sensations produced by hearing these intervals had not yet been made the object of philosophical observations, and no one had got so far, by logical analysis, as to determine their homogeneousness, and modal relations, from which flows principally the affinity which should always be present in music between different sounds, successive or simultaneous. Theory being in this state, and absolutely unable to offer clear and sufficiently developed rules for the study of harmony and modulation, blind practice was substituted for it. The consequence of all this was that the art of counterpoint was encumbered with a host of observations and rules each of which, invariably deduced from particular cases and not from general principles, gave rise to a host of exceptions. To succeed in mastering all the rules and the aggregate of all the exceptions, the student was obliged to go through a long and fatiguing process; he had to compose examples of counterpoint, first simple and then with certain artifices, both above and below a melody in plain song, the master making him write a single part and then combine in various manners six, seven, and eight real parts, with all scholastic and pedantic rigour. It was indispensable for the pupil to go through each of the eight tones constituting the ancient system of modality, before proceeding to the study of the fugue, in which he had to introduce in the most ingenious fashion all the grand artifices of double, triple, and quadruple counterpoint, simple, contrary, or reversed motion, as well as strette and canons. When these immense obstacles had been surmounted and the pupil had learnt to compose correctly such calculated productions of art, he was considered an accomplished artist, and as a doctor of music bade farewell to the school. Next, taking for models contemporary composers, he was bound, for a considerable period and with the assistance of advice now and then from his master, to learn how to treat musical compositions according to the forms of the day, which were very dissimilar to those he had been taught, and then, subsequently, he had to grope his way in the dark and endeavour to assimilate a few instrumental effects.

"These mediæval remains of scholastic empiricism possessed such vitality in Italy that they survived to nearly the commencement of the nineteenth century except in a single town, Naples, in the conservatories of which various highly important reforms affecting musical education had been effected, especially in the exercises indispensable for learning harmony, counterpoint, and every part of composition. The new style and new forms contained in the works of Leo, Pergolese, Vinci, and Jomelli were the result; but the new scholastic systems remained still ignored by the musical republic, though rather perhaps from indifference than in consequence of any jealous monopoly."

The above details show us how difficult it was to acquire a sound musical education in Italy when Cherubini was pursuing his studies, and how extraordinary it was that a mere child like him—only thirteen—should have been able, after working no more than four years, to write such a work as a multipart mass with orchestral accompaniment. As the manuscript has disappeared I cannot estimate the value of this composition, but it certainly could not have been entirely devoid of interest, since it was publicly performed in one of the churches of Florence, and since, in the course of the five subsequent years, the child-artist, encouraged by the reception awarded to his first essay, wrote sixteen other works in various styles, all of them obtaining the honour of performance.† We must not, however, exaggerate the importance of these juvenile works; interesting they undoubtedly were, if we take into consideration the tender age of him who wrote them; they were, too, correct; but, as regards their bearing the impress of individuality and genuine inspiration, a good judge, who cannot be accused of hostility towards one whom he loved and revered like a father, shall tell us what was the true state of the case. Halévy, who, after his master's death had the curiosity to render himself acquainted with the latter's early essays, which Cherubini had concealed from every eye, expresses himself thus about them:

"I saw, on going through them, that it was, as it were, out of respect for himself and from a desire to spare these early works, that he had kept them from all eyes. Everything in them announced the intelligent child brought up in a good school and nurtured on good precepts, but nothing indicated the genius which was destined to be revealed at a later period; the Cherubini who had become illustrious was anxious about his reputation as a child, and fearful of injuring the glory of the Cherubini of thirteen; it was a sort of not unbecoming and pardonable coquetry."

Cherubini's earliest compositions were, therefore, what they ought to be, what such compositions are when written by young musicians who have received a sound education; essays doubtless deserving encouragement and attention, but devoid of originality. What rendered them really interesting was the fact of their being the work of a mere child, who was evidently endowed with exceptional aptitude, and who seemed to promise one day to turn out a master. The Grand-Duke of Tuscany, Leopold, destined to become afterwards Emperor of Austria, saw this. That wise and enlightened Prince, who appeared to be a descendant of the Medici, and whose reforms, dictated by a benevolent and liberal spirit, had in a short time made of Tuscany "the diamond of Italy," employed himself in fostering with intelligence not only commerce and trade, but likewise literature and the fine arts. Young Cherubini was pointed out to him as an object eminently

* As we are aware, this barbarous system was based, not on the gamut of seven notes, but on the combination and irregular agreement of the hexachords, which, as their name indicates, comprised only six notes, and were mixed up with each other in the most extraordinary fashion. In solmisating by nuances, the seventh note, B, did not exist. More than a century of persevering efforts, and the expounding of a host of systems by intelligent French, Flemish, and German theoreticians was required to supersede this plan, at one and the same time illogical, difficult, and ridiculous, and replace it by the employment of the modern gamut, so rational and clear. We see that, as regards solfeggio, Italy, even at the end of the eighteenth century and at the full height of her great musical glory, was still following the old ways.

† I read in the Notice dictated to Beauchesne: "Cherubini composed successively, from 1773 to 1778, seventeen pieces, comprising masses, interludes, psalms, oratorios, and separate airs, all performed with equal success in the churches and amateur theatres of his native town." The catalogue of his works, scrupulously drawn up in two forms by himself, mentions among his early compositions two other four-part masses with orchestra (both in C); a cantata, La Publica Felicità, composed in honour of the Grand-Duke of Tuscany and performed in the Cathedral; an interlude, entitled Il Giuocatore, written for a private theatre; a "Miserere;" a "Magnificat" and a four-part motet with orchestra; two two-part "Lamentations," with orchestra; an oratorio performed in the church of San Pietro; a four-part "Te Deum," with orchestra, &c., &c.

Digitized by Google

worthy of his kindly patronage, and it was not long before the latter was exerted for the boy's advantage. Cherubini had conceived the idea of terminating his musical studies in a thoroughly practical manner under a master then celebrated throughout Italy, namely, Giuseppe Sarti, resident at Bologna. But Cherubini's father, burdened with a numerous family, whom it was only with great difficulty he managed to support by the exercise of his art, had not the means of sending his son to Bologna, and defraying his expenses for several years. The Grand-Duke took this task on himself, allowing out of his privy purse the young artist a pension, which enabled him to repair to the master whose pupil he was ambitious of becoming, and to live there as long as necessary. Thanks to this favour, of which he was in every respect worthy, Cherubini was enabled to go to Sarti, and started for Bologna towards the beginning of the year 1778.‡

(To be continued.)

CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.

The closing performances of this company at Her Majesty's Theatre called for no special remark, but it would be wrong to let Mr Carl Rosa's season pass without some words of review. In the first place the enterprise supplied English lovers of opera not only with that article in their own language, but under conditions of excellence approaching in many respects, in a few even transcending, those hitherto monopolised by opera in Italian. For many years native and naturalized lyric drama in the metropolis has so existed as to make necessary the most abject apologies from its friends for the offence of continuing in life at all. Its career has been of a fitful and vagabond character: here to-day, gone to-morrow; picking up stray crumbs of patronage anywhere, and always presenting a more or less shabby, down-at-heel appearance. Without Mr Carl Rosa it would have died long ago. He, unwearied by labour because never out of hope, has worked for it "through evil and through good report"—principally evil—and now we have seen opera in English not only lodged in the home of the foreigner, but commanding a degree of attention and exerting a measure of influence before unthought. Who can tell where this development will stop? or whether Italian opera in London is not destined to encounter a rival even more formidable than the German enterprise which threatens to come upon us like a flood? The issue depends, perhaps, upon Mr Rosa, who has the faith which proverbially moves mountains, and the perseverance that uses one position gained simply as a point of vantage from which to capture another. We do not know how the manager's confidence in his cause could have been better shown than by the luxury and completeness with which, during the season just ended, he put Balfe's Moro and Wagner's Tannhäuser upon the stage. The lavish outlay upon these works may, indeed, have appeared superfluous and extravagant to some witnesses. But Mr Rosa knew perfectly well what he was about, and is rightly credited with having looked beyond the present to the future which his shrewdness is shaping. Every penny spent in making his stage equal to that of Italian opera was a seed dropped into the ground to spring up and bear fruit at no distant date. Opera, however, is not dresses and decorations, which, however important, are only accessories. It must stand, if at all, by musical merit, a fact ever, we may be assured, kept before his eyes by Mr Rosa. Here a provider of opera in English faces his greatest difficulty. Till the other day, when the Royal Academy of Music established a class for the training of students in lyric drama, managers had to choose performers from raw or irregularly-prepared material. Their artists absolutely educated themselves—if they may be said to have done so at all—before the public, who, wearied by incompetence, became more and more inclined to regard English opera as impossible. This state of things is illustrated, even at the present moment, by the personnel of Mr Rosa's troupe, with its considerable proportion of Americans, and we may justly wonder that the foreign element does not enter yet more largely into its composition. But we see the greatest reason for surprise, under circumstances so adverse, in the high average excellence of Mr Rosa's people. A company, including Miss Gaylord, Miss Yorke, Miss Burns, Mr M'Guckin, Mr Packard, Mr Leslie Crotty, Mr Snazelle, and others whose names will readily suggest themselves, is one by no means to be despised either for its capacity or for the assurance it gives that English opera may enjoy all the advantages derivable from genuine talent. How much the season at Her Majesty's gained by the accession to the company of Mdme Valleria is obvious, and it may be that the enlisting of so able an English-speaking artist into Mr Rosa's ranks marks the beginning of a new and important development in the history of his enterprise. Mdme Valleria, by her charming impersonations, was a mainstay of the season—she, in turn, reaping enormous benefit from an opportunity of showing powers the existence of which only close observers of her previous doings may have seen reason to suspect. Mdme Valleria, we understand, has been specially engaged for a certain number of representations during Mr Rosa's next provincial tour. This is well, because the result must be to strengthen the position of the English lyric stage in all our great towns. A word should, in simple justice, be given here to the orchestra, which proved one of the chief attractions of the season, and also to the intelligence and skill of Mr Betjemann, who justified his position as stage manager by an almost unheard-of feat. He actually contrived to make an opera chorus exhibit signs of an intelligent interest in the drama they helped to play. That Mr Randegger suffered in health from the excessive anxiety and labour incidental to his position as conductor, was unfortunate. He attempted too much; but in all he did great skill came to the aid of intense earnestness, and the two made their rightful mark. Mr Randegger is one of the few good conductors we have amongst us, and must henceforth be careful to reserve himself for special occasions. How ably he was assisted during the season by Mr Pew and by Mr Rosa, whose appearance with the bâton always gave the signal for an "ovation," frequenters of Her Majesty's well know.

It would be superfluous to pass in review the performances that closed on Saturday night; and unjust to reproach the management with not having met every pledge given in the prospectus. Amateurs, no doubt, anticipated Benvenuto Cellini with great interest and pleasure; but in the degree of their reasonableness is their present discernment of sufficient cause for disappointment. There may be no limit to a man's purposes, but there is a very decided one to his means of carrying them out when they are in excess. As to the objection that Benvenuto Cellini should have taken precedence of Balfe's Moro, we need only remind those who make it that Mr Rosa is a manager of English opera, and would have laid himself open to inevitable and not unjust reproach had he allowed his season to pas without striking a blow for English art. In future years, it may be, he will do even more than produce a work written years ago for another stage than ours. There are composers rising amongst us who give promise of ability to justify and reward practical encouragement. Mr Rosa is the man to see this, and to act upon it with the large liberality that distinguishes him. In such a case substantial results may follow, and future historians of music in England may have to record the growth of a native opera from the seed sown with so much patience and perseverance by a German who succeeded in winning the English heart.—D. T.

‡ Though generally very exact in his statement of facts, Picchianti is guilty of an error in connection with this journey. In opposition to most of the biographers, he asserts that it was to Milan that Cherubini went to place himself under Sarti. Now the latter was not then in Milan, but still in Bologna. I have as a certain proof of this a note which I find in the chronological catalogue drawn up by Cherubini of his works. The first piece inscribed under the date of 1778 is a four-part antiphony (Montes y Colles), the title of which is followed by the remark: "At this epoch I was at Sarti's school, in Bologna." He stopped there with his master till 1779, for it is not till the first piece composed by him that year that I find this other note: "In Milan." He must, therefore, have lived a whole year in Bologna, and that was evidently the town to which he went on leaving Florence.

Moscow.—The principal works composing this year's repertory at the Russian Opera have been: Life for the Czaar, Glinka; Eugen Onegin, Tschaikowsky; Tannhäuser, Wagner; The Princess Ostroffsky, Wjasemsky; Count Stulin, Lischen; and The Power of the Evil One, Seroff.

Georgetown (Demerara).—The concert promoted by Mr Colbeck, organist of Christ Church, which took place in the Philharmonic Hall, on Tuesday evening, February 21st, was an unqualified success. To particularize the artists, is to break through the trammels of custom in treating of amateur entertainments; but, although we refrain from doing so in the case of the three ladies who specially distinguished themselves, the vocal excellence displayed by the Rev. W. G. G. Austin, and Mr J. A. Dalziel, must be our excuse for mentioning their names. Taken altogether, the performance was of a character seldom attained outside of professional circles. An amateur theatrical entertainment in the Philharmonic Hall, on the night of February the 16th, was largely attended; and the artists, most of whom are prominent members of a local society, sustained their parts with grace and spirit. The "Lacy Town Crèche," for whose behoof the performance was given, will doubtless be in receipt of a handsome sum as the result of the entertainment.—The Colonist.

Digitized by Google

ST JAMES'S HALL.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS,

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON, 1881-82.

DIRECTOR—MR S. ARTHUR CHAPPELL.

THE THIRTY-SEVENTH CONCERT OF THE SEASON

WILL TAKE PLACE ON

MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 20, 1882,

At Eight o'clock precisely.

Programme.

PART I.—Quartet, in C sharp minor, Op. 132, for two violins, viola, and violoncello (Beethoven)—MM. Joachim, L. Ries, Straus, and Piatti; Song, "The river sings" (Cowen)—Mr Abercrombie; Ballade, in G minor, for pianoforte alone (Chopin)—Mdlle Marie Krebs.

PART II.—Sonata, "Il Trillo del Diavolo," for violin, with pianoforte accompaniment (Tartini)—Herr Joachim; Song, "The Herdsman's Song" (Mendelssohn)—Mr Abercrombie; Trio, in E major, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (Mozart)—Mdlle Marie Krebs, MM. Joachim and Piatti.

Accompanist—MR ZERBINI.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 18, 1882,

At Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

Quartet, in C major, Op. 59, No. 3 (dedicated to Count Rasoumowski), for two violins, viola, and violoncello (Beethoven)—Mdme Norman-Néruda (her last appearance this season), MM. L. Ries, Straus, and Piatti; Sonata, in C sharp minor, "The Moonlight," for pianoforte alone (Beethoven)—Mdme Schumann; Song, "Herbstlied" (Franz)—Miss Carlotta Elliot; Sonata, in G major, Op. 78, for pianoforte and violin (Brahms)—Mdme Schumann and Mdme Norman-Néruda; Song, "Quand tu chantes bercée" (Gounod)—Miss Carlotta Elliot—violoncello obbligato, Signor Piatti; Serenade Trio, in D major, for violin, viola, and violoncello, repeated by desire (Beethoven)—Mdme Norman-Néruda, MM. Straus and Piatti.

Accompanist—MR ZERBINI.

* * *

One summer evening languorous and mild,
I dreamed among the melancholy firs
That I was gazing on that face of hers
The little lips whereof unclosed and smiled.

And I had kissed her mouth but for the spell
That holds the dreamer bound as if in death.
And while I gazed with eager panting breath,
The long dark lashes of her eyelids fell;

And, like some flower pleading for the dew,
Her head drooped down—How beautiful she was!—
And then she faded from my dream, because
My blinding tears I could not see her through.

GANELON.

WE have reason to believe that Mr George Grove will be invited to take a leading part in the management of the new Royal College of Music, with the title of "Director" of the institution. —Times.

MISS ROSA KENNEY, the clever and accomplished daughter of the late Charles Lamb Kenney, announces her intention of reciting, among other poems, Tennyson's "Charge of the Heavy Brigade at Balaclava," at the Marlborough Rooms, on Tuesday morning, March 28th. Miss Kenney will be assisted by Mdme Edith Wynne and Mr Charles Wyndham, together with other well-known artists; and we trust the numerous friends, as well as the many admirers of Miss Kenney's talent, will rally round her on this important occasion.

MR AND MDME BODDA'S (Miss Louisa Pyne) "students'" concert, to be held at "Bonally" (Cambridge Gardens), the residence of the esteemed professors, on Monday evening, will interest not only "parents and guardians" naturally anxious to note the progress of their "belongings," who are pupils at the Academy, but also the public, as the programme includes two cantatas—Spohr's God Thou are great and Franz Abt's Water Fairies. The performance of these two works will be a test of Mr and Mrs Bodda's method of teaching, so much eulogised by those who have studied under them.

DEATHS.

On February 24th, Mr GEORGE PERRY, Professor of Music (son of the late Mr George Perry, many years leader at the Sacred Harmonic Society, composer of The Death of Abel, and other oratorios), aged 63.

On February 26th, at Philadelphia, United States of America, Mdme ERMINIA MANSFIELD-RUDERSDORFF, formerly of the Royal Opera, Drury Lane, and the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden.

On March 13th, at Blomfield Crescent, W., MURIEL GERTRUDE, infant daughter of Marmaduke H. St John Robinson.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

TURPIN L'ARCHEVÊQUE.—Bravo "Beppo"! Healthy tone. No more eye-droopings, starfish that gleam, dancing rocks, quails that quiver, &c.—Read Mark Twain's "A TRAMP ABROAD." Get a friend of the "softer" sex to hold your sides "what time" you are reading. The "Cyclus" is at hand. Then comes Parsifal.

EDINBURGH.—Next week. Cordial sympathy.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.'S, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). Advertisements not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 18, 1882.

Cambridge University.

FINAL EXAMINATION FOR THE DEGREE OF DOCTOR OF MUSIC.

[Pills for Candidates.]

Thursday, March 9, 1882. 2 p.m. to 5 p.m.

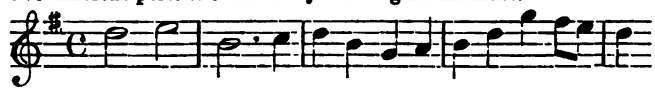
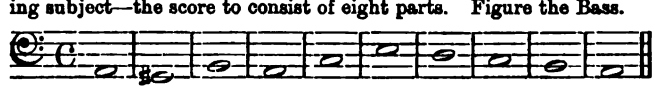
COUNTERPOINT.

1. Write a Fugue in five parts on the following subject: The Fugue must comprise, after the Exposition, entries of the Subject or Answer, or a portion of either, in the keys of E, B, and A minor, and C major. It must have some points of Stretto, beginning at two different periods of the Subject. Figure the Bass.

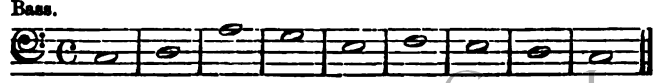


2. Continue the following as a Perpetual Canon for four in two in the octave. The Canon must comprise at least twelve bars within the repeat, and may have one or more free bars of Coda. Figure the Bass.

3. Add Counterpoint of the First Species for two Sopranos (not Trebles), two Altos, two Tenors, and a first Bass above the following subject—the score to consist of eight parts. Figure the Bass.

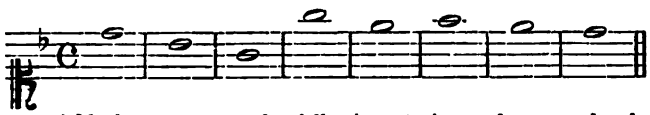


4. Write Counterpoint of the Second Species for Soprano, of the First Species for Alto, and of the Third Species for Tenor above the following subject—the score to consist of four parts. Figure the Bass.



Digitized by Google

5. Write Counterpoint of the Fifth Species for Second Soprano, Alto, Tenor, and Bass below the following subject, having shorter notes in one or more of the moving parts against longer notes of the others—the score to consist of five parts. Figure the Bass.



6. Add three parts to the following strain to form quadruple Counterpoint. The score need be written but once, but statement must be made of how many inversions a quadruple Counterpoint is susceptible. State the name of the tune from which the extract is taken, and also that of its author.

7. Write answers to the following Subject and Countersubject, with their inversion at A, and to the two Subjects at B and C. State whether the Subjects are Real or Tonal; and if the latter, whether Authentic or Plagal.

8. Write the Subjects of the following Fugal answers at A and B. State whether the answers are Real or Tonal; and if the latter, whether Authentic or Plagal.

Mdme Erminia Rudersdorff was so ill, we informed our readers, a short time since, that her life was despaired of. We regret now to state that she expired at her residence in Philadelphia on February 26th.

Mdme Scalchi, having paid Mr Gye £800 forfeit for breach of contract, has sailed for Buenos Ayres. Her place at Covent Garden will be filled by Mdme Trebelli, in association, it is reported, with Mdlle Stahl.

CONCERTS.

Mr W. Macfarren gave the second of his three orchestral concerts at St James's Hall, on Saturday evening, when the programme was as follows:—

Pastoral Overture (W. Macfarren); Concerto in C minor, pianoforte (W. Sterndale Bennett); Scena ed Aria, "Che faro senza Euridice," Orfeo (Gluck); Fantasia-Romantica, for violoncello (Piatti); Overture, Leonora (No. 3) (Beethoven); Symphony, in B flat (W. Macfarren); Song, "The Lay of the Imprisoned Huntsman" (violin obbligato, M. Sainton), Lady of the Lake (G. A. Macfarren); Overture, Scherzo, Notturno, Wedding March, A Midsummer Night's Dream (Mendelssohn.)

Mr Macfarren's overture and symphony had been several times performed; the first at the Crystal Palace; the other at the Covent Garden Promenade Concerts, and both in the provinces. Admirably rendered by the exceptionally fine band which Mr Macfarren has the good fortune to conduct, the pieces again produced a favourable impression, the remaining orchestral works being rendered to perfection. The overtures by Beethoven and Mendelssohn, and the scherzo by the latter, produced a special effect. The violoncello fantasia, of Signor Piatti, skilfully written for the display of rare executive powers, was given for the first time in London on this occasion, and played by its composer with that beauty of tone and finished execution in which he is unrivalled. Mr C. T. Speer played Bennett's fine concerto with much success, some signs of fatigue being apparent in the last movement. Mdme Patey was the vocalist. —D. N.

Schubert Society.—Owing to want of space, we omitted in our last to notice that the first concert of the sixteenth season (sixty-ninth since the formation of the Society) took place at Langham Hall, the old quarters of the Society, on Tuesday evening, Feb. 28th, on which occasion, in conformity with the rules of the Society, the first part of the programme was devoted to Schubert's compositions. The concert opened with his Trio in B flat, played by Herr Hause (pianoforte), Herr Poznanski (violin), and Herr Schuberth (violoncello). The vocal pieces included "Schaefers Klagelied," introducing Herr Korn to the members of the Society; "Gretchen and Spinnrade," sung by Mdlle Mathilda Enequist; and "Serenade," by Miss Ronayne (zither accompaniment, Herr von Goutta). The second part was miscellaneous, opening with Mendelssohn's grand Trio in D minor, by the same gentlemen who played Schubert's trio; Mr Barrington Foote sang "Leaving, yet loving" (encored); and Herr Poznanski had to repeat his violin solo, "Rhapsodie Hongroise." The members who appeared for the first time were Mdme Duncan, who was very much applauded for "Barney O'Hea," and Herr Korn, the new German tenor. The hall was very full and the concert a decided success. The second concert devoted to Schumann's compositions will take place at the same locale on Wednesday, the 19th April next.

Sacred Harmonic Society.—The concert of last week consisted of a performance of Haydn's Creation, a work so familiar and rendered by singers so well known that slight record of the fact may suffice. The choruses were finely sung and produced a great effect, particularly "Awake the harp" and "The heavens are telling." Miss M. Davies gave the solo soprano music with much effect, particularly the airs "With verdure clad" and "On mighty wings." Mr E. Lloyd in the recitative, "In splendour bright" and the air, "In native worth," gained great and deserved applause; while Signor Foli's fine bass voice was heard to advantage in the solos, "Rolling in foaming billows" and "Now heaven in fullest glory." In the absence of Sir Michael Costa, M. Sainton again acted efficiently as conductor. Costa's Eli is to be performed at the next concert on March 31.—D. N.

London Conservatoire of Music.—On Saturday evening, Feb. 25, a soirée was given by Mr Lansdowne Cottell, at his new residence in Tavistock Square, to illustrate the attainments of the ladies and gentlemen who, as members of the above Conservatoire, are graduating under his instruction with a view, it may be presumed, to professional life. The soirée was well attended both by the friends of Mr. Cottell and the pupils, besides others who were invited to witness and bear testimony to the excellence of the teaching and the promising quality of the results. The programme was necessarily of a mixed character, embracing, as it did, many kinds of vocal, pianoforte, and other instrumental music. The examples of the high class proficiency acquired by the students were several, and honourable mention may fairly be made of Mdlle Eleanor Crux, Miss L. Gardiner, Miss Maud Spencer, Mdlle Vollenweider, and Miss Emilie Dawson, who, in Smart's "Lady of the Lea," Bellini's "Ah non giunge," Nathan's "Why are you wandering,' Masse's "Chanteuse voilée," and Roeckel's "Angus Macdonald,' exhibited gifts in an instance or two of remarkable worth, and always, exemplifications of properly directed and effective singing Mr Edwin Lilley, in Ascher's popular romance, "Alice, where ar thou?" Mr C. Hetherington Smith, in Sullivan's "Distant Shore," and Mr S. Davis, in Handel's "Arm, arm, ye brave," entitled themselves to commendation on similar good and sufficient grounds. The principal pianoforte specimens on the part of the lady scholars were contributed by Miss Clara Blackburn, Miss Alice Gould, Miss Isabel Ruff, and Miss Sorrell, and with unequivocal success on all sides. Altogether, the performances at the concert were creditable from every educational point of view, and spoke well for the system of training and development pursued by Mr. Lansdowne Cottell and his professors at the "Conservatoire" over which they so diligently preside.

Digitized by Google

Miss Agnes Zimmermann and Miss Marie Krebs gave an interesting "recital" of pianoforte music on Wednesday afternoon, March 15, at St James's Hall. The programme, consisting entirely of duets either for two instruments or for four hands on one instrument, possessed a welcome aspect of novelty, and to the amateurs who were present it must have been one of considerable enjoyment. The pianists in question have long been acknowledged as "queens-regnant" in the domains of pianoforte playing, and any examples of "duet" music which might be confided to them for performance would assuredly be illustrated with the keenest mutual sympathy, and, as a matter of course, with all the technical perfection so often revealed to us at Mr Arthur Chappell's Monday and Saturday "Popular Concerts." All that we need do in referring to the present recital is to put on record the works which were performed by these excellent artists. The programme opened with Hummel's four-hand "Grand Duet," once so popular with pianoforte students and so instructive an illustration of a composer for the instrument, who scarcely deserves the desuetude into which he has fallen; Reinecke's Impromptu (two pianofortes) on a theme from Schumann's Manfred; a group of Schubert's fanciful and discursive "marches" (four hands); Mozart's melodious and captivating Sonata, Op. 53 (two pianofortes); Mendelssohn's graceful and vivacious "Allegro Brillante" (four hands); and Saint-Saëns' ingenious and supremely difficult variations on "a theme of Beethoven's" (two pianofortes). As regards the delivery of this varied and well-contrasted list of duo pianoforte pieces, it is unnecessary to make further remark than that the two distinguished artists associated with them won over and over again their best honours, and retired with the sincerest homage of all present who could fortunately listen to them with the requisite knowledge and appreciation.—H.

Miss Josephine Agabeg gave her third annual concert on Tuesday evening last at Steinway Hall in the presence of a numerous and brilliant audience. Miss Agabeg selected for her principal solo, Mendelssohn's fantasia in F sharp minor, of which she gave a thorough artistic reading. She also took part with Messrs Ondricek (violin), and Libotton (violoncello), in Beethoven's trio in C minor; with Mr Ganz, in Thalberg's arrangement for two pianofortes on themes from Norma, and with Mr Libotton in Chopin's Polonaise for violoncello and pianoforte, finally contributing Liszt's "Midsummer Night's Dream" as the termination of the programme. Mr Libotton earned a double call by his admirable rendering of a sarabande by Corelli, and a tarantelle by Popper, while Mr Ondricek received an encore for his clever performance of a mazurka by Wieniawski. Mr James Sauvage gave, with extraordinary energy, Gounod's well known song the "Valley," but failed to realize the fact that the little room in Seymour Street does not require the same expenditure of voice that might be necessary in Albert Hall. Mr Ganz conducted in his well known skilful manner, and also effectively assisted Miss Agabeg in the duet for two pianos alluded to above. Miss Emma Allitsen, Messrs Ernest Cecil and Cecil Treherne also took part in the concert; Miss Allitsen contributing "My Mother's Song," by W. Ganz, together with Professor Goldberg's characteristic setting of the verses made by Chadwick Tichbourne of himself in the Tower, the night before he was executed in Lincoln's Inn fields for treason, A.D. 1586, and Messrs Cecil and Treherne, Masini's duet, "I Mulatieri." L. K. T.

Bow and Bromley Institute.—The choir connected with this institution, under the direction of Mr M'Naught, a very well known and able teacher of the Tonic Sol-fa system, gave a concert on Tuesday evening, at which was performed Dr G. A. Macfarren's Glasgow cantata, The Lady of the Lake. We have not now to speak of the work in which the Cambridge Professor has so ably, and with such an abundance of appropriate local colour, illustrated Sir Walter Scott's poem. Its merits were acknowledged by us at the time of its first hearing, and there is nothing new to say, unless we express an opinion—the more decided because of the effect produced on Tuesday night—that it has been unduly neglected in London. A good thing, however, can afford to wait, which fact may comfort those who think well of The Lady of the Lake. The performance was chiefly of interest apart from its subject, as showing the capacity of Mr M'Naught's choir, a body comprising 130 voices, chosen with care, and only accepted after satisfactory proof of ability. On the whole, the choral singing was very good. As regards volume and quality of tone, something, no doubt, was left to desire; but precision, expression, the fluency which comes of confidence were pleasantly conspicuous throughout. It was evident that these East-end singers are thoroughly well taught, and no less, that they are apt pupils. The solos in Professor Macfarren's work were successfully given by Miss Larkcom, Mrs Mudie-Bolingbroke, Messrs Barton M'Guckin, Albert M'Guckin, and Hutchinson; the accompaniments being confided to Mr E. J. Turpin (organ) and Mrs M'Naught (pianoforte). A large audience attended and gave unquestionable proof of interest in the cantata, as well as pleasure in the performance.—D. T.

The annual concert of the "Whitechapel Church Young Men's Association" came off on Wednesday evening, March 8th, in the large room, St Mary's Street. There was a very large audience. The Viscountess Folkestone gave her valuable aid and sang Wallace's "Sweet spirit, hear my prayer," Sullivan's "Where is another Sweet, as my Sweet?" the old English air, "Cease your funning," and her own song, "It was a thorn" (violin obbligato, Mr Leslie), accompanied by herself on the pianoforte, and winning genuine and unanimous applause for each. The other singers were Misses Bessie and Emilie Webber, Messrs John Cornwall and Frank Holmes, together with a select choir under the direction of Mr James A. Birch (gentleman of Her Majesty's Chapel Royal). Misses Moore and Beard were the pianists, and Mr W. H. Leslie, violinist. They sang with effect Pearsall's "Who shall win my lady fair?" Eaton Faning's "Vikings," Caldicott's Part-song, "Jack and Gill," and Macfarren's "Sands of Dee." Miss Moore played Brinley Richards' arrangement of the soldiers' chorus from Gounod's Faust, as well as Sydney Smith's Huguenots, and Miss Beard, formerly a pupil of the veteran professor, Mr W. H. Holmes, a caprice and a "Grande Marche Dramatique," Mr Leslie contributing the March, Musette, and Gavotte from Handel's Suite in D for the violin. The Misses Webber gained due applause for Glover's duet, "The Hawthorne Hedge"; Mr Cornwall winning approbation for his rendering of De Foye's "Tell her I love her so," and Mr Frank Holmes giving Weiss's "Village Blacksmith" with more than usual success (accompanying himself on the pianoforte), as well as Poniatowski's "Yeoman's Wedding," in both exhibiting vocal qualifications that will bring him, with practice and perseverance, to the front rank of his profession. In the course of the evening Mr H. P. Matthews gave an amusing selection from his "Repertoire of Mirth and Music."

PROVINCIAL.

Middleton.—On Saturday evening a successful concert was given in the National Schoolroom, in aid of the fund for the restoration of the vestry of the parish church. There was a good attendance, the front seats being filled. The singers were Mrs Theo. Jackson, Misses Alice Walker, Brewster, and Read, Mr Wormell, and a glee party; solo pianist, Dr Horton C. Allison; and reader, Mr Ben. Brierley. Miss Walker, who made her first appearance in Middleton on the occasion, received a well-merited encore for "A Summer Shower"; Mrs Jackson sang "La Serenata," the effect of which was enhanced by the violin accompaniment of Mr F. R. Jones; the trio, "O Memory," by Miss Walker, Mrs Jackson, and Miss Brewster, met with hearty and prolonged applause; Miss Read contributed two songs with taste and feeling, and, being encored in Reichardt's "Thou art so near, and yet so far," repeated the last verse; Mr Wormell was called upon to repeat "England, freedom's home," but sang, instead, "Simon the Cellarer." Of Dr Allison's pianoforte performances we need say little, except that he fully maintained his high reputation as a master of that instrument, in the manipulation of which he has few equals in this part of the country. He gave with great effect an improvisation of airs from Gounod's opera of Faust, and, in response to an encore, played the well-known air with variations, "Home, sweet home."

Mr Wallworth, the well-known and esteemed professor of singing, announces his benefit at the Royal Adelphi Theatre on Saturday morning, March 25, when an operetta from his pen, entitled Kevin's Choice, will be heard for the first time, preceded by a concert at which Mr Joseph Maas, Mr Redfern Hollins, and Mr J. T. Carrodus, the eminent violinist, will lend their valuable assistance.

It is reported that Gayarre, the Royal Italian Opera tenor, will go to the Teatro Nacional, Buenos Ayres, instead of Stagno. (Orchestra, &c.—Dr Blitge.)

Digitized by Google

TONIC SOL-FA.

The following letter has been addressed to Mr Mundella, M.P., Vice-President of the Council, by Dr G. A. Macfarren, Professor of Music in the University of Cambridge, and Principal of the Royal Academy of Music :—

SIR,—I am told it is contemplated by the Council of Education to authorize the use of the Tonic Sol-fa system of musical notation in elementary schools throughout the country, and, as I think strongly on this subject, I trust you will allow me to offer my carefully-formed opinion for your consideration. I think the system to be bad, because it hinders the acquisition of a sense of pitch, which is a most valuable quality for musicians; because it confounds the characteristics of keys, which have distinctly different harmonic derivation; and because many of its signs are so vague that persons familiar with the system often mistake them. I think it to be inconvenient, because it can only apply to music up to a very definite limit; because persons who have learnt from this system have greater difficulty to acquire the ordinary technicalities of music than those who begin to study the art from the standard notation; and because persons who can read only from this system are unable to participate in musical performances with those who read from the usual alphabet. I think the adoption of the system unjust, since imposing on the poor an expenditure of time and money which they can never turn to any practical account, and placing them at a disadvantage with the rich, who are able to read musical publications of all countries; whereas the use of this exceptional notation is confined to a sect in England and some of its colonies alone.—I have the honour to be, sir, faithfully yours,

7, Hamilton Terrace. G. A. MACFARREN.

A ROYAL VOLUME OF MUSIC.

An interesting addition to memorials of the late Prince Consort has been made by the publication, in one handsome volume, of a number of musical pieces from his pen. Although it is not stated that the forty compositions thus brought together are only a part of his Royal Highness's musical work, there appears to be good reason for thinking so. The Prince was devoted to the art, and fond of committing his thoughts to paper. Indeed, not long after he came to reside in this country so many pieces bearing his name were accessible that some ingenious persons conceived the idea of working them up into an opera, and were only induced to relinquish the project upon payment of a sum of money by the illustrious and alarmed composer. If the secret history of the present volume were written, it would probably appear that a selection has been made, under exalted auspices, of the Prince's best and most serious work; but, be this as it may, a large circle of amateurs will welcome the book, not only for what it is as music, but because it exemplifies the grave and earnest spirit of a man who truly loved the art; who, as his famous letter to Mendelssohn shows, knew how to honour artists; and who strove, as far as his abilities and manifold duties allowed, to be an artist himself.

The volume contains pieces that, in one form or other, are already known, such as "Morgengebet," the original of a psalm-tune called "Gotha"; the "Christmas Hymn," which has long had a place in collections of music for use in public worship; the Te Deum, and the cantata for voices and orchestra, Invocazione all' Armonica. But while its contents are not wholly unfamiliar, the book comes with enough of novelty about it to aid the interest of its origin in making up a considerable attraction. It begins with a number of songs to German words by Duke Ernest of Saxe-Coburg; by the composer himself, Von Kleist, Michael Beer, and others. In looking through these it is impossible not to see how the grave and tender nature of the Prince is illustrated by his choice of subjects. All the themes are poetical, and some display a vivid fancy; but there is a more or less obvious tinge of seriousness running through each. In this spirit the composer treated them. His music is most often sedate and measured of utterance. Occasionally it borders upon liveliness, but never approaches flippancy. Honest in all things, the Prince here exemplifies what was undoubtedly his own prevailing mood, and likewise his distinct conviction that art is a serious pursuit. The structure of the songs shows a certain homeliness, or, perhaps, conservatism of method. Into the new lyric world which Schubert opened up by the composition of his matchless Lieder—a world whither Schumann pressed, and Liszt, and Franz, and all the lights of modern song—Prince Albert either declined to enter as a matter of taste, or because he distrusted his ability to advance so far. Hence we do not find that co-ordination of voice and pianoforte which sometimes in its impulse overshoots the mark and makes the voice subordinate. Rather is the pianoforte strictly limited to the province of accompaniment in the usual forms of full harmonies, broken chords, arpeggios of sedate movement, an occasional passage of tremolo, somewhat liberal use of chords in syncopation, and so on. Meanwhile the voice part has about it a good deal of the simplicity of the Volkslied. As a rule, its compass is limited; its character diatonic; its rhythm regular, and its phrasing studiously symmetrical. Here, then, clearly, is no lesson adapted for study in the "intense" school. These plain and simple themes, with their equally plain and simple harmonies, are the expression of one who found the ordinary resources of music sufficient for his purpose. Under the circumstances, perhaps, we should withdraw the word "ordinary" from the foregoing sentence, because the songs give us what most contemporary composers are frightened at and run away from—the "unadorned eloquence" of a diatonic theme. Than this there is nowadays nothing more extraordinary in the higher regions of musical art, which bid fair eventually to banish melody of any kind. The Prince Consort is nearly always happy in his themes. They seem to be the natural, unforced expression of one who sang as the poetic subject moved him to sing; and when this is the case, assuming that the composer really has a soul for art, the result is never without truth, and, consequently, never without charm. His Royal Highness once congratulated Mendelssohn, in a memorable sentence, upon preserving the true faith amid the "Baal-worship of false art," and we are bound to say that there are no signs of "Baal-worship" in these pieces—no cutting with knives, and leaping and shouting, no grimaces and distortions, in a vain effort to draw down fire from a godless heaven.

The Invocazione all' Armonica is, comparatively speaking, an ambitious effort, and fills thirty-five folio pages with solos and choruses, but the broad and general characteristics of the piece are precisely those which we have pointed out in the songs. The distinguished composer would not get out of his depth, though the temptation was great. Hence we find a grave and measured style, and a profound submission to the "tyranny of the tone-families." That the Prince could have ventured further with safety seems clear enough, after looking at one episode of a specially agitated character; but he chose to put his trust for the most part in the power of simple melody and massive diatonic harmonies. This is further exemplified in the Te Deum, some passages of which are decidedly felicitous, as, for example, the ascending sequence of keys on the verses beginning "The glorious company of the Apostles," and the really able treatment of the fine contrast between the "sharpness of death" and the opening of the kingdom of Heaven. All this is truly sacred and in the best taste. Points of considerable merit are obvious also in the Jubilate and the anthem, "Out of the deep," although in the second case the Prince, following many old English models, cut up his work into too many short movements. The "Christmas Hymn" and chorales, together with the melody for violin, which close the volume, call for no special remark, nor need anything further be said to recommend a book having a peculiar claim upon English amateurs as presenting the works of a man who ever used his exalted position for the good of the art he professed to love, and who, with a thousand claims upon his attention, not only found time for self-culture but for stimulating the development of others. We cannot conclude without acknowledging Mr Cusins' careful editing and the handsome manner in which the volume has been turned out of hand by the publishers.—D. T.

At St Petersburgh, a new opera, Snégourotschka, by Rimsky-Korsakow, occupying five hours in performance, proved a failure.—After leaving St Petersburgh, Mdme Sembrich proceeded to Moscow, where she was to sing seven times at the Italian Operahouse.

CINCINNATI.—The festival at Cincinnati was an immense success, both artistically and financially, the amount made being 100,000 dols., 40,000 of which was Mapleson's share. In speaking of the conductor, Signor Arditi, the press are unanimous in their praises. A local journal, writing about the festival, says :—"The orchestra is here of equal importance with the voices, and it may be justly said their performance during the week was admirable. Their amount of 'tone' was ample, the purity of intonation, for so large a body of instrumentalists was admirable, and the perfection with which they accompanied the vocal music placed the band, as an opera orchestra, on the same pinnacle of efficiency as the Thomas Symphony Orchestra. Signor Arditi has a mastery over the complexity of opera music, which is surpassed by no conductor and equalled by few. His intelligence seems to be omnipresent and every detail is infallibly watched by his quick eye and followed by his sensitive ear."—(Extract from a private letter).

Digitized by Google

LONDON BALLAD CONCERTS.

The last evening concert but one of Mr John Boosey's present series of Ballad Concerts brought together a large audience on Wednesday, at St James's Hall, the attraction, besides the accustomed singers at these entertainments, being the queen of lady violinists, Mdme Norman-Néruda, and a new patriotic song, by the Poet Laureate, entitled, "Hands all round." Mr Tennyson's stanzas are thoroughly to the purpose, as our readers will acknowledge on perusing the first of the three verses (subjoined) into which the sentiment of the poem is embodied :—

"First pledge our Queen, my friends, and then
A health to England every guest,
He best will serve the race of men,
Who loves his country best!
May freedom's oak for ever last,
With larger life from day to day:
He loves the present and the past,
Who lops the moulder'd branch away.

CHORUS.

Hands all round! God the traitor's hope confound!
To the great cause of Freedom drink, my friends,
And the great name of England round and round."

These lines, set to a melody (by an amateur, we are informed), "arranged by Mr. C. Villiers Stanford," were finely declaimed by Mr Santley, and well responded to, in chorus, by the South London Society. Mdme Néruda met with unanimous approbation for her performance of a "Sarabande and Tambourin," by Leclair (for which she was twice called back to the platform), a Cavatina by Raff, and a Mazurka by Wieniawski. At the conclusion of the Mazurka, the audience would not be contented until it was repeated. The other successes were Tosti's song, "For ever and ever," and Hatton's "Simon the Cellarer" (Mr Santley); Pinsuti's "I fear no foe" (Signor Foli); Blumenthal's "Sunshine and rain," together with Hullah's "Three Fishers" (Mdme Antoinette Sterling); "On the banks of Allan Water" (Miss Spenser Jones); a new song, "Uncle John," music and words by F. E. Weatherly (Miss Marian Mackenzie); and Ascher's popular romance, "Alice, where art thou?" (Mr Edward Lloyd); all of which were encored. Mr Sidney Naylor conducted with his accustomed musicianly skill. The last evening concert is announced for Wednesday next, and the last morning concert for Wednesday, March 29th.

—o—

THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

On Monday night the extraordinary attractions now presented by these concerts led again to a crowded house and an enthusiastic audience. No result could have been more natural, which fact we are entitled to insist upon because previous familiarity with the same combination of talent may have dimmed public perception of its rare value. Mdme Schumann, the worthy bearer of an illustrious name, and the representative of a grand school, is a host in herself; but when to the charm of her pianoforte playing is added that of such a quartet as MM. Joachim, Ries, Straus, and Piatti, instead of wondering that St James's Hall is full, we marvel that the place is not by many degrees too strait for the throng of those who fain would enter. Monday's programme was one of much interest, notably because there figured in it a Fantasiestücke by Schumann, written for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, and never before performed under Mr Chappell's auspices. The novelty of the piece may have aroused suspicion as to its merit, since it was reasonable to argue that a good work by such a master would long ago have obtained a hearing. We are not going to contend that, in the light of facts, the suspicion appears unreasonable. The composition, though full of interest, is not one of Schumann's best. It exemplifies a large number of his mannerisms, and presents but few of his characteristic beauties—that is to say, the chief ideas are frequently worked to death, without the relief afforded by the exercise of fancy; the violin and violoncello are properly treated only in one movement; and the finale is, in effect, little more than a string of episodes, having hardly other connection than that of contiguity. To this the excepted movement just mentioned is a valuable contrast. In form a duet for violin and violoncello, with pianoforte accompaniment, its graceful and melodious character won unanimous approval, to which result the exquisite playing of Herr Joachim and Signor Piatti contributed no little. Throughout the work prominence is given to the pianoforte, and, as may be supposed, Mdme Schumann took advantage of it not only to show her own executive genius, but her passion for the genius of her illustrious husband. Notwithstanding the much-vaunted "higher development" of pianoforte playing, the one "prophet" of Robert Schumann is still Robert Schumann's widow. Mdme Schumann was further heard in Beethoven's Sonata in E flat (Op. 27)—a comparatively modest and easy work, familiar, perhaps, to every amateur present on Monday night, and certainly the intimate acquaintance of all those who most appreciated the simple dignity and perfect interpretative art with which it was played. Every such performance is a valuable lesson at the present juncture. It shows what a grand school was that in which Clara Wieck learned her lessons, and how far below it is the more modern academy which inculcates the virtue of muscular exercises and nervous spasms. Mdme Schumann's reception, and the applause she received at the close of her task, were enthusiastic and prolonged enough to warrant a belief that there are more than 7,000 in our Israel who have not bowed the knee to Baal. But what chance, in the long run, has distortion against classic grace? Other features of the programme were Schubert's Quartet in D minor and Haydn's in G major—both of them familiar and esteemed. The vocal music had the attraction of Miss Santley's charming talent. Alike in one of Mendelssohn's most popular songs and in Handel's "Oh, had I Jubal's lyre!" the daughter of our eminent baritone showed herself worthy of the stock from which she has sprung. More tasteful, refined, and artistic singing not even an ultra-fastidious taste could desire.—D. T.

—o—

SCRAPS FROM PARIS.

At last, Namouna, the new ballet in two acts and three tableaux, book by M. Nuitter, "choreography" by M. Petipa, and music by M. E. Lalo, has been produced at the Grand Opera, but the result is not very satisfactory. M. Nuitter was not as well inspired as usual when he wrote the book, which is certainly not characterized by thrilling interest, and turns upon the love of a fair slave, Namouna, for a young man, Ottavio, who languishes for some other beauty. The music does not aid the book. It is too uniform; deficient in dash, brilliancy, and, above all, action. Many of those who generally admire M. Lalo's compositions say that he has no idea what kind of music is required for a ballet. Mdlle Sangalli played the heroine. She was most charming, as vigorous as graceful, as clever a pantomimist as she is a marvellous dancer. The dresses, designed by M. Eugène Lacoste, are marvels of good taste and elegance; the scenery by those well-known artists, MM. Lavastre and Rubé-Champeron, is quite worthy their reputation. Since the first night, several judicious cuts and alterations have been made and the ballet goes somewhat better, but it can hardly have a long run.—The Library of the Opera was quietly opened, without any set ceremony, on the 1st inst. Writers on subjects connected with musical and theatrical history will find it rich in materials. Cards of admission are to be obtained on application to M. Nuitter, Keeper of the Archives.—One of M. Vaucorbeil's leading artists, M. Lassalle, had a somewhat narrow escape the other day. As he was driving along the boulevard in his brougham, the latter came into collision with a street cab and was overturned, horse and all. Fortunately, no one sustained any serious injury.

On Friday, the 10th inst., there was an explosion of gas at the Opéra-Comique, an hour or two before the opening of the doors. Some gas-fitters, employed to do something to the meter, in the Rue Marivaux, carelessly neglected to provide themselves with the safety lamps they are bound to use on such occasions. The result was an explosion, followed by an outburst of flames, and but for the heroism of Fringuet, the gasman to the theatre, who, at the risk of his life, twice dashed through the flames to turn the gas off at the main, the consequences might have been most disastrous.

A three-act buffo opera, Coquelicot, has been brought out at the Bouffes Parisiens. The book, founded on a vaudeville written by the Brothers Cogniard and produced in 1836, is by M. Silvestre; the music, by M. Louis Varney, composer of Les Mousquetaires au Couvent. The music is pleasing but not very original. The dresses and scenery are exceedingly splendid.

The biddings at the sale of the second portion of the Escudier copyrights, &c., were far more brisk than at the sale of the first. Aïda fetched 100,000 francs, the purchaser being M. Alphonse Leduc. M. Heugel & Son bought M. Ambroise Thomas's Songe and Caïd for 40,000 francs, as well as Auber's Gustave. Verdi's Ernani and Requiem fell to M. Lemoine for 20,000 francs; his

Digitized by Google

Don Carlos and Simon Boccanegra to Ricordi, of Milan, at least, so it is said. Sig. Vianesi acquired Jerusalem for 7,000, and M. Kybourtz, Les Vêpres Siciliennes, for 6,100 francs. M. Bathlot gave 7,400 francs for Auber's Premier Jour de Bonheur and Rêve d'Amour; 3,200 for Una Follia a Roma, by the Brothers Ricci; and 650 for Pierre de Médici, by Prince Poniatowski. Clapisson's Gibby, la Cornemuse and Gastibelza, Maillart's first work, were bought by M. O'Kelly for 350 francs. Arban's Méthode was adjudged to M. Leduc for 33,000 francs, and Bottesini's (for the Double-Bass) to M. Lemoine for 4,200. The total of the upset prices was 193,470 francs; the sum realized, 263,000.

A VISIT TO MAD. PASTA.*

(To Monsieur Heugel, Director of the "Ménestrel.")

You ask me, my dear Monsieur Heugel, for a little narrative of my visit to Mad. Pasta. With all my heart. I eagerly seize the opportunity of gratifying one who knows so well how to be agreeable to others.

It was about 1858. I was on the point of setting out for Italy. Rossini said to me: "Go and see Mad. Pasta at her villa on the Lake of Como. I will not give you a letter. Mention my name, tell her yours, and you will be well received, for she is a good sort of woman." One morning, a few days later, I got into the little boat moored to the steps of the Hôtel d' Angleterre on the Lake of Como, and was conveyed to Mad. Pasta's villa. On my arrival, I gave the servant my card, and, following him closely to a tolerably handsome drawing-room, perceived, surrounded by two or three visitors, a stout homely woman, with thick black eyebrows, a slight moustachio, a red complexion, and regular features, buried in a large armchair, and very anxious to find her eyeglass, but very much embarrassed how to do so, as it was probably lost behind her back, and she greatly needed it to read the name on my card, for she was exceedingly short-sighted. I entered too soon for her to continue her search, and there she sat, with my card in her hand, without knowing who I was. I took advantage of this to have a little fun. At the mention of Rossini's name her face brightened up, and I recognised something of her whom I had so admired as Anna Bolena and Desdemona, in Tancredi, and as Amina, in La Sonnambula. I turned the conversation to Italian music, in which I was at home, for, during three years, I had not missed, whenever I was in Paris, a single performance at the Théâtre Italien. I belonged to the category of passionate dilettanti; section of the fanatics. I began by speaking to her about herself and each of her creations. I discussed in detail the characters she gave the different personages, and the particular effects produced by her as actress or singer; I even mentioned several performances in which she had surpassed herself. As I spoke, I saw her glance sideways at my card in the hope of reading my name, while she thought: "Who can the man be?" So I went on, comparing her to Malibran, to Mdlle Sontag, and to Mad. Pisaroni, and endeavouring to define the talent of each. The more I spoke the more her curiosity increased, and the more she interrogated the accursed little card—which for her bad eyesight was mute. After a quarter of an hour or twenty minutes of my little exhibition of dramatico-lyric fireworks, I took my leave, and, jumping lightly into my boat, started on my way back to the Hôtel d' Angleterre. But, before I arrived, I heard behind me another boat coming along as fast as oars could urge it, and someone hailing me. On looking round, I saw it was Mad. Pasta's boatman. "Sir, Sir!" he said, "Madame is exceedingly sorry! She did not know who you were! She is coming to call on you directly." "By no means! By no means! I will go back to her." Half-an-hour afterwards, I re-entered her drawing-room, and she ran forward to meet me. "Ah! my dear friend" (we had never seen each other before), "you puzzled me nicely," she said. "But come, seat yourself there, and let us have a chat." Then I understood what Rossini's observation meant, and his observations always meant something, when he said she was a good sort of a woman. We do not see many such in France. We have a great many women who are good, but very few, especially among artists, to whom the designation, a good sort of a woman, is applicable. As much goodness as you can desire! But we seldom meet with bonhomie. With the fair artists of France, there is always a touch of coquetry, a something of the pretty woman, and in this Mad. Pasta was utterly wanting! I could not credit my eyes. Was that the queenly being I had seen! Was all her nobleness of physiognomy, her beauty of attitude, and the sovereign grace, which Talma so admired, come to that! She looked like a worthy shopkeeper's wife. There was no studied elegance of dress; no defence against the attacks of age.

"You must know, my dear friend," she said, "that I get up every morning at eight o'clock, and then go and water my vegetables, only, as the grass is very damp, I put on boots, and," she added, laughing as though she would split her sides, "I dress like a zouave. . . . But all that has nothing to do with the question. We will, if you do not mind, talk a little about our art. I read in the papers of your writing Mad. Ristori a Medea that was very successful."—"I did so," I replied without false modesty, "and I am very glad of it."—"I, too, used to play Medea, in a piece written by Mayer; it was one of my finest characters. I should like to hear what Ristori did. In the first place what was her costume?"—"An antique costume designed by Scheffer from a Greek vase."—"Very rich?"—"No, very simple. It was rather sombre in colour, but very much spread out and full."—"And her head-dress?"—"Her hair."—"No diadem?"—"None! She had copied a Medusa's head from an antique medal, and a mass of hair, falling on each side of her face in close ringlets, resembled a number of small serpents. It was something terrible."—"I had a diadem, put together with great care and trouble. I introduced into it precious stones and metal plates, red and blue, to represent flames! I wanted, when I appeared, to look like a sorceress."—"Because your Medea was one."—"Of course, she was. And yours?"—"Mine was a woman and a mother."—"So was mine."—"Yes, but, as regards myself, resolutely putting aside car, magic wand, winged dragons, and invocations, I concentrated all my efforts in painting Medea's heart, with its fits of despair, of resentment, and of fury; only, to leave her her tragic and epic character, I did not make her a Greek, but a barbarian. I gathered, so to speak, round her figure and soul all the storms from the shores of the Black Sea; I made her a kind of priestess of the sanguinary divinities of Tauris."

Mad. Pasta listened to me with the deepest attention, as if endeavouring to reconstruct the new Medea. Suddenly she said: "My dear friend, will you do me a great favour?"—"Certainly."—"Read me the principal scenes of your piece."—"In French?"—"Yes, in French, but you must explain to me Mad. Ristori's intentions and the effects she produced,"—"Nothing is more easy, for I have a copy which I brought to offer you, and I went through the part, syllable by syllable, so thoroughly with my admirable interpretess that I can give her to the life! . . . . Only, I make one stipulation."—"What is it?"—"Why, that when I have finished, you, in your turn, shall sing me some passages from your Medea."—"But, my dear friend, I do not sing any more."—"Well, you shall sing for me, as I will read for you."—"So be it, I accept."

I began. As I read, I described all Mad. Ristori's stage business, and sometimes even reproduced her intonations in Italian. In a word, I did all I could that my hostess might, so to speak, witness the performance. She followed me with impassioned intelligence, interrupting me from time to time for the purpose of saying: "I am sorry that I was not given that sentiment! It would have been admirable for singing." After I had read more than an hour, I stopped and said: "Now it is your turn."

She took her place at the piano. Scarcely was she seated and had commenced her air, before her face was transfigured! Her eyebrows quivered, her mouth was raised, and all her features assumed an expression of pathetic grandeur. The Pasta of other days rose up before me; it seemed to me as though she had been touched and metamorphosed by a magician's wand. And I was right. The magician was art! Every great artist grows young again in the presence of the God. I once saw a more than septuagenarian actor reappear in some special performance. His dash, high spirits, and animation were something wonderful. . . . He was thirty! When the piece was over, I ran to his dressing-room to compliment him; I found him tottering on his legs, with trembling limbs, and uncertain speech; he was a hundred! Mad. Pasta presented to my view the same process of rejuvenescence. Her voice, it is true, had grown weaker, the high notes were somewhat exhausted, and the execution was imperfect; but there remained what we admire in some half-destroyed frescoes of Leonardo da Vinci, beauty of outline, style, emotion; and heard thus, quite close, her singing had about it something mysterious and indefinite, which enabled the hearer to dream what she who was called Pasta had been! I carried away a deep remembrance of it with me.

* From The Ménestrel.

Digitized by Google

To complete our artistic entertainment, she took me to the end of her garden and showed me a small rotunda-shaped pavilion, where I perceived, placed in niches in the wall, six busts. They were those of the great female artists with whom she had sung: Grassini, for whom she professed real admiration; Catalani, Pisaroni, Malibran, Sontag, and Mad. Damoreau. Recollecting that she had created Norma, at Milan, with Grisi as Adalgisa, I said: "I do not see Grisi. Why have you not put her in your little Pantheon?"—"Oh! mio caro!" she replied, with half a smile, marking thus, with a word, I might almost say an intonation, the enormous distance separating artists of the first rank from the most brilliant virtuosas of the second.

Such, my dear Monsieur Heugel, is a faithful narrative of my visit to Mad. Pasta, and I shall be happy if it amuses, for a moment, the readers of the Ménestrel. E. Legouvé.

—o—

WAIFS.

Joseph Wieniawski has left Paris for Brussels.

A Society for Classical Music has been founded at Perpignan.

Lohengrin has been well received at the Teatro Real, Madrid.

The First Austrian Ladies' Quartet have been singing in Riga.

Hans von Bülow recently gave a "pianoforte evening" in Breslau.

Goldmark's Königin von Saba is in rehearsal at the Teatro Apollo, Rome.

Ciro Pinsuti's new opera, Margherita, is still performing at the Fenice, Venice.

Mdme Fursch-Madier has returned from St Petersburgh, and was recently in Milan.

An Italian version of Johann Strauss's Lustiger Krieg is a success at the Valle Theatre, Rome.

Mdlle Marianne Eissler, a young Austrian violinist, is in Paris, with the view to giving concerts.

Gounod's Tribut de Zamorra has been performed at the Teatro Regio, Turin, with moderate success.

It is said that Massenet's Hérodiade will shortly be performed in Geneva and, somewhat later, Bologna.

Vizentini will, ere long, retire from the management of Italian Operas in St Petersburgh and Moscow.

The Augsburg Municipality have selected Ucko, of Stuttgart, as manager of the Stadttheater, from next autumn.

Mad. Sophie Menter has been making an enormous sensation in Moscow. (Menter—Liszt, of course.—Dr Blidge.)

Medini, the bass, has been compelled by indisposition, to cancel his engagement for the Italian operatic season in Odessa.

Mdlle Bianca Bianchi selected La Sonnambula for her début at the Milan Scala. The "cognoscenti" were charmed with her talent

Frank Kullak will carry on the New Academy of Music, Berlin, directed for so many years by the late Theodor Kullak, his father.

The Italian operatic season, under Ciampi's management, at Odessa, was inaugurated with Lucia. The second opera was Il Barbiere.

Verdi's Simon Boccanegra is to be revived at the Milan Scala. The cast will include Mad. Borelli, MM. Mierzwinski, Naunetti, and Maurel.

The Prince of Schwarzburg-Sondershausen has conferred on G. Lederer, "heroic Tenor" of the Stadttheater, Leipsic, the title of Chamber-Singer.

Müller-Kaunberg, formerly of the Ducal Theatre, Coburg, is engaged for five years in place of our own Schott, at the Theatre Royal, Hanover.

Accounts from Liége speak in high terms of the début of a twelve-year-old pianist, named Flohr, pupil of the Liége Conservatory, and a native of Bonn.

Zumpe, conductor at the Stadttheater, Frankfort-on-the-Maine, is engaged from the 1st September, in the same capacity at the Stadttheater, Hamburgh.

Masini, the Verdi tenor, has been offered a three years' re-engagement in St Petersburgh with a salary of 130,000 francs for each year.—(330,000.—Dr Blidge.)

Mdme Krauss, in return for her co-operation in the performance, at the Grand Opera, Paris, for the victims by the calamity at the Ringtheater, has been created an Imperial Chamber-Singer to the Emperor of Austria.

Count Geza Zichy, the one-handed noble Hungarian amateur pianist, is making a concert-tour in Germany, and will devote the proceeds to charitable purposes.

Engel has secured the services of Mdme Schröder-Hanfstängl, prima donna in Stuttgart, and of Theodor Wachtel for the approaching season at Kroll's Theatre, Berlin.

On account of distinguished professional merit, Ernest Schuch, Court Capellmeister, Dresden, has had the title of Royal Hofrath conferred on him by the King of Saxony.

Zoribal, a new opera, words by C. Hofmann, music by Friedrich Wick, a member of the orchestra, has been given amid general approbation at the Court Theatre, Sondershausen.

At a concert for a charitable purpose, in St Matthew's Church, Leipsic, the programme included Handel's "Jubilate," Mendelssohn's "Lobgesang," and Johannes Brahms's "Triumphlied."

A lecture on the great German composers, with vocal and instrumental illustrations, was given by Mr Sinclair Dunn, of the Royal Academy of Music, London, under the auspices of the Manchester Tonic Sol-fa Council, in the Association Hall, Peter Street, on Wednesday last. Mr James Hindle was the accompanist. Excerpts from Bach, Handel, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, and Mendelssohn were very creditably rendered.

Since the public journals are apt to give advice and instruction to theatrical managers on the subject of precautions against fire, Mr Hollingshead is not perhaps unreasonably proud of the success which crowned the efforts of his staff to extinguish a fire on Saturday morning in the premises of our contemporary the Morning Post, caused by a rather alarming explosion of gas. As the flames were quickly communicated to the ceiling of apartments in the basement there seems some reason to believe that both the newspaper offices and the Gaiety Theatre and Restaurant, which form one block of buildings, might by this time have been in ruins but for the prompt assistance at hand. We learn that within about three minutes after the first alarm the Gaiety firemen, under the direction of Mr Talbot Smith and Mr Hartt, had connected the necessary lengths of hose with their powerful hydrants, and within ten minutes had entirely extinguished the flames.—M. T.

THY WILL BE DONE.*

In this wide world we all must bear
Much bitter pain and vexing strife,
There lives not one who does not share
The sorrows of the human life.

It matters not if rich or poor,
If noble or of lowly birth,
Each one their burthen must endure
Till death removes them from this earth.

How oft our projects are laid low,
And all our brightest dreams depart,
By means of some deep crushing blow
That pales the cheek and breaks the heart.

When death from those we love doth sever,
It gives to us the greatest pain,
For it has parted us for ever,
Ne'er on earth to meet again.

Yet let us strive with all our might
That it be fully understood,
Whatever God sends us is right,
Whate'er He does is for our good.

So therefore, 'midst our grief and pain,
Tho' oft with sorrow overcome,
Let us with chasten'd heart exclaim—
Thy will, O God! not ours be done!

* Copyright. Emily Josephs.

Vienna.—Some time since, Ernestine Gindele, the well-known operatic singer, gave Stahl, broker and money-changer, 110,000 florins to invest in public securities. On her betrothal to Guillaume, wine-grower and merchant of Bordeaux, she requested Stahl to let her have her money back. Stahl then confessed that he had lost nearly the whole in speculations on Change, 17,000 florins, found at his office when searched, being all that was left.

Munich.—The attraction this week at the Theatre Royal has been Wagner's Ring des Nibelungen. Das Rheingold was given on the 14th inst.; Die Walküre, on the 15th; and Siegfried, on the 17th. The Gotterdämmerung concludes the series to-morrow, the 19th. The work will be given at the Theatre Royal, Dresden, with all the Bayreuth scenery, dresses, properties, &c., by Angelo Neumann, on the 28th, 29th, 30th August, and 1st September.

Stuttgart.—The Association for Classical Sacred Music, under the direction of Dr Faisst, recently gave a Historical Concert with the subjoined programme: "Präambulum," Johann Maria; "Gloria," Josquin de Prés; "Improperieu," Palestrina; Chorale, Jacob Prätorius; Song, Giacomo Carissimi; "Giacona," Dietrich Buxtehude; Song, Johann Wolfgang Franck; "Magnificat," Francesco Durante; Organ Concerto, Friedmann Bach; "Offertorium," Mozart; Psalm, Maximilian Stadler; "Responsorium," Eduard Grell; Recitative and Air from Die Zerstorung Jerusalems, Ferdinand Hiller; and Psalm, Mendelssohn.

Digitized by Google

The only Gold Medal for Wind Instruments with Keys, in the Paris Universal Exhibition of 1878, was unanimously awarded by the Jury to Messrs P. GOUMAS & Co., for the fine quality of tone and finish of their Instruments.

SPECIAL MANUFACTORY OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FOR

CLARIONETS, FLUTES, PICCOLOS, OBOES, BASSOONS, COR ANGLAIS, FLAGEOLETS, AND SAXOPHONES.

P. GOUMAS & Co.

(Late BUFFET, CRAMPON & Co.),
Established 1830.

Nine Prize Medals have been awarded to GOUMAS & Co. for general excellence and improvements in the Manufacture of Wind Instruments with Keys.

Manufacturers of all kinds of Wood Wind Instruments for Military Bands, Musical Instrument Makers to Her Majesty's Army and Navy, and to the Armies, Navies, and Conservatoires of France, Belgium, Italy, Russia, Austria, Spain, America, &c.

Manufactory at Mantes (Seine et Oise), France. · Paris: Passage du Grand Cerf, 18 et 20.

LONDON: 39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET.
Price Lists sent free on application.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF

ALL KINDS OF MUSIC STRINGS FOR ALL MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Sole Depôt for Signor ANDREA RUFFINI'S (of Naples) Celebrated Strings for Soloists, manufactured by him on a system invented by Mons. J. B. VUILLAUME, of Paris.

Sole Agent for CHARLES ALBERT'S (of Philadelphia, U.S.) new Patent Improved Chin Rest; also his improved String Gauge.

39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, W.
Price Lists free on application.

All kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner on powerful machines made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S). A DELICIOUS BEVERAGE AND TONIC.

Made from Port Wine, Liebig's Extract of Meat, and Extract of Malt; Nutritious, Strengthening, Stimulating, Flesh-forming, Health Restoring, suitable for the Robust in Health as well as the Invalid. Strongly recommended by the Medical Faculty. An Immediate Benefit is experienced after taking it; the Frame is Invigorated, and no ill effects follow.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
TESTIMONIALS.

SIR,—A short time since I was induced by the novelty of the title to send for a bottle of your Liebig's Extract of Meat and Malt Wine. I was perfectly acquainted with the value of the Extractum Carnis, and not quite a stranger to the invigorating and fortifying properties of malt wine, and therefore felt a natural curiosity to test them when combined. Men who work hard, as I do, not muscular hard work, but that which is quite as exhausting, viz., brain work, very often experience the need of, and have sometimes an almost irresistible craving for, a "pick me up;" and very often the panacea for a time for lassitude, and that state of mind which renders work irksome, are alcoholic stimulants, the use of which must sooner or later end disastrously. The man who can furnish a remedy sure, certain, and harmless, for the lassitude which follows constant brain work is a benefactor of his species, and may be said to have added many years of usefulness to the lives of useful men. Your extract, if a success, and when more generally known, will be used by all toilers of the mind.—Yours faithfully, O. D. RAY.

Thorpe Hamlet, Norwich, February 23rd, 1881.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Queen's Crescent, Haverstock Hill, London, March 5th, 1881.

DEAR SIR,—Some time since, being greatly fatigued with over-work and long hours at business, my health (being naturally delicate) became very indifferent. I lost all energy, strength, and appetite, and was so weak as to be scarcely able to walk. As you are aware, I sent for a dozen of your Extract of Meat and Malt Wine, which, in a few days, pulled me up marvellously. Three or four glasses of it daily have quite altered and restored me to better health than ever, "without the assistance of a doctor." I am now giving it to my son, twelve years of age, whom we have always thought consumptive, and from a puny, ailing boy, he seems to be fast growing into a strong, healthy lad. Enclosed you have cheque. Please send me two dozen of the "Extract." With thanks for your prompt attention to my last, I am, Sir, yours truly, GEORGE A. TYLER.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Granspound, February 25th, 1881.

Mrs Coulson thanks Mr Coleman for the book and stamps, and she has no doubt but that "the tonic" is a good one. Mrs C. encloses twelve stamps for basket.
Mr Coleman.

LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE (COLEMAN'S).
Vicarage, Kingsbridge, Devon, January 25th, 1881.

DEAR SIR,—We are ten miles from the railway, and have been snowed up, consequently the wine has only just arrived. I enclose a cheque for £2 11s. 6d. I like the wine, and will recommend it.—Yours faithfully,
Mr Coleman, Norwich. A. N. KINGSTON.

Pints, 30s. per dozen: Quarts, 50s. per dozen. Carriage paid to any Railway Station in Great Britain. Sample Bottle sent for 33 stamps.

P. O. Orders to be made payable to

COLEMAN & CO., MUSPOLE STREET, NORWICH.

Cheques crossed "London and Provincial Bank."

Sold by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the United Kingdom, in Bottles, 1s. 9d. and 2s. 6d. each. Ask for COLEMAN'S LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT AND MALT WINE, and "See that you get it."

CHAPPELL'S VOCAL LIBRARY OF PART-SONGS, &c.

		Composed or Arranged by	Price
1.	Dulce Domum. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
2.	Down among the Dead Men. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
3.	The Girl I've left behind me. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
4.	British Grenadiers. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
5.	Long live England's Future Queen. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
6.	My task is ended (Song and Chorus). A.T.B.B.	... Balfe	4d.
7.	Thus spake one Summer's Day. S.A.T.B.	... Abt	2d.
8.	Soldiers' Chorus. T.T.B.B.	Gounod	4d.
9.	The Kermesse (Scene from Faust)	,,	6d.
10.	Up, quit thy bower. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	4d.
11.	Maidens, never go a-wooing. S.S.T.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
12.	Fagot Binders' Chorus	Gounod	4d.
13.	Sylvan Hours (for Six Female Voices)	Joseph Robinson	6d.
14.	The Gipsy Chorus ... Balfe		4d.
15.	Ave Maria	Arcadelt	1d.
16.	Hark! the Herald Angels sing. S.A.T.B.	Mendelssohn	1d.
17.	England Yet (Solo and Chorus). S.A.T.B.	Jules Benedict	2d.
18.	The Shepherd's Sabbath Day. S.A.T.B.	J. L. Hatton	2d.
19.	Thoughts of Childhood. S.A.T.B.	Henry Smart	2d.
20.	Spring's Return. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
21.	An old Church Song. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
22.	Sabbath Bells. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
23.	Serenade. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
24.	Cold Autumn Wind. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
25.	Orpheus with his Lute. S.S.S.	Bennett Gilbert	2d.
26.	Lullaby. S.A.A.	,,	1d.
27.	This is my own, my native land. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
28.	March of the Men of Harlech. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
29.	God save the Queen. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
30.	Rule, Britannia. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
31.	The Retreat. T.T.B.B.	L. de Rille	2d.
32.	Lo! morn is breaking. S.S.S.	Cherubini	2d.
33.	We are Spirits. S.S.S.	G. A. Macfarren	4d.
34.	Market Chorus (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	Auber	4d.
35.	The Prayer (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
36.	The Water Sprites. S.A.T.B.	Kücken	2d.
37.	Eve's glittering Star. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
38.	When first the Primrose. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
39.	O Dewdrop bright. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
40.	Sanctus from the Messe Solennelle. S.A.T.B.	Rossini	4d.
41.	Nine Kyries, Ancient and Modern	,,	2d.
42.	Sun of my soul. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	2d.
43.	'Twas fancy, and the ocean's spray. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
44.	A Prayer for those at Sea. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
45.	O Thou whose power (Prayer from Mose in Egitto)	Rossini	2d.
46.	The Guard on the Rhine. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
47.	The German Fatherland. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
48.	The Lord is my Shepherd (Quartet). S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
49.	Te Deum in F	Jackson	2d.
50.	Te Deum in F	Nares	2d.
51.	Charity (La Carita). S.S.S.	Rossini	4d.
52.	Cordelia. A.T.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	4d.
53.	I know. S.A.T.B.	Walter Hay	2d.
54.	Chorus of Handmaidens (from Fridolin)	A. Randegger	4d.
55.	The Offertory Sentences	Edmund Rogers	4d.
56.	The Red Cross Knight	Dr. Callcott	2d.
57.	The Chough and the Crow	Sir H. R. Bishop	3d.
58.	The "Carnovale"	Rossini	2d.
59.	Softly falls the moonlight	Edmund Rogers	4d.
60.	Air by Himmel	Henry Leslie	2d.
61.	Offertory Sentences	E. Sauerbrey	4d.
62.	The Resurrection	C. Villiers Stanford	6d.
63.	Our Boys (new Patriotic Song) H. J. Byron and W. M. Lutz		4d.
64.	The Men of Wales	Brinley Richards	2d.
65.	Dame Durden		1d.
66.	A little Farm well tilled	Hook	1d.
67.	There was a simple maiden	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
68.	Fair Hebe	,,	1d.
69.	Once I loved a maiden fair	,,	1d.
70.	The jovial man of Kent	,,	1d.
71.	The oak and the ash	,,	1d.
72.	Heart of Oak	,,	1d.
73.	Come to the sunset tree	W. A. Philpott	4d.
74.	May. S.A.T.B.	W. F. Banks	2d.
75.	Pure, lovely innocence (Il Roi de Lahore—Chorus for Female Voices)	G. Massenet	4d.
76.	A Love Idyl. S.A.T.B.	E. R. Terry	2d.
77.	Hail to the Woods! A.T.T.B.	J. Yarwood	2d.
78.	Near the town of Taunton Dean	Thomas J. Dudeney	2d.
79.	Our merry boys at sea	J. Yarwood	2d.
80.	The Shepherd's Farewell. S.A.T.B.	Berlioz	3d.
81.	When the sun sets o'er the mountains (Il Demonio)	A. Rubinstein	3d.
82.	Hymn of Nature	Beethoven	3d.
83.	Michaelmas Day (Humorous Part Songs, No. 1)	Walter Maynard	4d.
84.	Sporting Notes (Humorous Part Songs, No. 2)	Walter Maynard	4d.
85.	Austrian National Hymn	Haydn	4d.

LONDON:

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND STREET, W.

CITY BRANCH—14 & 15, POULTRY.

Digitized by Google

NEW VOLUMES of the ROYAL SERIES.

THE SONGS OF SCANDINAVIA
AND NORTHERN EUROPE.
EIGHTY-THREE NATIONAL AND POPULAR SONGS.

THE SONGS OF EASTERN EUROPE.
ONE HUNDRED VOLKSLIEDER OF AUSTRIA, HUNGARY, BOHEMIA, SERVIA, &c.

WITH ENGLISH WORDS BY CLARA KAPPEY.

EDITED BY

J. A. KAPPEY.

Price 2s. 6d. each, paper covers; 4s. cloth.

"Messrs Boosey & Co. have done good service not only to amateurs but to art, by including in their series of volumes of national melodies 'The Songs of Scandinavia' and 'The Songs of Eastern Europe.' The first-named contains eighty-three examples; and the second, a hundred. We need not insist upon the importance of collections like these, whatever the country they represent; but we must say that no musical library is complete without the songs of Scandinavia and Eastern Europe. The editor, Mr J. A. Kappey, has taken great pains to secure melodies of a genuinely representative character, and at a time when attention is becoming more and more directed to folk-tunes as a source of new thematic ideas, the volumes in question are of peculiar value. They have our most hearty commendation, the 'Songs of Eastern Europe' more especially, since the volume contains, besides examples of Liszt, Chopin, and other masters, a very valuable collection of volkslieder from the hitherto untouched wealth of the Austrian provinces."—Daily Telegraph.

"Messrs Boosey & Co. have published two additional volumes of their National Songs, which appear likely to be the most interesting of the series. We know little of the rich repertory of Scandinavian Songs, and Mr and Miss Kappey, the editors of these books, are to be thanked for introducing some of the best specimens to public notice. Five of the Russian songs are so old as to be traditional; and in the series are to be found a beautiful Cossack lullaby by one Bachmetieff, a gipsy song by Lvoff, and several songs by Warlamoff. These and the Polish songs (all of which are traditional) may be considered among the most interesting items of a small but acceptable collection. Two ancient Lithuanian songs, a couple of Finnish, and four ancient Norwegian melodies, will likewise be found in the book. The majority of the Swedish songs are by Lindblad, that prolific song writer, who died in 1864. Tradition says that the old melody of 'The Beggar Boy' was once sung in the days when she was a poor child by the distinguished artist now known as Mdme Christine Nilsson. Included in the Danish songs is the traditional 'Dannebrog,' the music of which is attributed to one 'Bay.' It would be interesting to inquire the foundation for this statement, as the origin of the Danish National Anthem was generally understood to be unknown. The tradition of the 'Dannebrog Banner,' which, in 1719, fell down from heaven to bring victory to the Danish arms, is duly recorded in a footnote. Most of the Dutch songs given date back to the sixteenth century; and there are besides three songs by W. F. G. Nicolai, and one Flemish song. Altogether eighty-three of the national songs of northern Europe are included in this valuable and interesting book. In future editions a larger preface or more footnotes, giving further particulars of the old songs whose history is known, would be welcome. Equally interesting are the songs of Eastern Europe, recently issued by Messrs Boosey, and likewise edited by Mr and Miss Kappey. Among the thirty-four Austrian songs, the large majority are volkslieder, and they include Tyrolean, Styrian, and Polish songs, two of them by Chopin. These are followed by twenty-three characteristic specimens of Hungarian songs, giving a very fair idea of the peculiarities of Hungarian music, and comprising modern songs by Liszt, and some traditional songs of Bosnia, Moravia, and Dalmatia. The first of the Bohemian songs is the 'War-song of the Hussites,' once, it is believed, the national song of the country. A few specimens of Servian, Swiss, Greek, and even Turkish melodies. The last are very peculiar; and he peculiar intervals common to this and other Eastern music are claimed by some to have been handed down direct from the music of the ancient Hebrews."—Figaro.

LONDON: BOOSEY & CO., 295, REGENT STREET.

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, & SPALDING, at 3 and 5, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, March 18, 1882.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 60.—No. 12. SATURDAY, MARCH 25, 1882. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

CRYSTAL PALACE SATURDAY CONCERT. THIS DAY, March 25th, at Three. The programme will include Overture, Spring (Goetz); Symphony in E flat, "The Rhenish" (Schumann); Pianoforte Concerto, No. 4, in G (Beethoven); Pianoforte Solos (Rubinstein and Thalberg); Suite, "The Language of Flowers" (Cowen). Vocalist—Mr Edward Lloyd. Pianists—Miss Marie Krebs. Conductor—Mr AUGUST MANNS. Seats, 2s. 6d., 1s. 6d., 1s., and 6d.

WEDNESDAY NEXT.

MORNING BALLAD CONCERT.—The LAST BALLAD CONCERT of the present Series.

MORNING BALLAD CONCERT, ST JAMES'S HALL, WEDNESDAY Next, at Three o'clock (being the Last Ballad Concert of the present Series). Artists: Miss Mary Davies, Miss Santley, Miss Blandy, and Mdme Antoinette Sterling; Mr Edward Lloyd, Mr Maybrick, and Mr Santley. Violin—Mr Carrodus. The South London Choral Association of sixty voices, under the direction of Mr L. C. Venables. Conductor—Mr SIDNEY NAYLOR. The Programme will include the following: "Thou'rt like unto a flower," "Maydew," "She wandered down the mountain side," and "The Bells of Aberlovey" (Miss Mary Davies); "Where the bee sucks" and "Lullaby" (Miss Santley); "My Dearest Heart" and "The Kerry Dance" (Miss Blandy); "The Better Land," "The Long Avenue," and "We're a' noddin'" (Mdme Antoinette Sterling); "Good Company," "Serenade," and "Sally in our Alley" (Mr Edward Lloyd); "The Erl King," "Thou'rt passing hence," and "Gipsy John" (Mr Santley); "The Little Hero" and "Gold" (Mr Maybrick); Violin Solos, "Otello" and Fantasia on Scotch Melodies (Mr Carrodus). Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Family Tickets (to admit Six to Stalls), £2; Area, 4s. and 2s.; Balcony, 3s.; Gallery and Orchestra, 1s.; to be had at Austin's, St James's Hall; the usual Agents; and of Boosey & Co., 295, Regent Street.

MARLBOROUGH ROOMS, 307, REGENT STREET
(Adjoining the Polytechnic).

ON TUESDAY NEXT, MARCH 28th, 1882, AT THREE O'CLOCK,

MISS ROSA KENNEY

(Daughter of the late Charles Lamb Kenney)

Will give a RECITAL, which will include ALFRED TENNYSON'S NEW POEM,

"THE CHARGE OF THE HEAVY BRIGADE AT BALACLAVA,"

And a Selection from

"THE PASSING OF ARTHUR,"

Assisted by Mdme EDITH WYNNE, Miss FORESTER, Mrs ALMYR GOWING, Mr HERBERT STANDING, Herr KRONICK, and Mr CHARLES WYNDHAM.

Tickets, 10s., 5s., and 2s. 6d., to be obtained of Mr Mitchell, 33, Old Bond Street.

MR BRINLEY RICHARDS, at Cardiff, March 27, by request, will give a RECITAL of PIANOFORTE MUSIC, with Lecture, "Early Notation," Welsh Music 11th cent., and Improbable Statements of Welsh Historians. The Programme will consist of Selections from Bach, Handel, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Schumann, and Sterndale Bennett.

MR and Mdme BODDA'S (Miss LOUISA PYNE) ACADEMY FOR SINGING, Operatic and Miscellaneous. "BONALLY," 85 and 87, Cambridge Gardens, Notting Hill. Professional and Amateur. In and Out-Door Students. Studies—Singing (Private Lessons), Elocution, Piano, Deportment, Choral Practice, Italian. Prospectuses as above, or Mr STEDMAN, 12, Berners Street.

Just Published.

TWO SONGS.

Composed by

H.R.H. THE PRINCESS BEATRICE.

Words by B. DISRAELI.

THE BLUE-EYED MAIDEN'S SONG.
THE GREEN CAVALIER'S SONG.

Each post free for 24 Stamps.

LAMBORN COCK, 23, Holles Street, Oxford Street, London, W.

SCHUBERT SOCIETY. President—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT. Founder and Director—Herr SCHUBERTH. Sixteenth Season, 1882. Members are informed that the arrangements for March are as follows, viz.:—The 104th Soirée Musicale on Wednesday next, 29th March, due notice of which will be given. The Second Concert (70th since formation of Society—Schumann's Compositions in first part of programme), will take place at the Langham Hall, on Wednesday, 19th April. Ladies and Gentlemen desirous of joining the Society may have prospectus and full particulars on application to H. G. HOPPER, Hon. Sec., 214, Regent Street, W.

GERMAN CONDUCTOR, CHOIRMASTER, PROF. OF MUSIC.

A GERMAN Professor of Music from the Academy of Music, Berlin, pupil of Kullak, Dorn, Wüerst, seeks for a good Engagement as CONDUCTOR and (besides) as CHOIRMASTER. He is also an excellent and much-quested Pianist, Singing and Compositions Master of good name. Address send to Berlin, Post Office, No. 60, sub. A. B. F. G.

MISS ADELAIDE ARNOLD
PROFESSOR OF THE HARP,
34, CANONBURY SQUARE, N.

"PARADISE LOST." An Oratorio. Composed by ANTON RUBINSTEIN, on the Poem of MILTON. The English version of the words by JOSIAH PITTMAN. Paris: GÉRARD, 2, Rue Scribe.

THE PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, AND KNIGHTAGE OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE for 1882. By JOSEPH FOSTER.
Early in January. In one or two volumes, royal 8vo, cloth gilt, price 42s. The Peerage or Baronetage separate, each 21s.
The THIRD EDITION, for 1882, containing all new Creations, has been considerably enlarged, and carefully corrected throughout. It is illustrated by upwards of 1,400 Engravings of Arms, &c., and contains fuller pedigrees than any other work.
Westminster: NICHOLS & SONS, 25, Parliament Street.
CHAPMAN & HALL, Limited, 11, Henrietta Street, W.C.

The only Gold Medal for Wind Instruments with Keys, in the Paris Universal Exhibition of 1878, was unanimously awarded by the Jury to Messrs P. GOUMAS & Co., for the fine quality of tone and finish of their Instruments.

SPECIAL MANUFACTORY OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FOR

CLARIONETS, FLUTES, PICCOLOS, OBOES, BASSOONS, COR ANGLAIS, FLAGEOLETS, AND SAXOPHONES.

P. GOUMAS & Co.

(Late BUFFET, CRAMPON & Co.),
Established 1830.

Nine Prize Medals have been awarded to GOUMAS & Co. for general excellence and improvements in the Manufacture of Wind Instruments with Keys.
Manufacturers of all kinds of Wood Wind Instruments for Military Bands, Musical Instrument Makers to Her Majesty's Army and Navy, and to the Armies, Navies, and Conservatoires of France, Belgium, Italy, Russia, Austria, Spain, America, &c.
Manufactory at Mantes (Seine et Oise), France. Paris: Passage du Grand Cerf, 18 et 20.
LONDON: 39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET.
Price Lists sent free on application.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF

ALL KINDS OF MUSIC STRINGS FOR ALL MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Sole Depôt for Signor ANDREA RUFFINI'S (of Naples) Celebrated Strings for Soloists, manufactured by him on a system invented by Mons. J. B. VUILLAUME, of Paris.
Sole Agent for CHARLES ALBERT'S (of Philadelphia, U.S.) new Patent Improved Chin Rest; also his improved String Gauge.
39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, W.
Price Lists free on application.
All kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner on powerful machines made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

Digitized by Google

TO CONCERT GIVERS, &c.

THE LONDON ART GALLERIES, 23, BAKER STREET, W.—These Galleries are available in the Evenings for High-Class Chamber Concerts, Rehearsals, Readings, &c., for which their acoustic properties are eminently suited. For terms address—ADAM F. HARDY, Secretary, as above.

LONDON CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.—Principal—Mr LANSDOWNE COTTELL.
The Directors invite attention to the recent extension and increased accommodation, residential and otherwise.
Fees from Two Guineas per term, residential from Fourteen Guineas, inclusive of the Musical and Fine Art Lectures.
Free Tuition is awarded to talented young artists unable to pay fees by fund granted for this purpose.
Prospectus (one stamp), Hon. Sec., 6, Tavistock Square.

NEW SONG BY J. L. HATTON.

THE GOOD SHIP ROVER. Words by JOHN STEWART. Music by J. L. HATTON. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"TANNHAUSER."
"O THOU MOST LOVELY EVENING STAR."

LISZT'S TRANSCRIPTION of "L'ETOILE DU SOIR" ("O THOU MOST LOVELY EVENING STAR"—"ABENDSTERN"). 3s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

THE BETTER WORLD.
Words by Mrs. M. A. BAINES.
Music by
MICHAEL BERGSON.
Composed expressly for and sung by Mdme MARIE ROZE; sung also by Miss JESSICA O'BRIEN.
Price 4s.
London: STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

Just Published.

ALICE.
TRANSCRIPTION FOR THE
FLUTE AND PIANOFORTE,
OF ASCHER'S POPULAR ROMANCE.
By
J. HARRINGTON YOUNG.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

UNITY.
A NEW MASONIC SOLO AND QUARTET.
Dedicated by express permission to His Royal Highness PRINCE PATRICK, DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, and all true and accepted Masons.
By
RICHARD F. HARVEY,
Organist of Unity Lodge 238 (Dublin).
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

POLKA ET VALSE.
POUR LE PIANOFORTE.
No. 1. FOLICHONNE POLKA ... ... Price 4s.
No. 2. SOUVENIR DE JEUNESSE VALSE ... ... Price 4s.
Composées par
BENTAYOUX.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

L'AMANTE.
VALZER, PER VOCE DI MEZZO-SOPRANO.
Musica di
G. MURATORI
(The English Version of the words by MARIA X. HAYES).
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

THE LOVERS' WALTZ
(L'AMANTE).
FOR THE PIANOFORTE.
By
G. MURATORI.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

THE VOICE AND SINGING.
BY
ADOLFO FERRARI.
THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING,
Price 12s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.
"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

VOCAL EXERCISES COMPOSED BY FRANK MORI.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.
N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by the late FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

New Edition of "LE PETIT SOLFEGE."

LE PETIT SOLFEGE. Vingt Solfèges pour Voix de Mezzo-Soprano. Par JOS. CURCI. Price 6s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.
"This work for educational purposes will be found of inestimable value, since it is one of the very few which confines itself to the cultivation of the middle of the voice; and whilst the phrases are admirably adapted to develop the breathing powers and volume of the voice, the melodies are so exquisitely harmonised that they must prove of great benefit in the improvement of the taste and ear of a student in singing."—Pictorial World.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of
A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR
THE VOICE.
By T. A. WALLWORTH.
A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdme Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklein, and other successful Vocalists.
Full Music Size, price 7s.
London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.
For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.
DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis, of Basingstoke, says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

LA POMPA DI FESTA. Grande Marche, pour Piano, à Quatre Mains. Par IGNACE GIBSONE. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"HER VOICE."

"HER VOICE." IGNACE GIBSONE's popular Song (poetry by "A Soldier's Daughter"), sung by Mdme ENRIQUEZ, is published, price 4s., by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NEW VOCAL QUARTET.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" Arranged for Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, and Bass by G. B. ALLEN. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

THE DRAMA IN PORTMAN-MARKET.

Another MINOR RECORD.

(Continued from page 164.)

The Double Marriage tided the theatre on till Easter, when Macready came over for a short series of performances in Hamlet, Othello, and Macbeth. In these plays, he was supported by the Ghost, Iago, and Macduff of Mr Henry Marston. Mrs Warner, as before, played Gertrude, nor did she consider Emilia beneath her talents. Her Lady Macbeth had long been held by old playgoers as by far the finest seen since the days of the famous Mrs Siddons. With a revival of King Henry VIII., in which she sustained the character of Queen Katherine, this lady took her leave of the Marylebone Theatre on Monday, the 8th of May. Mrs Warner had to confess the failure of her efforts to create an audience, and pecuniarily she was a heavy loser by her speculation, but in an artistic sense she had covered herself with glory, and her experiment, so honourably conceived, and to the end so consistently carried out, will ever remain a memorable feature in the chronicles of the English stage.

After remaining closed for some weeks the house was re-opened by Mr Walter Watts, in the middle of July, with Mr and Mrs Keeley in Bayle Bernard's romantic drama, Lucille; A Tale of the Heart. Mr Watts began by managing on the starring system, but his stars were supported by a good working company, and the same careful attention was bestowed upon all the embellishments of the stage, as during the reign of Mrs Warner. If there was not the same continuous design, there was still enough of merit and elegance in the performances, to retain the prestige already gained. The Keeleys remained for some weeks playing in The Dream at Sea, Martin Chuzzlewit, The Forty Thieves, and other of their old Lyceum pieces, and were succeeded by the Irish comedian, Mr Hudson; by the Americans, Mr Davenport and Mrs Mowatt, the latter an actress of more sweetness than power, endowed with rare personal loveliness and charm; and by Mr T. P. Cooke, who, of course, brought with him The Pilot, Poor Jack, and the inevitable Black-Eyed Susan. A one-act drama, which still lives, The Midnight Watch, by Mr Maddison Morton, first saw the light here in October, and was very well acted by Miss Fanny Vining, Mr H. T. Craven, and Mr James Johnstone. Early in November, Mr Buckstone and Mrs Fitzwilliam commenced with The Flowers of the Forest, an engagement which lasted for the remainder of the year.

Mr Davenport and Mrs Mowatt returned at the beginning of 1849, and the management then settled down to a steady course, relying upon the production of the Modern, in conjunction with the Elder, Drama. The company, in addition to the above, consisted of the Misses Fanny Vining, Villars, M. Oliver, and Charlotte Saunders; Mrs Newberry and Mrs Johnstone; Messrs James Johnstone, H. T. Craven, Belton, George Cooke, Herbert, Norton, and J. W. Ray. "A new and original five-act drama" of the picturesque and romantic school, entitled Armand, or the Peer and the Peasant, of which Mrs Mowatt herself was the authoress, was the first event of the new year. Tobin's delightful comedy, The Honeymoon, was given in February, with Mr Davenport as Duke Aranza, Mrs Mowatt as Juliana, and Miss Vining as Donna Volante. Mr Watts also produced A Dream of Life, written by himself, at the end of March, and Mr Benjamin Barnett appeared as Monsieur Jacques in his brother, Morris Barnett's version of Scribe's vaudeville. Pizarro was revived in a very creditable manner, with Mrs Mowatt as Elvira, Miss F. Vining as Cora, and Mr Davenport as Rolla, in March. The Easter novelties consisted of a five-act play, The Heart's Trials, by Mr Hughes, of the Adelphi Theatre, followed by a burlesque on Guy Fawkes, written by Albert Smith. A little later Mrs Mowatt appeared as Juliet, to the Mercutio of Mr Davenport, and the Romeo of Miss Fanny Vining. In May a version of Latour's tragedy, Virginie, adapted for the London stage by Mr John Oxenford under the title of Virginia, was brought out for Mrs Mowatt, who had seldom been seen to greater advantage. Early in June Mrs Centlivre's comedy, The Wonder, was given with Miss Vining as Violante; and a week later Mr Henry Spicer's drama, The Witch-Wife—a composition of high merit—was produced, in which Mr Ray created a marked impression as Sir Gerald Mole, and Mrs Mowatt sustained the part of Cecil Howard with much grace and feeling. The season closed in July, with a performance of Love's Sacrifice, and the old melodrama of Luke the Labourer—with Mr Johnstone's Luke—as the after piece.

The theatre re-opened on Monday, the 17th of September, with a new tragedy, Velasco, or Castilian Honour, by an American author, Mr Eps Sargent. In this Mr Davenport, Mr James Johnstone, Misses Vining and Oliver appeared. Planché's extravaganza, Fortunio, was then revived on a scale of much splendour, and Mrs Mowatt re-appeared as Beatrice in Much Ado about Nothing. Charles Kemble's play, The Point of Honour, was produced for Mr Davenport and Miss Vining in October, and we find O'Keeffe's old musical farce, The Poor Soldier, also in the bills. A more important event was the revival of Shakspere's Cymbeline at the end of this month. The ensemble was found unsatisfactory, but Mrs Mowatt was an ideal Imogene. A new drama, The Crusaders, by a Mr J. Ebsworth, written chiefly in blank verse, was given with success early in November, and Planché's White Cat succeeded Fortunio, as the after-piece. During the last weeks of the same month the excellent acting of Mrs Mowatt as Neighbour Constance, and the richness of the decorations, gave considerable importance to the representation of Sheridan Knowles's Love Chase. The final "circumstance" of Mr Watts' management was the revival of the Twelfth Night, in which Mr Davenport played Malvolio to the Viola of Mrs Mowatt. The season terminated on Monday, the 10th of December, the piece chosen for the occasion being Knowles's Wife of Mantua, in which Mrs Mowatt played Mariana, and Mr Davenport St Pierre. Mr Watts* removed to the New Olympic Theatre at Christmas, as offering a wider field of enterprise, and the Marylebone was sublet to Mr Edward Stirling.

Mr Stirling commenced operations on Boxing night with a pantomime, Harlequin Fairy-Land, the joint invention of Mr Walter Watts and Mr Nelson Lee. This was followed by a series of his own dramas, such as Nicholas Nickleby, The Mendicant's Son, The Road of Life, Jane Lomax, and others, all of the domestic order, in which Mrs Gordon took the lead. At Easter, 1850, Mr Gustavus Brooke was engaged for a series of Shaksperian performances, supported by Messrs James Johnstone, Belton, Herbert, and Mrs Seymour. In the middle of November Mr Joseph Stammers, the well-known entrépreneur of the once popular Wednesday concerts, became lessee, and brought with him the charming Mrs Nisbett, who, as Lady Gay Spanker, Neighbour Constance, and Helen in The Hunchback, delighted the inhabitants of Marylebone, but showed the limit of her powers, by attempting Portia—to the Shylock of Mr James Johnstone. There was an excellent pantomime, Harlequin Alfred the Great, or The Magic Raven and the Mystic Banjo, from the pen of Mr George Herbert Rodwell, at Christmas, with Tom Matthews as Clown. Mr Stammers dignified his theatre with the imposing title of the "London English Opera." The only pieces given, however, with even the slightest lyric pretention, were the old musical dramas of Rob Roy and The Slave, and, perhaps, Shakspere's Macbeth, with Locke's choruses, and Mr Henry Drayton as Hecate.

(To be continued.)

BERLIN.—After a rest of thirty years, Gluck's Alceste has been again performed at the Royal Operahouse. A complete failure when originally played in Paris on the 23rd April, 1776, it was first produced in this capital on the 15th October, 1817, and frequently repeated down to 1853. The present cast includes Mad. von Voggenhuber, Alceste; Herr Niemann, Admetes; Herr Betz, Herakles; and Herr Fricke, High Priest.—Owing to want of support, the Italian season at the Victoria Theatre was brought to a conclusion sooner than originally intended. Yet the company was a good one and counted among its members Mdlles Turolla, Pasqua, Signori Corsi, Verger and De Bernis. The last novelty produced was Marchetti's Ruy Blas, one of the few new operas written by Italian composers during the last ten years which have maintained their position on the lyric stage in Italy.

GENEVA.—Though the Corporation had not decided whether or no they would give the extraordinary grant demanded for the scenery of L'Hérodiade, the manager of the Theatre made up his mind some time since to bring out that work.

---

* A few months later Mr Watts, who was a clerk in the Globe Insurance Office, was arrested on a charge of defalcation, and died shortly afterwards, by his own hand, in prison.

Digitized by Google

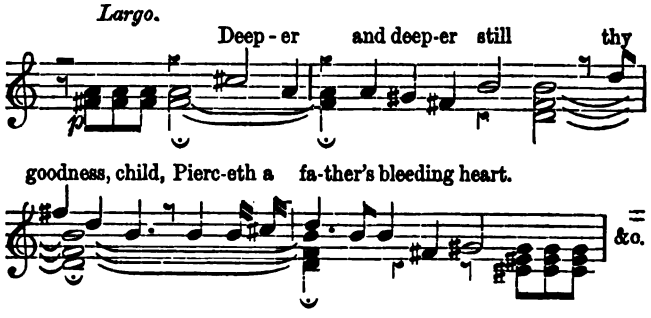
FORM, OR DESIGN, IN VOCAL MUSIC.

(Continued from page 165.)

Handel's "Deeper and deeper still," in the oratorio of Jephthah, is an example of accompanied recitative with occasional bars in time and of speaking recitative.

After several repetitions of a chord the voice enters over the same chord sustained. This and the following phrase may be considered speaking recitative, for the accompaniment of sustained chords does not impede the voice, and, therefore, though the music is written in exact common time in every bar, the voice may take its own time in somewhat of the following manner:—

Ex. 140.



The accents of the bars must be preserved as written, but the actual length of each bar is not restricted to the four crotchets of common time in which it is written, and may vary with every bar. After a very short interlude the next vocal phrase, being accompanied with repeated chords, must needs be sung in time, and, therefore, it is recitative in time.

Ex. 141.

Several short interludes occur, each followed by a short vocal phrase in which the voice, being alone, is free as to time, and, therefore, sings in speaking recitative.

After more repetitions of a chord, as at first, the voice has short phrases in speaking recitative over sustained chords, which, though written on the accent of bars, must be first sounded in the rests of the voice.

A longer interlude follows this, and the voice enters in time over the last few notes, and after the cessation of the interlude breaks into speaking recitative of short phrases divided by short interludes.

Ex. 142.

At (a.a.) it must be noticed how a single part, when it is the only one sounding at the moment, can be sufficient resolution for a whole discord.

After this, an accompaniment of rapidly repeated chords obliges the voice to be in time, but the close must be speaking, and the two last chords fall after the close of the voice, thus:—

Ex. 143.

The remainder of the recitative is in short phrases; those of the voice free as to time and alternating with groups of repeated chords in the accompaniment, which fill up the rests of the voice and help out the stammering and halting expression of the father. Though these groups of chords can scarcely be called interludes, they are yet of importance in the expression and thus prevent this part from being considered simply as speaking recitative.

Another recitative of the same kind is that allotted to Semele, in Handel's so-called oratorio of that name, when she begins to realize and to feel the doom that is falling upon her, "Ah, me! too late, I now repent."

We may wonder why so much has been, and still is, left incomplete in the writing of music for singer and accompanist to fill up. The answer is in the gradual growth of the writing of music for many hundred years, and in the fact that it never can be complete; for, were every musical point noted down, there must still be the soul of it left unwritten which singer and player must find out and shew by their sympathy with the composer's thoughts. Happy is it for music, for performers, and for listeners, when this soul is thus found out and shewn.

OLIVERIA PRESCOTT.

(To be continued.)

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

At a meeting in St James's Palace on behalf of the proposed Royal College of Music, the Lord Mayor assured his Royal Highness the chairman that the Corporation would assist as far as funds would permit. It lay upon the speaker's mind, perhaps, that a school of music exists which owes its life to civic enterprise, and has a first claim upon consideration; but, be this as it may, the Guildhall academy continues to receive abundant official support, remains in a flourishing state, and bids fair to take a high place among institutions of the kind. We the more rejoice thereat since education is given freely to amateurs, the aim of the school not being limited to the increase of an already crowded profession, many of whose members find it hard to hold their own against fierce competition. The concert given by the Guildhall pupils at the Mansion House on Saturday afternoon was on several accounts a satisfactory display. Its details are not for criticism, but we may bear our testimony to the merit shown, and offer timely words of encouragement to the young performers—words never more welcome than amid the doubt and diffidence incidental to first setting out on a course the end of which is particularly hard to foresee. Some choral pieces proved that ensemble singing is by no means neglected at the school, while in one or two instances they served to show the existence of creditable ability in composition. We may cite as an example Mr D. Davies's setting of "It was a lover and his lass." Mention should also be made of Miss Allitsen's "Stars of the summer night." This is for a single voice, and was well given by Mr. Henderson. The instrumental solos were, perhaps, even more suggestive of fair ability and cultivation. Prominent amongst these were a caprice (Vieuxtemps), capitally played by Master Leipold, a pupil of Mr Carrodus, and a work for violoncello, in which Mr B. L. Johnson distinguished himself. Not to enter further into particulars hardly called for by circumstances, we may say generally that the concert not only gratified a large audience, but did great credit to Mr Weist Hill, the conductor, and to the professors engaged in training the pupils who appeared.—D. T.

DRESDEN.—The 75th anniversary of the Dreyssig Singakademie was duly celebrated on the 6th inst. by a special concert, attended by Herr von Nostitz, one of the ministers, and various other persons of distinction. In honour of the occasion, the king conferred on the conductor, Herr Adolph Blassman, the Albert Order, first class. The Society, which now numbers 198 members, was founded in 1807 by Herr Dreyssig, court organist, chiefly for the cultivation of classical sacred music. At his death its conduct was assumed by Theodor Weinlig, in 1815. Then came the Precentor Mende (1823), Dr Johann Schneider (1832), Rob. Pfretzschner, Adolph Reichel, Gustav Merkel, and lastly, in 1873, Herr Adolph Blassman.

Digitized by Google

MUSIC FOR "ROMEO AND JULIET."

The beautiful and appropriate music with which Sir Julius Benedict has enriched the revival of Romeo and Juliet at the Lyceum reminds us that this is not the first time that an attempt has been made to stimulate the imagination of the spectator by introducing musical performances into the representation of this play. Who was the composer of the Dirge which used to be sung by chorus and solo vocalists at the commencement of Act V. does not appear; though his rather obtrusive efforts seem to have been eminently acceptable to the tastes of audiences of the latter half of the eighteenth century, and were even in favour down to the days when Elliston played Romeo at Drury Lane to the Juliet of Mrs Henry Siddons, and when Master Betty and Miss Smith represented the same characters at Covent Garden. So important was this embellishment of the poet's work considered that a whole scene representing "the inside of a church" was interpolated expressly for its accommodation, wherein the body of Juliet was seen to be carried to the tomb, followed by a long funeral procession singing the chorus, "Rise, rise, heartbreaking sighs," &c., on which the solo singer exclaimed:

How couldst thou, Death, at once destroy
The lover's hope, the parents' joy?

and implored for strength "To bear the loss of thee." To do him justice this ridiculous scene, though tacked on to Garrick's version, and played in association with it for sixty years or more, does not seem to have been introduced by Garrick. As far as is known, it was first added in 1750 by Barry in the revival at Covent Garden, when that celebrated actor played Romeo, and the no less distinguished Mrs Cibber, sister of Dr Arne, the famous composer, appeared as Juliet.

It may be worth a note that this—the first recorded appearance of Mrs Cibber in the part—was made at the age of thirty-eight; Barry, the Romeo of the occasion, being five years younger. The lady was forty-two in 1754, when Garrick, then thirty-eight, played Romeo to her Juliet at Drury Lane. Garrick's first appearance as Romeo appears, from the evidence of Genest, to have been made at the age of thirty-four; his last in 1756, when he was forty. Edmund Kean's first appearance as Romeo was in January, 1815, when he was in his twenty-eighth year.—Daily News.

CAPE COLONY.

(From a Correspondent.)

It may interest some of the readers of the Musical World to receive a few notes from South Africa. A little more than six months ago the "Suburban Choral Union" was formed, with the object of studying the works of the great composers, as well as for the practice of vocal music generally. The effective members of the Society number seventy altogether, with a limited roll of subscribers. Within the short space of time the Society has been established it has met with marked success, two concerts having been given during the season—the first, a miscellaneous selection, including Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer," and the second lately given, when Barnett's cantata, The Ancient Mariner, was performed to a large and appreciative audience. By those capable of judging, the last-named especially was pronounced to be a highly creditable performance. The solo parts were taken by Dr Murray, Messrs Biden and Stapleton, and the Misses Graham, Berg, Tait, and Wright. Miss Berg's clear voice was heard to great advantage in the first sopranos and in the beautiful duet, "The Seraph Band"; and Mr Biden, who has a rich bass voice, was much admired in the solo, "Swiftly, swiftly flew the ship." The somewhat difficult choruses, "About, about, in reel and rout," and "The upper air burst into life," were rendered with much precision, and the concluding chorus, "What loud uproar," was well sustained to the end. It can be truly said that the vocalists, one and all, seemed to enter fully into the spirit and design of the composer. For the undoubted success of the performance, thanks are mainly due to the conductor, Signor Maggi, who has taken considerable pains with the individual parts to raise them to so high a pitch of excellence. The piano accompaniment was played by Mr C. V. Thomas, organist of St George's Cathedral, and the harmonium by Mr G. H. Smith. The secretary and treasurer of the Society is Mr G. E. Goodban, long and favourably known as a skilled amateur violinist.

Since writing this short notice, the cantata has been repeated at the Claremont Hall, in aid of the Society's funds. A. A. D.

STUTTGART.—Spohr's Jessonda has been revived at the Theatre Royal, with Mdme Schröder-Hanfstängl as the heroine. Despite the admirable manner in which it was executed, under the direction of Herr Abert, it found but a cool reception from the public, who appeared no longer to take any warm interest in its beauties, and it will, probably, not be often repeated.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERTS.

The last evening concert of the present series of Mr John Boosey's London Ballad Concerts came off on Wednesday, the singers being Mdme Antoinette Sterling, Misses Santley, Mary Davies, and Damian, Messrs Edward Lloyd, Oswald, and Santley, together with the South London Choral Society. The concert gave general satisfaction, the audience being very demonstrative and insisting on the repetition of many of the songs, including Hugh Clendon's "Good Night" (Miss Mary Davies), Behrend's "Once, and once only" (Mr Edward Lloyd), "O ruddier than the cherry" (Mr Santley, who responded with Hatton's passionate address "To Anthea"), Sullivan's "Lost Chord" (Mdme Sterling, with her talented husband's pianoforte accompaniment, Mr Sidney Naylor presiding at the organ), Molloy's "Old Lace" (Miss Damian), Blumenthal's "Far away, where angels dwell" (Mr Edward Lloyd, who substituted Balfe's "When other lips"), "Wapping Old Stairs" (Miss Santley, who gave "Truant Love" instead), Villiers Stanford's arrangement of the Irish song, "Father O'Flynn" (Mr Santley, who acknowledged the compliment by singing Sullivan's "Curate's Song" from The Sorcerer), and Marzials' "A Summer Shower" (Miss Mary Davies, who replied by singing Hudson's "In Arcady"). Sir R. P. Stewart's part-song, "Bells of St Michael's Tower," sung by the South London Choral Association, under the direction of Mr L. C. Venables, was also unanimously encored. We must also mention that Mr Venables' arrangement of "The Last Rose of Summer" was so much applauded that the clever conductor was obliged to return to the platform and bow his acknowledgments. Mr Sidney Naylor accompanied.

Mr John Boosey announces a Morning Ballad Concert for Wednesday next, March 29th, being the last concert of the present season.

NEW YORK.

(Correspondence.)

Mapleson's operatic tour in the Western States of America is reported to have been very successful.—D'Oyly Carte will shortly return to England.—President Arthur went from Washington to Baltimore to witness a performance of Patience by an amateur company from this place.—Mdme Adelina Patti is to sail, as at present arranged, for England on the 5th April.—The marriage of the American prima donna, Miss Clara Louise Kellogg, has been postponed.—The Musical Record, Boston (U.S.), says: "It is hinted that Gilbert and Sullivan's new opera, now being composed, will be entitled Independence."—Mr J. Levy, the well-known cornet-player, long resident here, is suffering from paralysis of the upper lip.—Mdme Adelina Patti made her long-expected appearance in Italian opera this side the Atlantic, on Monday, the 27th ult., at the Germania Theatre, New York.—Mr Gye is to be the manager of the New National Operahouse here.

Donizetti's posthumous opera, Il Duca d'Alba, was brought out, with decided success, at the Apollo Theatre, Rome, on Wednesday night. All the musical and art world of the Eternal City were present, including Her Majesty Queen Margherita and the aristocracy of rank and wealth at present in Rome.

The President of the French Republic has presented a Silver Medal of Honour, First Class, to the gasman, Prinquet, who behaved so well when the explosion of gas lately took place at the Paris Opéra-Comique.

MILAN.—Among the most fashionable and most numerously attended social gatherings this winter have been the "Monday Evenings" of Signora Stolz, at her magnificent residence in the Via Bigli, which on these occasions has been the rendezvous of all the rank and beauty as well as of all the celebrities in the world of science and art to be found within the walls of this famous old city. Music was an especial attraction. The gathering on the 13th inst. was particularly brilliant. Among the fair artists present from the Scala were Signore Gazzaniga, Colson, Vaneri, Spezia, Wiziak, Stahl, and Stolzmann; the stronger sex was represented by Adalghieri, Moriami, Mierzwinski, and Carpi. Then there were the composers Scontrino, Albitis, and Badia. With the last was his charming daughter, Carlotta, who entranced all present by her exquisite rendering of some of his songs, "with a voice which reminds one of Adelina Patti's," as the critic of the Perseveranza remarks. She took part, likewise, in a duet with Signor Carpi. Signore Stahl, Crossmann, and Spezia, also, sang various airs, &c., while Mdlle Untersteiner and Signorina Cognetti played on the piano, the former a Scherzo by an accomplished amateur, M. Dahmen; the latter, compositions by Schubert, Rubenstein, and others.

Digitized by Google

Tannhäuser just now.
(Last impression.)

Tannhäuser in May will be depicted (pro formâ) by Lyall the Limner.

Digitized by Google

An Italian Composer at a Wagner Opera.

ITALIAN COMPOSER.—What is that for music? I no understand (sings):

"Pavi—pavi—pavi—parvi!"

—and not four bars in same key! It give me indigestion. It make me ill. I no sleep. Basta! I go home. [Exit.

Sonnet.

Against the gloomy rock, Andromeda
Quite motionless and beautiful and bare
Stands. And the wind blows forth her loosened hair,
Damp as salt sea-weed on a rainy day.
With dull eyes gazing at the ocean grey,
And lips bereft of words by sheer despair,
She waits until that Agony be there
To clasp her life and crush it into clay.

She shudders. And her weary eyelids close.
The overwhelming horror slowly grows
Between her and the bay, the far-off banks
Of sand shell-silvered under briny dew,
And, with the flash of sunlight on his flanks,
A white horse prancing in the waters blue.

Polkaw.

THE veteran J. L. Hatton purposes visiting London during the "merry month of May," and we have no doubt he will bring with him, from Stuttgart, the results of his long absence in the form of some new compositions from his fluent and graceful pen.

ST JAMES'S HALL.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS,

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON, 1881-82.

DIRECTOR—MR S. ARTHUR CHAPPELL.

THE THIRTY-NINTH CONCERT OF THE SEASON

WILL TAKE PLACE ON

MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 27, 1882,

At Eight o'clock precisely.

Programme.

PART I.—Quintet, in G minor, No. 6, for two violins, two violas, and violoncello (Mozart)—MM. Joachim, L. Ries, Hollander, Zerbini, and Piatti; Rhapsodie, No. 2 (Brahms) and Andante and Scherzo from Sonata in G minor (Schumann), for pianoforte alone—Mdme Schumann.

PART II.—Prelude, Loure, Minuets, and Gavotte, in E major, for violin alone (Bach)—Herr Joachim; Spanisches Liederspiel, Op. 74, for four voices, with pianoforte accompaniment, first time (Schumann)—Vocalists, Mdlle Friedländer, Mdme Fassett, MM. Von zur Mühlen and Pyatt—Pianoforte, Miss Agnes Zimmermann.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 25, 1882,

At Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

Quartet, in E flat, Op. 74, No. 10, for two violins, viola, and violoncello (Beethoven)—MM. Joachim, L. Ries, Straus, and Piatti; Liederkreis (Beethoven)—Herr Von zur Mühlen; Duo Concertante, in G minor, for two violins (Spohr)—MM. Joachim and Straus; Quintet, in E flat, Op. 44, for pianoforte, two violins, viola, and violoncello (Schumann)—Mdme Schumann, MM. Joachim, L. Ries, Straus, and Piatti.

Accompanist—MR ZERBINI.

DEATHS.

On March 9, at 43, Queen's Crescent, Haverstock Hill, HAYDN COLLARD, in his seventy-sixth year.

On March 17, at Hyères, France, ALICE, the beloved wife of Adolphe Smith, and only daughter of Blanchard Jerrold.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.'s, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). Advertisements not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 25, 1882.

Cambridge University.

FINAL EXAMINATION FOR THE DEGREE OF DOCTOR OF MUSIC.

[Pills for Candidates.]

Friday, March 10, 1882. 9 a.m. to 12 p.m.

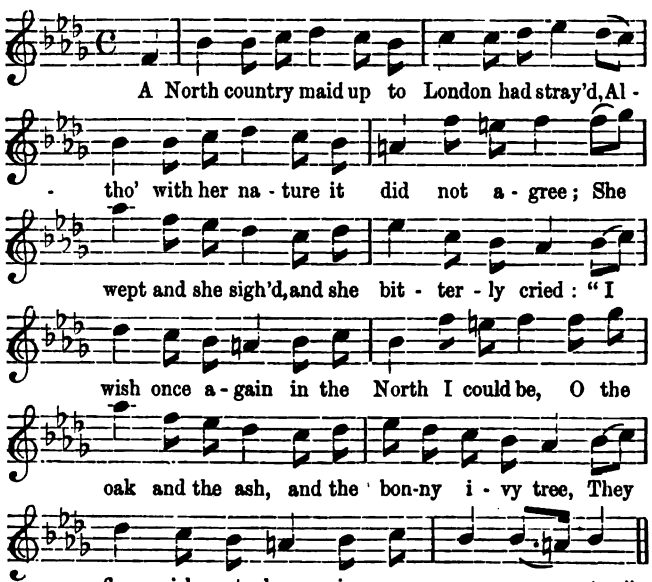
HARMONY AND COMPOSITION.

1. Write parts for Second Soprano, Alto, and Tenor, according to the figuring, between the following two. State at what bars, and into what keys, the music modulates. Insert occasional passing notes in any of the parts. All discords, except passing notes, must be prepared.

Digitized by Google

2. Add parts for Treble, Alto, and Tenor, according to the figuring, above the following bass. State what note of the Chromatic Scale is the root of each inverted chord.

3. Write parts for Second Treble, Alto, Two Tenors, and Bass, below the following tune, fitting the words to every part. Figure the Bass.



A North country maid up to London had stray'd, Al -
- tho' with her na - ture it did not a - gree; She wept and she sigh'd, and she bit - ter - ly cried: "I wish once a - gain in the North I could be, O the oak and the ash, and the bon-ny i - vy tree, They flour - ish at home in my own coun - try."

4. State between what notes of the Diatonic or Chromatic Scale consecutive fifths can be used with good effect, and give any hypothesis to justify their exceptional use.

5. State from what three degrees in any major key the Diatonic major scale is derived, and from what three degrees the Chromatic Scale is derived. Say also which degree of the scale differs in pitch when it is the fifth in a Chromatic chord, from the corresponding note in a Diatonic chord.

6. State what is the difference between the chord marked A and the chord marked B in the following two phrases. Say with what other notation the chord marked B is sometimes written by the great masters. Add two parts above or between the others to each phrase.

7. State in what keys, other than that of the Dominant, the Second Subject is sometimes written of an instrumental first Movement in a major key. Give some harmonic reason for the use of such keys, and name examples from the Chamber Music or Overtures of Beethoven.

8. State who was Giovanni Animuccia, what was his relationship to San Filippo Neri, of what important class of composition was he the first composer, whence did the class of works derive its name, and at about what period were the first of these produced.

—o—

CONCERTS.

Mr Sims Reeves's Concert.—The fifth and last of the concerts given by Mr Sims Reeves previous to his departure for the provinces, took place on Tuesday evening, at St James's Hall, and there was not only a crowded room, but no disappointment, as on the fourth occasion, regarding the presence of the great tenor himself. Nothing could exceed the cordiality of his reception; and as he was apparently in tolerable health, and, fortunately, in good voice, the enthusiasm of his listeners was kindled to the utmost. How well he declaims Handel's famous recitative "Deeper and deeper still," is a fact in the musical records of the present generation, no less than his singing of its touching sequel, "Waft her, angels," in which his tenderness of style finds so perfect a vehicle for its illustration. The "Adelaida" of Beethoven, in which he was accompanied by Mdme Arabella Goddard, is another example of that impassioned vocalization with which his name is identified. The applause that awaited these two performances exemplified the unweakened admiration of the public for their old favourite; and could he have been persuaded to have repeated them, the general pleasure would have been so much the greater. The "Death of Nelson" was likewise a promise, but for the redemption of this he asked, through an official spokesman, on the score of hoarseness, to be excused. One of the special attractions of the concert was the re-visit of Mdme Arabella Goddard to the scene of her many triumphs. For some years past this accomplished lady has been content to remain unheard in public, although by no means forgotten; and the announcement that she would play at this concert could but awaken much public interest. Hence, her appearance, when led on by Mr Sims Reeves, was the signal for a very sincere welcome on the part of the audience, especially from those who knew, by frequent experience, her high qualifications as an artist, and could remember the exalted position she occupied in the concert room during the period when she was one of its most cherished idols. Her performance upon the present occasion of Beethoven's Sonata (Op. 26), revived all the old associations, and conclusively proved that, in spite of the legion of pianists who have of late years come and won celebrity, she still holds her own as an executant of the noblest distinction in all that appertains to the technique of the instrument, and as an unsurpassed expositor of the highest forms and intellectualities of pianoforte music. Her delivery of the sonata in question (one of the loveliest musical poems that Beethoven has bequeathed us), indicated most agreeably that her hand had lost none of its early cunning, while her reading of it, as of yore, was clear, sympathetic, and unaffected. It would be difficult to conceive a more sensitive rendering of the melodious and oft-quoted theme and variations which open the sonata, or of the impressive solemnity of the Funeral March, to which the bright and impatient allegretto provides so exhilarating a contrast; no less panegyric being subsequently her due in Beethoven's "Adelaida," which she never "accompanied" with happier finish, often as she has been associated with Mr Sims Reeves in this most charming of love apostrophes. The remaining incidents were excellent of their kind. Mdme Patey, always looked for and greeted with pleasure, sang in her own superior and engaging way Giordani's "Caro mio ben," "Auld Robin Gray," and "The Soldier's Tear," in each case meeting with the warmest tokens of approval. Miss Spenser Jones and Miss Clements, pupils of Mrs Sims Reeves, were severally heard in Cowen's "Better Land" and Arne's "Pray Goody," Donizetti's "Ragnava nel silenzio," and Sullivan's "Let me dream again," and to advantage, both of the young ladies making an excellent impression and bearing ample testimony to the judicious character of their teaching. Mr Herbert Reeves was, of course, not likely to be absent from the programme. He is evidently finding favour in the concert-room, and commendations were freely bestowed on his execution of Pinsuti's "Miller's Daughter," and Blumenthal's "Requital," in which latter he reflected, as in a mirror, no little of his father's well-known style and manner. Another vocalist was Mr Barrington Foote, to whom the audience were indebted for effective versions of Verdi's "O tu Palermo" and Macfarren's capital song from Robin Hood, "The Monk within his cell." The Anemoic Union was in occasional and valuable requisition.—H.

Digitized by Google

Philharmonic Society.—Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, and the Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne), were present at the concert on Thursday evening, Mdme Schumann playing Mendelssohn's pianoforte Concerto in G minor (50th anniversary of its production), and the orchestra Beethoven's Symphony in C minor, as well as the overtures to The Veiled Prophet, by Mr C. Villiers Stanford, and Weber's Euryanthe. Mdlle Kufferath sang Mozart's "Ah lo so" (Zauberflöte), and Schumann's "Lust, O lust"; Mr Maas the centurion's song from Dr Bridge's Boadicea, and "Waft me, ye zephyrs," from Weber's Euryanthe. Mr W. G. Cusins conducted all but Mr Stanford's overture, when the bâton was held by the composer. The room was crowded.

Albert Hall.—The Grand Irish Festival, under the direction of Mr William Carter, took place on the evening of Friday, March 17 (St Patrick's Day). The programme contained the following well-known Irish songs: "The meeting of the Waters" and "The Last Rose of Summer" (Mdme Marie Roze); "Kathleen Mavourneen" and "The Minstrel Boy" (Mdme Mary Cummings); "Terence's Farewell to Kathleen" and "Killarney" (Miss Mary Davies); "Come back to Erin" and "Barney o'Hea" (Miss Anna Williams); "Silent, oh Moyle" and "The Irish Emigrant" (Mr Vernon Rigby); "Eily Mavourneen" and "Molly Bawn" (Mr Joseph Maas); "Oft in the stilly night" (Mr Redfern Hollins); and "The Cruiskeen Lawn" (Signor Foli). The specimens of more recent Irish ballads were "Kitty Tyrrell" (C. W. Glover) and "Eva Tual" (Charles Salaman), beautifully sung by Mdme Isabel Fassett; and "Norah" (Louis Diehl), a ballad with a genuine Irish ring, sung with real pathos by Signor Foli. "Love's Young Dream" and other melodies arranged as part-songs by Mr William Carter, were sung by the choir, the tenors and basses of which also took part in the "Miserere" (Trovatore), the solos being given by Mdme Marie Roze and Mr Joseph Maas. The hall was well filled, and encores and re-calls were the rule of the evening. One of the most successful numbers of the programme was a duet for pianoforte and organ (Fantaisie Impromptu on "Believe me if all those endearing young charms," &c.), played by Mr William Carter (pianoforte), and Mr Edwin Bending (grand organ). This cleverly conceived and executed composition, accurately rehearsed and capitally played, displayed the charms of each instrument in contrast, and, blending these charms, produced such a peculiar mixture of sound, that occasionally the unearthly music held the audience spell-bound, and their enthusiasm at the close of the duet was simply natural. A new effect in musical sound is a rarity, but on this occasion a new effect was distinctly present. The band of her Majesty's Scots Guards varied the programme by their performances, and the conductors of the concert were Mr William Carter, Mr Edwin Bending, and Mr J. P. Clarke (Bandmaster Scots Guards).

Misses Chaplin's Concert.—An excellent bill of fare was provided for those who "assisted" at the concert given by the Misses Nellie and Kate Chaplin on Thursday week at the Athenæum, Camden Road. A glance at the programme was sufficient to show the large gathering that a wide variety of tastes had been consulted in the selection of the various items. The following artists, one and all, ably exerted themselves, and the result was a thorough success: Mrs Bradshawe Mackay, Senorita Carreras, Mdme Dukas (née Van Noorden), Miss Ellen Marchant, Messrs Dudley Thomas, Arthur Thompson, Sackville Evans, and Alfred Moore, vocalists. With the Misses Nellie and Kate Chaplin were associated, as instrumentalists, Miss Blanche St Clair and Signor Dinelli. The opening piece in the programme, a Trio in D minor (Fesca), was finely rendered by the Misses Chaplin (piano and violin), Signor Dinelli handling the violoncello in masterly fashion. In Liszt's "Hungarian Fantasia" Miss Nellie Chaplin displayed great powers of execution, the orchestral parts being ably given on a second piano by Miss Blanche St Clair; while, later on, Miss Kate Chaplin showed marked progress on the instrument of her predilection in a violin solo by Wieniawski. Senorita Carreras received a well-deserved encore for her delivery of Verdi's "Merce dilette amiche," and Miss Ellen Marchant gave, with much expression, Cowen's "The old and the young Marie." Mrs Bradshawe Mackay touched the hearts of her audience by her pathetic rendering of "The Children of the City" (Adams). Sullivan's "Distant Shore" found an able exponent in Mr Arthur Thompson; and Mr Alfred Moore evoked the risible propensities by his humorous recital of "The Wedding of Shon Maclean" (Hatton). Last, but not least, Mr Dudley Thomas was loudly applauded for the exquisite taste with which he gave the two pieces set down for him—a barcarolle by Auber, "Young Agnes," and the well-worn song by Braham, "The Anchor's Weighed." Our notice would be incomplete without honourable mention of the effective elocution of Miss Minnie Bell, whose delineations of Le Fanu's "Shemus O'Brien" and "The Yarn of the Nancy Bell" (W. S. Gilbert) not only afforded variety to the programme, but gave evidence of powers of a high order. Two youthful prodigies, Misses Ida and Ethel Fraser, respectively about ten and twelve years of age, were afforded an opportunity of displaying their precocity in a Tarantelle, for two pianofortes, by Raff. Mr Handel Gear was, as on former occasions at these concerts, the able conductor.—Weistar.

Mr and Mrs Atherton B. Furlong gave a concert at the Marlborough Rooms on Thursday evening, March 16th. These artists are very well known in America, their native country, and bid fair to be equally popular in England, where artistic excellence is always acknowledged. Mrs Furlong obtained an encore for Mr John Thomas's ballad, "There be none of Beauty's daughters," and also for a piquant and bright little song, "Sweet sixteen," composed and written by her husband, Mr Atherton Furlong, who, though evidently suffering from over-fatigue, managed, nevertheless, to do justice to Mendelssohn's "Be thou faithful unto death" and to David's serenade, "O ma Maitresse." Among the most attractive songs in the programme must be mentioned Mrs Mina Gould's "Time of roses," which has all the freshness of the typical English ballad, and, with the advantage of Miss Henrietta Beebe's interpretation, secured a deserved encore. A new song by Mr Hutchison, "I'll conquer or die," vigorously and effectively sung by Mr James Sauvage, was favourably received. Miss Clara Myers, Mdme Mudie-Bolingbroke, and Miss Clara Spence, with the assistance of Signor Tito Mattei and Mr Henry Parker, contributed to the success of the concert. Mdlle Doré Desvignes, a young contralto of continental reputation, sang most artistically Rossini's "Di tanti palpiti" (Tancredi). When the names of Sir Julius Benedict and Mr John Thomas are mentioned as being among those who "assisted" it will be seen that the entertainment was far above the usual standard.—B. B.

Highbury Philharmonic Society.—More than usual interest was attached to the second concert of this society held at the Highbury Athenæum on Monday evening, March 20th, owing to the first performance in English of Weber's opera, Euryanthe, the libretto translated for the occasion by Mr W. Thornthwaite. The plot is weak, and suffers to a certain extent by the translation; but, altogether, Mr Thornthwaite has succeeded in increasing the romantic beauty of the music, which, however, was not heard to perfection, owing to various orchestral defects. Mr Joseph Maas was not in his best "form," but sang some of the "numbers" with good effect. Mesdames Florence Norman, Catherine Penna, and E. Gibson satisfactorily filled the parts of Euryanthe, Eglantine, and Bertha. Mr Bridson, who was to have taken a leading part as Count Lysiart, had an attack of bronchitis, and Mr W. Forington took the part at very short notice. Altogether, the Society may be congratulated on the performance of such a work as Euryanthe, and in having the services of such a good musician and conductor as Mr J. F. Bridge.—W. A. J.

Mdlle Linas Spontini.—A correspondent informs us that a grand-daughter of the once-famous millionaire, Hughes Ball, known as "Golden Ball," recently made her début, under the assumed name of Linas Spontini, in a "drawing-room concert" at the Kensington Club, Queen's Gate Terrace, where her sympathetic soprano voice and artistic style of singing were greatly admired. Mdlle Spontini, who is highly connected in England and abroad, is endeavouring to make a position for herself, having scarcely inherited anything from her grandfather, who had run through the greatest part of his fortune. We wish her all the success her exceptional talent deserves.

Digitized by Google

PROVINCIAL.

CHELTENHAM.—Messrs Dale and Forty's fourth concert of the season took place on Thursday evening, March 16th, in the Assembly Rooms, which were filled with a brilliant audience. Miss Alice Roselli and Miss Santley sang charmingly, Miss Santley being enthusiastically applauded and "encored" in both her songs. Among Miss Roselli's contributions were "With verdure clad;" the duet, "Quis est homo" (Stabat Mater), with Miss Helen Meason; and a new song by M. Roeckel, "Arise, He calleth thee," which was finely declaimed and well received. Mr Cummings sang "The love of long ago," and took part with Miss Roselli in a duet, "Una notte a Venezia," both being warmly applauded. Mr Santley gave "Le nom de Marie," "Father O'Flynn" (encored), and "Simon the Cellarer." Mr Carrodus's two violin solos were above all praise, his execution of a Fantasia by Ernst being the perfection of violin playing. Mr C. Harford Lloyd accompanied.

LIVERPOOL.—The last of the "Ladies' Classical Chamber Concerts" was given in the saloon of the Philharmonic Hall on Saturday afternoon, March 18th. The programme consisted of Haydn's String Quartet in G major, Op. 17, No. 2; Schumann's "Faschingsschwank aus Wien," for pianoforte alone; Mendelssohn's String Quartet in E major, Op. 12; and John Francis Barnett's Trio in C minor, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello. The executants were Miss Emma Barnett (pianoforte), Messrs Schiever and Harmer (violins), Mr Speelman (viola), and Mr Vollmar (violoncello). The concert was a great success, Miss Emma Barnett gaining genuine admiration for her performance of Schumann's interesting composition, and no praise can be too high for her talented brother's trio, which, being most ably seconded by her coadjutors, Miss Barnett rendered con amore. Mr Barnett's trio was heard, we believe, for the first time in Liverpool, and, judging from the praise it received on every side, it is not likely to be the last. Ample justice was done to the quartets by the clever artists engaged in their interpretation, and the renewal of these admirable Chamber Concerts next season is looked forward to with pleasure.

—o—

COFFEE HALLS.

(From "The Builder," Feb. 18th, 1882.)

It is interesting to the student of history to remark, as a phase of the present times, how many men of note and position are throwing themselves with great energy and great talent into every scheme likely to promote the onward march of progress, to ameliorate existing abuses, and to urge the adoption of measures of sanitary reform. Among these men, whose name is legion, are members of both Houses,—scientific, literary, medical men,—who devote the scant leisure left them by all-absorbing duties to the furtherance and spread of their theories. The very names of the men on some of the committees are in themselves a sufficient guarantee that the project, be it what it may, is at least worthy of receiving a trial.

The immense importance of the mens sana in corpore sano is now such a received fact that the ever-increasing necessity of drawing the masses from the slough of despond,—the lower world of our great city,—lies in getting the body healthier by purer air, and food good and more plentiful because cheaper. The mind naturally takes a healthier tone, giving the poison its antidote by offering more intellectual pleasures, not taking their pleasures from them,—forcing them to look from the pictures they have been accustomed to gaze on to those these gentlemen hold up. It is by these means they are hoping to attain their end.

The "way is long"; the wind of opposition, of ingratitude, of non-comprehension, very difficult to struggle against; and it is not to be wondered at that many of these modern Jack-the-giant-killers, who began the fray with apparently indomitable courage, get weary of well-doing, disgusted, and eventually lay down their arms. One would have to be more than a Sisyphus in these modern times,—to have more than the strength of ten to always hold on to the end.

Two of the pet schemes most in vogue at this moment towards attaining the desired end are cheap coffee restaurants for workmen and coffee music halls. In the first they are supposed to be able to get a dinner for sixpence; in the latter, entertainments of all sorts in the music-hall style, but devoid of much of the rather dreary fun and ribaldry that too often characterize some of them; and in the case of the Royal Victoria Coffee Hall, to which I shall more particularly advert, as being the largest, and consequently most important, a concert of a very superior order is given once a week, where professionals of repute give their aid gratuitously, and amateurs of note also assist. It affords accommodation for 2,800 spectators, and who, on looking at the vast building packed from floor to ceiling on Thursday, the 9th, when the Prince and Princess of Wales, ever gracefully foremost and eager to further any good work, went down to judge for themselves, and to show, by the fact of their presence, their approval of a movement meant to be conducive to the further well-being of the people, could not but admit it was a gratifying sight to Miss Cons, the energetic and indefatigable secretary; to Lord Mount-Temple, Lord Brabazon, and other equally well-known members of the committee, to note the vast, the decorous, and, I will add, the appreciative, audience, their efforts had gathered within these walls, and whose hearty enthusiasm when they joined in the chorus of "God save the Queen," was a convincing proof loyalty was not, at all events, out of date in the New Cut.

What a different spectacle to that presented to our mind's eye by Charles Knight in his Penny Magazine, of 1846. "Look at our theatres! Look at the houses surrounding them! Have they not given a taint to the very districts they belong to? The Coburg Theatre, now called the Victoria, and the Surrey—what are they? At Christmas time, at each of these minor theatres, may be seen such an appalling amount of loathsome vice and depravity as goes beyond Eugène Sue, and justifies the most astounding revelations of Smollett." Again, Mr Walford tells us that the "Victoria Theatre was called the Coburg out of compliment to Prince Leopold of Saxe-Coburg, the husband of Princess Charlotte; the first stone was laid by proxy in 1817, and the theatre opened on Whit Monday of the following May. It is situated at the corner of the New Cut, near what was called the Marsh Gate—a turnpike; and probably the building of Waterloo Bridge—commenced in 1811, completed six years later—led to its erection. The foundations of the theatre are extensively composed of the stones of the old Savoy Palace in the Strand (near which the Art Union of London is now located), and which were cleared away in order to form Lancaster Place. The builder of the structure was a clever French carpenter, called Cabanelle, who also invented a peculiar kind of roof, named after him."

(To be continued.)

—o—

BRUSSELS.

(Correspondence.)

People here are talking of nothing but the magnificent Armide recently given by M. Gevaert in the pretty concert-room of the Conservatory. With the exception of a few not very important scenes, Gluck's score was represented in its entirety to the dilettanti of this capital; a truly princely treat, as we say. We might have thought that, deprived of the seductions of the stage, this admirable work would not produce its due effect, especially as Gluck's music is essentially theatrical, and, so to speak, assumes new colours under the light of the float. Such was not the case, and genuinely enthusiastic demonstrations proved the success of the experiment. The Guide Musical even declares the success to have been "excessive," and seems to believe that the public had all agreed beforehand to applaud outrageously. This would have been a strange conspiracy and strikes us as slightly improbable. Supposing Armide not sufficient of itself to entrance an audience educated to like grand music—though this is not our opinion; far from it—it is certain that, animated by the inspiration of an exceptional musician who has spent his life in studying the works of his favourite master, Armide must have created an extraordinary effect. He who understands himself makes others understand, and the dilettanti of Brussels possess too sure a taste to remain cold before a marvel of art rendered with more than ordinary comprehension of its slightest details. M. Gevaert succeeded in communicating his own sacred fire to the artists, Mdlle Battu, Mdme Duvivier, and the tenor, Bosquin, who, however, were all previously familiar with the style of the master, whose highest and most marvellous conception they were called upon to interpret.—Le Ménestrel.

—o—

WAIFS.

Faure has returned to Paris from Monte Carlo.

Vierling's Alarich has been performed in Prenzlau.

A new theatre will shortly be erected at Vigo (Spain).

Mad. Galli-Marié has been singing at the Theatre Royal, Ghent.

Mr Charles Dettelbach, the accomplished amateur, has returned from Nice.

The 100th performance in Leipsic of Lohengrin will take place this month.

A Quartet Society has been formed at the Liceo Benedetto Marcello, Venice.

The Vittorio Emmanuele and Alfieri Theatres, Turin, will open this spring for opera.

Stagno, the tenor, has been engaged for ten performances at the Teatro Apollo, Rome.

Sir Julius Benedict's Lily of Killarney has been given at St Francisco with great success.

G. Henschel is re-engaged for next season as the conductor of the Boston (U.S.) Symphony Orchestra.

Digitized by Google

His Majesty Charles I. has created Giulio Ricordi Grand Officer of the Order of the Star of Roumania.

The Vicomtesse de Panouze (formerly Marie Heilbronn) will shortly re-visit America professionally.

Great preparations are being made at Arezzo to celebrate, in September, the centenary of Guido Monaco.

Maria di Vasco, libretto and music by Carlo Brizzi, will shortly be produced at the Teatro Brunetti, Bologna.

A new buffo opera, Le Sventure del Cosimo, by M. Deschamps, is in preparation at the Teatro della Pergola, Florence.

It is rumoured that for want of sufficient support the Popular Concerts, Brussels, will cease with the present season.

Johann Sebastian Bach's Passion Music according to St Matthew will be given by the Berlin Singakademie on the 31st inst.

Kiel's new Requiem will be executed on Good Friday by the Singakademie, Görlitz, under the direction of Herr Fleischer.

The Teatro Re Umberto, Florence, has been sold by auction to Vittorio Finzi, who intends introducing various improvements.

Handel's Israel in Egypt was performed, on the 10th inst., in the Thomas Church, Leipsic, by the members of Riedel's Association.

The Musical Academy, Cologne, recently gave, under the direction of Ed. Mertke, a performance of Joseph Haydn's oratorio, Die Rückkehr des Tobias.

The opera of Raymondin, by Baron von Perfall, Intendant-General of the Theatres Royal, Munich, has not been very successful in Frankfort-on-the-Maine.

A Committee has been appointed by the Italian Minister of Public Instruction to inquire into matters at the Conservatory of Music, Naples. (Good.—Dr Bligge.)

Charles Marie Wicard, formerly a popular tenor and afterwards a teacher of singing, died in Brussels on the 6th inst. He was born at Tournai on the 11th September, 1826.

Jean Becker has been compelled to abandon his projected tour in Northern Europe, his son, Hans, having had an attack of diphtheria, and he himself suffering from erysipelas in the face.

The Siegert Musical Institute, Riga, lately celebrated its eighteenth anniversary. It is at present attended by 143 students, the total number turned out by it since its foundation being 906.

Some of the artists engaged at the Victoria Theatre, Berlin, proceeded, on the close of the Italian operatic season, to Warsaw, where the company will include Mdlle Turolla, Corsi, Verger, and Maini.

I have a ridiculous friend
Whose notions are awfully queer,
His curious habits I cannot defend,
He is somewhat non compos, I fear!
He mixes with children at play,
And somehow he gains their respect;
He's telling them fairy tales day after day;
Which is sad when you come to reflect—
Such behaviour is far from correct.

And if you're intent on a joke
At somebody else's expense,
Or larkishly trying one's ire to provoke,
His anger is something intense.
"Bah! do unto others," says he,
"As you would be done by, my lad!
Of feeling he very deficient must be
Who'd attempt to make any one sad."
Now, isn't that awfully mad?

"Be kind to the erring," says he,
"Lest you might be tempted to fall;
So ne people have ne'er had such blessings as we—
Temptations are common to all."
Now, readers, I put it to you,
As persons possessing some sense,
With such an old lunatic what can one do?
The way he behaves gives offence,
And costs him no end of expense.

This party I often upbraid,
For his notions of self are so dim;
The old stupid possesses a heart, I'm afraid—
Yes, that's what's the matter with him!
He delights to attend to the needs
Of those who feel sorrow and pain,
And numbers of Poverty's victims he feeds,
Which proves that my friend is insane—
And there he is, at it again! (Fun.)

CHAPPELL'S VOCAL LIBRARY
OF
PART-SONGS, &c.

		Composed or Arranged by	Price
1.	Dulce Domum. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
2.	Down among the Dead Men. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
3.	The Girl I've left behind me. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
4.	British Grenadiers. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
5.	Long live England's Future Queen. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
6.	My task is ended (Song and Chorus). A.T.B.B.	Balfe	4d.
7.	Thus spake one Summer's Day. S.A.T.B.	Abt	2d.
8.	Soldiers' Chorus. T.T.B.B.	Gounod	4d.
9.	The Kermesse (Scene from Faust)	,,	6d.
10.	Up, quit thy bower. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	4d.
11.	Maidens, never go a-wooing. S.S.T.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
12.	Fagot Binders' Chorus	Gounod	4d.
13.	Sylvan Hours (for Six Female Voices)	Joseph Robinson	6d.
14.	The Gipsy Chorus	Balfe	4d.
15.	Ave Maria	Arcadelt	1d.
16.	Hark! the Herald Angels sing. S.A.T.B.	Mendelssohn	1d.
17.	England Yet (Solo and Chorus). S.A.T.B.	Jules Benedict	2d.
18.	The Shepherd's Sabbath Day. S.A.T.B.	J. L. Hatton	2d.
19.	Thoughts of Childhood. S.A.T.B.	Henry Smart	2d.
20.	Spring's Return. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
21.	An old Church Song. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
22.	Sabbath Bells. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
23.	Serenade. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
24.	Cold Autumn Wind. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
25.	Orpheus with his Lute. S.S.S.	Bennett Gilbert	2d.
26.	Lullaby. S.A.A.	,,	1d.
27.	This is my own, my native land. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
28.	March of the Men of Harlech. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
29.	God save the Queen. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
30.	Rule, Britannia. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
31.	The Retreat. T.T.B.B.	L. de Rille	2d.
32.	Lo! morn is breaking. S.S.S.	Cherubini	2d.
33.	We are Spirits. S.S.S.	G. A. Macfarren	4d.
34.	Market Chorus (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	Auber	4d.
35.	The Prayer (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
36.	The Water Sprites. S.A.T.B.	Kücken	2d.
37.	Eve's glittering Star. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
38.	When first the Primrose. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
39.	O Dewdrop bright. S.A.T.B	,,	1d.
40.	Sanctus from the Messe Solennelle. S.A.T.B.	Rossini	4d.
41.	Nine Kyries, Ancient and Modern	,,	2d.
42.	Sun of my soul. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	2d.
43.	'Twas fancy, and the ocean's spray. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
44.	A Prayer for those at Sea. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
45.	O Thou whose power (Prayer from Mose in Egitto)	Rossini	2d.
46.	The Guard on the Rhine. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
47.	The German Fatherland. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
48.	The Lord is my Shepherd (Quartet). S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
49.	Te Deum in F	Jackson	2d.
50.	Te Deum in F	Nares	2d.
51.	Charity (La Carita). S.S.S.	Rossini	4d.
52.	Cordelia. A.T.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	4d.
53.	I know. S.A.T.B.	Walter Hay	2d.
54.	Chorus of Handmaidens (from Fridolin)	A. Randegger	4d.
55.	The Offertory Sentences	Edmund Rogers	4d.
56.	The Red Cross Knight	Dr. Callcott	2d.
57.	The Chough and the Crow	Sir H. R. Bishop	3d.
58.	The "Carnovale"	Rossini	2d.
59.	Softly falls the moonlight	Edmund Rogers	4d.
60.	Air by Himmel	Henry Leslie	2d.
61.	Offertory Sentences	E. Sauerbrey	4d.
62.	The Resurrection	C. Villiers Stanford	6d.
63.	Our Boys (new Patriotic Song)	H. J. Byron and W. M. Lutz	4d.
64.	The Men of Wales	Brinley Richards	2d.
65.	Dame Durden		1d.
66.	A little Farm well tilled	Hook	1d.
67.	There was a simple maiden	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
68.	Fair Hebe	,,	1d.
69.	Once I loved a maiden fair	,,	1d.
70.	The jovial man of Kent	,,	1d.
71.	The oak and the ash	,,	1d.
72.	Heart of Oak	,,	1d.
73.	Come to the sunset tree	W. A. Philpott	4d.
74.	May. S.A.T.B.	W. F. Banks	2d.
75.	Pure, lovely innocence (Il Roi de Lahore—Chorus for Female Voices)	G. Massenet	4d.
76.	A Love Idyl. S.A.T.B.	E. R. Terry	2d.
77.	Hail to the Woods! A.T.T.B.	J. Yarwood	2d.
78.	Near the town of Taunton Dean	Thomas J. Dudeney	2d.
79.	Our merry boys at sea	J. Yarwood	2d.
80.	The Shepherd's Farewell. S.A.T.B.	Berlioz	3d.
81.	When the sun sets o'er the mountains (Il Demonio)	A. Rubinstein	3d.
82.	Hymn of Nature	Beethoven	3d.
83.	Michaelmas Day (Humorous Part Songs, No. 1)	Walter Maynard	4d.
84.	Sporting Notes (Humorous Part Songs, No. 2)	Walter Maynard	4d.
85.	Austrian National Hymn	Haydn	4d.

LONDON:
CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND STREET, W.
CITY BRANCH—14 & 15, POULTRY.

Digitized by Google

SHORT PIECES FOR THE ORGAN.

EDITED AND ARRANGED BY

WILLIAM SPARK, Mus. Doc.,

Organist of the Town Hall, Leeds.

PRICE OF EACH BOOK, FOUR SHILLINGS.

CONTENTS OF BOOK I.

PRAYER ... Arcadelt
ANDANTINO D major ... Batiste
LARGHETTO ... Spohr
ALLA MARCIA, D major ... Chopin
ANDANTINO, F major ... W. Spark
ANDANTE, C major ... W. H. Nichols

CONTENTS OF BOOK III.

ADAGIO RELIGIOSO, "Hymn of Praise" ... Mendelssohn
ADAGIO, F major ... Pleyel
SARABANDE, D minor ... J. S. Bach
GAVOTTE, D major ... J. S. Bach
PRELUDE ... E. W. Healey

CONTENTS OF BOOK V.

MODERATO and ALLEGRO, from the 7th Concerto ... Corelli
ANDANTE GRAZIOSO ... Dussek
ANDANTE, from the Concerto in G minor ... Mendelssohn
ANDANTE, from Op. 83 ... Stephen Heller
"BUT THOU DIDST NOT LEAVE" ... Handel

CONTENTS OF BOOK VII.

TRUMPET VOLUNTARY ... Purcell
DUET, from the "Vater unser" ... Spohr
ICH GROLLE NICHT, Song ... Schumann
ANDANTE, from the 12th Symphony ... Mozart
MINUET and TRIO, from do. ... Mozart

CONTENTS OF BOOK IX.

VOLUNTARY, Andante, A major ... Samuel Wesley
CHORUS "So shalt thou gain" ("Hercules") ... Handel
ANDANTINO, F major ... S. Neukomm
INTRODUCTION to the Third Part of "The Creation" ... Haydn
ANDANTE, Air for Soprano ... Lindpaintner

CONTENTS OF BOOK XI.

ROMANZA, from the Second Concerto ... Mozart
QUINTETT, "Giuri ognuno" ... Rossini
ADAGIO CANTABILE, Sonata Pathétique ... Beethoven
BOURRÉE, D major ... Handel

CONTENTS OF BOOK XIII.

LORD, REMEMBER DAVID ... Handel
L'ADDIO ... Schubert
DIAPASON MOVEMENT ... J. P. Kirnberger
CARO MIO BEN ... Giordani
O SALUTARIS HOSTIA ... Auber

CONTENTS OF BOOK XV.

AVE VERUM ... Mozart
MARCH, C major ... Purcell
ANDANTINO, G major ... Dussek
ANDANTE MAESTOSO, Overture, "Tannhäuser" ... Wagner
CONCLUDING VOLUNTARY, C major ... Hesse

CONTENTS OF BOOK XVII.

ADAGIO, B flat, "La Malinconia" ... Beethoven
AIR, "Verdi prati" ... Handel
LARGHETTO, Theme from Op. 9 ... Dussek
LARGHETTO, F major ... W. Kauss
ANDANTE SOSTENUTO, C minor ... F. Hiller

CONTENTS OF BOOK XIX.

ARIETTA CON CORO, "Invano alcun desir" ... Gluck
O SALUTARIS ... Batiste
PRELUDE, C major ... Beethoven
ANDANTE, F major ... Mozart

CONTENTS OF BOOK II.

VOLUNTARY ... J. S. Bach
ADAGIO ... Louis Spohr
ANDANTINO ... D. Hemingway
MARCH in "Scipio" ... Handel
PRELUDE ... E. W. Prevost

CONTENTS OF BOOK IV.

ANDANTE, "Julius Cæsar" ... Handel
PRAYER, Larghetto Maestoso ... Bellini
MARCIA RELIGIOSO ... Gluck
ANDANTE CANTABILE, Trio, C minor ... Beethoven
PRELUDE ... August Wilhelm Bach

CONTENTS OF BOOK VI.

MARCH, from the Second Set of Sonatas ... Handel
PRELUDE ... Gebhardi
ANDANTE MOLTO CANTABILE, from Sonata, Op. 109 ... Beethoven
LARGHETTO ... Weber
ANDANTE SOSTENUTO ... Mendelssohn

CONTENTS OF BOOK VIII.

AVE MARIA ... Cherubini
ADAGIO, from the Symphony in G major. No. 16 ... Haydn
ALLA MARCIA ... Michael Haydn
ANDANTE QUASI LARGHETTO ... Dussek
INTERMEZZO ... W. Spark

CONTENTS OF BOOK X.

MARCH, D major ... Hummel
PIE JESU, from the "Requiem Mass" ... Cherubini
MELODY, F major ... Adolphe Nordmann
AIR, "Ne men con l'ombri" ("Xerxes") ... Handel
ANDANTE MODERATO, C major ... F. Lachner

CONTENTS OF BOOK XII.

CHANT DE BERCEAU, from Op. 81 ... Stephen Heller
ANDANTE, G minor, from a Sonata ... Haydn
ADAGIO, D major, from a Sonata ... Pinto
TRÄUMEREI, Lento, F major ... R. Schumann

CONTENTS OF BOOK XIV.

SPIRTO GENTIL ... Donizetti
MODERATO, Alla Marcia ... Donizetti
MINUET, E major ... Handel
LARGHETTO, 7th Concerto ... Mozart

CONTENTS OF BOOK XVI.

THEME, C major, from Concerto, Op. 64 ... Mendelssohn
CHORUS, "Les Huguenots" ... Meyerbeer
RECITATIVE, "Armida dispietata" } ARIA, "Lascia ch'io pianga" } ... Handel
MINUET, D major ... Haydn
VOLKSLIED, G major ... Old German

CONTENTS OF BOOK XVIII.

AVE MARIA, Soprano Air ... Batiste
ADAGIO, E flat ... J. S. Bach
ANDANTE GRAZIOSO, D major ... Beethoven
FUGUE, C major ... H. Jaeschke

CONTENTS OF BOOK XX.

ORGAN THEME, A flat ... A. Hesse
THEME, A flat ... F. Schubert
CHORUS, "We therefore pray Thee" (Dettingen "Te Deum") ... Handel
VOLKSLIED, "Hope" ... Mendelssohn
ANDANTINO, F major ... Gluck

LONDON: ASHDOWN & PARRY, HANOVER SQUARE.

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, & SPALDING, at 3 and 5, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, March 25, 1882.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 60.—No. 13. SATURDAY, APRIL 1, 1882. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

CRYSTAL PALACE SATURDAY CONCERT, THIS DAY, April 1st, at Three. HAYDN'S Oratorio, "THE CREATION" (in commemoration of the 150th Anniversary of Haydn's Birthday, April 1, 1732). Solo Vocalists—Miss Mary Davies, Mr Frank Boyle, and Mr F. King. The Crystal Palace Choir and Orchestra. Conductor—Mr AUGUST MANNS. Seats, 2s. 6d., 1s. 6d., 1s., and 6d.

SCHUBERT SOCIETY. President—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT. Founder and Director—Herr SCHUBERTH. Sixteenth Season, 1882. Members are informed that the Second Concert (70th since formation of Society—Schumann's Compositions in first part of programme), will take place at the Langham Hall, on Wednesday, 19th April. Ladies and Gentlemen desirous of joining the Society may have prospectus and full particulars on application to H. G. HOPPER, Hon. Sec., 244, Regent Street, W.

LONDON CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.—Principal—Mr LANSDOWNE COTTELL.
The Directors invite attention to the recent extension and increased accommodation, residential and otherwise.
Fees from Two Guineas per term, residential from Fourteen Guineas, inclusive of the Musical and Fine Art Lectures.
Free Tuition is awarded to talented young artists unable to pay fees by fund granted for this purpose.
Prospectus (one stamp), Hon. Sec., 6, Tavistock Square.

THE OBERAMMERGAU PASSION PLAY.—LONDON CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC, 6, Tavistock Square, April 22. Dr. N. HEINEMANN, F.R.G.S., F.R.Hist.Soc., &c., will LECTURE and Illustrate above. Tickets must be previously obtained from the Secretary.

MR and Mdme BODDA'S (Miss LOUISA PYNE) ACADEMY FOR SINGING, Operatic and Miscellaneous. "BONALLY," 85 and 87, Cambridge Gardens, Notting Hill. Professional and Amateur. In and Out-Door Students. Studies—Singing (Private Lessons), Elocution, Piano, Deportment, Choral Practice, Italian. Prospectuses as above, or Mr STEDMAN, 12, Berners Street.

TO CONCERT GIVERS, &c.
THE LONDON ART GALLERIES, 23, BAKER STREET, W.—These Galleries are available in the Evenings for High-Class Chamber Concerts, Rehearsals, Readings, &c., for which their acoustic properties are eminently suited. For terms address—ADAM F. HARDY, Secretary, as above.

GERMAN CONDUCTOR, CHOIRMASTER, PROF. OF MUSIC.
A GERMAN Professor of Music from the Academy of Music, Berlin, pupil of Kullak, Dorn, Wüerst, seeks for a good Engagement as CONDUCTOR and (besides) as CHOIRMASTER. He is also an excellent and much-quested Pianist, Singing and Compositions Master of good name. Address send to Berlin, Post Office, No. 60, sub. A. B. F. G.

QUARTERLY SALE of PIANOFORTES, HARMONIUMS, HARPS, VIOLINS, FLUTES, CLARIONETS, and other MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS, THURSDAY next, April 6th, 1882, at Messrs DEBENHAM, STORR & SONS' Great Auction Mart, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C. Catalogues post free.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.—HINTS ON PRONUNCIATION, with Proposals for a Self-supporting Academy—Letters from the Prime Minister, Gounod, Benedict, &c. By GEORGINA WELDON. 3rd Edition, revised and enlarged, One Shilling.
THE TWO PATHS: An Essay on the Voice. CHARLES LUNN. One Shilling.
GOUNOD IN ENGLAND. English Edition by GEORGINA WELDON. Complete in 2 vols., 10s. 6d. (French Edition in the Press.)
All the Music Sung and Composed by Mrs WELDON, MUSIC AND ART ASSOCIATION, 23, Oxford Street.

THE PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, AND KNIGHTAGE OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE for 1882. By JOSEPH FOSTER.
Early in January. In one or two volumes, royal 8vo, cloth gilt, price 42s. The Peerage or Baronetage separate, each 21s.
The THIRD EDITION, for 1882, containing all new Creations, has been considerably enlarged, and carefully corrected throughout. It is illustrated by upwards of 1,400 Engravings of Arms, &c., and contains fuller pedigrees than any other work.
Westminster: NICHOLS & SONS, 25, Parliament Street.
CHAPMAN & HALL, Limited, 11, Henrietta Street, W.C.

"ANGELS' FOOD."
SIGNOR SCHIRA'S admired Song (for Tenor or Soprano), "ANGELS' FOOD" (Poetry by RITA), is published, price 4s., by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.—An Harmonium Part to the above Song is also published, price 1s.

ORGAN FOR SALE.
CHURCH ORGAN (small) FOR SALE. Two Rows of Keys, 9 Stops, 2½ Octaves of Pedals. At present in use, but can be seen any time by applying to Mr GARSIDE, 159, Graham Road, Hackney.

"PARADISE LOST." An Oratorio. Composed by ANTON RUBINSTEIN, on the Poem of MILTON. The English version of the words by JOSIAH PITTMAN. Paris: GÉRARD, 2, Rue Scribe.

NEW SONG BY J. L. HATTON.
THE GOOD SHIP ROVER. Words by JOHN STEWART. Music by J. L. HATTON. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

PARIS UNIVERSAL EXHIBITION, 1878, CLASS XIII.
Gold and Silver Medals, Paris, 1878. Gold Medal, Paris, 1879. Gold Medal, Rome, 1880, and two Diplomas.

ARTISTIC HOUSE,
PARIS—10, RUE DU FAUBOURG-POISSONNIÈRE, 10—PARIS.
CH. J. B. COLLIN-MÉZIN,
Violin, Violoncello, and Bow Maker.

The celebrated VIOLINS and VIOLONCELLOS for SOLOISTS, which, since the adoption of the new system, are the only approved, recommended and played by the greatest Masters; among others, Messrs Sivori, Marsik, Hollmann, Léonard, Armingaud, Miss Marie Tayau, &c., &c.; Messrs Massart, Sauzay, Dancla, Franchomme, Maurin, Chevillard, Jacquard, &c., Professors at the Conservatoire of Music, Paris.
PRICES:—
Violin, £12; Tenor, £14; Violoncello, £20.
BOW in Pernambuco, Silver Mounted, first class, £1 4s.; Collin-Mézin, £1 12s.
Catalogues and Testimonials post free on application.

The only Gold Medal for Wind Instruments with Keys, in the Paris Universal Exhibition of 1878, was unanimously awarded by the Jury to Messrs P. GOUMAS & Co., for the fine quality of tone and finish of their Instruments.
SPECIAL MANUFACTORY OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FOR
CLARIONETS, FLUTES, PICCOLOS, OBOES, BASSOONS, COR ANGLAIS, FLAGEOLETS, AND SAXOPHONES.
P. GOUMAS & Co.
(Late BUFFET, CRAMPON & Co.),
Established 1830.
Nine Prize Medals have been awarded to GOUMAS & Co. for general excellence and improvements in the Manufacture of Wind Instruments with Keys.
Manufacturers of all kinds of Wood Wind Instruments for Military Bands, Musical Instrument Makers to Her Majesty's Army and Navy, and to the Armies, Navies, and Conservatoires of France, Belgium, Italy, Russia, Austria, Spain, America, &c.
Manufactory at Mantes (Seine et Oise), France. Paris: Passage du Grand Cerf, 18 et 20.
LONDON: 39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET.
Price Lists sent free on application.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,
MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF
ALL KINDS OF MUSIC STRINGS FOR ALL MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.
Sole Depôt for Signor ANDREA RUFFINI'S (of Naples) Celebrated Strings for Soloists, manufactured by him on a system invented by Mons. J. B. VUILLAUME, of Paris.
Sole Agent for CHARLES ALBERT'S (of Philadelphia, U.S.) new Patent Improved Chin Rest; also his improved String Gauge.
39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, W.
Price Lists free on application.
All kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner on powerful machines made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

Digitized by Google

Just Published.

THE BETTER WORLD.

Words by Mrs. M. A. BAINES.
Music by
MICHAEL BERGSON.
Composed expressly for and sung by Mdme MARIE ROZE; sung also by Miss JESSICA O'BRIEN.
Price 4s.
London: STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

Just Published.

ALICE.

TRANSCRIPTION FOR THE
FLUTE AND PIANOFORTE,
OF ASCHER'S POPULAR ROMANCE.
By
J. HARRINGTON YOUNG.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

UNITY.

A NEW MASONIC SOLO AND QUARTET.
Dedicated by express permission to His Royal Highness PRINCE PATRICK, DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, and all true and accepted Masons.
By
RICHARD F. HARVEY,
Organist of Unity Lodge 238 (Dublin).
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

POLKA ET VALSE.

POUR LE PIANOFORTE.
No. 1. FOLICHONNE POLKA ... ... Price 4s.
No. 2. SOUVENIR DE JEUNESSE VALSE ... ... Price 4s.
Composées par
BENTAYOUX.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

L'AMANTE.

VALZER, PER VOCE DI MEZZO-SOPRANO.
Musica di
G. MURATORI
(The English Version of the words by MARIA X. HAYES).
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

THE LOVERS' WALTZ

(L'AMANTE).
FOR THE PIANOFORTE.
By
G. MURATORI.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

THE STUDENT'S DREAM.

PRELUDE FOR THE PIANOFORTE AND HARMONIUM, OR ORGAN.
Composed by
G. GARIBOLDI.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

MENUET DE LULLI.

POUR LE PIANOFORTE.
Par BENTAYOUX.
Price 3s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.
N.B.—The "Menuet de Lulli" can also be played as a Duet for Violin and Violoncello.

Just Published.

AMELIA.

CANZONE POPOLARE.
Parole e Musica di
G. MURATORI.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

THE VOICE AND SINGING.

BY
ADOLFO FERRARI.
THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING,
Price 12s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.
"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

VOCAL EXERCISES COMPOSED BY FRANK MORI.

Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.
N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by the late FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

New Edition of "LE PETIT SOLFEGE."

LE PETIT SOLFEGE. Vingt Solfèges pour Voix de Mezzo-Soprano. Par JOS. CURCI. Price 6s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.
"This work for educational purposes will be found of inestimable value, since it is one of the very few which confines itself to the cultivation of the middle of the voice; and whilst the phrases are admirably adapted to develop the breathing powers and volume of the voice, the melodies are so exquisitely harmonized that they must prove of great benefit in the improvement of the taste and ear of a student in singing."—Pictorial World.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of
A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR
THE VOICE.
By T. A. WALLWORTH.
A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdme Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklein, and other successful Vocalists.
Full Music Size, price 7s.
London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.
DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis, of Basingstoke, says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

LA POMPA DI FESTA. Grande Marche, pour Piano, à Quatre Mains. Par IGNACE GIBSONE. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"HER VOICE."

"HER VOICE." IGNACE GIBSONE'S popular Song (poetry by "A Soldier's Daughter"), sung by Mdme ENRIQUEZ, is published, price 4s., by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NEW VOCAL QUARTET.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" Arranged for Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, and Bass by G. B. ALLEN. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

THE DRAMA IN PORTMAN-MARKET.

Another MINOR RECORD.

(Continued from page 179.)

The house closed rather suddenly at the beginning of February, 1851, and Mr Stammers was made a bankrupt. The name of Mr E. T. Smith next appeared at the head of the announcements, in the autumn of this year. This venture was, we believe, the beginning of a managerial career, which, extending over the next twenty years, or more, included in its course at least six of the metropolitan houses, besides the gardens of Vauxhall, Cremorne, and Highbury Barn. Mr Smith led off with English operas, supported by Mr and Mrs Donald King, Mr Henry Drayton, Mr Gregg, Mr Frazer, Mr Lawler, Miss Lanza, and Miss Helen Condell, all names of a certain note in the musical world of that day. Mr N. T. Hicks and transpontine melodrama were then tried. At Easter, 1852, he sublet the property to Mr George Bolton, who got up a very fair revival of The Tempest, for the holiday-makers, and subsequently engaged the eminent tragedian, Mr James Anderson, for a short series of performances, after which Mr Smith himself resumed the cares of management, and introduced, as Sir Giles Overreach, Mr McKean Buchanan, an American, whose style, though not without merit, was marred by an extravagance, which prevented him from securing a definite position on the London boards. During Mr Buchanan's engagement, which lasted for some months, Shiel's old tragedy The Apostate, or, The Moors in Spain, was unearthed. This play had been rendered famous at Covent Garden in 1817, by the talents of Charles Kemble, Young, Egerton, and Miss O'Neill, in combination. As might be imagined, it scarcely caused any excitement now. Mr Smith's system of management was certainly not an elevated one, yet he contrived, nevertheless, from time to time, to present some very good acting to his patrons. In addition to Mr Buchanan, Mr James Rogers and Mrs Brougham played in 1852. Charles Freer was here at Easter, 1853, and was followed by Mr Davenport, Mr Charles Selby, Mr T. Mead, and Miss Fanny Vining. Amongst the plays selected at various times, we find John Wilkins' admirable Civilization, and Mrs Lovell's no less admirable Ingomar, in addition to the time-honoured melodramas of The Tower of Nesle, The Red Rover, and The Innkeeper of Abbeville, not to forget another, newer, and yet more thrilling in its denomination, The Assassin Monk; or, The Sentinel of the Thirteenth Chime!!!

In the autumn of 1853, Mr E. T. Smith removed to the larger field of Drury Lane, and the Marylebone Theatre passed into the hands of Mr J. William Wallack, an actor favourably known to the London public by his performances of the Shaksperian drama a year or two previously at the Haymarket. It was evidently the aim of Mr Wallack to regain for the house, if possible, the position which it had held under the direction of Mr Watts and Mrs Warner. For this purpose he engaged a company comprising, besides himself and Mrs. Wallack, an actress of no mean ability, the names of Messrs. Henry Vandenhoff, George Cooke, J. W. Shalders, Edgar, F. Charles, C. Bender, Clinton, and W. Wallis; Misses Harriet Gordon, Fanny Garthwaite, Emily Horton, and Mrs. Robertson. On the opening night, early in October, the old comedy, A Cure for the Heartache, and Planché's extravaganza, The Fair One with the Golden Locks, were represented, and to these succeeded Speed the Plough, Abelard and Heloise, and John Daly's drama, Broken Toys. On Wednesday, October the 19th, Mr and Mrs Wallack made their first appearance as the Thane and his wife, in a very carefully got-up revival of Macbeth. The Stranger, Othello, The Bridal—in which Mrs Wallack as Evadne, and her husband as Melantius, created a powerful impression—and The Lady of Lyons followed. Colley Cibber's version of King Richard the Third was given in November, with Mr Wallack as Glo'ster, and Mr Henry Vandenhoff as Richmond. Miss Julia Harland was added to the corps, for the after-pieces, upon which much attention was bestowed by the management. Among the more prominent of these were Francis Talfourd's burlesque, Alcestis, Gay's Beggar's Opera, and the old burletta Midas. A new farce by Mr Albany Fonblanque, entitled Metempsychosis; or, Which is Which? was also brought out. Of other revivals we may notice The Honeymoon, and Maturin's now forgotten and gloomy tragedy of Bertram, originally written for Edmund Kean, in which Mrs Wallack electrified her audience as Imogen. There was a very good pantomime at Christmas, Harlequin King Ugly-Mug, and my Lady Lee, of Old London Bridge, written by Mr Nelson Lee. The clown was Paul Kellino. Mr and Mrs Wallack reappeared in Pizarro at the beginning of February, 1854, and immediately afterwards Judge Talfourd's Ion was produced with new and elaborate scenery and costumes. Mrs Wallack added greatly to her laurels as Ion, and the Adrastus of Mr Wallack also met with general approbation. On the alternate evenings Byron's Werner was given, with similar attention to the stage appointments. A version of the French spectacular drama, La Prière des Naufrages, which, as The Thirst of Gold, had already made a considerable sensation at the Adelphi, was brought out at the end of February under the title of The Struggle for Gold, and the Orphan of the Frozen Sea. This was chiefly remarkable for the magnificence of the mounting, and for the highly picturesque manner in which Mrs Wallack supported the character of the Indian girl. A revival, also with new scenery and dresses, of Romeo and Juliet was to be noticed for the Romeo of Mrs Wallack, the Mercutio of Mr Wallack, and for the debût, as Juliet, of Miss Cleveland, now best known as the accomplished actress and polished elocutionist, Mrs Arthur Stirling. Mr Hoskins, from Sadler's Wells, was engaged at Easter to play in Clari, the Maid of Milan, reproduced with Sir Henry Bishop's songs and glees. The holiday programme was supplemented by a fairy extravaganza, The Magic Branch, from the pen of a new and competent author, Mr Collis. In this Mr. Shalders distinguished himself in the twofold capacity of comedian and scene-painter, whilst Miss Harriet Gordon and Mr George Cooke completed the effect by their excellent singing and acting. Mr Eliot Galer, Mr Henry Drayton, and Miss Susannah Lowe subsequently gave a few performances of English opera, with an orchestra and chorus directed by the composer, Mr John Francis Duggan. The legitimate drama was then resumed with William Tell, Virginius, The Hunchback, The Love Chase, Jane Shore, The Wonder, The Wife, and The School of Reform, presented in rapid succession, and a season both honourable and remunerative to the management came to its conclusion at the end of the month of May.

Encouraged by his well-merited success, Mr William Wallack issued a circular to the patrons of the Marylebone Theatre, previous to the commencement of his second season. In this he promised many alterations and improvements, a stage lengthened—by the removal of a back wall—to the depth of 115 feet, and an elegant re-decoration in every part of the interior. More interesting still, however, was his expressed purpose of providing "a home for the highest Drama of England," and of encouraging "to the utmost, the living proofs and witnesses of its indestructible genius." Not only were the plays of Shakspere and the old dramatists to be presented, with every attainable appliance of scenic and decorative art, but "new and original dramas" were, from time to time, to be introduced, and mounted with the same care and cost. "Justice," added the lessee, "will be done to the living, as to the dead; and no means left unattempted to raise the Victorian age, in its dramatic relations, to a level with the Elizabethan era." The tone of this preamble was, perhaps, grandiloquent, but there was, nevertheless, an honest purpose, honestly fulfilled, beyond.

Eventually the Marylebone re-opened on Saturday, the 7th of October, with a revival of As You Like It, strictly in accordance with the text of Shakspere, and profusely illustrated with new and beautiful scenery, painted by Mr Shalders, together with costumes of a novel and picturesque design. An overture, entr'actes, and some incidental music, were also composed by Mr J. F. Duggan, who himself presided in the orchestra. Mrs Wallack's Rosalind astonished those who had hitherto only seen her in such parts as Lady Macbeth, and was played throughout with a gaiety and youthfulness which literally left nothing to criticize. Mrs Wallack received much graceful support from the Celia of Miss Cleveland. Orlando was neatly rendered by Mr Edgar, and the Jacques of Mr William Wallack proved a very fine specimen of elocutionary power. The other parts were respectably filled, and the whole gave unqualified satisfaction to a crowded and brilliant audience.

(To be continued.)

Moscow.—The inauguration of the monument, in the courtyard of the Conservatory of Music, to the memory of Nicholas Rubinstein was to come off last week. Anton Rubinstein, his brother, was to be present.

Digitized by Google

FORM, OR DESIGN, IN VOCAL MUSIC.

(Continued from page 180.)

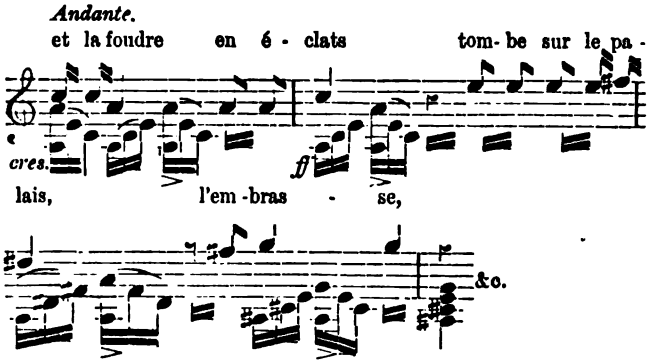
For another example of recitative let us take one of Gluck's. He says, in his preface to Alceste, that the proper function of music is to "second poetry by enforcing the expression of the sentiment and the interest of the situations, without interrupting the action, or weakening it by superfluous ornament." So in his recitations the vocal part emphasizes and strengthens the accent of the words, while the harmonies and the interludes of the accompaniment accord with and add to the expression of the sentiments.

In Iphigenia in Tauris, after the storm in the early part of the opera, a calm ensues. Iphigenia begins a recitative:

Ex. 144.

"Calm is restored, but in the depth of her heart the storm still rages," and after the word but is a rest *, which tells more of the storm which is raging within Iphigenia's heart than many notes. Her companion priestesses have some sympathetic questions, and then a few simple repetitions of a note (pianissimo) seem to speak of some coming trouble. Then Iphigenia begins to relate a dream which has made her afraid. At first, she tells of having seen her father's palace, and how tenderly she felt towards him, and for awhile the accents of the music are quiet, and the accompaniment in quiet chords like those of Ex. 144. Shortly, she tells how the earth trembled and lightnings came and overthrew the palace; and the expression of the music becomes changed. It is recitative in time with agitated accompaniment and strong accents.

Ex. 145.



A rapid interlude finishes this idea abruptly.

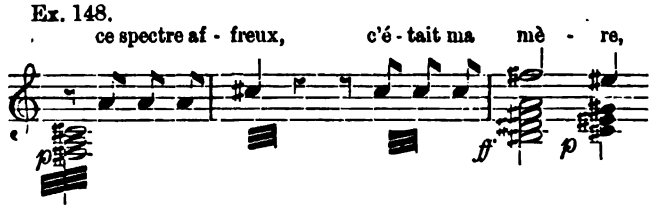
Ex. 146.

After the single chord (a.), which, repeated against the accent, seems almost like a choking sob, she tells how there came from the midst of the burning ruins a plaintive voice which touched her heart. Twice again, after the vocal phrases, comes the sobbing chord. She followed the voice. Then she found it was her father; and in her description of his pitiable wounded state, flying from the murderous rage of an inhuman spectre, the sentences are broken apart or disjointed by short staccato phrases, of alternately loud and soft notes, which seem to speak both of her horror at the ghastly sight and of her tenderness towards the father who was thus terribly used.

Ex. 147.

A trembling accompaniment is under her next words that this spectre was her mother; and two chords give strong accent to the two syllables of the word mother, pointing the thought that terrible as it was that her father should be murdered, it was yet more terrible that it should be her mother who was his murderer.

Ex. 148.



Then her mother armed her with a sword and disappeared, and then Iphigenia fled. The sentences are again broken and disjointed by short interludes, and seem thus to speak of the rapidly changing emotions. Then she relates how she was arrested by a call from Orestes, her brother; and a few syncopated chords seem to stay her. She saw him an unhappy man, and would have helped him. These words are with quiet chords, like those of Ex. 144. But a power she could not resist forced her to stab him. The accompaniment of these words is in decided chords, struck on the strongest accents () of the strongest words.

Ex. 149.

Throughout the whole of this recitative every important verbal accent has been strengthened, every sentiment made more evident, and every expression more expressive by the music with which the words are allied.

For recitative in more modern works we may refer to the scene of Desdemona with the "Willow Song" in Rossini's Othello, and to the scene of Tancredi's return to his country, in the same composer's opera of that name.

Oliveria Prescott.

(To be continued.)

IMPROMPTU.

When Liverpool Rensburg sent for Max Bruch,
He wanted a German, by hook or by crook.
No English conductor being used to the bâton,
Herr Rensburg could only say "No," with his hât on.
[Although Alfred Mellon
was not quite a felon
And Liverpool owned a composer like Hâtton.]

Drinkwater Hard.

Wink's Corner,
North Malvern, April 1.

Berlin.—Hardly has one Italian operatic company left the Victoria Theatre than another is announced to open on the 8th inst. at the Central Skating Rink. The rehearsals have begun some time under the direction of Signor Oreste Bimboni, as conductor. The opera-season at Kroll's commences on the 6th May. The manager, Herr Engel, has engaged a good regular company. The "stars" at present secured are Mdlle Maria de Sido and her sister, Alix Desta, from London; Mdme Schröder-Hanfstängl, from Stuttgart; Herr Carl Sommer, from Vienna; Dr Krauss, from Hamburgh; and Herr Theodore Wachtel, from——Longjumeau (?).

Digitized by Google

EDINBURGH HAS SOMETHING TO SAY.

"Our own Correspondent" sends us the subjoined article from the Edinburgh Courant:—

"That in connection with the projected Royal College of Music and its proposed auxiliary institutions a good deal of nonsense would be talked was, perhaps, only to be expected. At all events, the fact that it is so, need neither disappoint the promoters nor injure the cause. "When a grave and reverend seigneur" like Professor Maclagan sets himself with a solemn countenance to prove that we are more musical than the Germans, for the reason that, for one boy who is met whistling on the street in a German town, five are found to be so employed in Scotland, people who know better are bound to laugh at the idea of such a test; but this does not affect the main issue. By common consent it is admitted that whatever may be our relative position as to love of music, or taste for music, we have not the facilities which we might and ought to possess for imparting to all who may be disposed to receive it, a musical education. That this want is felt is proof that we are musical, and, at the same time, that we are not so musical as we should be. What must really be deplored are the efforts, on the one hand, already apparent, to stir up professional jealousy; and the only too manifest willingness on the part of a number of laymen, on the other hand, to keep the basis of the scheme thus narrowed and weakened. Both tendencies are emphatically to be deprecated. The Prince of Wales was more careful about nothing than that the inaugural gathering under his auspices should be of a representative character in the widest possible sense. It included princes, peers, politicians, parsons, lawyers, litterateurs, musicians, and, as His Royal Highness remarked, 'all the leaders of society.' This fact was duly acknowledged at the time. In the case of Scotland, however, there has been evident from the outset a shortsighted disposition to ignore the professional class altogether, which does not harmonize with the policy of the meeting at St. James's Palace, and which is not warranted by any of the unpleasant things since said by professionals regarding that meeting. It has been complained that 'The Royal Academy of Music was ignored by all.' Well, it is a pity that it should have been so; but the Royal Academy had first its turn of ignoring, and did not fail to avail itself of it, and it is, therefore, not very dignified to declare now, that 'it is no secret that the profession, as a body, besides a vast number of amateurs, are by no means well-disposed to the scheme.'

"In the English case it was not wise on the part of the professional class to seek to depreciate or prejudice a laudable scheme, even supposing they had good ground for considering themselves pushed to one side; for, after all, the professional musician, like the professional painter or actor, depends entirely upon the public opinion of his work, however much he may despise that opinion. Equally petty is it on the part of laymen to take up the position which they seem to have taken up in Scotland, and to say, 'We will have no professional men in the Council.' It is not only petty, but the best way to ensure failure. In regard to such a meeting as that held last week in the city, Sir Herbert Oakeley ought to have been the first person consulted, and certainly his absence did not tend to enhance the musical tone of the movement. The musical men in this part of the world might, or might not, have turned round upon the laymen, as they are doing in the south. That is a point which they themselves should have been left to decide. They should have had, at least, the same opportunity as in the case of the St James's Palace meeting of identifying themselves with the undertaking. The apparent ignoring of Sir Herbert Oakeley, considering that he has laboured with great zeal and assiduity in the cause of music in Scotland for a period of sixteen years, and with no small degree of success, was a deliberate insult, and the sneering remarks made 'in another place' a day or two later concerning 'a professor of music who had been knighted,' constituted a gratuitous aggravation of that insult. Surely it cannot be thought that the cause of the new Royal College or of the Scottish Academy will be promoted by such means? If the scheme is to have the confidence of the public, the difficulties which exist should not, either from want of knowledge or personal prejudice, be made light of, but openly confessed. The speaker who took the most prudent and sensible view of the matter advised no 'friction' with any movements already successful, and that musical appliances or interests already existing should be duly considered. With all good wishes to the project, we trust that such drawbacks to its success may be perceived and removed.

"It need not be thought that the Royal College and the Academy will have a magical effect. Much more needs to be done while the pupils are below academy age, and the £19,000 spent on music by the Education Department might as well be kept in the Treasury so far as any assistance it gives to university agencies is concerned. Even in England the universities have long had the advantage of receiving boys of cathedral training. That is a thing which is only beginning in Scotland, and not until it becomes universal—till music becomes as much a part of the daily curriculum of our elementary schools as—"

* * * * * * * * *

"Our own," with his accustomed occasional negligence, has failed to transmit the end of the article, which we are, therefore, compelled to replace by a line of asterisks. Otto Beard.

BRIXTON CHORAL SOCIETY.

Mr Arthur Sullivan's Leeds cantata, The Martyr of Antioch, was performed by this Society, at the Angell Town Institution, on Monday evening, and attracted a full house. In itself, perhaps, the event was not of great importance, but it served to provoke remark upon the valuable service rendered by Mr Lemaire and his helpers for a good number of years past. The Brixton Choral Society has always made itself prominent among suburban bodies by a rare spirit of enterprise. Hardly does a new English work appear before the dwellers in South London have an opportunity of making its acquaintance, and it is this which pre-eminently entitles the society to friendly notice at the hands even of those who seldom look so far from the centre of metropolitan art. The performance of Mr Sullivan's work was not satisfactory in all respects. We may speak with some measure of admiration regarding the soloists, especially Miss Hilda Coward and Mr Guy, who respectively sang the music of Margherita and Olybius. Miss Coward was often charmingly pathetic in her expression, while Mr Guy did all his work like the sound musician amateurs know him to be. Miss Annie Gatland (Julia) has not yet passed beyond the stage of promise, but Mr Henry Cross, who played both Calliao and Fabius, may be said to have done so for some time, with results which, however useful, are not specially striking. Curiously enough, the performance failed most where it was expected to be best—in the choral department. We have heard the Brixton singers to infinitely greater advantage than on this occasion. Their attack was timid, and their execution not far short of slovenly. Mr Lemaire must have remarked this for himself, and will perhaps be led to inquire whether anything like a spirit of laissez faire has crept into the society. If it has, let the thing be exorcised at once, ere more mischief happen. The pianoforte accompaniment was very ably played by Mr Harvey Löhr, and that for organ by Mr C. Wilkes; it is, however, matter for both surprise and regret that in an extensive district like Brixton a small amateur orchestra cannot be got together.—D.T.

THE TONIC SOL-FA SYSTEM.

(To the Editor of the "Musical Standard.")

Sir,—Professor Macfarren deserves the thanks of the musical world generally for his letter to the Vice-President of the Council of Education on the subject of the Tonic Sol-fa system, reprinted in last week's Musical Standard. If there were no other objection to the system, I think the first mentioned in the letter a most conclusive one, viz., "That it hinders the acquisition of a sense of pitch." All musicians know how valuable an acquisition this is, and how useful any individual possessing it is amongst a body of vocalists singing from single vocal parts. Surely the slight saving of time which is claimed by the Tonic Sol-faists is not worthy of consideration. I am myself training every week some fifty boys (a portion of whom are at present in my choir, and the remainder preparing therefor) from the established notation; and, if their progress may be possibly slower, I know that it is thorough, and that if they go to any other choir, or take a part in any vocal or instrumental performance, they will not have to commence the study of another notation. In conclusion, I think, Sir, it is time that musicians generally should give themselves the trouble of speaking out boldly on the subject; and if they did so, I feel convinced we should find more than nine-tenths of them endorse the views expressed in Professor Macfarren's letter. Your obedient servant,

Mus. Bac., Oxon.

Stuttgart.—Professor Donndorf has just completed the clay model of the principal figure for the Bach Monument, to be erected at Eisenach. The grand old Master is represented in the dress of the period, with long waistcoat and knee-breeches. His left arm is resting lightly on a music-stand, while in his hands he holds a pencil and a sheet of paper. It is said that the Monument will be inaugurated before the date originally selected, namely, the composer's 200th birthday, in 1885.

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

There could hardly be better evidence of the popularity of Berlioz's Faust than its production by the Albert Hall Choral Society. For good and sufficient reasons, no doubt, this society avoids speculation on the strength of reputed new beliefs and fancies. Others may rush hither and thither, lured by the hope of exploiting some fresh public taste; but Mr Barnby and his people keep serenely plodding along the straight and beaten track. We do not mention this to blame; far from it. At a time when all sorts of silly and fantastic ideas lay themselves out to ensnare the weak and the foolish, a musical society may do much worse than steadily hold aloft the standard of pure and classic art, even as Moses set up the brazen serpent in the wilderness to be a symbol of healing and health. Having regard to the usual course of the society, the reasons must have been potent which led to the production of Faust on Wednesday evening, March 22. We admit their cogency. Indeed, looking at the result, no other course is possible. A very large audience attended, and the interest of the occasion was, on all hands, most marked.

Concerning the work itself, it is barely possible to say anything new. No other has been so frequently performed since Mr Charles Hallé revived it in a happy moment, while the familiarity of the story and the salient features of the music have enabled our public to make acquaintance with its details and comprehend its meaning in a brief space of time. On the other hand, a performance of Faust must always provoke remark; either praise for the conquering of special difficulties, excuses for honourable failure, or censure for rash venturing on a heavy task without sufficient means. Berlioz is one of those masters who cannot be trifled with. It takes only a little to turn the balance in favour of defeat or victory where his music is concerned; above all, does every performance of Faust convey to those who know what is involved the idea of a lottery wherein the chances in favour of a prize or a blank are nearly equal. We may at once state that the result of the Albert Hall Choral Society's venture upon Faust was a prize, and a big one. In some respects the performance commended itself as the best we have yet had in London. It was so, for example, with reference to the choral music. At this, perhaps nobody is surprised. Mr Barnby can train a choir better than most men; while the amateurs under him are people whose capacity is too well known for dispute. None the less should we give honour to the very able manner in which the choruses of Faust were rendered. We do not insist so much upon quality of tone, knowledge of the music, and confidence in delivery. The special excellence of the choir went higher into the region of feeling and expression; so that there was no passage which failed to come out as something more than merely harmonized sounds. The gain of this to the performance cannot be overrated. It made the choruses a part of the drama, instead of leaving them at the comparatively low level of ensemble episodes. We must also commend the work of the orchestra, though this might be done, inferentially, by stating that the Hungarian March, Dance of Sylphs, and Dance of Will-o'-the-Wisps were all encored by acclamation. There were times, it is true, when the orchestra played too loudly for the solo voices, but these apart, it is a plain duty to congratulate conductor and instrumentalists upon a very successful effort. The persons of the drama were represented by Mdme Marie Roze (Marguerite), Mr Vernon Rigby (Faust), Mr King (Mephistopheles), and Mr Pyatt, some of whom, we believe, discharged this duty for the first time. Mdme Roze won much favour by her appropriate delivery of "The King of Thule" song, and, even more, by the dramatic significance she threw into the love music. Here her stage training proved of value. She sang with meaning and expression as well as with energy, and achieved a frank success. On his part, Mr Vernon Rigby, previously a stranger to the music, showed his capacity for intelligent and successful study. In a smaller hall, the delicate and elaborated music allotted to Faust would, no doubt, have made a greater effect; but Mr Rigby must be credited with having used his opportunities to the utmost. That he sang with invariable correctness need not be insisted on, especially as the higher qualities of taste, feeling, and expression demand acknowledgment. His delivery of the Invocation to Nature was especially good, and put the finishing touch to a demonstration that in this artist we have a capable representative of Faust. Mr. King's Mephistopheles was throughout capital, and certainly none the worse because modelled upon that of Mr Santley. The sardonic spirit of the Tempter had admirable expression—so admirable that he must have been hard to please who saw reason to complain. Almost as a matter of course, the Serenade was given with point and spirit, and had to be repeated. Mr Pyatt did good service in his comparatively small part, and Mr Barnby conducted with all the skill necessary for success in a work which lays a heavy task upon him who wields the bâton.—D. T.

COFFEE HALLS.

(Concluded from page 186.)

In July, 1833, the title was changed to that of the Royal Victoria, in commemoration, it is said, of the young Princess Victoria and her mother, the Duchess of Kent, having visited it. There are also other interesting records connected with it. In 1830 Edmund Kean was paid £100 for performing there for two nights. Booth, Cooke, Liston, Joe Grimaldi, Buckstone, Benjamin Webster, and G. V. Brooke, trod its boards. It numbered among its scene-painters Clarkson Stanfield; and in 1834 the great violinist, Paganini, performed here for one night—his last appearance in this country.

Yet the Victoria enjoyed a doubtful reputation for some years; the audience which had begun by being respectable, changed into a mob who sat in shirt sleeves, cracked nuts, called the actors by their Christian names, and pelted them with orange peel and apples, so that it was hardly safe for a respectable West-ender to enter. However, with the march of time and education, these things again altered, and in 1871 the audience of the New Cut assembled to bid farewell to their cherished home of melodrama, and, though composed of the rougher classes, were as decorous as need be. The piece given was the same with which the theatre had opened in 1811, Trial by Battle; or, Heaven defend the Right; and when Mr Cave announced in a pathetic manner, "the curtain will drop for ever on the Victoria Theatre," and it fell, a mournful-voiced, bare-armed young man in the front row of the gallery summed up the case thus: "Ah! the poor old Wic! Pass the 'arf-and-'arf, 'Arry."

Well, it is the question of the "'arf-and-'arf" that has principally led to the establishment of these coffee-halls. Few want to deprive a hard-working artisan of his glass of ale at his dinner or supper, but they wish to prevent his spending the whole of his leisure time in a public-house—a place to which he cannot take his wife or his daughters, and where the temptation of an occasional sip ends too often in confirmed intemperance; and it is well known half the crimes committed come, not from the fair use, but the abuse, of drink. Feeling that some places of amusement were needed where men could take their wives and children to enjoy an evening of harmless recreation, where they could get good coffee, good tea-cakes, and cheap sparkling beverages, these places, of which the Victoria seems to be the chief, are being started. The rate of admission is extremely moderate. There are some seats at higher prices for those in a higher grade of society—a necessary thing, for it is a curious fact that places where only persons in their own position go are not popular with the people; they like to see the "swells."

If, then, the impetus given to the movement were to relax, or were eventually to fall through, it would not be the fault entirely of the class it is meant to benefit. There is not always a sufficiently hearty co-operation on the part of the general public. The danger to any new scheme lies so often in its being taken up with amiable enthusiasm that gradually gets cooler, or it is worked in too dilettante or amateurish a fashion, not on a sufficiently commercial basis; sometimes the failure is merely to be attributable to the want of sufficiency of funds to be able to weather and tide over that narrow isthmus that lies between non-success and success, and which almost always has to be traversed. The expenses are sometimes beyond the receipts, as in the Kensington Coffee Tavern, where the rental is £200, and the gas-bill, chiefly for cooking purposes, £160 per annum; so that, it is feared, if they cannot find enough annual subscribers to pay the rent, they will have to close.

Then, I am told the numbers are not many of small drinkers or total abstainers who reside permanently in any neighbourhood, and the working-classes are constantly migrating. Sometimes, too, the restaurants which began by giving excellent dinners at 6d. deteriorate, or the men are kept waiting—an important point when they have only a given time for their meals. Then the public-houses are trying to vie and surpass in their coffee and tea their rivals. And as the making of good coffee is one of the essential elements in the success of this undertaking, this is a point that should be closely looked after. In France coffee is so excellently made, and at such a cheap rate, that it is the universal and favourite beverage.

It is against all these adverse circumstances that the promoters of the present scheme will have to contend. A mere outsider, and in no way mixed up in the movement myself, it appears to me to hold the elements of so much good to thousands as to deserve the good wishes and co-operation, not of one class in particular, but of the general public.

CARLEON.

MILAN.—The revival of Simon Boccanegra at the Scala had to be postponed for a short time in consequence of the indisposition of M. Maurel. It is said that he has been offered an engagement to sing in Hamlet at Barcelona, with Mad. Marie Heilbronn as Ophelia, and another for next winter at the Teatro Real, Madrid.

Digitized by Google

SCRAPS FROM PARIS.

At the Grand Opera, M. Vaucorbeil was very anxious that M. Ambroise Thomas's Françoise de Rimini should be produced before Passion Week, but, for various reasons, the realization of his wish was found to be impossible, and so the first night is now fixed "immutably" for the 10th or the 12th inst.

Galante Aventure, the new three-act opera, has been successfully produced at the Opéra-Comique. The book, by MM. Louis Davyl and Armand Sylvestre, is made up of materials which have served on innumerable occasions before, but, being cleverly rearranged and clothed in elegant and polished fiction, were nevertheless received with as much satisfaction as though they were entirely new. Had they even been less skilfully handled, the audience would in all probability still have been pleased; for Frenchmen are never tired of pieces in which female virtue is represented as not altogether immaculate. In the present instance, however, a certain zest is added to the story—which is decidedly scabreux—because, at the fall of the curtain, the spectators are left in doubt as to which of two daughters of Eve has fallen a victim to the insidious wiles of the gallant young soldier, Urbain de Bois-Baudry. This interesting hero, having been disappointed in his hopes of obtaining the hand of the fair Armande, whose parents compelled her to marry an old but wealthier suitor, whom they considered a more eligible match than the younger but impecunious swain, went off, some three years prior to the commencement of the action, to fight under Francis I. in the Milanese. There he has remained till the conclusion of the campaign, when he returns to Paris and meets an old brother-in-arms, Vigile. They determine to have a little amusement without being over scrupulous as to where they seek it. As he is roaming about, Urbain is lucky enough to rescue a young female from the hands of some roysterers. Having done this, he escorts her home, and, to prove of course how safe she is in his keeping, enters with her. But who is she? Is she the Marquise de Chandor, wife of a profligate Marquis of the usual pattern, or Gilberte, her maid, or Mdme de Narsay, the very Armande, now a widow, whom Urbain, though not above engaging in a chance amorous intrigue, pour passer le temps, still so fondly loves? This is a question which, owing to the very convenient darkness, Urbain cannot answer. But Vigile swears on meeting his friend the next morning that the fair unknown is Mdme de Narsay, and establishes the truth of his assertion in an apparently irrefutable manner. Consequently, when Mdme de Narsay arrives and intimates that, being now free, she is ready to bestow her hand on him who has so long possessed her heart, she is deeply shocked at, and totally unable to comprehend, the way in which she is received. Eventually everything is satisfactorily arranged. The reprobate Marquis de Chandor had contrived a deep-laid plan to carry off Mdme Narsay, but his Wife hears of it, and, accompanied by her maid, Gilberte, determines to get carried off instead of Armande, who is an old friend of hers. For this purpose, she and Gilberte take up their residence in Armande's mansion which, strange to say, is the very mansion whither, as already related, Urbain conducts her whom he has rescued, and who, at all events, is not Armande. Whether she is the Marquise or Gilberte, is a matter about which the dashing gallant does not trouble his head. So all ends happily in the usual fashion.

The music is by M. Ernest Guiraud, who had already presented the lyric stage with Madame Turlupin, Piccolino, and Gretna Green, and is well calculated to sustain the composer's reputation. The orchestration gives evidence of a scholarly and practised hand, while the vocal part is flowing and melodious. Among the numbers more especially liked in the first act may be mentioned a chorus: "Joyeuse Nouvelle;" a romance for Armande de Narsac; a serenade; and a trio for Armande, Mdme de Chandor, and Gilberte. The second act contains a striking opening chorus, a graceful duet for Armande and Urbain, and a fine trio for male voices. The third act is introduced by a pleasing little bit of symphonic writing, which met with special approbation; then comes an effective air for Urbain, and a duet between him and Armande. As Mdme de Narsay, Mdme de Chandor, and Gilberte respectively, Mdmes Bilbaut-Vauchelet, Dupuis, and Chevalier sang and acted their best. The same applies to M. Talazac as Urbain de Bois-Baudry, and M. Taskin as Vigile. M. Grivot, too, was good as the Marquis de Chandor. The chorus under M. Carré, and the band under M. Danbé, did their work well. The scenery, dresses, and mise-en-scène generally were all the most exacting could require.

Taking advantage of her passage through this capital on her return from Monte Carlo, Mdme Albani paid M. Gounod a visit, and went through with him her music in his oratorio of The Redemption, to be produced at the Birmingham Festival. She will return after Easter to hear Françoise de Rimini. Signor Sonzogno, the music publisher of Milan, is already here for the same purpose, and also to make arrangements for an Italian version of the work.—M. Colonne recently summonsed several members of his chorus for breaking their engagement and transferring their services to a rival competitor for public favour. They were condemned to pay 300 francs and costs.

—o—

DONIZETTI'S POSTHUMOUS OPERA.

Donizetti's posthumous opera, the Duca d'Alba, discovered a year ago among his papers, was brought out at the Apollo last night. Expectations had been raised to the highest pitch, which the success of the opera justified. The Opinione says:—"There can no longer be any doubt that the Duca d'Alba adds a new leaf to the great master's crown, and will certainly live in the Italian repertory." The theatre was crammed in every part. Not only was all the musical world of Rome present, but a number of art notabilities came from Milan, Naples, and other cities. Among them were Ponchielli, Bazzini, and Dominicetti, who formed the commission appointed by the Academic Council of the Milan Conservatoire to pronounce on the authenticity of the manuscript, and Salvi, who undertook the task of completing the orchestral score. All the aristocracies, of rank, wealth, talent, science, and art, were represented, with Her Majesty Queen Margherita—never absent when honour is to be rendered to the Italian name. The audience remained silent during the first half of the first act, but the applause burst forth at a splendid chorus and then continued with increasing intensity to the end. At some parts the audience actually shouted their approval. The first and last of the four acts are wonderfully fine.—Times correspondence.

Rome, March 23, 1882.

—o—

MUSIC IN GENEVA.

(From a Correspondent.)

The announcement that M. Strakosch would, with his renowned touring company of stars, give a concert on the 21st ult. in the Bâtiment Electoral, drew a large and fashionable audience, who, on leaving, were delighted to find that all their expectations, however high, had been thoroughly realized.

To descend to details, I may mention that the fair Transatlantic nightingale, Miss Emma Thursby, fairly held her hearers spellbound, both by the delicious quality of her voice and the marvellous feats which she causes it to perform with unerring certainty and such winning grace. In reply to the applause which greeted her rendering of the songs set down for her in the programme, and which seemed as though it would never end, she gave two more songs, one English and the other German, which were not set down for her, whereupon the applause was, if possible, more enthusiastic than before. Mad. Trebelli sang with all the style and power for which she is celebrated "Di tanti Palpiti," from Rossini's Tancredi, and the "Habanera," from Georges Bizet's Carmen. In recognition of the highly appreciative and somewhat vociferous manner in which the latter was received, the gifted lady threw in an exquisite piece by Chopin. M. Capoul, who, by the way, was rather hoarse, acquitted himself satisfactorily of his part of the programme. M. Strakosch was the accompanist on the piano. Instrumental music, pur et simple, found a most efficient representative in that clever violinist, M. Musin, who played, among other pieces, a "Souvenir de Haydn" and a "Berceuse" by Léonard. He was warmly applauded. Altogether, the concert was a most enjoyable one, and will not soon be forgotten by those who attended it.

At St James's Hall on Good Friday a sacred concert is announced, at which Rossini's Stabat Mater will be sung by Mdmes Marie Roze and Patey, Messrs Edward Lloyd and F. King; to be followed by "gems from the oratorios and other sacred works," rendered by the same vocalists aided by Miss Agnes Ross and Mr Charles Abercrombie. Besides the attractions named, Gounod's "Meditation of J. S. Bach, arranged for orchestra, chorus, violin, and pianoforte," will be given "for the first time in England" by a band and chorus of 300; the solo-violin part to be played by Mr Carrodus, and the pianoforte by Master Carrodus. In addition to which, Mdme Marie Roze will sing "Let the bright seraphim," to the trumpet obbligato of Mr W. Ellis.

Digitized by Google

ST JAMES'S HALL.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS,

TWENTY-FOURTH SEASON, 1881-82.

DIRECTOR—MR S. ARTHUR CHAPPELL.

THE LAST CONCERT OF THE SEASON

WILL TAKE PLACE ON

MONDAY EVENING, APRIL 3, 1882,

At Eight o'clock precisely.

Programme.

PART I.—Sextet, in B flat, Op. 18, No. 1, for two violins, two violas, and two violoncellos (Brahms)—MM. Joachim, L. Ries, Straus, Zerbini, Pezze, and Piatti; Song, "Medjé" (Gounod)—Mr Santley; Novellette, in F (Schumann), Nocturne, in D flat, and Waltz, in A flat (Chopin), for pianoforte alone—Mdme Schumann; Song, "O swallow, swallow" (Piatti)—Mr Santley—violoncello obbligato, Signor Piatti; Concerto, in D minor, for two violins, with pianoforte accompaniment (Bach)—MM. Joachim and Straus, and Miss Agnes Zimmermann.

PART II.—Tema con Variazioni, in D major, Op. 17, for pianoforte and violoncello (Mendelssohn)—Mdlle Marie Krebs and Signor Piatti; Songs, "O cessate di piagarmi" (Scarlatti) and "Ho messo nuove corde" (Gounod)—Mr Santley; Hungarian Dances, Nos. 2, 19, and 7, for violin and pianoforte (Brahms and Joachim (Herr Joachim and Miss Agnes Zimmermann.)

Accompanist—MR ZERBINI.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 1, 1882,

At Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

Trio, in C minor, Op. 9, No. 3, for violin, viola, and violoncello (Beethoven)—MM. Joachim, Straus, and Piatti; Andante and Rondo Capriccioso, in E major and minor, Op. 14, for pianoforte alone (Mendelssohn)—Mdme Schumann; Song, "Voi che sapete" (Mozart)—Miss Spenser Jones; Trio, in B flat, Op. 97, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (Beethoven)—Mdme Schumann, MM. Joachim and Piatti; Air, "Cangio d'aspetto" (Handel)—Miss Spenser Jones; Quartet, in D minor, Op. 76, No. 2, for two violins, viola, and violoncello (Haydn)—MM. Joachim, L. Ries, Straus, and Piatti.

Accompanist—MR ZERBINI.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

OMICRON OF THE ORKNEYS.—Good. Ainsi soit il, pour ainsi dire, si ainsi ose't on s'exprimer.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.'s, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). Advertisements not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 1, 1882.

COLDLY CORRECT.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—The growing taste of a certain clique of amateurs would seem to be for everything in convulsions. I went to a concert in St James's Hall last Tuesday, and heard Beethoven's sonata in A flat, Op. 26, played with a chasteness of style, a phrasing remarkable both for grace and purity, and an absolute perfection of mechanism not to be surpassed. Could the divine composer himself have been present he would have run up to the platform and kissed the fingers of the executant. Fancy my astonishment on reading in the musical columns of a favourite journal:—"* * * *, by playing the Funeral March Sonata of Beethoven ('Funeral March Sonata'!) gave a lesson in the coldly correct style to all young pianists." Perhaps the critic prefers the hotly incorrect style. If so, he is welcome. I don't, and shall be gratified if you will allow me to make this protest in your columns. Wrong notes, self-assertion, "tearing passion to tatters," and above all, noise, are becoming the fashion with a circle of imaginary æsthetes, who aim at the very existence of music as a genuine art. They want a Gilbert and a Sullivan to show them up in their true colours. It is consoling, however, to know that such madness can only be short-lived.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

ALGERNON K. SIDNEY GODOLPHIN.

New Brighton, March 25.

SARAH BERNHARDT commences on the 9th inst. a series of performances at the Teatro Real, Madrid.

MR GYE has issued his prospectus of the "Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, Limited." The season is to commence on Tuesday, April 18th.

GERMAN OPERA.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—What is really "German Opera"? Haydn and Mozart, in their cantilena, were pure Italian. Handel, before them, drew immeasurably from the Italian melodic spring. Gluck, as medium, joined hands with the man of Halle and the man of Salzburg. The three had been to Italy, and two of them (Handel and Gluck) were dexterous highwaymen, though one said his cook could teach the other counterpoint (which was true at that date). All music comes from Italy (let Mr Salaman say what him pleases). England took her music from Italy; France also; Spain (alack!) also. Belgium has no music except that which the late Charles Hanssens gathered up in splinters on the field of Waterloo; the music of Holland is the music of frogs; that of Russia, Scandinavia generally (including Mr Cowen's Symphony), Ireland, Scotland, Wales, &c., little better than a sort of mumbling, moaning, howling, blustering about an imaginary past. Germany has no music except that of Bach (the music of whose progeny is the rinsings of the old man's bottles), Lortzing, Weber, and Lanner. The music of Mendelssohn is Jew's music; the music of Meyerbeer is Harlequin's coat; the music of Beethoven can only be explained by Joachim, all the others dandifying it to such an extent that instead of seeing at a glance the wide universe, we see Joseph (not Joseph Joachim) in his coat of many colours, which certain antiquaries persist in putting on Benjamin (not Lumley, who always dressed black). In fact, take away Auber a Frenchman, Dibdin an Englishman, Van Hoof a Dutchman, and there is no such thing as national music—by which I mean the only possible music. Wagner thinks himself a German minstrel, whereas he is simply a hypochondriac mythic ballad monger, groping about for ideas in the dark ages, while Wagner's father-in-law is a raving sybarite. There was a Manx (truly Manx) composer, by name Mac; but he has taken to engineering and employs all his leisure, which amounts to none at all, in constructing submarine tunnels between Liverpool, Boston, and New York, to expedite the carriage of dynamite and bull rugs. These are my sentiments. Let's hear no more about "national" schools of music.

TEMPEST.

[Blow Tempest.—Otto Beard.]

THE LATE MR JOHN HILES.

We regret to hear that the widow of the late Mr John Hiles, to whom we referred in a recent issue, has been left in circumstances which have necessitated the raising of a subscription for her benefit. If a very small percentage of those who have derived from Mr Hiles' music and works both instruction and recreation were to contribute to the fund being raised, it would soon amount to a considerable sum. Subscriptions will be kindly received by Messrs Chappell & Co., New Bond Street; Gray & Davison, Euston Road; Duncan Davison & Co., Regent Street; and Mr Frederic Davison, 24, Fitzroy Square.

WE have more or less substantial cause to believe that the talked-of "Egyptian Symphony" of our gifted compatriot, Arthur Sullivan, will turn out a substantial reality. It will, or we are greatly mistaken, beat Félicien David's Desert into smithereens. If not, Mark Twain will ascend the great Pyramid, with his 150 umbrellas, and learn the reason why.

THE Princess Beatrice's two compositions, recently published by Mr Lamborn Cock, entitled "The Blue-eyed Maiden's Song" and "The Green Cavalier's Song," were sung for the first time in public by Miss Lilas Spontini (not Linas Spontini, as inadvertently printed in our last week's impression) at the concert given by the Kensington Club on Tuesday, and met with genuine success, leaving the impression of Her Royal Highness being an accomplished musician. Miss Lilas Spontini afterwards gave Schubert's "Ungwald" (Impatience) with finished expression.

DRESDEN.—The three-act romantic opera, Hagbarth und Signe, composed some ten or twelve years ago by Herr E. von Mihalovic, was successfully produced on the 12th ult., at the Theatre Royal. The style is eminently Wagnerian.—Der Bauer ein Schelm, a German version of an opera by Anton Dvorak, as yet performed only at the Czech Theatre, Prague, is to be given here.

Digitized by Google

SIGNOR GARDONI.

All frequenters of the Italian opera and many personal friends will learn with deep regret that Signor Gardoni has just died in the house in the Rue Tronchet, Paris, which he occupied for many years. Signor Gardoni had been ailing for some considerable time, but, until he was prostrated by the tedious illness which has proved fatal, he was remarkable for his singularly juvenile aspect, and many will probably hear with surprise that he was nearly sixty-two years of age. His numerous successes on the Anglo-Italian stage are too recent to need recapitulation here, but it may be said that he was as much attached to the English public as they were to him. He was almost better known, indeed, in his professional capacity in London than in Paris, where, however, he had, I believe, an interest in a financial house, and where his pleasant and naturally genial manners endeared him to all with whom he came in contact. Gardoni married a daughter of Tamburini, the famous baritone, and he leaves, besides his widow, two daughters and a son to deplore his loss.

Gardoni was buried on Wednesday at Montmartre, the funeral service being performed with all the touching impressiveness of the Roman Catholic ritual, in the Madeleine Church. In the large congregation of mourners who had assembled to bid adieu to a much respected friend, I observed but very few professional comrades; indeed, Mdme Albani and M. Faure were the only singers, so far as I saw, who attended to pay a last tribute of respect to their former colleague. Gardoni, for some years past, led a very retired life in Paris, where, although he made his début at the French Operahouse he was less known than in London. In the busy life of the French capital old favourites are soon forgotten.—(Paris correspondence "Daily Telegraph.")

—o—

CONCERTS.

Crystal Palace.—The Saturday Concerts are going on after the old and approved fashion in which Mr Manns, their director, has always wisely trusted for success. Three have been given since our last notice. The first of these would have been interesting if only on account of a very fine performance of Mendelssohn's "Reformation" symphony, about which there has been so much discussion, closed eventually in its favour by a unanimous verdict from the genuine musical public. Enough that no work in its kind of equal merit has since been written except by Mendelssohn himself, who was but twenty years old when he completed it. Then the overture to Spontini's Olympie is surely (pacé the "advanced" school) worth an occasional hearing, as coming from the pen of a master declared by Berlioz to be Gluck's legitimate successor, and who, away from that distinction, has played a part too important in the history of "dramatic opera" to be ignored without ignoring one of the pregnant stages of its progress. Lastly, the once-admired pianoforte concerto in C sharp minor, by Ferdinand Ries—Beethoven's favoured (indeed, only legitimate) pupil, as well as being the son of Beethoven's master—admirably executed by Mdlle Marie Krebs, was heard with infinite satisfaction by those whose taste has not been corrupted by the manifold incoherent rhapsodies which German, French, and Russian musicians of recent years have brought forward in the name of "concerto"—things wholly "without form and void" (chaos after the creation). At the following concert Mdme Norman Neruda introduced a concerto (in G, No. 6, Op. 47) by her master and adviser, the late Henri Vieuxtemps, written expressly for her, and forwarded with a letter couched in terms of equal admiration and affection, a letter which Mr Manns quotes in his well-judged analysis of the work. The concerto is not only the last, but in many respects the best, that came from the "Prince of Belgian Violinists." It is in the virtuoso style, no doubt, while adhering to the form which Hummel derived from Mozart; although, unlike Hummel, it vouchsafes that importance to the orchestra invariably to be remarked in the concertos of Mozart. How Mdme Néruda plays, with what consummate ease she vanquishes all the technical difficulties which abound in this, as in all the previous concertos of Vieuxtemps, and with what devotion she strives to interpret the significance of her revered master's essentially musical phrases, those who have frequently heard and understood the accomplished Moravian lady at her best need not be reminded. The symphony at this concert was Mozart's truly Orphean "E flat," first of the immortal three, the second and third of which are the "G minor" and the so-called "Jupiter" (C major), all produced (besides other works of more or less importance) from June 26 to August 10 of 1788! On Saturday (25th inst.) the foremost attraction was Herr Joseph Joachim, whose noble and deeply-thought "Elegiac Overture," composed in memory of Heinrich von Kleist, opened the programme. This overture was first performed by the Cambridge University Musical Society, on the 8th of March, 1877, when the degree of "Doctor of Music" was conferred upon its composer, already long ago of European renown. It was appreciated then, was appreciated very shortly afterwards, when produced, under the direction of Mr Manns, at the Crystal Palace, and rose higher and higher in the opinion of connoisseurs on the present occasion. Such music can only be estimated at its worth by increased familiarity—judging from which point of view, it may safely be prophesied that the "Kleist-Overture" is destined to live. Herr Joachim, for the second time at the Crystal Palace, brought forward the violin concerto in D, by his quasi-compatriot and intimate friend, Johannes Brahms. Opinions still differ with regard to the intrinsic merits of this elaborate work; but none with regard to the magnificent reading of the solo part by the Hungarian violinist. Brahms, great musician as he is, and as this concerto proves, has yet to learn the art of contriving "bravura" passages for the violin, as exemplified from Paganini to Ernst and Vieuxtemps. His wisest course would be to write a concerto every alternate year for Joachim, who would soon mark out for him the path he might advantageously follow. The cadenza—Herr Joachim's own, based, as a matter of course, upon the "subject-matter" furnished by the composer—offers, notwithstanding its extraordinary mechanical difficulty, a case in point. In addition to the concerto, Herr Joachim gave the prelude and Fugue from J. S. Bach's sonata in G minor, his execution of which has gained for him repeated triumphs, from the time of his first introducing them, as a mere boy, in 1844, at one of the soirées given by Messrs. G. A. (now Professor) Macfarren and J. W. Davison, in what was then the concert room of the Princess's Theatre, to his last performance of them in St James's Hall. The singers at the concerts thus briefly commemorated have been Signor Foli, Miss Carlotta Elliott, Mrs Hutchinson, and Miss Hope Glenn. The gentleman has long since won his spurs; and of the ladies it may be said that, without exception, they are surely progressing in their art. They select good music, and sing it well.—Graphic.

Philharmonic Society.—Whatever this society may have lost by temporary alliance with the "abomination of desolation," as represented by Liszt's Hungaria, was regained when, on Thursday, March 23, it invited the public to the garden of sound, wherein bloom such delectable things as Mendelssohn's Concerto in G minor for pianoforte, Beethoven's C minor Symphony, and Weber's overture to Euryanthe. A great crowd answered the call, and the occasion was one of the most notable in the society's recent experience. We must attribute this partly, no doubt, to the fact that Mdme Schumann made what was announced as her only appearance this season in connection with an orchestra. Curiosity to hear the great artist under such circumstances was a natural feeling. The opportunity in the nature of things may not occur again, while it is almost a certainty that, should Mdme Schumann visit us no more, we shall have to wait years for the coming of a pianist equally able to interpret the masterpieces of classic art in the spirit of the age which gave them birth. The reception accorded to Mdme Schumann was of the most enthusiastic character, many of the audience rising from their seats to do her honour. As to this, no demonstrations would have been in excess. We have amongst us well-nigh the last exemplar of a grand school, destined to be looked back upon with envy, and to be anticipated in revival—since no good thing can die—with a longing the more ardent because of abounding opportunity for contrast with a worse thing. By all means, then, let us honour this exemplar, and, so doing, show that we know how to recognize talent which is not blatantly self-assertive, and artistic practices which are above the level of quackery. Mdme Schumann's performance of Mendelssohn's Concerto—first heard fifty years ago next May—was worthy the jubilee of a work more popular now than when in the heyday of youthful freshness. Addressing herself to the grateful task, the friend of Mendelssohn seemed to recal the vigour of past days, and to re-animate herself with the enthusiasm which time must necessarily abate. She played in magnificent style from first to last, and was honoured at the close with a demonstration utterly out of keeping with the common idea of a phlegmatic British audience. Again and again Mdme Schumann had to re-appear on the platform to bow her acknowledgments. She was, of course, affected by the scene, and will number it among the remarkable events of a long and brilliant career. The concert opened with the overture to Mr C. V. Stanford's opera The Veiled Prophet, a work successfully produced in its entirety at Hanover last year, and from which selections have recently been given at the Crystal Palace. The overture was most favourably received and the composer applauded, but it might be well to reserve criticism until the opera is given in England. That time cannot surely be far distant, else all our recent talk about fostering native talent is so much empty sound, having some other meaning, if any meaning at all, than that of the language employed. The C minor Symphony was performed in a fashion quite up to the improved standard of the society, and the same might be said of the Euryanthe overture. Mdlle Kufferath and Mr Maas were the vocalists, the lady failing, probably from nervousness, in Mozart's "Ah, lo so," but giving two German lieder nicely; and the gentleman using his magnificent voice to the fullest effect in the Centurion's song from Dr Bridge's interesting cantata, Boadicea, which work, we are glad to learn, is set down for performance at the Chester festival in June next. Mr Cusins conducted, as usual, and with customary ability. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales honoured the concert by their presence.—D. T.

Mr Walter Macfarren.—This gentleman (writes a valuable contributor) brought his interesting series of Orchestral Concerts to a close on Saturday night last in the presence of a large audience, which included many of our most distinguished professors. The examples given by Mr Macfarren of himself as a writer of orchestral music, consisted of his overtures, Hero and Leander, and King Henry the Fifth, both of which have challenged praise as compositions replete with happily conceived effects, and much brilliant and picturesque instrumentation. The present hearing confirmed the good opinion already suggested, and Mr Macfarren reaped another crop of well-deserved laurels. The fine orchestra which he had gathered together for these concerts rendered every justice to the above-mentioned works, which, when fitting opportunity arises, ought assuredly to be heard again and again. The programme further contained Schumann's pianoforte concerto in A minor, played by Miss Cantelo, and Beethoven's violin concerto, played by Herr Joachim. The young lady is a pianist of acquirement and susceptibility. As regards the former qualification, she does honour to Mr Walter Macfarren, under whose tutelage it may be presumed she has graduated, and as regards the latter, evidence was repeatedly forthcoming that her heart was in her work, and that she was directed by intelligence and motive. Schumann's fine concerto is a test of no ordinary trial for any player, but it cannot be denied that Miss Cantelo, after making every allowance for youth and public inexperience, won a measureable degree of credit, which she will doubtless see her way by study and determination to profitably enlarge. Joachim has never been in brighter or grander force than now, and it will easily be felt that the concerto of Beethoven was listened to with all the zealous and loving attention which intimate acquaintance with the music and a reverential belief in the artist could alone inspire. Upon the present occasion his performance of the matchless poem of Beethoven (with which, it is not too much to say, the name of Joachim for the last quarter of a century has been chiefly identified), had lost nothing of its triumphant excellence, whether as a mental or a physical effort, and the pleasure of the audience was excited to the utmost—as well it might be. To the prolonged rounds of applause that awaited him at the close of his magnificent performance, there could hardly have been a person present who did not in the fulness of his delight enthusiastically contribute. Mendelssohn's glowing overture to Ruy Blas commenced the concert, and was encored with acclamation; the second part opening with Spohr's symphony, Die Weihe der Töne, which would have been better enjoyed had the programme been of narrower dimensions. Three overtures, two instrumental concertos, and a symphony (by no means of the shortest), constituted too much of the proverbial "good thing," however healthy and exceptional the intellectual digestion of the listener. The vocalities were supplied by Miss Clara Samuell.—H.

The concert given at the Royal Victoria Hall on Thursday evening, March 23rd, arranged by Mr George Gear, gave much satisfaction to the audience. Some compositions of Mr Gear were successfully given, amongst others "The Rose is dead," sung by Miss Edith Ruthven, and a Rondo brillante entitled "La Gioja," as well as a "Rigaudon" for the pianoforte, played by the composer, who was unanimously re-called. Misses Rose Moss and Ellen Marchant pleased greatly, and Miss Clara Latham's fine voice in "The Children of the City" and "The Minstrel Boy," as well as in the contralto part of Professor Macfarren's trio, "The Troubadour," was heard to advantage. Some "recitations" by Miss Minnie Bell were powerfully rendered, the same lady displaying the versatility of her talent by singing "Rory o' More." The duets for pianoforte and violin, played by Misses Nellie and Kate Chaplin, and the violin solo of the last-named were remarkably well played. Messrs D'Arcy Ferris, W. Broughton, Alfred Moore, Sackville Evans, Mdlle and Master von Löhr also assisted. The accompanists were Miss Nellie Chaplin and Mr George Gear.

Mr Gustave Pradeau gave a pianoforte recital on Tuesday afternoon, March 28th, in one of the smaller reception rooms of the new Kensington Town Hall, under the patronage of the Princess Louise and other distinguished individuals. The name of Mr Pradeau is unknown to us, but the exemplifications he gave of his attainments were sufficiently numerous to proclaim him a pianist of unfailing readiness and capability. His programme covered a variety of fields, and included the names of Scarlatti, W. F. Bach, Handel, Chopin, Schumann, Schubert, and Weber, indicating the superior direction of his tastes and the varied quality of his technical experiences, both characteristics being rendered the more palpable by the fact that he played wholly from the storehouse of his memory—in other words without book or reference. The most important features of the recital were Chopin's Sonata in B minor, and Weber's Sonata in C. His execution of the famous "Moto continuo," which forms the final rondo of the latter, was a marvel of velocity and unweariness of hand.—H.

A series of five concerts of instrumental concerted music, entitled, "Musical Evenings," under the direction of Mr Henry Holmes, have been given during the past month at the concert room of the Royal Academy of Music, the last of which took place on Wednesday evening, before a most appreciative and attentive audience. The executants during the season were:—Mr Henry Holmes (first violin); Mr A. Gibson (second violin); Mr A. Burnett (viola); Mr E. Howell (violoncello); Mdme Haas (pianoforte); Mr W. Henry Hill (second viola); and Mr C. Ould (second violoncello). The concerts have been most interesting to lovers of instrumental music, as the following list of works performed during the season will show:—

First Concert.—Quartet (strings), in B flat, Op. 55, No. 3 (Haydn); Quintet (pianoforte and strings), in E flat, Op. 44 (Schumann); Quartet (strings), in A minor, Op. 132 (Beethoven).

Second Concert.—Quartet (strings), in F, Op. 41 (Schumann); Sonata (pianoforte and violoncello), in D, Op. 102, No. 2 (Beethoven); Quartet (strings), in D minor (posthumous) (Schubert).

Third Concert.—Quartet (strings), in E minor, Op. 44 (Mendelssohn); Sonata (pianoforte and violin), in G, Op. 96 (Beethoven); Quintet (strings), in C, Op. 163 (Schubert).

Fourth Concert.—Sextet (strings), in G, Op. 36 (Brahms); Trio (pianoforte and strings), in E flat, Op. 70, No. 2 (Beethoven); Quintet (strings), in C, Op. 29 (Beethoven).

Fifth Concert.—Quartet (strings), in F, No. 8 (Mozart); Quintet (pianoforte and strings), in F minor, Op. 34 (Brahms); Quartet (strings), in C, Op. 59, No. 9 (Beethoven).

The "Musical Evenings" were established in 1868, by Mr Henry Holmes, when they were heartily welcomed, and now, in 1882, they are, notwithstanding the plethora of music, more welcome than ever.

Herren Carl Weber and Alex. Kummer, in connection with Mons. B. Albert, gave the first of their announced series of four concerts of chamber music in the Royal Academy concert room on Wednesday evening, March 22nd. The programme consisted of Gade's Trio, in F, Op. 42, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello; a Prelude and Fugue in E flat minor, for pianoforte alone, by Sgambati; Schumann's Fantasiestücke, for violin and pianoforte; and Beethoven's Trio, Op. 9, No. 2, for violin, viola, and violoncello. Between the instrumental pieces Mdme Isabel Fassett sang compositions by Beethoven and Brahms, accompanied by Mr Harvey R. Löhr. The concert-givers are all highly esteemed professors, Herr Carl Weber being a pianist of superior attainments, Herr Kummer a violinist whose merits have been frequently acknowledged, and Mons. B. Albert a violoncellist whose ability is well known to amateurs as well as to the general public. We need therefore only draw the attention of our readers to the concerts in progress by these artists and they will be amply repaid for their attendance by the excellence of the programmes and the admirable way in which the compositions are sure to be rendered.

Mdlle Rosina Isidor's concert on Saturday evening, March 18, attracted a full and fashionable audience. Assisted by Mdme Patey, Mr Maas, Signor Foli, and Mr Barrington Foote, as singers; with Herr Ernst Lœwenberg, Mr John Thomas, Herr Louis Engel, and Mr Keppel, as instrumentalists, an agreeably varied programme was offered to her friends by Mdlle Isidor, who, it may be remembered, made a favourable debut at Her Majesty's Theatre in the autumn season. The possessor of an agreeable voice, which she uses artistically, Miss Isidor made a sensible impression in the well-known air from Il Trovatore, "Tacea la notte;" in the duet from Lucia di Lammermoor, "Sulla tomba" (with Mr Maas); as well as in Cowen's popular song, "It was a dream" (encored), and in a valse song by Mora, "Regina di cuore," gaining unanimous applause and a "call" after each. Mdme Patey contributed to the success of the concert by her fine rendering of "A Winter's Story," by Michael Watson, and her humorous delivery of Behrend's "Auntie." Mr Joseph Maas made a great effect with Blumenthal's popular "Message," and was called upon to repeat Engel's "Darling mine," accompanied by the composer, who afterwards gave his harmonium solo entitled "The Piper's Daughter." A flute solo is a novelty at a fashionable concert, and Mr Keppel's brilliant performance of an air varié by Böhm was thoroughly enjoyed and warmly applauded. The concert concluded with the quartet "Chi mi frena," from Lucia, effectively sung by the concert-giver and her valuable coadjutors.

Digitized by Google

Miss Rosa Kenney's recital at the Marlborough Rooms on Tuesday last attracted a large and fashionable audience. It was a critical audience, too, although one evidently much interested in the young artist whose career since she made her début not long ago as Juliet has been anxiously watched by her friends. Miss Kenney has certainly gained considerably since her first appearance, both in strength of voice and clearness of declamation, the proof of which was evident in Tennyson's "Charge of the Heavy Brigade," which she selected as her first piece for recital on the occasion under notice. We were hardly prepared, however, for the spirit and comic humour she displayed in the love scene between Helen and Modus from Sheridan Knowles' Hunchback. In this Miss Kenney had the valuable aid of Mr Charles Wyndham, whose Modus was delightfully simple. The last piece recited by Miss Kenney was a selection from "The passing of Arthur," by Tennyson, in which her command of pathos and variety of "voice-tone" were prominently brought out. The recital was varied by two solos on the pianoforte by Herr Kranick and some excellent singing by Mdme Edith Wynne and Miss Berta Forresta, ably accompanied by Mr H. S. Trego, who also gave some pianoforte solos. Mrs Aylmer Gowing and Mr Herbert Standing also assisted Miss Kenney, the first named reciting Southey's "Mary, the Maid of the Inn," and the gentleman his own amusing story of "The 'Bus Driver." Mr Standing also gave some imitations of well-known actors, which, however, must have been an "after thought," as they were not inserted in the programme.

Mr Lansdowne Cottell's lecture on "Practical Harmony" to the students of the London Conservatoire of Music and their friends was given on March 25 at 6, Tavistock Square. The lecture was "full to the brim" with novel "rules of procedure"—novel, at least, to those unfamiliar with the courses of study in use at the Continental Conservatoires—as well as demonstrations of the errors in many of the ordinary instruction-books, and was delivered in such an interesting manner that it was received with rapt attention, broken only at times by irrepressible laughter at some humorous anecdote, or by enthusiastic applause as an apparently complex theorem was ingeniously made clear. Professor Macfarren's timely hit at the Tonic Sol-fa system was duly quoted and dilated upon. As a practical and instructive discourse, assisted by pianoforte illustrations, Mr Cottell's amusing lecture was certainly a multum in parvo of harmony and vocalization worthy of publication in extenso.—A. B.

PROVINCIAL.

Bristol.—Mr Brinley Richards terminated his examination on behalf of the Royal Academy of Music on Saturday, March 18, assisted by a local examiner, Mr George Riseley. Mr Brinley Richards expressed himself highly pleased with the ability of the candidates, many of whom came a long distance. The great importance attached to these examinations is shown by the large number of names sent in, there being upwards of 1,200, and tends also to show how rapidly musical education is on the increase in this country. In this respect the Royal Academy of Music is exercising an influence in musical art which, in these days of general education, must be considered a public service of no little value. Professor Macfarren is the Principal of the Royal Academy of Music, and to him the public are largely indebted for these examinations. The candidates in Bristol have expressed themselves in high terms of the courtesy of Mr Brinley Richards, and in reply to a question that gentleman said that Bristol had done well, and that the results justified him in saying that the candidates reflected the greatest credit on those who were entrusted with musical education in this city.—Western Daily Press.

Edinburgh.—The Edinburgh University Musical Society gave its fifteenth annual concert last week, when the usual large audience assembled. Following the practice of former years, an orchestra of about fifty performers supplemented the work of the students' chorus, and two songs were contributed by Miss Wakefield. The chief interest of the concert attaches to the students' chorus, partly because of the association of a too long neglected art with the severer business of college life, and partly because of the interesting features in the programme to be credited to the excellent judgment and taste of Sir Herbert Oakeley. The choir-singing, on the occasion under notice, was enjoyable in a high degree, and when it is remembered that the Professor has every year a body of raw material—musically ignorant and vocally unformed—to work with, the result was more than creditable. The concert opened with the "Gaudeamus Igitur." A fine chorus by Spohr, entitled "To Song," was also given with as much delicacy in the piano passages as could be expected from a chorus so constituted. The highest point of excellence was reached in the noble piece of choral writing, "Freedom," by Weber, which was transposed and most effectively scored by the Professor. Hardly less successful were the renderings of "The Red Cross Knight" and a new choral song, "Omnia Vincit Amor," by the Professor. The latter is a tuneful and vigorous composition, in which the spirit of the old song is happily caught. His arrangements of Scotch melodies have for some years past formed not the least enjoyable numbers in the programmes, and the two given last night, "Cam' ye by Athole" and "Auld Lang Syne," were repetitions easily justifiable. Two pianoforte solos were contributed by young students, both of whom evinced intelligent reading and considerable executive power. Another student, possessing a fine baritone voice, sang an air by Handel, and two songs (modestly entitled bagatelles), by the Professor. The first of these, "Partings," is set in a style of appropriate simplicity, with much melodic charm; the second, "Contrasts," is treated with greater boldness and originality, and is an impressive song. Miss Wakefield's contributions were an aria from Gluck's Orfeo and Mozart's "L'Addio." Sir Herbert Oakeley, president and conductor of the Society, received an "ovation" from the students at the termination of the concert.—(Abridged from the "Edinburgh Courant.")

Windsor.—Mr Orlando Christian gave his annual concert in the Albert Institute on Monday, March 27th. The artists included Misses Jessie Royd and Jeanie Rosse, Sig. Odoardo Barri, Herr Bonawitz, Mons. A. Brousil, Mdlles B. Brousil and C. A. Brousil. There was a large and fashionable audience. Encores were awarded to Miss Rosse in "The old and the young Marie" (Cowen), Miss Royd in "The keel row," and Miss Christian in "The Better Land" (Cowen). A new song, "The Queen's Message," composed by Mr H. R. Couldrey, and written by Mr Welham Clarke, was introduced by Mr O. Christian; this was enthusiastically encored. The composition does credit to a young composer.

Derby.—The Carl Rosa Opera Company have given three representations this week, commencing on Monday night with an excellent performance of Mignon, conducted by Mr Pew, the principal character being rendered most charmingly by Miss Julia Gaylord, Mr Barton McGuckin undertaking that of Wilhelm-Meister with genuine success. Filina and Lothario were in the safe hands of Miss Georgina Burns and Mr Leslie Crotty. Mr Lyall, as Laertes, was as mirth-provoking as ever. To quote the Derby Daily Telegraph: "It is remarkable to note the apparent ease with which this accomplished comedian lifts into agreeable prominence a character which, given to an ordinary player, would be lost in the ruts of conventionality. Without being in the least degree obtrusive, Mr Lyall so used his opportunities as to leaven the whole of the sad story with most acceptable humour." Miss Kate Chard was a handsome looking Frederic, Messrs Broklyn and Leahy undertaking the parts of Antonio and Giarno. There was a full and fashionable audience.

Birkenhead.—On Tuesday evening, March 28th, the members of the Cambrian Choral Society gave a concert in the Queen's Hall. The programme comprised the first and second parts of The Creation and a miscellaneous selection. Mdme Billinie Porter, Mr J. L. Hughes, and Mr J. R. Alsop were the soloists; Miss Maggie Evans presided at the pianoforte, Mr W. Lee at the harmonium, and Mr T. C. Jones conducted. There was a large audience, and the principals were repeatedly "called," and "encores" were the rule, not the exception.

APRIL.*

Hush! hush! ye wintry winds, oh hush!
The flow'rets lift their heads once more;
And Nature, with a rosy blush,
Unlocks from earth her golden store.

The beauteous blossoms bear her brand;
Her children, by her nursed and bred,
Tended with a fond mother's hand,
With gentle showers and dew they're fed.

Sweet April smiles through shade and shine,
Do likewise—thou art truly sage;
Peace, happiness will then be thine
Through this troublesome, hurrying age.

* Copyright. Catherine Martyr.

Digitized by Google

LISZT'S "CHRISTUS."

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—I hear in secluded circles that the famous Wagnerian conductor, Hans Richter, is resolved to bring out Liszt's oratorio, Christus, in London, next year—he (Richter), in concurrence with "C. A. B." &c., placing Liszt next to Wagner, as the greatest composer the world of music can reckon in its chronicles. Poor old England! How has she sinned to be thus visited with one Egyptian plague after another? Surely the Paradise ("lost," or "regained," I forget which), held over us, in terrorem, by Mr Cusins the Philharmonic conductor, is enough punishment for all the trespasses she may unconsciously have committed.—Yours, sir, with respect, Tewkesbury. THOMAS NOON GADD.

WALTER MACFARREN'S CONCERTS.

The third and last series of orchestral concerts projected by Mr. Macfarren took place on Saturday evening in St James's Hall, and was attended by the public in numbers sufficient to occupy every available seat. On this occasion were performed two overtures by the conductor—that which gives musical expression to the classic story of Hero and Leander, and that to Shakspere's King Henry V. Our opinion upon both has already been expressed, but we may add that their renewed hearing confirmed the favourable idea previously entertained. Mr Macfarren did well to give his more important works a place in the programme of these concerts, because their light has made possible a clearer perception of his ability. Amateurs have heard in quick succession a Concertstück for piano and orchestra, a symphony, and three overtures, all distinguished by fancy and skill. The result is that Mr Macfarren occupies a higher position, both as composer and conductor, than he ever filled before; and for such a result an earnest musician, proud of his art as well as of his own connection with it, regrets neither labour nor risk. Into the pecuniary results of the enterprise we have no right to inquire, but may recall the fact that there are gains which no money can adequately represent.

The programme of Saturday night opened with Mendelssohn's overture Ruy Blas, so played by the splendid orchestra as to obtain an enthusiastic encore. Such a success for an introductory piece, is rare, and goes to show that, despite the utterances of certain prophets who prophesy what they wish, Mendelssohn still holds his own amongst us. He will always do so. About that let lovers of the beautiful and the true make their minds the more easy the more hard words are flung up at him from the depths where whimsicality, conceit, and perversion have their abode. Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto followed the overture, and gave occasion for the appearance of Miss Cantelow as a solo performer. The young lady made a very hopeful essay. She plays with fluency and taste; her touch, normally delicate, can be powerful when occasion calls, and it is clear that she is capable of very intelligent study. We expect to hear of Miss Cantelow in the future as of an artist pressing onward to that grade in her profession which will satisfy her ambition and reward her perseverance. The audience witnessed her effort with marked sympathy; applauding every movement, and, at the close of the work, insisting upon a return to the platform. After Miss Cantelow came Herr Joachim, to play Beethoven's Violin Concerto. The great artist had an immense reception, as a matter of course, and discharged himself of his task with a more than commonly happy result even for him. Upon the merit of the performance we need not insist. There are certain truths which it is superfluous to demonstrate, and one of them is that Herr Joachim always plays the violin like a consummate master, who long ago rose above difficulties. The general rendering of Beethoven's noble work was good, and gave universal satisfaction. Spohr's symphony, known as The Power of Sound, with the two overtures already named, and some vocal pieces well sung by Miss Clara Samuel. completed the programme. All were given under Mr Walter Macfarren's very able direction, and the vast audience separated regretting, we may confidently assume, that the series of performances had come to an end.—D. T.

LIEGNITZ.—There will be no Silesian Musical Festival this year. Görlitz and Breslau have hitherto been the only two places by their size and situation considered suitable for such a gathering, but experience has proved it must not be held in the same town more frequently than at intervals of three years. Hopes were entertained that Liegnitz might prove available, and negotiations were begun for the hire of the large middle hall of the Industrial Exhibition Building, but they led to no satisfactory result, and consequently there will, as already stated, be no Silesian Musical Festival in 1882.

LONDON BALLAD CONCERTS.

The last concert of the present series (the sixteenth season) of Mr John Boosey's London Ballad Concerts, was given at St James's Hall on Wednesday morning, the programme being as interesting to the lovers of ballad, "whose name is legion," as any of the preceding. The singers were those great favourites, Mdme Antoinette Sterling, Miss Santley, and Miss Mary Davies, aided by a new comer, Miss Blandy; Messrs Edward Lloyd, Maybrick, and Santley, together with the South London Choral Society. The principal ballads were old favourites, and were received as old favourites by the audience, who willingly would have heard them all twice over. There was only one new song, and its name was "Gold," the composer being Mr Frank L. Moir and the singer Mr Maybrick, who did ample justice to it, receiving hearty applause and a "call" at its conclusion. A feature in the entertainment was the performance, by Mr J. T. Carrodus, of Ernst's grand fantasia on airs from Rossini's Otello, the difficulties of which were vanquished with ease by our great English violinist. Mr Carrodus subsequently played his own fantasia on Scotch airs, and both fantasias were ably accompanied by his son, Master Carrodus. Mr Sidney Naylor accompanied the vocal music. Mr Boosey announces two morning concerts to be given in the month of May.

MUSIC AT BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.

(From a Correspondent.)

The second grand concert of the Société Philharmonique was given on Wednesday evening, March 22nd. The programme consisted of Weber's overture to Euryanthe, creditably performed by the band under the direction of M. Picard, and "Poëme Symphonique d'après Shakspere, dirigé par l'auteur M. Alph. Duvernoy," which obtained the "prix du concours musical de la ville de Paris" in 1880. The principal parts were allotted to Mdme Brunet-Lafleur (Miranda), M. Bosquin (Ferdinand), M. Giraud (Prospéro), and M. Crépeaux (Caliban). All filled their parts well, and the concluding chorus, sung by the members of the Society, left nothing to be desired. Among the noticeable features was a duo between Miranda and Ferdinand, "Salut Déesse," and a romance for Miranda.

I don't know whether "La Tempête" of M. Duvernoy has been heard in England, but I would certainly recommend it to all good lovers of chamber-concert music.

M. Champagne terminates his run of opera comique et bouffe at the theatre on April 2nd, and gives dramas and vaudevilles during the month of April.

Last Tuesday a rather amusing scene occurred in the house. The first piece was a comedy in one act, Livre III., Chapitre 1er, and Massé's Galathée was announced for 8.45, to be followed by a highly popular pièce, entitled Le Lapin, in three acts, from the Theatre del' Athénée. The curtain went down at 8.40, but the audience got impatient when nine o'clock struck, and the stage-manager, coming forward, said: "Messieurs, Mesdames, je suis faché de vous dire que les musiciens ne sont pas encore arrivé, probablement rétenu par une repetition à l'Etablissement." A voice from the second tier vociferated: "Et Le Lapin; donnez nous Le Lapin." "Messieurs, Mesdames," answered the stage-manager, "Le Lapin n'est pas pret." "Alors il faut le faire sauté(r)!" said our friend above. The musicians arrived almost immediately, and Le Lapin was not "served up" till 11.15 p.m., when I left the audience to digest it. X. T. R.

Boulogne-sur-Mer, March 24, 1882.

ROME.—Donizetti's posthumous opera, Il Duca d'Alba, has been produced with success at the Teatro Apollo. Gayarre played the leading part. The first performance was attended by the Queen, the Ministers, the Diplomatic Body, and all the rank and fashion of the capital. When the Apollo closes, the Teatro Costanzi will reopen. The attractions promised are Robert le Diable, Faust, Rigoletto, Il Barbiere, and Jael—a new opera by Caronna. At the Teatro Quirino, Hervé's Petit Faust has been succeeded by Offenbach's Orphée aux Enfers.—Some time since, the Musical Society offered a prize of 5,000 francs for an oratorio, to be performed at their own expense; but not one of the works hitherto sent in have been considered up to the required standard, though two of the competitors, Collino and Falchi, professors at the Liceo Musicale, have been "honourably mentioned."

Digitized by Google

CHERUBINI.

(Continued from page 167.)

Cherubini a Pupil of Sarti's.—The Kind of Master Sarti was.—Sarti and Haydn.—Their Affection and Admiration of each other.—Cherubini becomes the anonymous Colleague of his Master in the Composition of the Latter's Operas.—Excellent Results of this practical Education.—Cherubini's first dramatic Essays.—His first Operas in Italy and their Success.

"Sarti's reputation was immense," says one of Cherubini's biographers; "his compositions were characterized as divine; every town in Italy wanted him to write something for it, and he was unable to satisfy the demands made on him from all quarters. The arrival of such a disciple as Cherubini, already a master in some branches of his art, and able to help in all, was, therefore, very opportune, for Sarti soon formed a correct estimate of Cherubini's intellectual powers. While fortifying him in the science of counterpoint, Sarti paid particular attention to developing in him an ideal style, the genuine source of the Beautiful and the Grand. Energetic and tender, Sarti was prone to exaltation, and, for the purpose of fostering this tendency, was accustomed to work at night, in a large unfurnished room illuminated only by the sombre and vacillating light of a lamp suspended from the ceiling. Such an arrangement was calculated to act, and, perhaps, acted but too strongly, on the imagination of the pupil. If, however, these material appliances for exciting inspiration were not imitated by him, they must have continued to convince him that art is something sacred, that the practice of it is sacerdotal, and that all inspiration emanates from a muse."*

Sarti was at this period about fifty years of age. Born at the end of 1729, and brought up in the school of the celebrated Father Martini, he made, when still very young, his earliest essays in the theatrical career with some works which achieved a very lively success. Scarcely had he attained his twenty-seventh year ere the reputation in which he was held caused him to be summoned to Copenhagen in the capacity of chapelmaster and professor of singing to the heir apparent of Denmark. While there he wrote several operas which, despite their being excellently performed, were received with great reserve. After a somewhat long absence he returned to Italy and resumed his active career in that country, but not so successfully as when he began. He then went to England, but could not get a single work brought out in London, and had to content himself with giving singing lessons and publishing for the harpsichord a collection of six sonatas, which were very highly esteemed. "There are some artists," says Prince Orloff in his essay on The History of Music in Italy, "who are fortunate only after having long laboured to become so, just as we find others who are so from the very first. Sarti's non-success was beneficial rather than injurious to him; it urged him on with the stimulus of glory. Had he been more fortunate, he might have sunk to sleep in the lap of prosperity. He went over to England, but at length scarcely had he returned to Italy, and as though that country, the country of his birth, had endowed him with those melodious gifts in which he always shone, he no sooner appeared at Venice than the operas he composed there were pronounced charming and delicious, people going even so far as to bestow on them the name of divine.† The Venetians, excellent judges, as we know, both of melody and harmony, were never tired of hearing his operas, or the managers of begging him to write new ones for them."

It is certain that from that moment Sarti's reputation went up immensely, not only in Italy, but abroad—a fact of no small significance at a period when Pergolese's native land was adorned with such illustrious artists as Cimarosa, Piccinni, Anfossi, Guglielmi, Salieri, Paisiello, and Gazzaniga. Some of Sarti's works achieved a brilliant success, and among them may be mentioned Didone, Giulio Sabino, Le Gelosie Villane, Le Nozze di Dorina, Idalide, Fra due Litiganti il Terzo gode, Armida, etc. He appears to have been no less lucky in the domain of sacred music, and some of his masses are considered works of high style and grand character. The very great esteem professed by Haydn for his talent suffices to give us a favourable idea of it, and, with regard to this subject, Frammery tells an interesting anecdote, which I think has never heretofore been quoted:—

"Haydn," (he says) "had often had Sarti's Giulio Sabino performed" (at Prince Esterhazy's) "Sarti being one of the masters whom he esteemed most highly, no doubt because the Italian's energetic and noble style possessed a greater analogy than that of any other composer to the nature of his own talent, and the work in question, one of Sarti's best and most vigorous, was also one of those which Haydn preferred. Being summoned on one occasion to a northern court to write operas, Sarti happened to pass near enough to Esterhazy to turn aside from his road, anxious to see a man whose numerous works, particularly his symphonies, had rendered him celebrated throughout Europe. Sarti wished to ask him for and offer him mutual friendship. He reached the Prince's palace towards the close of day and signified his desire to speak to the illustrious Haydn. 'For the moment,' he was told, 'that is impossible; the Master conducts the opera which is about to begin, for the Prince has just entered his box.' 'Could I not, at any rate, find a place in some corner of the house?' 'Oh! there is no difficulty about that; our orders are to show every respect to all strangers and find them places.' 'What is the opera to be performed?' 'Armida, the work which the Master likes better than any of his works.' This was a fresh incentive for Sarti, who knew none of Haydn's dramatic efforts; he begged to be located as near as possible to the orchestra, and his wish was gratified. During the first act, the beauty of the pieces which followed one another, astonished, transported, and enchanted him; he applauded with ecstasy; but, towards the end of the second act, he could restrain his feelings no longer; he rose in a kind of delirium, cleared, without asking the permission of those who occupied them, the benches which separated him from the orchestra, and fell round the neck of the surprised composer. 'It is Sarti who embraces you,' he exclaimed, 'Sarti who determined to see the great Haydn and admire his beautiful works but who never expected to hear anything as beautiful as this!' The Prince, who, from the interior of his box, had seen the extraordinary and irregular occurrence, without being able to understand at all what it meant, became alarmed and cried out: 'What is the matter, what is it, what has happened?' 'It is Giulio Sabino,' Haydn, seized with the same enthusiasm, replied in a loud voice: 'It is Giulio Sabino, it is the author of that superb music, it is Sarti come to see his good friend, Joseph!' And the two great men, the two friends, who then met for the first time, swore, as they embraced, mutual friendship similar to the esteem they entertained for each other."‡

(To be continued.)

* Miel: Notice sur la vie et les ouvrages de Cherubini.

† "Musica dicina," "musica dell' altro mondo," the Italians used to say

‡ Frammery: Notice sur Joseph Haydn.

DEATH'S FOUR VISITS.

Minnie, Minnie, baby dear!
I listen to thy wailing
Until my hope scarce conquers fear,
Each day thy strength is failing.
If Death, my Minnie, could but know
That he hath left thee only
Of all my kin to soothe my woe,
He'd turn from one so lonely!
The wind went sighing o'er the moor,
The thunder made a din,
And Death walked round about the
But would not enter in. [door,

Minnie, Minnie, dearest bride!
From hope's fond dream awaking,
To see thee dying at my side,
It moves my heart to breaking.
If I should lose my love, my wife,
How could I bear the morrow!
My soul grown blind to all, and life
But one enduring sorrow.
The wind went sighing o'er the moor,
The thunder made a din,
And Death walked round about the
But would not enter in. [door,

Minnie, Minnie, mother dear,
Wherefore speak of dying,
Who should tend thy nurslings here,
Thee in the churchyard lying?
Who should sing the song again
That pleased when vain all other?
Could thy love let us remain?
O take us with thee, mother!
The wind went sighing o'er the moor,
The thunder made a din,
And Death walked round about the
But would not enter in. [door

Minnie, Minnie, old yet dear,
With holy calm endeavour
Weaning thee from loved things here,
Hopeful as thou art ever.
On thy face a sunbeam falls,
Above a bird is singing,
Fancy deems a spirit calls,
Sees one heavenward winging.
The wind was silent on the moor,
The thunder hush'd its din,
Death paused a moment at the door,
And then he entered in.

* Copyright. GEORGE OAKLEY VANCE (Canon).

Mr George Werrenrath, who may be remembered a few years ago in London as an agreeable concert-singer, has lately been giving in the United States a series of "classical-song recitals," meeting with success on all occasions. Mr Werrenrath has made arrangements to give the same kind of entertainment in his native city, Copenhagen, and may possibly pay a visit to London previous to his return to the States.

Digitized by Google

WAIFS.

After giving a concert in Vienna, Sarasate left for Italy.

Mr Arthur Sullivan has left Cairo and is en route for Naples.

The Livadia Theatre, St. Petersburgh, has been burnt to the ground.

A new opera by Robert Stoepel is to be produced at Daly's Theatre, New York.

Der Flüchtling, comic opera by E. Kretschmer, has been produced in Regensburg.

Mercadante's Orazi e Curiazi has been very well received at the San Carlo, Naples.

The Sisters Mariani are engaged for two sacred concerts at the Teatro Manzoni, Milan.

Emilie Tagliana will shortly leave Berlin to fulfil an engagement at the Grand Opera, Paris.

Sig. Lebano, professor at the Naples Conservatory, has been giving successful concerts in Madrid.

The Theatre in Algiers has been burnt down; so has the Palais de Cristal Theatre, Marseilles.

Sig. Antonio Bazzini has been appointed director of the Royal Conservatory of Music, Milan.

Alona, romantic opera by W. Hill, will be produced in the autumn at Frankfort-on-the-Maine.

Wagner will, ere long, visit Athens, to make preparatory studies for a Greek opera, mythical, of course.

Joseph Dupont, the well-known Belgian conductor, has been created Knight of the Legion of Honour.

Masini (Verdi's tenor) has created a favourable impression at the Teatro Real, Madrid, as the Duke in Rigoletto.

A new School of Sacred Music for training organists and chapel-masters will be opened in Milan in November.

Sig. Giuseppe Peletti, musical instrument maker, has been created a Commander of the Order of the Italian Crown.

Anton Rubinstein's oratorio, Das Velorene Paradies, was given on the 10th ult., in St. Jacob's Church, Chemnitz.

Schumann's opera of Genoveva was performed at the Stadttheater, Augsburg, for the benefit of the conductor, Kleffel.

Professor Andrea Guarneri was successful candidate in the competition for conductorship of the Town-Band, Milan.

Leopold Auer, the violinist, has arrived in Berlin from St Petersburgh, and will shortly make a concert-tour in Holland.

The precocious little girl-violinist, Tua, was to play at the inaugural concert of a new Philharmonic Society in Genoa.

Stéphane, ex-tenor of the Paris Opéra-Comique, is at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, Brussels, where he made his début in Zampa.

Hector Berlioz's Damnation de Faust was recently performed by the Zurich "Harmonie," under the direction of Gustav Weber.

Ernestine Epstein, of the Stadttheater, Frankfort-on-the-Maine, is fulfilling an engagement at the Imperial Operahouse, Vienna.

Mad. Schröder-Hanfstängl, of the Theatre Royal, Stuttgart, began an engagement at the Operahouse, Frankfort, in the character of Norma.

Goldmark's Königin von Saba seems to have pleased in Rome. The composer was called on 33 times the first night.—(333 times.—Dr Blidge.)

Miss Henrietta Beebe, who is becoming a great favourite in our concert rooms, leaves next week for New York, to return, we trust, shortly.

Signora Silvia Della Valle, teacher of singing, Milan, has been made honorary member of the Istituto Academico Umberto I., Leghorn.

A performance of Prince Radziwill's "Faust Music" was lately given by the Romberg Vocal Association, under the direction of Schröder.

The Frithjof, of Ringler, recently brought out in Nuremberg, has more than confirmed the impression made by its first performance.

An International Congress, to consider the subject of Liturgical Singing, will be held in Arezzo on the 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, and 22nd September.

The death of Mr Beale, the chorus-master at Her Majesty's Theatre, took place, we are informed, on Sunday, March 19th, at St Thomas's Hospital.

In consequence of numerous complaints, a regulation has been published compelling ladies visiting the Theatre Royal, Wiesbaden, to take off their bonnets.

Clara Louise Kellogg was to join the Strakosch Opera Company about the beginning of April for a two months' season in the principal cities of the States.

The spring season of opera at the Academy of Music, New York, was inaugurated by Ambroise Thomas's Mignon, with Minnie Hauk as the adorable heroine.

When a man's chestnut hair begins to turn grey, it means that he is fifty. When it begins to turn black, that—he is sixty.—(Wonderful!—Dr Blidge.)

Johann Strauss has signed in Vienna a "conditional" agreement to give a three months' series of concerts, commencing on the 15th May, in the United States.

An unpublished composition of Benoit's Hymne aan de Schoonheid (Hymn to Beauty) will be performed at the approaching Grand Musical Festival in Brussels.

Mdlle Nevada, whom opera-goers remember as the heroine of Massenet's Roi de Lahore at Covent Garden, is now a great favourite at the Teatro Apollo, Rome.

It is said that the prime donne of the New Operahouse, New York, under the management of Mr Gye, will be Adelina Patti, Albani, Valleria, and Mdlle Van Zandt.

The Stadttheater, Coblentz, will remain closed this year, the Corporation declining to vote the funds for carrying out the necessary measures of precaution against fire.

The Italian operatic season at the San Carlo, Lisbon, was brought to a conclusion with a performance of Norma in which Mad. de Cepeda sustained the principal part.

Sig. Platania, director of the Conservatory, Palermo, has definitively accepted the post of chapelmaster at the Cathedral, Milan, and enters on his new duties at Easter.

The report that the Vice-Regal Operahouse, Cairo, will not open this year, on account of the Chamber of Delegates refusing to vote the necessary grant, is stated to be void of truth.

Mr Brinley Richards, who is on his "examination tour," for the Royal Academy of Music, gave, by request, a "Recital and Lecture" at Cardiff, on Monday last (March 27th).

Hans Schmitt, professor at the Conservatory, Vienna, has completed a four-act opera, Bruno, the libretto (by himself) founded on Rudolph Baumbach's Alpine Legend, Zlatorog.

The Emperor of Russia caused a telegram to be forwarded informing Maurice Dengremont's agent in Vienna that his Majesty desired to hear the young violinist on the 18th ult. at Gatschina.

Remenyi, the Hungarian violinist, included in the programme of a recent concert at Cleveland (U.S.) some "Wedding Music"—in three numbers for full orchestra—of his own composition.

Mr Clement Scott has gained the day against Mr Sampson. The judgment of the High Court was altogether in his favour, and forbids the idea of the defendant succeeding in an appeal to the House of Lords.—The London Figaro.

Hector Berlioz's Damnation de Faust was to be performed twice (afternoon and evening) yesterday, the 31st March, at Philadelphia (U.S.) by the New York Symphony and Oratorio Societies under the direction of Dr Damrosch.

A grand concert was given at the Cercle Philharmonique, Mentone, in honour of the arrival of Queen Victoria and the King and Queen of Saxony. Among the vocalists were Mad. Millié and the tenor, Nouvelli. Wroblewski was pianist.

Messrs John Brinsmead & Sons, of London, by special desire of the King of Portugal, have manufactured for the royal palace a magnificent grand oblique pianoforte, in an ebonized case decorated in the Adams style, with cupids and wreaths of flowers. It is seven and a quarter octaves in compass, and contains all Messrs Brinsmead's latest improvements.

Cavaliero Schira, the accomplished composer, is hard at work on an opera-bouffe bearing the title of The Isle of Beauty, the libretto of which is by Mr Desmond L. Ryan. The acute sense of humour the popular maestro is well known to possess will stand him in good stead, and we look forward with great curiosity to the production of a work from his pen so opposite to its antecedents.

Among the many operatic libretti sent in to the French composer, Adolph Adam, in the hope that their perusal might inspire him with a desire to set them to music, was one—the work of a youthful poet unknown to fame—bearing the attractive title of Eve. Having looked over the text, which proved to be utterly devoid of literary or dramatic merit, Adam very promptly returned it to the author, with the following:—"Very much honoured sir,—To my lively regret I find it quite impossible to avail myself of the accompanying libretto, with an offer of which your great goodness has prompted you to favour me. For, believe me, should Adam allow himself to be tempted by this particular Eve, the public would most assuredly undertake, with surprising spontaneity, the part of the Serpent—at least, as far as hissing is concerned. Disastrous precedent warns me against a revival of so sinister a combination; wherefore I hasten to send back your remarkable production, with every assurance of my perfect consideration.—ADAM."

FOR MUSIC.*

It's no use you courting me, Robin Adair,
Now it's no good you following me,
I can't love you, Rob, for I've promised to wed
With my laddie, who sails o'er the sea.
'Twas in his last letter he said he'd return,
That he'd siller enough for us both,
While he sails o'er the sea with heart true to me,
Do you think I'll be breaking my troth.

There's Maggie, she's dying of love for you now,
She will wed you at once I am sure,
And though you have land and a snug little farm,
She would love you, Rob, if you were poor.
Then speed on your wooing, do, there's a good lad,
You will make Maggie happy for life,
For love soon will grow, she's a brave lass I know,
She will make you a good little wife.

Now, Rob! if my heart was once false to its love
Would to yours it more faithfully cling,
If I once could betray a lad's fond trusting heart,
Could such love ever happiness bring?
No—so it is well that we both say good-bye,
It is best, lad, for me and for you,
When you take Meg to wife, I'll see you once more,
Then we'll meet, Rob, as friends firm and true.

Copyright. ALICE MOWBRAY.

LEIPSIC.—Max Staegemann, new manager of the Stadttheater, has left Berlin and taken up his permanent residence in this town.

VIENNA.—After an unusually long interval between the last rehearsal and the first performance, in consequence of the sudden hoarseness of Mdme Pauline Lucca, who was to play Gretchen, Arrigo Boito's Mefistofele has been produced at the Imperial Opera-house. On the first night, however, Mdme Lucca's unlucky star was again in the ascendant, for about the middle of the opera the lady was so indisposed that she was compelled to retire, and Mdme Kupfer finished the part for her. Herr Rokitansky was Mefistofele, and Herr Müller, Faust, both acquitting themselves admirably. The representatives of the minor characters were equally zealous; the same is true of the chorus and band, while Herr Jahn is entitled to high praise for the manner in which the work has been put on the stage. Mdme Friedrich-Materna embarks on the 11th inst. for America, to take part in the grand Musical Festivals, which, under Mr Theodor Thomas as conductor, are to be held in New York, Cincinnati, and Chicago. The principal works performed will be by the great German masters, and will include Beethoven's Mass and J. S. Bach's Passion Music according to St Matthew. At her first appearance, Mdme Materna will sing the great air from Fidelio. On the 6th June she will start on her return voyage, and then proceed to Bayreuth, where she will co-operate in the Parsifal performances.

Advertisements.

Just Published.

DANSE PYRRHIQUE.

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By

BROWNLOW BAKER.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Where may be obtained, Composed by Brownlow Baker, "Bourrée," in E flat, 4s.; "Memory" (Romance), 3s.

PLAYED BY MDLLE KREBS.

LISZT'S "TARANTELLE DE LA MUETTE DE PORTICI" ("MASANIELLO"). 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

CHAPPELL'S VOCAL LIBRARY OF PART-SONGS, &c.

		Composed or Arranged by	Price
1.	Dulce Domum. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
2.	Down among the Dead Men. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
3.	The Girl I've left behind me. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
4.	British Grenadiers. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
5.	Long live England's Future Queen. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
6.	My task is ended (Song and Chorus). A.T.B.B.	... Balfe	4d.
7.	Thus spake one Summer's Day. S.A.T.B.	... Abt	2d.
8.	Soldiers' Chorus. T.T.B.B.	Gounod	4d.
9.	The Kermesse (Scene from Faust)	,,	6d.
10.	Up, quit thy bower. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	4d.
11.	Maidens, never go a-wooing. S.S.T.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
12.	Fagot Binders' Chorus	Gounod	4d.
13.	Sylvan Hours (for Six Female Voices)	Joseph Robinson	6d.
14.	The Gipsy Chorus	Balfe	4d.
15.	Ave Maria	Arcadelt	1d.
16.	Hark! the Herald Angels sing. S.A.T.B.	Mendelssohn	1d.
17.	England Yet (Solo and Chorus). S.A.T.B.	Jules Benedict	2d.
18.	The Shepherd's Sabbath Day. S.A.T.B.	J. L. Hatton	2d.
19.	Thoughts of Childhood. S.A.T.B.	Henry Smart	2d.
20.	Spring's Return. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
21.	An old Church Song. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
22.	Sabbath Bells. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
23.	Serenade. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
24.	Cold Autumn Wind. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
25.	Orpheus with his Lute. S.S.S.	Bennett Gilbert	2d.
26.	Lullaby. S.A.A.	,,	1d.
27.	This is my own, my native land. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
28.	March of the Men of Harlech. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
29.	God save the Queen. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
30.	Rule, Britannia. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
31.	The Retreat. T.T.B.B.	L. de Rille	2d.
32.	Lo! morn is breaking. S.S.S.	Oberubini	2d.
33.	We are Spirits. S.S.S.	G. A. Macfarren	4d.
34.	Market Chorus (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	Auber	4d.
35.	The Prayer (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
36.	The Water Sprites. S.A.T.B.	Kücken	2d.
37.	Eve's glittering Star. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
38.	When first the Primrose. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
39.	O Dewdrop bright. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
40.	Sanctus from the Messe Solennelle. S.A.T.B.	Rossini	4d.
41.	Nine Kyries, Ancient and Modern	,,	2d.
42.	Sun of my soul. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	2d.
43.	'Twas fancy, and the ocean's spray. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
44.	A Prayer for those at Sea. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
45.	O Thou whose power (Prayer from Mose in Egitto)	Rossini	2d.
46.	The Guard on the Rhine. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
47.	The German Fatherland. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
48.	The Lord is my Shepherd (Quartet). S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
49.	Te Deum in F	Jackson	2d.
50.	Te Deum in F	Nares	2d.
51.	Charity (La Carita). S.S.S.	Rossini	4d.
52.	Cordelia. A.T.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	4d.
53.	I know. S.A.T.B.	Walter Hay	2d.
54.	Chorus of Handmaidens (from Fridolin)	A. Randegger	4d.
55.	The Offertory Sentences	Edmund Rogers	4d.
56.	The Red Cross Knight	Dr. Callcott	2d.
57.	The Clough and the Crow	Sir H. R. Bishop	3d.
58.	The "Carnovale"	Rossini	2d.
59.	Softly falls the moonlight	Edmund Rogers	4d.
60.	Air by Himmel	Henry Leslie	2d.
61.	Offertory Sentences	E. Sauerbrey	4d.
62.	The Resurrection	C. Villiers Stanford	6d.
63.	Our Boys (new Patriotic Song) H. J. Byron and W. M. Lutz		4d.
64.	The Men of Wales	Brinley Richards	2d.
65.	Dame Durden	...	1d.
66.	A little Farm well tilled	Hook	1d.
67.	There was a simple maiden	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
68.	Fair Hebe	,,	1d.
69.	Once I loved a maiden fair	,,	1d.
70.	The jovial man of Kent	,,	1d.
71.	The oak and the ash	,,	1d.
72.	Heart of Oak	,,	1d.
73.	Come to the sunset tree	W. A. Philpott	4d.
74.	May. S.A.T.B.	W. F. Banks	2d.
75.	Pure, lovely innocence (Il Roi de Lahore—Chorus for Female Voices)	G. Massenet	4d.
76.	A Love Idyl. S.A.T.B.	E. R. Terry	2d.
77.	Hail to the Woods! A.T.T.B.	J. Yarwood	2d.
78.	Near the town of Taunton Dean	Thomas J. Dudeney	2d.
79.	Our merry boys at sea	J. Yarwood	2d.
80.	The Shepherd's Farewell. S.A.T.B.	Berlioz	3d.
81.	When the sun sets o'er the mountains (Il Demonio)	A. Rubinstein	3d.
82.	Hymn of Nature	Beethoven	3d.
83.	Michaelmas Day (Humorous Part Songs, No. 1)	Walter Maynard	4d.
84.	Sporting Notes (Humorous Part Songs, No. 2)	Walter Maynard	4d.
85.	Austrian National Hymn	Haydn	4d.

LONDON:

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND STREET, W.

CITY BRANCH—14 & 15, POULTRY.

Digitized by Google

NEW VOLUMES of the ROYAL SERIES.

THE SONGS OF SCANDINAVIA
AND NORTHERN EUROPE.

EIGHTY-THREE NATIONAL AND POPULAR SONGS.

THE SONGS OF EASTERN EUROPE.

ONE HUNDRED VOLKSLIEDER OF AUSTRIA, HUNGARY, BOHEMIA, SERVIA, &c.

WITH ENGLISH WORDS BY CLARA KAPPEY.

EDITED BY

J. A. KAPPEY.

Price 2s. 6d. each, paper covers; 4s. cloth.

"Messrs Boosey & Co. have done good service not only to amateurs but to art, by including in their series of volumes of national melodies 'The Songs of Scandinavia' and 'The Songs of Eastern Europe.' The first-named contains eighty-three examples; and the second, a hundred. We need not insist upon the importance of collections like these, whatever the country they represent; but we must say that no musical library is complete without the songs of Scandinavia and Eastern Europe. The editor, Mr J. A. Kappey, has taken great pains to secure melodies of a genuinely representative character, and at a time when attention is becoming more and more directed to folk-tunes as a source of new thematic ideas, the volumes in question are of peculiar value. They have our most hearty commendation, the 'Songs of Eastern Europe' more especially, since the volume contains, besides examples of Liszt, Chopin, and other masters, a very valuable collection of volkslieder from the hitherto untouched wealth of the Austrian provinces."—Daily Telegraph.

"Messrs Boosey & Co. have published two additional volumes of their National Songs, which appear likely to be the most interesting of the series. We know little of the rich repertory of Scandinavian Songs, and Mr and Miss Kappey, the editors of these books, are to be thanked for introducing some of the best specimens to public notice. Five of the Russian songs are so old as to be traditional; and in the series are to be found a beautiful Cossack lullaby by one Bachmetieff, a gipsy song by Lvoff, and several songs by Warlamoff. These and the Polish songs (all of which are traditional) may be considered among the most interesting items of a small but acceptable collection. Two ancient Lithuanian songs, a couple of Finnish, and four ancient Norwegian melodies, will likewise be found in the book. The majority of the Swedish songs are by Lindblad, that prolific song writer, who died in 1864. Tradition says that the old melody of 'The Beggar Boy' was once sung in the days when she was a poor child by the distinguished artist now known as Mdme Christine Nilsson. Included in the Danish songs is the traditional 'Dannebrog,' the music of which is attributed to one 'Bay.' It would be interesting to inquire the foundation for this statement, as the origin of the Danish National Anthem was generally understood to be unknown. The tradition of the 'Dannebrog Banner,' which, in 1719, fell down from heaven to bring victory to the Danish arms, is duly recorded in a footnote. Most of the Dutch songs given date back to the sixteenth century; and there are besides three songs by W. F. G. Nicolai, and one Flemish song. Altogether eighty-three of the national songs of northern Europe are included in this valuable and interesting book. In future editions a larger preface or more footnotes, giving further particulars of the old songs whose history is known, would be welcome. Equally interesting are the songs of Eastern Europe, recently issued by Messrs Boosey, and likewise edited by Mr and Miss Kappey. Among the thirty-four Austrian songs, the large majority are volkslieder, and they include Tyrolean, Styrian, and Polish songs, two of them by Chopin. These are followed by twenty-three characteristic specimens of Hungarian songs, giving a very fair idea of the peculiarities of Hungarian music, and comprising modern songs by Liszt, and some traditional songs of Bosnia, Moravia, and Dalmatia. The first of the Bohemian songs is the 'War-song of the Hussites,' once, it is believed, the national song of the country. A few specimens of Servian, Swiss, Greek, and even Turkish melodies. The last are very peculiar; and he peculiar intervals common to this and other Eastern music are claimed by some to have been handed down direct from the music of the ancient Hebrews."—Figaro.

LONDON: BOOSEY & CO., 295, REGENT STREET.

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, & SPALDING, at 3 and 5, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, April 1, 1882.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 60.—No. 14. SATURDAY, APRIL 8, 1882. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Under the immediate patronage of
Her Most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN and the Royal Family.
President—The Right Hon. the Earl of DUDLEY.
Principal—Professor MACFARREN, Mus. D., Cantab.

The EASTER TERM will commence on MONDAY, April 24th, and terminate on SATURDAY, July 22nd.

Candidates for admission (bringing music they can perform) may be examined at the Institution on Saturday, April 22nd, at Eleven o'clock.

By order, JOHN GILL, Secretary.

Royal Academy of Music,
Tenterden Street, Hanover Square, W.

PROFESSOR MICHAEL BERGSON (late Principal at the Conservatoire of Geneva) has the honour to inform his Friends and Pupils that his ANNUAL CONCERT will take place in the month of MAY, at ST GEORGE'S HALL. Particulars will be shortly issued. The following Compositions by Professor BERGSON will be introduced: "Concerto Symphonique," Op. 62, played with immense success by the Composer, at his Concerts in Paris, Geneva, and London; also his "Grande Polonaise Héroïque," for violin, as played by MM. Pollitzer, Castall, and Herr Joseph Ludwig, with distinguished success.

ST. GEORGE'S HALL.

PROFESSOR MICHAEL BERGSON'S GRAND ANNUAL CONCERT.—Prof. M. BERGSON begs to announce that the following popular Compositions of his will be performed early in May, viz.: "Il Ritorno," Rondo-Valse, sung by Miss Berta Foresta; "The Better World," sung by Miss Jessica O'Brien; "Serenade Moresque," sung by Signor Ria, tenor, San Carlo, Naples; Sacred Song, "At morn I beseech Thee," sung by Miss Alice Fairman; "The Two Hearts," sung by Mrs Furlong. Signor Ria will sing on this occasion, Ascher's popular Romance, "Alice, where art thou?" and also Mr W. H. Holmes's Song, "Memories Sweet and Sad" (the poetry by Mrs M. A. Baines).

SCHUBERT SOCIETY. President—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT. Founder and Director—Herr SCHUBERTH. Sixteenth Season, 1882. Members are informed that the Second Concert (70th since formation of Society—Schumann's Compositions in first part of programme), will take place at the Langham Hall, on Wednesday, 19th April. Ladies and Gentlemen desirous of joining the Society may have prospectus and full particulars on application to H. G. HOPPER, Hon. Sec., 244, Regent Street, W.

LONDON CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.—Principal—Mr LANSDOWNE COTTELL.

The Directors invite attention to the recent extension and increased accommodation, residential and otherwise.

Fees from Two Guineas per term, residential from Fourteen Guineas, inclusive of the Musical and Fine Art Lectures.

Free Tuition is awarded to talented young artists unable to pay fees by fund granted for this purpose.

Prospectus (one stamp), Hon. Sec., 6, Tavistock Square.

MR and Mdme BODDA'S (Miss LOUISA PYNE) ACADEMY FOR SINGING, Operatic and Miscellaneous. "BONALLY," 85 and 87, Cambridge Gardens, Notting Hill. Professional and Amateur. In and Out-Door Students. Studies—Singing (Private Lessons), Elocution, Piano, Deportment, Choral Practice, Italian. Prospectuses as above, or Mr STEDMAN, 12, Berners Street.

TO CONCERT GIVERS, &c.

THE LONDON ART GALLERIES, 23, BAKER STREET, W.—These Galleries are available in the Evenings for High-Class Chamber Concerts, Rehearsals, Readings, &c., for which their acoustic properties are eminently suited. For terms address—ADAM F. HARDY, Secretary, as above.

GERMAN CONDUCTOR, CHOIRMASTER, PROF. OF MUSIC.

A GERMAN Professor of Music from the Academy of Music, Berlin, pupil of Kullak, Dorn, Wüerst, seeks for a good Engagement as CONDUCTOR and (besides) as CHOIRMASTER. He is also an excellent and much-quested Pianist, Singing and Compositions Master of good name. Address send to Berlin, Post Office, No. 60, sub. A. B. F. G.

"ANGELS' FOOD."

SIGNOR SCHIRA'S admired Song (for Tenor or Soprano), "ANGELS' FOOD" (Poetry by RITA), is published, price 4s., by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.—An Harmonium Part to the above Song is also published, price 1s.

REMOVAL.

SIGNOR BEVIGNANI begs to announce his REMOVAL to No. 25, UPPER BEDFORD PLACE, RUSSELL SQUARE, W.C.

ORGANIST WANTED for the Church of the United Parishes of St Andrew-by-the-Wardrobe and St Anne Blackfriars. Salary £40 per annum. Applications, with Testimonials, to be forwarded before the 22nd instant, either to Mr F. W. LEWIS FARRAR, Vestry Clerk of St Andrew-by-the-Wardrobe, No. 2, Wardrobe Place, Doctors Commons; or to Mr DANIEL STOCK, Vestry Clerk of St Anne Blackfriars, No. 171, Queen Victoria Street.

ORGAN FOR SALE.

CHURCH ORGAN (small) FOR SALE. Two Rows of Keys, 9 Stops, 2½ Octaves of Pedals. At present in use, but can be seen any time by applying to Mr GARSIDE, 159, Graham Road, Hackney.

"THE MESSAGE."

MR VERNON RIGBY will sing BLUMENTHAL'S admired Song, "THE MESSAGE," at Plymouth, April 12; Wolverhampton, April 17; and at the Royal Albert Hall, April 22nd.

"THE MESSAGE."

MR CHARLES CHILLEY will sing BLUMENTHAL'S admired Song, "THE MESSAGE," at the Concert to be given by the Civil Service Vocal Union, on Wednesday evening, April 19.

NEW SONGS, with Words and Music by H. C. HILLER.

"IN THE HAVEN" (Tenor) Mr ABERCROMBIE'S new Song ... ... 4s.
"THY DEAR NAME" (Tenor or Soprano), Mr ABERCROMBIE'S new Song 4s.
"SWEETEST SLUMBER" (Tenor or Sop.), Mr FAULKNER LEIGH'S new Song 4s.
"THE QUEEN'S SHILLING" (Baritone), Mr HORSCROFT'S new Song ... 4s.
"THE BORDER RAIDER" (Baritone), Mr CHAPLIN HENRY'S new Song... 4s.
Sent post free for 24 Stamps each.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

The only Gold Medal for Wind Instruments with Keys, in the Paris Universal Exhibition of 1878, was unanimously awarded by the Jury to Messrs P. GOUMAS & Co., for the fine quality of tone and finish of their Instruments.

SPECIAL MANUFACTORY OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FOR CLARIONETS, FLUTES, PICCOLOS, OBOES, BASSOONS, COR ANGLAIS, FLAGEOLETS, AND SAXOPHONES.

P. GOUMAS & Co.

(Late BUFFET, CRAMPON & Co.),
Established 1830.

Nine Prize Medals have been awarded to GOUMAS & Co. for general excellence and improvements in the Manufacture of Wind Instruments with Keys.

Manufacturers of all kinds of Wood Wind Instruments for Military Bands, Musical Instrument Makers to Her Majesty's Army and Navy, and to the Armies, Navies, and Conservatoires of France, Belgium, Italy, Russia, Austria, Spain, America, &c.

Manufactory at Mantes (Seine et Oise), France. Paris: Passage du Grand Cerf, 18 et 20.

LONDON: 39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET.
Price Lists sent free on application.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF

ALL KINDS OF MUSIC STRINGS FOR ALL MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Sole Depôt for Signor ANDREA RUFFINI'S (of Naples) Celebrated Strings for Soloists, manufactured by him on a system invented by Mons. J. B. VUILLAUME, of Paris.

Sole Agent for CHARLES ALBERT'S (of Philadelphia, U.S.) new Patent Improved Chin Rest; also his improved String Gauge.

39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, W.
Price Lists free on application.

All kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner on powerful machines made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

Digitized by Google

Published This Day.

NOT ONCE OR TWICE.

Song.
Words by DOROTHY BLOMFIELD.
Music by
F. NEALE
(Composer of "Grandfather's Chair," "My Love and I").
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

THE BETTER WORLD.

Words by Mrs. M. A. BAINES.
Music by
MICHAEL BERGSON.
Composed expressly for and sung by Mdme MARIE ROZE; sung also by Mdmes SANDERINI, DE VANNEY, and Miss JESSICA O'BRIEN.
Price 4s.
London: STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

Just Published.

ALICE.

TRANSCRIPTION FOR THE
FLUTE AND PIANOFORTE,
OF ASCHER'S POPULAR ROMANCE.
By
J. HARRINGTON YOUNG.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

UNITY.

A NEW MASONIC SOLO AND QUARTET.
Dedicated by express permission to His Royal Highness PRINCE PATRICK, DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, and all true and accepted Masons.
By
RICHARD F. HARVEY,
Organist of Unity Lodge 238 (Dublin).
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

POLKA ET VALSE.

POUR LE PIANOFORTE.
No. 1. FOLICHONNE POLKA ... ... Price 4s.
No. 2. SOUVENIR DE JEUNESSE VALSE ... ... Price 4s.
Composées par
BENTAYOUX.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

L'AMANTE.

VALZER, PER VOCE DI MEZZO-SOPRANO.
Musica di
G. MURATORI
(The English Version of the words by MARIA X. HAYES).
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

THE LOVERS' WALTZ

(L'AMANTE).
FOR THE PIANOFORTE.
By
G. MURATORI.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

THE STUDENT'S DREAM.

PRELUDE FOR THE PIANOFORTE AND HARMONIUM, OR ORGAN.
Composed by
G. GARIBOLDI.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"PARADISE LOST." An Oratorio. Composed by ANTON RUBINSTEIN, on the Poem of MILTON. The English version of the words by JOSIAH PITTMAN. Paris: GÉRARD, 2, Rue Scribe.

NEW SONG BY J. L. HATTON.

THE GOOD SHIP ROVER. Words by JOHN STEWART. Music by J. L. HATTON. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

THE VOICE AND SINGING.

BY
ADOLFO FERRARI.
THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING,
Price 12s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

VOCAL EXERCISES COMPOSED BY FRANK MORI.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.
N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by the late FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

New Edition of "LE PETIT SOLFEGE."

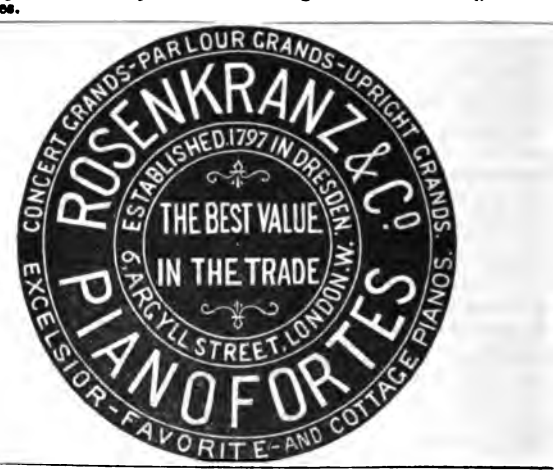
LE PETIT SOLFEGE. Vingt Solfèges pour Voix de Mezzo-Soprano. Par JOS. CURCI. Price 6s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.
"This work for educational purposes will be found of inestimable value, since it is one of the very few which confines itself to the cultivation of the middle of the voice; and whilst the phrases are admirably adapted to develop the breathing powers and volume of the voice, the melodies are so exquisitely harmonised that they must prove of great benefit in the improvement of the taste and ear of a student in singing."—Pictorial World.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of
A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR
THE VOICE.
By T. A. WALLWORTH.
A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdme Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklein, and other successful Vocalists.
Full Music Size, price 7s.
London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.
For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis, of Basingstoke, says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.



LA POMPA DI FESTA. Grande Marche, pour Piano, à Quatre Mains. Par IGNACE GIBSONE. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"HER VOICE."

"HER VOICE." IGNACE GIBSONE'S popular Song (poetry by "A Soldier's Daughter"), sung by Mdme ENRIQUEZ, is published, price 4s., by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NEW VOCAL QUARTET.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" Arranged for Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, and Bass by G. B. ALLEN. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

THE DRAMA IN PORTMAN-MARKET.

Another MINOR RECORD.

(Continued from page 191.)

As regarded the new and original dramas promised in the introductory address, it was soon understood that the lessee had accepted three hitherto unacted plays, the respective claims of which would be tested as speedily as possible. The first of these, Videna, a drama in five acts, founded on a legend in Geoffrey of Monmouth, and written by Mr John A. Heraud, was given on Monday, the 23rd of October. The subject was found overcharged with horrors, and the action, especially in the last two acts, to be impeded by the dialogue, which was much too verbose; but, thanks to the very fine acting of the Wallacks and Miss Cleveland, and to the beauty of the mounting, the play—in itself by no means devoid of interest—obtained a certain measure of success. The second, Love and Loyalty, by Mr Robson, was tried on Monday, the 13th of November. The scene of this play was laid in the reign of Charles II., and contained one very effective and poetical situation. This was where the hero, Marston, son of a cavalier, who had fallen at Naseby, returns to his old home—now in the possession of a Roundhead, whose daughter, Juliet, he loves—and, standing on his ancestral hearth, appeals to his father's portrait, when taunted by the old man with his poverty and consequent unworthiness to be her suitor. The scenes were too prolonged, and the dialogue needed much compression, but the characters generally were drawn with considerable skill. That of Marston had a marked individuality, and, being exactly fitted to Mr Wallack's style of acting, secured the requisite success of the piece.

The management now reverted to the Elizabethan drama, and revived the Venice Preserved, of Otway, in which the lessee played Jaffier, and his wife, Belvidera, with all their accustomed excellence. A new candidate for popular favour, endowed with many personal advantages, Mr H. G. Mapleson, showed promise in the part of Pierre. Mr Nelson Lee's Christmas pantomime, Young Norval on the Grampian Hills, was produced on a scale of splendour, at that time, unusual in a suburban theatre, and in other respects fully answered its purpose as a temporary source of attraction. The third of the new plays, promised at the beginning of the season, was produced early in February. This turned out to be the old story of the Man in the Iron Mask, dramatized, in five acts, with much taste and skill, by Mr Bayle Bernard, under the title of Leon of the Iron Mask. The extreme length of the stage was made the most of by the scenic artist, Mr Shalders, who achieved wonders in a representation of the interior of the Louvre. Shakspere's Winter's Tale was revived in a very elegant and elaborate manner on Monday the 5th of March. Much new business was introduced, and the whole revival wore an air of originality. Mr Wallack proved very effective in the part of Leontes, and the Hermione of Mrs. Wallack was a fine classical rendering of the part. The statue scene was greatly applauded. This was the last "circumstance" of Mr William Wallack's management, which terminated at the end of the month. The encouragement bestowed upon his first season was deceptive. The second showed a loss to the treasury, which left him no choice but to relinquish an undertaking which, interesting though it might be to the better class of playgoers, had proved, in a financial sense, so utterly unproductive. His gallant effort, however, to establish a taste for the Poetic Drama, in the north-west suburb of the metropolis, will always remain among the most cherished traditions of the obscure little theatre in Church Street.

Mr Henry Meadows ventured on a spring season, at Easter, and in October, a former lessee, Mr John Douglass, returned to his old quarters, bringing with him Mr Charles Freer, as stage-manager, and a re-arrangement—which meant a reduction—of prices. Miss Edith Heraud appeared as Julia, in The Hunchback, and Mr James Anderson played a welcome engagement, on alternate nights with an English opera company, which included the names of George Perren and Hamilton Braham. Mr Douglass, who was a very good actor, of the T. P. Cooke type, appeared as Ben the Boatswain, in February, and Miss Glyn gave a reading of Macbeth, in March. Mr E. C. Seaman next leased the house, at Easter, 1856, with a company containing the worthy names of Mr Stuart, Mr Belford, Mr Lewis Ball, Miss Anderton, and Miss Hughes—now Mrs Gaston Murray. Mr Charles Mathews and Miss Fitzpatrick were playing at different times in April, and Mr and Mrs Leigh Murray, Mr Edward and Mr Gaston Murray, Flexmore, Sam Cowell, and Miss Wadham assisted at Miss Hughes' benefit on the 24th of that month. The enterprise having turned out a failure, Mr Seaman was replaced by a Mr Bigwood. During June we find artists like Miss Glyn, Miss Oliver, and Mr James Johnstone lending their services for benefits, but, generally speaking, the entertainments just now were of a very inferior kind. Mr James Anderson again "starred," in conjunction with Miss Agnes Elsworthy, for a week in September, and Mr Bigwood retired from the direction at Michaelmas. The theatre remained closed till Boxing-night, when it was re-opened by the well-known actor, Mr Emery, with Shirley Brooks's drama, The Creole, and a pantomime, Tit, Tat, Toe, by Francisco Frost. Buckstone's Isabelle was revived early in January, 1857, with Miss Clifford, from the Princess's, in the title rôle, and a domestic drama, Ruth Oakley, by Messrs Harris and Williams, with a plot resembling, in many particulars, that of Kotzebue's Stranger, was produced, in which Mr Emery's rough, but natural acting, as a blacksmith, created some attention. A version of Uncle Tom's Cabin served to introduce Miss Cordelia Howard, an American child-actress of much aptitude, as Eva. An amateur, Sir William Don, made his first appearance in London as the Bailie, in Rob Roy, in March. Mr Emery's tenancy, though meritorious, was not more prosperous than those of his predecessors, and the Marylebone again changed hands at Easter, this time opening under Mr Edgar and Mr Elliston with The Marble Heart. Mrs Emma Waller played Pauline, in The Lady of Lyons, for the benefit of the latter, on Monday, June the 16th. Mr and Mrs Clarence Holt made a praiseworthy fight for legitimacy, with rather limited resources, in the ensuing winter, opening with Wilkins's Civilization. Westland Marston's Strathmore and Lovell's Provost of Bruges were revived in January, 1858. Unfortunately, another failure had to be recorded, and early in the spring the house was once more in the market.

The fortunes of the Marylebone at this period had probably reached their lowest ebb. That the house could boast of the longest stage and the shortest seasons of any theatre in London was a maxim laid down in every greenroom. As a theatrical property, the estimation in which it was held was so low that no speculator would care to touch it. At this crisis in its fate, however, Mr. J. H. Arnold Cave stepped in, and was daring enough to try his chance on a field which had hitherto proved fatal to so many. Commencing his season on Whit-Monday, the 24th of May, 1858, he managed to keep open house for upwards of two years without once closing its doors. That the Marylebone Theatre now took high ground, or that it did much for art cannot with truth be said. But it may at any rate be conceded that Mr Cave succeeded in paying his way, and that,—better still,—he succeeded in making his way pay him. The nightly programme at first was that of a mere theatre of varieties, and based on the music-hall principle, but gradually the drama—such as it was—again predominated, and later on actors of acknowledged reputation could now and again be seen here. Mr George Belmore and Mr Henry Forrester, then mere beginners, about this date worked their way to the front on these boards. Mr Townshend, formerly member for Greenwich, essayed to play Shylock, with the aid of Miss Anderton as Portia, in November of this year, and at Christmas Mr Frederic Fenton painted the scenery for Mr Hazlewood's pantomime of Goody Goose, in which the lessee filled the part of Greenheart. Mr Edward Stirling's Aline, the Rose of Killarney; Belphegor, the Mountebank; The Corsican Brothers, and Don Cæsar de Bazan were given in the earlier months of 1859, and for Mr Cave's benefit, on the 16th of June, the nautical drama, My Poll and my Partner Joe, together with Shield's old ballad opera, Rosina. Sheridan Knowles's William Tell was tried in September, and Mr N. T. Hicks, so famous in his own line, reappeared in November. Mr Charles Dillon returned in the following March, and Mr George Belmore and Mr W. Shalders in April. The house closed for cleaning and repairs at the end of July, but re-opened in the middle of August. A very clever boy, Master Percy Roselle, subsequently remembered as the juvenile hero of King Pippin, and other Drury Lane pantomimes, came out in November. Mr J. F. Young sustained the leading parts at this date. Miss Marriott enacted Romeo, Hamlet, and Rosalind in April, 1861, and Mdme Celeste fulfilled an engagement in the July of that year, performing in The Abbé Vaudreuil, and in Bayle Barnard's St Mary's Eve.

(To be continued.)

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

In the just-issued prospectus of the season 1882, a word of three short syllables follows the familiar heading, and seems to indicate the beginning of a new phase in Mr Gye's enterprise, which is no longer the "Royal Italian Opera" simply, but the "Royal Italian Opera (Limited)." Insignificant as the change appears to the eye, in realization it will be immense, since it implies an entire remodelling of Italian opera affairs in London, and their connection not only with the provinces, but with the United States of America. This is not the place to discuss the project once more put forward by Lord Lathom, Count Gleichen, Mr Ernest Gye, and their fellows in the direction of the proposed new company. Though associated with art, it is a financial enterprise, which moneyed men amongst the public will examine on its merits, and accept or reject as they see fit. From a musical point of view we may, however, suggest that it seems highly desirable to consolidate the interests of Italian opera. When the Roman Empire became weak, it wisely withdrew its troops from outlying regions, and massed them for the defence of those nearer the heart of the State. In like manner, Anglo-Italian opera is sagaciously endeavouring to rally its entire remaining force within the walls of Covent Garden, buying up Mr Mapleson, and giving him a subordinate command on the other side of the Atlantic, at the same time taking care, as far as may be, that Her Majesty's Theatre shall not fall into the hands of anybody disposed to perpetuate a condition of divided interests. The move, should the public make up the £200,000 asked for, will, no doubt, give renewed vitality to a languishing cause. It will illustrate the fable of the old man and the bundle of sticks; it may even delude some people into the belief that Italian opera is destined to take deeper root amongst us, and flourish even more exceedingly than in years gone by. But nobody acquainted with the conditions of modern musical and social life runs a risk of being so deceived. Italian opera has lost its peculiar prestige once and for ever. It will die hard, and may not die at all, but it must take account of rival enterprises, in some respects according better with the taste of the day, and certain, at the least, to divide public patronage. This very season, for example, Covent Garden is doomed to meet with formidable competition both in Drury Lane and the Haymarket, while the time is assuredly not far off which shall bring with it opera in our own tongue. Under such circumstances the new limited company represents Italian opera on its defence, and taking the only possible means to continue a dignified career. Amateurs will wish it success. Though we no longer desire the domination of a lyric stage, which often outrages dramatic truth, there is no wish to see Italian opera become extinct. It has a history not wanting in glory, and, under the stimulus of wholesome rivalry, it may have a future still more illustrious.

The prospectus of the forthcoming season is not by any means a sensational document. Its tameness, however, will disappoint few, having regard to the transition state of the entire enterprise. The directors, or whoever may be responsible—no name is given—absolutely promise but one work now unknown in this country, and that one seems to have been chosen for the behoof of Mdme Patti and Signor Nicolini. It may be a reproach to us that we know nothing of Lenepveu's Velleda, and a still greater cause of complaint that we are conscious of no overwhelming sense of curiosity regarding it. However this work may turn out, the fate of the season depends much more upon the production of Boïto's Mefistofele, with Mdme Albani as Marguerite, and of Bizet's Carmen, with the public's old favourite, Mdme Pauline Lucca, as the gipsy. Both operas have been made familiar by Mr Mapleson, but—perhaps we should say on that very account—they will excite great interest at Covent Garden, and do for the season more than would be possible to almost any other. A conditional promise is given to bring forward Massenet's Herodiade, its author's latest and, in some respects, most successful composition; but it is doubtful whether our public would tolerate the story on the stage, and even more open to question whether the management seriously contemplates putting the matter to test. It appears, furthermore, that Mozart's Die Zauberflöte will be given with an "entirely new Italian version," which description, we suppose, applies to the words only. Turning to the personnel of the season we find only one new name among the sopranos—that of Mdlle Olga Berghi, a lady whose reputation cannot be said to have preceded her. Mdme Scalchi disappears from the contraltos for the first time since she made her début amongst us, and in her place comes Mdlle Amelie Stahl to assist Mdme Trebelli and Mdlle Ghiotti. The new tenors are MM. Lestellier and Massart, with Signor Frapolli, who is new only as regards this particular house. Among the baritones figure no less than three strangers—M. Bouhy, M. Dufriche, and Signor Devries, about each of whom probably Brussels amateurs could speak from knowledge. On the other hand, there are no new basses, while the name of M. Lassalle is absent, and with the accomplished Frenchman goes Signor Ciampi, whose peculiar ideas of humour are not again to excite reflection upon the eccentricities of the human mind. We may add here that Signor Gayarre is conspicuous by his absence from the list of tenors. The foregoing are all the additions to, and most of the withdrawals from the troupe of last year. Their significance will appear later, but the existence of an excellent and even brilliant company is assured. Signor Bevignani and M. Dupont again divide the labours and responsibilities of conductorship. Sir Julius Benedict retains his post as director of private concerts, and Messrs Bisaccia, Carrodus, Betjemann, Pittman, and Hansen continue subject to the duties they have so efficiently discharged aforetime. On the other hand, Signor Tagliafico's place will know him no more. After thirty years' service as artist or stage-manager, Signor Tagliafico retires through failing health, his successor being M. Lapissida, of Brussels. It only remains to add that the subscription is for thirty-four nights, and that the season will begin on Tuesday, April 18th.—D. T.

—o—

FERDINAND HILLER.

(From a Correspondent.)

(Leipsic, March 30.)—Dr Ferdinand Hiller spent a few days here lately, his friends and admirers being much pleased to find him so well and robust, both mentally and physically. He heard a performance of his Concert-Overture in A major at the Gewandhaus, and at a party given in the Conservatory charmed every one by his pianoforte playing. Kapellmeister Reinecke got up a morning concert at his own house in honour of the distinguished visitor. With the exception of Beethoven's "Romance for Violin" in F major, and a "Chaconne" by J. S. Bach, the programme was restricted to compositions by Hiller himself.

—o—

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

DEAR SIR,—We beg to inform you that Mr Angelo Neumann has yesterday arrived in London with his technical staff, in order to take the stage arrangements for the Nibelungen performances actively in hand. The whole of the scenery, &c., from Bayreuth, has also arrived, and is being put up in Her Majesty's Theatre. Herr Anton Siedl is busy in Germany rehearsing his orchestra, which is to be brought over from Germany. The representations will, no doubt, benefit greatly through being supported by an orchestra already thoroughly versed in this difficult music; it is the orchestra of the "Richard Wagner Theatre," which has been established at Berlin by Herr Neumann for the rendering of all the works (present and future) of the great composer. The chorus will also come from Germany. By special arrangement with Herr Neumann, the artists who have been engaged for the Nibelungen will also appear at the Symphony Concerts, and it has been settled that a Grand Wagner Concert is to be given at St James's Hall, on Thursday afternoon, May 25—excerpts from the Nibelung's Ring being performed under the conductorship of Herr Siedl, who stands so high in the favour of Herr Wagner as a perfect interpreter of his works.
Yours very truly,
SCHULZ-CURTIUS.

174, New Bond Street, April 4, 1882.

—o—

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

DEAR SIR,—I have just seen in the Musical World of the 25th of March, among the Waifs, that a Committee has been appointed "to enquire into matters" at the Conservatory, Naples. As Dr Blidge seems interested in that matter, will you allow me to acquaint him, through you, that as far back as the year 1872, at the time when Il Commendatore Signor Correnti was Minister of Public Instruction in Italy, I was appointed by his Excellency to proceed to Naples "to enquire into matters" at the Conservatory of Music there. After a stay of a whole month at Naples, and after a full investigation of all matters concerning the Conservatory, in which Cavaliere Laura Rossi very kindly assisted me, I returned to Rome to give a very unfavourable report of all that I had seen at the Conservatory, to the Minister of Public Instruction, and at his request proposed many reforms, most of which were adopted and made public in the Official Gazette of Italy. I am, dear Sir, yours very faithfully,
J. P. GOLDBERG.

London, April 4, 1882.

DRESDEN.—Handel's Ode to St Cecilia and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony were performed on Palm Sunday at the Theatre Royal, for the benefit of the Orchestra Pension Fund.

Digitized by Google

A Case of Psychological Delirium.

At the Bee and Bottle.

Dr Calm.—Well, Major, you made a donkey of yourself in that letter to Dr Beard about German Opera, &c.

Major Tempest.—The impudence of that Beard! I have been in a fever ever since, and am in a fever still.

Dr Calm.—Subside. It's useless raving about nothing.

Major Tempest.—That Beard!

Dr Calm.—Admit you had been dining with Smithers Goldfinch——

Major Tempest.—Well?

Dr Calm.—That accounts for your temporary insanity. Let me apply this soporific?

Major Tempest.—Soporific to me? As well extinguish Vesuvius with a pint of iced water! Besides, I dine with Goldfinch at his club, where I am to meet people who know what's what—confirmed anti-neologists? I shall write another letter.

Dr Calm.—Anti—what?

Major Tempest.—neologists.

Dr Calm.—That's enough. You shall not dine with Goldfinch; you shall not write another letter; but you shall take this soporific. Otherwise you'll be too late for the Tetralogy, and then——

Major Tempest (almost exploding).—Hang Tetralogy! I hate Tetralogy. I worship Number Nine——

Dr Calm.—Beethoven?

Major Tempest.—Bother Beethoven! Vanini's Number Nine, and the Muses. I admit Heptachord, abominate Triad, hang pictures of Cleopatra, by hundreds, on my special walls, can scent the difference between an ounce and a panther, even in the dark, have staked and lost sums in State-lotteries, and (half exhausted)—and——

Dr Calm (aside).—And—I see his wits are evaporating. There is but one remedy, and that must be applied without an instant's delay, or he will explode to a certainty. (Aloud, assuming an aggressive tone and attitude.) Come, come, master Tempest, subside. You are in a state of cerebral irritation, about which I should regret to have to apprise your friends. Let me apply this soporific.

Major Tempest.—Soporific for me?—not by no means. I will—

Dr Calm (assuming gigantic proportions).—You must (seizing Major Tempest by the throat and administering chloroform). Now, old man, be quiet—subside.

Major Tempest (faintly).—No! no! no!

Dr Calm (more and more energetically).—Keep up your stamina, old man.

Major Tempest (more faintly).—No! no!

Dr Calm (master of the situation).—Don't be uneasy.

Major Tempest (still more faintly).—No! (sinks gradually under the influence of the soporific)—Oh!

Dr Calm.—I've settled him at last. He shall remain insensible till the cyclone has passed over.

(Dr Calm assumes his ordinary demeanour. A fiery dragon bears him away.)*

[It is accredited that Dr Calm is a magician, who has deciphered the books of Blaise, Merlin, and other masters of the art of nigromancy.—Dr Blinge.]

—o—

IN RE——?

(To the Editor of the "Times.")

Sir,—I observe with regret and surprise the announcement of Massenet's Hérodiade as one of the possible novelties to be produced during the forthcoming Italian Opera season at Covent Garden. As I feel sure I represent the feelings of most persons acquainted with this work, I trust you will allow me to utter a protest against its production on the English stage. I am quite incompetent to enter into any discussion of its musical merits, but will merely observe, en passant, that it was not considered worthy of being performed at the National Opera in Paris, and that in the opinion of some of the best musical critics its success at Brussels is chiefly owing to the magnificence of the mise-en-scène. My objection to this work is based on the character of the "libretto," which, besides being ridiculous in itself, is most objectionable and offensive as being a flagrant outrage on literary, historical, and religious good taste. Without touching upon the large question as to whether or not it is advisable to borrow subjects for the drama from the pages of sacred history, we shall, I think, all agree that if this be done, they should be handled with a strict regard to congruity and accuracy of historical facts; and this being the case, I think few persons in England will be prepared quietly to accept the gross caricature of sacred history served out to them by M. Massenet's librettists, who, besides numerous minor breaches of good taste, have turned St John the Baptist into an amorous "ténor du grand opéra," who, in true operatic style, warbles out a quantity of maudlin love ditties to Salome, and have introduced within the sacred precincts of the temple a modern corps de ballet. That I am by no means singular in my objections to this work is proved by the fact that, although it had been in active rehearsal for many weeks, the management of the splendid new opera-house at Geneva have been obliged to give up all idea of its production, since the Municipal Council (a body by no means overburdened with religious scruples) have refused to grant any money towards it on the ground that the libretto was of a nature to wound the feelings of many of the ratepayers, and that a numerous and influential memorial to that effect had been presented to them. Of course, as our opera-houses are private enterprises, this is not strictly a case in point; still it goes far to prove that the libretto does contain much that is widely considered to be objectionable, and is also a reason for hoping that you, Sir, will raise your powerful voice in protest against the production in England of M. Massenet's Hérodiade.—I am, Sir, yours respectfully,

E. A. B.

(To the Editor of the "Times.")

Sir,—My attention has been called to a letter signed "E. A. B." in the Times of to-day, and I think it may interest your readers to learn that before deciding to produce Hérodiade in this country, I had the whole libretto changed, re-written, and the music re-adapted, in deference to the feelings of the English public as well as to my own.

Unfortunately, some foreign librettists think differently to us on these subjects, and as in the cases of Boïto's Méfistofele, Gounod's Faust, and other operas, great changes have to be made before any director would think of giving them in England. Nevertheless, it would be unjust to the lovers of music to deprive them of the opportunity of hearing such a musical work as Hérodiade has proved itself to be, simply because the original librettist has fallen into the error of writing a story repugnant to our taste and proper feeling.

However, the Lord Chamberlain exercises a very strict and careful supervision over the libretto of every opera, and I venture to suggest that "E. A. B." would have done wisely to reserve his somewhat factious criticism until the opera is produced on the English stage.—I am, sir, your obedient servant,

Ernest Gye.

Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, March 30th.

Cologne.—Anton Rubinstein's Demon has been given six times in three weeks to crowded houses.

Digitized by Google

THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

(From the "Daily Telegraph.")

The twenty-fourth season of these concerts closed on Monday night; and an overflowing audience attended to mark by the applause of thronging numbers a public sense of interest and approval. Amid constant fluctuations in the world of artistic things, nothing is more remarkable than the steady good fortune of the Popular Concerts. They come with the rolling year; everybody welcomes them as spring flowers are welcomed, and when their course is completed, they are dismissed with "To our next merry meeting." The key to such singular good fortune is not hidden away. It may be found by the least discerning in the fact that Mr Arthur Chappell steadily adheres to the principle which he adopted near upon a quarter of a century ago, and has acted upon ever since—the principle of setting before the public nothing but what is the acknowledged best of its kind. Mr Chappell declines to be tempted aside by the clamour of a clique for novelty on its own account. He would please a section of amateurs much more than he does were he to flood his platform with aspirants of pretence, and cram his programmes with a lot of modern productions, the impertinence of which is only equalled by their incoherence. The game, Mr Chappell seems to think, is not worth the candle, and we agree with him. What is far more to the purpose, the public agree with him; sanctioning by their steady support a policy which, though conservative, is yet truly liberal, since genuine liberalism, in art or politics, is never destructive.

The crowded hall on Monday night signified a wide-spread desire to gather the last fruits of the season, and to say "good-bye" to the artists who have so long supported the enterprise. Nearly all of them we look to see again. Herr Joachim, still in the zenith of his powers, may come to us every year for yet many years. So with Herr Straus, Signor Piatti, Miss Krebs, Miss Zimmermann, Mr Santley, and the rest of the proved and faithful ones. Not so, however, with Mdme Schumann; of whom, there is reason to fear, English amateurs saw the last on Monday night. Mdme Schumann has taken no formal leave of her British friends. Had she chosen, the great artist might have courted and obtained a special "ovation," given only to those whom universal suffrage has raised to heroic rank. It was well, perhaps, that she did not so determine. Farewell tours and farewell appearances are now-a-days so abused that the public have lost faith in them, and nearly regard them as on a level with a "selling-off" of commercial procedure. But though nothing was said of Mdme Schumann's performance as valedictory, the best informed among the audience so regarded it—with how much interest and regret we need not say. There is always pain in parting with a great artist, who for many years has shone like a star in the firmament of music. The absolute "last" of anything brings grave reflections to thoughtful minds; but the drying up of a spring of pleasure and edification, the withering of a tree from which, year by year, grateful fruit has been plucked, is in its measure a catastrophe. How much more in this case, where we not only lose the last representative of a great classic school and the noblest witness against the boastful quackery that has succeeded it, but nearly the final link between ourselves and an Augustine age of music. Take away Mdme Schumann, together with the veteran Ferdinand Hiller, and what remains of the generation in which flourished a host of brilliant men, whom only to name would be to stretch this article beyond due length. Around the few representatives of that era gathers "the tender grace of a day that is dead." They make us hear "The sound of a voice that is still," just as on Monday night, when Mdme Schumann played her husband's Novelette in F, she awoke a thousand echoes of a noble past, with which not sound alone, but her own bodily presence, linked us. Possibly these thoughts did not take a well-defined form in the minds of many among her audience. But the spirit of them must have pervaded the place, in however vague a form, and hence the overwhelming signs of more than admiration and regard when Mdme Schumann had completed her evening's work, by adding two of Chopin's pieces to the Novelette. Again and again was the illustrious artist called back to the platform by a public loth to look their last upon one whose memory will be cherished more and more as years go on. Mdme Schumann will carry back to her German home pleasant recollections of her English friends, and she will be cheered in her declining years by remembrance of an affection no less honestly gained than ungrudgingly awarded.

The particulars of the concert need not long detain us, since nothing new was presented. Brahms' Sextet in B flat, played by Messrs Joachim, Ries, Straus, Zerbini, Pezze, and Piatti, opened the programme, which included Bach's Concerto in D minor for two violins (Messrs Joachim and Straus), with pianoforte accompaniment (Miss Agnes Zimmermann), Mendelssohn's theme with variations for piano (Miss Krebs) and violoncello (Signor Piatti), and a selection from Brahms' Hungarian dances, as arranged for violin and pianoforte (Miss Agnes Zimmermann) by Herr Joachim. Mr Santley sang, in the course of the evening, no fewer than four of his most favourite classic songs, so that, well arranged at all points, the entertainment won a complete success, and brought the season to a fitting end. In closing our notice let us acknowledge with emphasis, because the duty has often been neglected, the excellent services of M. Zerbini as accompanist throughout the season, and the yet more valuable labours of Mr J. W. Davison, whose analytical remarks upon the new works have so materially helped to their comprehension, in virtue of qualities, both literary and artistic, that command general approval.

"NYM CRINKLE" (WHEELER) ON MARIE ROZE.

"Ah, what a heavenly voice, with the face of the madonna! Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth is said to speak, and this exclamation passed my lips impulsively as I dropped my lorgnette and leaned back, with Marie Roze's glorious notes still ringing in my ears. No artist ever interested me so much as Marie Roze. I met her once in a social way, and had been charmed. An hour spent in her society leaves a pure impression upon you—a midsummer night's dream. The critical judgment veils itself when it meets such a rare goddess of the earth. If you will not misunderstand me, I should like to say that it is the ripe earthiness of Marie Roze that fills the sense. But now that I have said it, I feel that this bold, inadequate statement utterly fails to convey my idea to you. Because you may think of earthiness as something exactly the opposite of heavenliness. But I always think of it, or try to, as the fecund quality of nature, which furnishes us with all that is beautiful in vital existence. I always liked women better than I liked angels. I never could discover any human endeavour, however skyey, that could escape from the law of gravitation. If you say this is not spiritual, I reply that it is at least scientific. If you desire to pass the pale flowers of æsthetic thought and come to the red rose itself it will cut off philosophy, but you will be gratified. Marie Roze, superficially considered, possesses an extraordinary amount of pure, overflowing femininity. It would be hard to define that quality of sex which resides in a face and form and lends itself to all the tones of voice and every fold of drapery as well. But you and I are not philosophers. Womanly women in art are the greatest desideratum of the day.

"Marie Roze possesses this organic charm. Her beauty is of the large, sensuous type. There are corn and wine and oil in it. It refreshes a man to know that such a woman exists—even when he cannot possess her—for as Emerson says, these women, whether they sit or stand, or only throw a shadow on the wall, confer a favour on the world. As the artist, the excellence of Marie Roze's impersonations and of her pure vocalization are so evenly and thoroughly adjusted to her characters that the effect she produces upon you is not unlike that produced upon the mind when one for the first time looks upon some celebrated and beautiful picture—there is a perfect harmony of colour and drawing. Another fact is, that Marie Roze succeeds with all the disadvantages of a superb face in making her audience forget Marie Roze. It may be said that Marie Roze's art is a French flower grown in Italian sunshine. I have not asked myself whether Marie Roze has voice of phenomenal power. I suppose it is because her voice satisfies me. There are tears in it. On the whole, I think I admire the regular Italian sunset better than I should the phenomenal eruption of the Italian volcano.

"If one can judge from appearances, the American people admire Marie Roze and her voice because both are distinguished for that indefinable quality which is so eminently human and, therefore, sympathetic. They wind about the emotions without any effort whatever."—New Orleans Times.

WEIMAR.—The fiftieth anniversary of Goethe's death was observed with becoming solemnity. Laurel wreaths were laid upon the poet's tomb by the Chief Burgomaster, the Intendant-General for the Grand Ducal Theatre, and Dr Friedrich for the Association of German Authors. Wreaths, also, were forwarded from Leipsic Symposium and the publishing house of Cotta. Dr Keil spoke in the name of the Vienna Concordia Society, Julius Grosse in that of the Berlin Press Society, and the Intendant-General, von Loën, for the Schiller Foundation and the German Ladies of Prague, also reading the Grand-Duke's reply to the Ladies.

LEIPSIC.—Louise Härtel, wife of Raimund Härtel, formerly head of the publishing firm of Breitkopf and Härtel, died on the 20th ult. Before marriage, as Louise Hauffe, she enjoyed fair repute as a pianist.

Digitized by Google

MARRIAGE OF MDLLE SARAH BERNHARDT.

(Paris correspondence of "The Times.")

The Figaro gives a circumstantial account of a flying marriage, which was to come off this morning at the Greek Consulate in London, between Mdlle Sarah Bernhardt and M. Damala, an Embassy Attaché, who recently joined her troupe. They performed at Naples on Friday night, and are to appear at Nice to-morrow night, but they had just time to reach London by express yesterday afternoon, and would have been married at 5 p.m., but for the train being considerably behind its time. The ceremony had, consequently, to be deferred till 8 a.m. to-day, which just left time to reach Nice to-morrow afternoon. The bride, it is remarked, possesses 1,200,000 francs, and the bridegroom, who took to the stage with a passion for it, is already tolerably rich, and will be richer.—Paris, April 4.

(From "The Times," April 5.)

Mdlle Sarah Bernhardt was married in London yesterday morning. The ceremony took place in the church of St. Andrew's, Wells Street, Oxford Street, in the parish of St Marylebone, the bridegroom being M. Damala, a Greek gentleman. The bride and bridegroom presented themselves to the officiating clergyman, the Rev. Mr Greenwood, assistant curate, at the early hour of half-past 10 a.m. They were attended by only one gentleman and one lady, and these, with the verger of the church, were the sole witnesses of the marriage. Mdlle Bernhardt, the bridegroom, and friends in attendance arrived in two hansom cabs from 55, Berners Street, the address given as the residence of the contracting parties. The marriage was by license, which, when the party arrived at the church, it was found had been forgotten and had to be sent for. The ceremony had subsequently to be hurried over in consequence of 11 o'clock matins. The service was that of the Church of England, the responses being made in English by both bride and bridegroom, though M. Damala is said to be very little acquainted with the language. After the ceremony the party entered the vestry and signed the register, the signatories being the contracting couple, their two attendants, and Mr Henderson, verger. Then the party returned in cabs to 55, Berners Street. Mdme Damala soon afterwards sent for a copy of the register, which she had neglected to obtain before leaving the church. The strictest secrecy has been observed in connection with the marriage. The Rev. Mr Gibbs, in answer to a remark on the state of the marriage law, said that "in its present scandalous condition" a clergyman was bound to celebrate the marriage service on a license being presented to him by any couple who would reply pro formâ to the few questions required to be put. Mdlle Bernhardt is understood to have arrived in London from Naples on the previous day for the ceremony. After the marriage, at four o'clock in the afternoon, she visited the Gaiety Theatre with M. Meyer, her manager, in order to have an interview with Mr Hollingshead, who, however, is out of town. It is stated that the marriage will not affect the engagements entered into by Mdlle Bernhardt to appear at the Gaiety Theatre in May and June next. M. Damala is stated in one quarter to be a gentleman of wealth, and on the other hand to be likely to appear at the Gaiety with his wife as her lover in La Dame aux Camélias. He appears to be of middle age and full height, and is said to be a fine-looking man. Mdlle Bernhardt was married in ordinary walking costume, the most noticeable feature of which was a very long and handsome sealskin cloak, close-fitting and trimmed with fur. She left with M. Damala last night by the mail train from Charing Cross for the Continent en route for Barcelona. She is announced to play in Madrid on Sunday next.

—o—

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The students gave an orchestral concert on Saturday evening, April 1st, 1882, at St James's Hall. The programme consisted of—

Mass, No. 3, "Imperial" (Haydn)—solos by Miss Charlotte Thudichum (Parepa-Rosa scholar), Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr Hirwen Jones, and Mr Lucas Williams; Concerto, in E flat, first movement (Beethoven)—pianoforte, Mr Samuel Wiggins, pupil of Mr F. B. Jewson; Air, "With verdure clad" (Haydn)—Miss Beare; Overture (MS.), in F minor (F. K. Hatterseley, Balfe scholar); Caprice, in E (Sterndale Bennett)—pianoforte, Miss Marian Davis, pupil of Mr Walter Macfarren; Recit. ed Aria, "Non mi dir" (Mozart)—Miss Charlotte Thudichum, Parepa-Rosa scholar; Concertino, Op. 51 (Romberg)—violoncello, Mr W. Charles Hann; Scena (Fiori)—Miss Josephine Pulham; Overture, in E minor (H. Smith, student); Concerto, in D minor, first movement (Mendelssohn)—pianoforte, Miss F. Smith, pupil of Mr O'Leary; Duet, "Children, pray" (Spohr)—Miss Augusta Arnold and Mr Hulbert H. Fulkerson; War March of the Priests, Athalie (Mendelssohn).

Mr William Shakespeare conducted. The room was crowded.

TONIC SOL-FA.

(To the Editor of the "Globe.")

SIR,—Mr Wareham questions, in the Globe, the accuracy of my statement that the choice of method (Tonic Sol-fa or Staff notations) is left by the London School Board with the teachers. He says that "material would not be provided for a teacher of the staff wishing to teach by Hullah's method." No statement of this kind has ever been made by the Board, for the simple reason that no teacher has ever applied for the material, and therefore the question has never yet come before the Board. I may say that out of the 300 London Board Schools I do not know of half-a-dozen teaching singing by the Staff notation. As regards Mr Wareham's statement, that the Tonic Sol-fa notation "is not an exposition of the relation of scale sounds," all I will say is that the notation does represent the sounds of the scale with perfect accuracy, and your readers can best satisfy themselves on this question by referring to Mr Curwen's Musical Statics and Musical Theory. As to Helmholtz, his approval was the result of seeing method and notation in actual work. I can best reply to Mr Wareham's incomplete quotation from Mr Curwen's Primer on Tonic Sol-fa (Novello's series) by referring your readers to the book itself, pages 12, 13, and 14, and I feel sure that they will agree with me that no genuine or unprejudiced musician ever would cavil at the passage in question; and I will conclude by expressing my regret that any opponent of Tonic Sol-fa should feel compelled to stigmatize the supporters of the method as "dishonest," or as "meeting difficulties with lies."—I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

J. EVANS (Music Instructor.)

London School Board, Victoria Embankment.

Signor Bevignani has returned from Moscow to resume his duties at the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, the popular conductor stopped at Brussels, on his way to London, for the purpose of witnessing a performance of the much-talked-of opera, Herodiade.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—The Sacred Harmonic Society having definitely arranged for the winding up of its affairs, some of the members and subscribers have resolved upon the formation of a new society, and a provisional committee has been appointed with a view to ascertaining the amount of support likely to be obtained from those in any way connected with the old institution and amateurs generally. A meeting will be held on the 18th inst. to receive the report of the committee, and discuss the principles on which the new society shall be conducted. All interested in the movement are requested to communicate with the honorary secretary, Mr H. J. Bishop, Neumeyer Hall, Hart Street, Bloomsbury.

A NEW IRISH OPERA.—Mr Wallworth, the highly esteemed vocalist and teacher, on the occasion of his benefit at the Adelphi Theatre, produced an operetta of his own composition, entitled Kevin's Choice, the book being founded on a sketch by Miss Hazlewood. The scene is laid in Ireland towards the end of the last century, and the incidents turn on the loves of Kevin (a student) and Kathleen (a farmer's daughter), the father of the former having made a will, leaving his wealth to the church, and enjoining his son to become a priest. The despair of the lovers is ultimately removed, and their union secured, by the discovery of a subsequent will, revoking the former one. There is an underplot concerning the loves of Patrick, an Irish peasant, and Bridget, Kathleen's cousin. Mr Wallworth's music is unpretentious, but well written for vocal effect, generally pleasing and always melodious. It is entirely for solo voices, with accompaniment of a small orchestra. Among the pieces that made the most effect in the first act were the duet, "Oh, how I hate," for Bridget and Patrick; Kathleen's ballad, "A youth met a maiden;" Kevin's sentimental air, "My heart some strange foreboding chills;" a smoothly-written duet, "Sleep, sleep," for Kevin and Kathleen; a very telling song for the priest, Father Beamish (encored); and a well-concerted quintet for all the characters. The second act contains an expressive air, "I cannot own," for Kathleen; a plaintive song, "Awake, awake," in serenade style, for Kevin; a genial duet, "Be firm," for Kevin and Bridget; and a spirited quintet. Mdme Edith Wynne as Kathleen sang right well, notwithstanding evident indisposition, and was efficiently supported by Miss Lucy Franklein as Bridget. Mr H. Walsham displayed a resonant tenor voice in the music of Kevin; Mr Wallworth acted and sang with considerable humour as Patrick; and Mr Pyatt gave the Priest's song and his share in the concerted pieces very effectively. There was a well-selected orchestra, which Mr K. Meyder ably directed. The piece was preceded by a miscellaneous concert, the vocal parts in which were contributed by Miss P. Featherby, Mrs A. Furlong, Madame Telma, Messrs Maas, Furlong, Victor, and R. Hollins. Mr Carrodus played a brilliant fantasia on Scotch airs in his most brilliant style.—D. N.

Digitized by Google

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS,

ST JAMES'S HALL,

REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.

THE MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS

WILL BE RESUMED

EARLY IN OCTOBER NEXT.

DEATH.

On March 31, at 25, Brecknock Crescent, Camden Town, N.W., CAROLINE, the beloved wife of MR THOMAS HARPER, aged 58.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.'S, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). Advertisements not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 8, 1882.

The Egyptian Symphony.

ARCTURUS PASHA.—I've got it—and I'll finish it. Catch me again in purgatory! The first movement shall be Pharaoh—no, "Moses and Aaron," with episode—Pharaoh's daughter and the bullrushes. The slow movement shall be The Red Sea, with episode—The Brazen Serpent. The scherzo shall be The Wilderness, with episode—Manna. The fourth and last shall be The Land of Milk and Honey. I wish Head were here. He knows all about Palestine, &c.

SIR FLAMBOROUGH HEAD (by telephone).—All right, dear boy, get on with your work. I will send you a box of superfluous seconds. I am in the College fathoming Anton's Ocean. When I get to the bottom of it I'll let you know.

ARCTURUS PASHA (by re-telephone).—Thanks, old man. I've lots of "superfluous seconds" over here, and I shouldn't much mind if Anton's Ocean were dried up.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The annual report of the Committee of Management to the Directors of the Royal Academy of Music, for the year 1881, having been printed, we submit it, in extenso, for the perusal of our readers.

"Your committee, in laying before you the balance sheet of the year 1881, have the pleasure to state that, through the increasing prosperity of the Academy, they have been enabled to pay off the sum of £400, being the margin of the amount advanced by Messrs Coutts & Co., to defray the cost of erecting the new concert-room and obtaining the lease of the two houses now occupied, and that the Institution is by this payment entirely freed from debt.

"It is with high gratification that your committee record another repetition of the munificence of Lady Goldsmid, who again presents a Free Scholarship entitling the holder to a year's education in the Academy, for which there is to be competition by female pianists who shall have been studying in the Institution for two years and shall not already have held her ladyship's scholarship. Dr Llewelyn Thomas, who continues his services as Honorary Physician to the Academy, Mr Heathcote Long, Mr Henry Evill, and Mr Charles Santley, again present their respective prizes for special student work, and Mr Bonamy Dobree again offers his for violoncello-playing. The Parepa-Rosa, the Sterndale Bennett, and the Balfe Scholarships, as well as the Potter Exhibition, the Westmorland, Sir John Goss, and the Thalberg Scholarships, are permanent; as also are the Memorial Prizes in the names of Sir Sterndale Bennett, Mdme Parepa-Rosa, and Mr Charles Lucas. Besides these means of completely or partly gratuitous education, which are open in some cases to the world at large, in others to pupils of longer or shorter standing in the Academy, there are several instances at present in which the fees of a pupil are defrayed by some generous individual who prefers the private satisfaction of assisting desert to any public credit for the act. It is pleasant to report the donation of £50 from the Worshipful Company of Goldsmiths, for procuring which your committee have to acknowledge the good offices of Mr Charles Sparrow.

"The Reserve Fund for reducing the fees to pupils who are deserving and necessitous, has not progressed since your last annual meeting, and is thus not of sufficient amount for investment.

"The Local Examination of musical students, first essayed in the Lent of 1881, is at present in course of repetition. The number of candidates last year was 902, of whom 122 received honours, and 432 passed with satisfaction to the examiners. The number of candidates is this year increased to 1258, and your committee wait with interest for the reports of the several examiners (all members of the Academy staff), which will throw a strong light on the state of musical education throughout the country. A still more important incident in the work of the past year is the first Metropolitan Examination of musical artists and teachers, which was held in January last. For this there were sixty-eight candidates, of whom eleven as pianists, one as clarionet-player, and two as bandmasters, satisfied the examiners, and have consequently been created licentiates of the Royal Academy of Music, and have each received a diploma to that effect. This examination is designed to test most scrupulously the qualifications of those who present themselves; the result is meant to certify that successful candidates are, in the opinion of the three specialists who examine on each respective subject, entirely capable of fulfilling the requirements of that branch of the musical profession which each one aims to represent.

"The experimental performances of the operatic class in the Academy have elicited warm approval; a representation of an act of Cosi fan tutte, which was given by special request at Victoria Hall, was decidedly successful; and—most significant of all—several former members of the class have appeared with credit during the present season of Mr Carl Rosa's performances at Her Majesty's Theatre. It is hence manifest that what has previously been a serious desideratum—namely, opportunity of preparation for the lyrical stage—is satisfactorily supplied by the operatic class in the Academy.

Digitized by Google

"The Professorship of Acoustics has been accepted by Mr R. H. M. Bosanquet, who gave an illustrated lecture in the autumn to the students, subscribers, members, and associates. The aim in incorporating this scientific subject in the Academy course is, firstly, to testify to the highly exalted character of the art which is taught here, as owing its existence to some of the sublimest laws of nature; secondly, to befit students for University examination for musical degrees.

"Your committee particularly wish to dispel an impression which has been avowed by some directors, to the effect that the Academy has opposed itself to a scheme now being promulgated by several of the patrons of this institution. The offer, in 1874, of space in the Royal Albert Hall for the Academy's occupation was impossible of acceptance on the terms proposed. Your committee proffered, through the president, a strong expression of sympathy with the objects of the meeting convened by H.R.H. the Prince of Wales in 1875, the result of which meeting was the establishment of the Training School. When, in 1876, Mr Sullivan applied to them for leave to accept the principalship of the School, stating that, if he could not hold this office together with his professorship in the Academy, he would decline the former—the committee showed their sympathy with the Prince's object, by cordially granting Mr Sullivan the leave he asked, and desiring him to state this fact as an earnest of the goodwill of the Academy to the new institution. Permission was also willingly accorded to other members of the Academy staff to accept engagements at the new School. It must be remembered that the often-quoted "majority of ten to four" of the votes at a directors' meeting, when the late Lord Hampton was in the chair, on July 20th, 1878 (which majority has been misinterpreted as having voted a concurrence with the proposal to fuse the Academy in a then recently-opened school), was taken in the absence of the president and fifteen others of the thirty directors; that no notice had been given of the object of the special meeting; and that possibly the presence of some of those sixteen might have given a different close to the proceedings. It must be borne in mind that the request for the Academy to surrender its charter, to relinquish its individuality, and to forego everything but the history of its past achievements, could not be acceded to, while several members who were present were unwilling to comply, and that this feeling was shared by many members of the Body Politic and Corporate who had not the privilege of attending the directors' meeting at which the final vote was taken, on December 13th, 1879. Further, it must not be forgotten that even had the whole of the members agreed to resign the charter of this royal and national institution, the probable conditions offered by H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh were incompatible with his certain requirements from the Academy. The committee have resisted all appeals to them to justify the Academy's claim to that sympathy of the public which it holds, confident that its best claim to support, and panoply against opposition, is the internal work it strives to accomplish.

"Your committee regret the retirement of Mr Charles Hallé (whose resignation will be read to you) from your Board of Directors.

"The number of pupils at present studying in the Academy is 418. The duly-audited balance sheet for the year 1881 shows the expenditure of that year to have amounted to £15,041 0s. 1d. The expenditure for 1880 was £13,895 13s.

"Resolved that the report for 1881 be printed and sent to the subscribers, members, and associates of the Royal Academy of Music."—"(Signed) T. Gladstone, chairman of the day."

THE LATE MR JOHN HILES.

In response to our information last week as to the unfortunate position of the widow of the late Mr John Hiles, the following subscriptions have been received:—

Messrs Chappell & Co.	£10	10s.
,, Boosey & Co.	10	0s.
,, Gray & Davison	10	10s.
Royal Society of Musicians	5	5s.

Further subscriptions will be kindly received by Messrs Chappell & Co., New Bond Street; Gray & Davison, Euston Road; Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street; and Mr Frederic Davison, 24, Fitzroy Square.

Dr Arthur Sullivan has left Cairo, and is at present in Naples.

Mr F. C. Burnand, we have much pleasure in stating, has entirely recovered from his recent indisposition. He is just now at Ramsgate—his favourite recouping-ground.

CONCERTS.

St Patrick's Night was celebrated at St James's Hall on Saturday evening, March 17, by an "Irish Ballad Concert," conducted by Mr Sydney Naylor, the singers being Mesdames Patey, Alice Barth, and Antoinette Sterling; Misses Carlotta Elliot, Helen Meason, and Jessica O'Brien; Messrs Sims Reeves, Edward Lloyd, Faulkner Leigh, Walter Clifford, and Santley, assisted by "a band of harps," conducted by Mr John Cheshire (who also played various fantasias on the National Instrument of Erin), and Signor Piatti, who gave his admired "Airs Baskyrs," arranged for the violoncello. There was an enormous audience, upwards of three thousand lovers of Milesian melodies being present, all applauding and "encoring" every piece in the programme with iron hands and vociferous throats. It was certainly an Irish fête in every way. Nearly all the singers were established favourites, there being but one new to St James's Hall, and her name was Jessica O'Brien, a beautiful representative of the Emerald Isle both in appearance and in voice. The fair débutante made a great impression on her audience, giving Crouch's "Kathleen Mavourneen" and Lover's "What will you do, love?" in a way that thoroughly delighted everyone, winning hearty applause and "re-calls" after each. There is little doubt that Miss Jessica O'Brien will be heard frequently in our concert-rooms. A feature in the programme was Balfe's "Killarney," which, though the last song on the list, was so effectively rendered by Mdme Barth that the audience applauded "to the echo," and evidently wanted it over again, but the clever lady would only return and bow her acknowledgments. The concert was in every way an enormous success.

Mr Aguilar's "Goblin Market" (from a correspondent).—Mr E. Aguilar has set Miss G. Rossetti's pretty poem, Goblin Market, as a cantata for treble voices, and last Saturday night, at the trial concert of the Musical Artist's Society, it was performed with great success. Mr Aguilar has caught the spirit of the story, and dramatically treated all the incidents, the frolicsome fun and spiteful tricks of the goblins, the waywardness of Laura, and the tender affection of her guardian angel, sister Lizzie. Mrs Sicklemore and Miss E. Burnett sang the parts of the two sisters, and a circle of ladies (some of them Mr Aguilar's pupils) effectively rendered the choral music. Mr Aguilar and Mr Charles E. Stephens accompanied on two grand pianofortes.

Miss Rosa Kenney.—An entertainment of much interest was given on Tuesday, March 28th, at the Marlborough Rooms, Regent Street. Miss Rosa Kenney, whose performance of Juliet is favourably remembered by playgoers, gave, in presence of a large and brilliant audience, a recital of the Laureate's new poem, "The Charge of the Heavy Brigade at Balaclava," and of portions of his "Passing of Arthur." Very finished, intellectual, and pleasing was the delivery of the young artist. The humorous aspect of her powers was well brought out in two scenes from The Hunchback, in which, with the aid of Mr Charles Wyndham as Modus, Miss Kenney, as Helen, gave admirable effect to the practice of feminine wooing. A miscellaneous entertainment, combined with the recitations, included songs, admirably sung by Miss Edith Wynne; a comic recital, by Mr Standing; recitals from Southey and from her own writings, by Mrs Aylmer Gowing; a song, by Miss Berta Forresta; and pianoforte performances by Herr Kranick.—The People.

PROVINCIAL.

Edinburgh.—On Saturday evening, April 1st, Professor Sir Herbert Oakeley gave an organ recital to the members of the Edinburgh Choral Union and their friends in the music class-room of the University of Edinburgh. There was a crowded and appreciative audience. The programme, arranged in chronological order, contained specimens of music specially composed for the organ, as well as choral or orchestral pieces arranged for it. The Professor afterwards gave some pieces of his own composition, which were certainly not the least enjoyable selections during the evening. The most pretentious was the Sonata in A major, but the simple and musical "Abends" ("Son of my soul") appeared to be more popular. It was given by request of Mr Marshall, secretary of the Choral Union, who had invited about sixty of the members of Broughton Place United Presbyterian Church, who wished to hear the time and phrasing of the tune, which they sing in church. At the conclusion of the hymn the Professor was very heartily applauded. Before the closing chorus was given, Mr Marshall moved a vote of thanks to Sir Herbert Oakeley for the great treat he had given them and for the interest he had taken in the Choral Union. Professor Oakeley then returned thanks in eloquent and suitable terms, and assured the members of the great interest he took in the Society and his gratification at seeing them at his recital. The recital concluded with the chorus, "Achieved is the glorious work," from Haydn's Creation.

Digitized by Google

BIRMINGHAM.—On Thursday evening, March 30th, Messrs W. and J. W. Pyatt gave a concert of classical chamber music at the Town Hall. The performers were Dr Joachim, Herr Louis Ries, Mr Zerbini, Signor Piatti, Miss Agnes Zimmermann, and Mr Vernon Rigby. The Quartet was Mendelssohn's in E flat, Op. 12, and the Quintet Schumann's in E flat, Op. 44, both played in perfection. How could it be otherwise, when rendered by such great artists? The andante and variations from Beethoven's "Kreutzer" Sonata made a furore, the players—Miss Zimmermann and Dr Joachim—being twice called to receive the applause due to their magnificent performance. Signor Piatti's solo was a "Largo and Allegro" by Veracini, played in so masterly a manner that the famous violoncellist was obliged to return to the platform, when he gave his own transcription of Schubert's "Ave Maria." "Mr Vernon Rigby," writes the critic of the Birmingham Gazette, "sang the whole of his songs splendidly, securing in each the best opinions of his hearers. The serenade, 'Thro' the night,' No. 4 of the fourteen songs published a few months after Schubert's death as the 'Songs of the Swan,' was a refined example of vocalization." In response to "encores" for his other songs, Mr Rigby gave Schumann's "Devotion" and Verdi's "La donna e mobile" (Rigoletto). The concert, altogether, gave perfect satisfaction.

TODMORDEN.—The last concert of the present season of the Todmorden Musical Society was given on Monday evening, March 27, at the Town Hall. There was an enormous audience, the hall being filled in every part long before the commencement of the concert. The works selected for the occasion were Handel's serenata, Acis and Galatea, and Sterndale Bennett's May Queen. The band and chorus numbered upwards of 120 performers, assisted by Miss A. Williams, Messrs Frank Boyle and Santley, from London, and conducted by Mr Thomas Law. All exerted themselves con amore, and the result was an excellent performance of both works. Sterndale Bennett's beautiful May Queen has often been given by the Society, but Handel's serenata was a quasi-novelty. The necessary orchestral and chorus parts having been presented lately to the Society by the president, John Fielden, Esq., of Dobroyd Castle, it was felt that the most suitable acknowledgment of the generous gift would be the best performance possible of the work. In consequence, band, chorus, and principals did their best, and succeeded in pleasing all except those critics, who consider it their privilege to be dissatisfied with everybody and everything.

CHELTENHAM.—The concert in the Rotunda on Wednesday evening, March 22, was for the benefit of the Town Band. The orchestral contributions were an Overture to each part, with a Clarionet Fantasia by Mr Hawkins, and a Violoncello Solo by Mr E. Teague, jun., both cleverly rendered. The gems of the concert were the pianoforte solos of Mr Ricardo Linter, the first of which he was compelled to repeat, and the second—a brilliant composition of his own—entitled the Montpellier March, elicited hearty applause. Mr Linter also took part with Mr Pollock in a duet for the pianoforte and harp. The singers were Miss Julia Jones and Mr Twinning.

—o—

VIENNA.

(Correspondence.)

Baron von Hofmann, Intendant-General of the Imperial Theatres, has announced that the Burgtheater will remain closed during July and August, but, in compliance with a general wish that, on account of the presence of so many strangers at the particular time, the Imperial Operahouse should remain open as long as possible, the institution will be shut in July only. The last operatic performance is fixed for the 15th June, from which date till the 27th, nothing but ballets will be given, and then as usual actors from the Burgtheater appear for a limited number of nights. On the 1st August, the new operatic season begins. In May and June, Marie Wilt, Lilli Lehmann, Marianne Brand, Niemann, and Reichmann, are engaged for short periods. Meanwhile Schubert's Alfons und Estrella, "arranged" by Fuchs, and Boito's Mefistofele, will be special attractions.

Carl Heymann, the pianist, has given two concerts in Moscow, earning, as previously in St Petersburgh, silver opinions.

The movement inaugurated by the Prince of Wales to found a Royal College of Music is meeting with satisfactory support. In addition to subscriptions promised by the London Corporation and City Companies, over £50,000 has been given, so that the first £100,000 of the contemplated £300,000 has been practically secured. In the course of the present and next month meetings are to be held in most of the large provincial towns in order to specifically point out the character of the work the new institution will undertake.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

The managers of this society could not have anticipated the illness of Sir Michael Costa when they aptly placed Eli in the programme of the season. Under ordinary circumstances, choice of Sir Michael's first oratorio needs no apology. Among modern works of the kind it holds an honourable position, being, in fact, one of the very few oratorios that the public have accepted since the bringing out of Elijah. But, as matters actually stand, the performance of Eli on Friday night was an event of special timeliness and significance. This is the last season of the Sacred Harmonic Society. The fate that may have been doubtful when the present course of concerts was arranged is now settled, and the performance announced which will close half a century of useful labour. What more fitting than that an oratorio from the pen of the conductor who has served the society during a generation, and longer, should be one of its last cares, especially when the honoured chief is himself disabled by illness? Had Sir Michael Costa retained his health the closing concerts of the "Sacred Harmonic" would have been for him a series of personal triumphs; since even those at whose hands he has suffered criticism could have done no other than pay a just tribute of honour to so much ability, perseverance, and uprightness. It was well, therefore, that, absent in person, he should be present by the work which not a few excellent judges regard as his finest contribution to sacred art. Worthily, at any rate, did Sir Michael close his visible connection with the society. He may remain in nominal office till the forthcoming dissolution, but his farewell was said in the glowing and picturesque strains which set forth the story of the ancient Hebrew seer.

The performance was conducted by M. Sainton with all the success that an intimate knowledge of the work and of the composer's intention could secure. A more efficient deputy cannot be imagined. In M. Sainton enthusiasm and skill went together. He seemed zealous for the honour of the oratorio, and his example spread among those over whom he presided. The result was a performance in which not only the conductor and principal singers distinguished themselves, but also the orchestra and chorus, by whom the important accompaniments and somewhat exacting concerted numbers were given, generally speaking, with capital effect. The solo parts, one excepted, were sustained by artists whom Sir Michael Costa selected years ago, and from whom he has never seen reason to withdraw his confidence. Thus, the music of Samuel was sung by Mdme Patey—in what manner and with what result it is almost superfluous to tell. Hardly another oratorio gives this favourite contralto an equal opportunity to exhibit her voice and vocal skill in their best aspect. She invariably sings the two Prayers of the youthful acolyte with perfect expression, and lends the charm of a complete interpretation to songs which are themselves full of beauty. As on many former occasions, the part of the boastful Philistine champion was sustained by Mr Vernon Rigby, who never exerted himself more unsparingly, or earned more emphatic applause. The martial and stirring scene in which the "man of might" proclaims war against Israel demands large and varied resources, but Mr Rigby easily met its requirements. As a matter of fact, his rendering of the solo was beyond reproach, and more than justified the continued preference of the composer. This may be said also regarding the delivery, by Mr Lewis Thomas, of the music assigned to the Man of God. Mr Thomas—whose legitimate bass voice seems the more impressive as organs of its class and character become rarer—never gave the denunciation of Eli and his house with greater vigour and effect, or appeared to better advantage than in the melodious duet that followed. With Mr Santley in his accustomed place as Eli, it will be understood that the purely devotional and pathetic music of the Israelitish ruler received a fine interpretation. Mr Santley sings always well, but never better than when engaged upon airs of a character such as most of those given to Eli. His success was, of course, very great, and very much deserved. There remains only to speak of Miss Mary Davies, who, though comparatively new to the part of Hannah, did not permit it to lose any interest in her hands. Singing throughout with exemplary intelligence and expression, she impressed the audience greatly by her delivery of the happy mother's song of thankfulness, entering so well into its spirit as to evoke unanimous and prolonged applause.

At the Society's last concert, Handel's Solomon will be given. The choice is fitting. It was the great Jewish King who said, "I gat me men singers and women singers, and the delights of the sons of men, as musical instruments, and that of all sorts. . . . Then I looked on all the works that my hands had wrought, and on the labour that I had laboured to do; and, behold, all was vanity and vexation of spirit, and there was no profit under the sun."—D. T.

SIR MICHAEL COSTA is himself again—of which, not long hence, it is hoped, the public will see convincing proofs.

Digitized by Google

FORM, OR DESIGN, IN VOCAL MUSIC.

(Continued from page 192.)

The Italian Cantata.

The Italian cantatas for solo voices by Carissimi, Stradella, and Scarlatti, consist largely of declamation, or recitative, interspersed with short cantabile, rhythmic portions, and at least one set aria.

That by Stradella, called Il Nerone, begins with a long piece of speaking recitative.

Ex. 150.

This changes to rhythmic phrases, one of which is

Ex. 151.

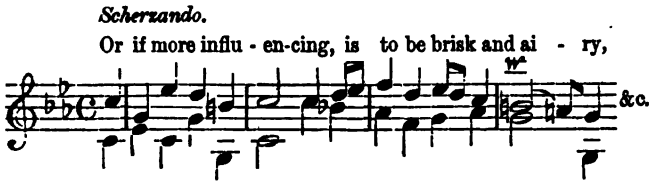
After this is another long speaking recitative, followed by a repetition of the rhythmic "Claudio rida" (Ex. 151). More speaking recitative follows this, and after a close an aria beginning :—

Ex. 152.

The form of this is complete so far as it begins in F, and ends in F, and modulates in the middle. After this is a short speaking recitative, a short rhythmic portion, and again the rhythmic "Claudio rida" (Ex. 151). Another speaking recitative follows, and after it a rhythmic portion, which, coming to a close, is followed by another rhythmic portion in different time. This goes into a repetition of "Claudio rida" (Ex. 151), another short speaking recitative is followed by a second aria, in the same time as the first (Ex. 152), but of less extent; and this concludes the cantata.

Purcell's cantata, "From rosy bow'rs," in his opera, Don Quixote, is of the same kind as those of the Italian writers, but it contains in the cantabile portions more rhythmic character and variety as well as more definite design. It begins with speaking recitative, "From rosy bow'rs where sleeps the god of love." An air follows in very marked time :—

Ex. 153.

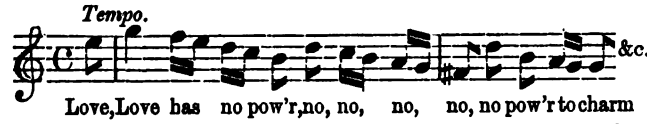


This is in complete form with half-way cadence in the major key of the mediant, with modulation and with return to the original key for the final cadence. This is followed by a recitative and a cantabile portion, after which is another set air. This is a complete rondo with first strain closing in the same key, with modulating portion, and recapitulation of the first.

Ex. 154.

After this is a short recitative, and a rapid movement ensues in C major.

Ex. 155.



This is also in a complete form with rest in the dominant key with modulation, and return to the main key for the close of the cantata.

"Let the dreadful engines," the bass song in the same opera as the above, has two different airs in complete form interchanged with recitatives.

The group of movements in Handel's Messiah, beginning with "Thy rebuke," is also a cantata. Though this is now often divided between two voices, soprano and tenor, there is nothing in the original to show any change of voice. It begins with the accompanied recitative, "Thy rebuke hath broken His heart;" an air follows, "Behold and see," which is in a form similar to the ballad-sonata, with half-way rest on the dominant chord (not key) with modulation and with return to full cadence in the original key. More recitative follows, "He was cut off," and another air, "But Thou did'st not leave," completes the series. This last movement is a complete sonata—with tonic and dominant sections, with return to the main key, and transposition of some of the dominant ideas, and with coda.

Oliveria Prescott.

(To be continued.)

Fracas between Operatic Singers.—Signor Elli Tecchi surrendered at the Marlborough Street police-office to his bail on the charge of having assaulted Signor Campobello on Sunday afternoon.—Mr Abraham Abrahams prosecuted, and Mr Brandon defended the prisoner.—Signor Enrico Campobello deposed that he was an operatic singer, and the prisoner had served in his troupe. On Sunday afternoon, at about 2.30, he was talking to a friend in Arundel Street, when Tecchi came up, and without any further provocation than an old quarrel, struck him three violent blows, exclaiming at the same time in French, "I have long been looking for the opportunity of giving you a thrashing; but I will now have the satisfaction of administering one to you." The prisoner then jumped into a cab, and the prosecutor followed, but in the course of the struggle the latter was thrown out. The cab was detained, however, and Signor Tecchi was given into custody. While in the cab the prisoner expressed regret that he had not a knife. Under cross-examination, Signor Campobello denied that he struck the first blow or that he had used offensive expressions to Signor Tecchi.—Several witnesses were examined, one of whom swore that the prosecutor first entered the cab and Signor Tecchi tried to pull him out.—Mr Newton ordered that Signor Tecchi should be bound over in his own recognizances in £20 to keep the peace for three months.

Royal Academy of Music.—The competition for the Sterndale Bennett scholarship took place on Monday. The examiners were Messrs Cox, Garcia, Walter Macfarren, Dr Steggall, and the Principal (chairman). There were seven candidates, and the scholarship was awarded to George William F. Crowther. In the competition for the Parepa-Rosa scholarship the examiners were Messrs Cox, Garcia, and the Principal (chairman). There were forty-one candidates, and the scholarship was awarded to Kate Winifred Payne.

Digitized by Google

BRINLEY RICHARDS ON WELSH MUSIC.

(From the "South Wales Daily News.")

Mr Brinley Richards has done so much for the honour of his native country, and especially its music, that anything he might say upon the history or characteristics of Welsh music will be listened to with respect. He cannot, at any rate, be charged with any bias against his own country, nor is he likely to be unduly tempted to underrate Welsh music, or to defraud his countrymen of any credit they may have earned as inventors or discoverers in a field on which they have won, and still go on winning, many laurels. In the remarks which Mr Richards made last night he touched upon a very delicate question, one of those subjects which almost invariably excite heart-burnings, and lead to much unpleasantness. No nation likes to be robbed even of legendary fame. The man who tries to prove that what has long been boasted of as a national gem of great value and antiquity is only a bit of glass of recent manufacture, is not likely to be cordially thanked for his discovery. We all profess to be passionately devoted to the truth; but it must be admitted that there are errors and even superstitions with which it is hard to part. There will, therefore, be many Welshmen who will not be ready at once to give their assent to the observations made last night by Mr Richards on the age of Welsh music as a science, or the claims of the Welsh to a certain old manuscript which accredits them with discoveries and inventions in the school of music long before other nations had any idea of such things. We do not believe that a true history of music will ever, or can ever, be written. Song and verse are older than writing. We can easily imagine a time when the most musical people in the world were anything but musical, according to modern notions. What the music of the Temple was in the time of Solomon is a subject of dispute. It certainly had little in common with that which has made the name of Mr Brinley Richards famous, not only among his own countrymen, but wherever modern music is admired. Nor need we go back to the days of Solomon. We may refer to the tunes which appear in old translations of the Psalms, and also to the so-called Gregorian chants, and to many other evidences of growth in the knowledge and in the appreciation of music. In all probability the history of music, if it could be faithfully written, would record a slow development such as we see in children, who, while they soon learn to yield to the soothing strains of simple melodies, are quite unable to perceive the discords which they produce when they attempt to sing. As for the so-called Welsh manuscripts of the 11th century, Mr Richards evidently expresses his doubts with some degree of reluctance, as any Welshman might be expected to do who would gladly leave his countrymen in possession of every coveted distinction; but it is clear that he is forced by his convictions to throw discredit upon them as trustworthy documents. Without entering into all the evidences in favour of or against the alleged age and origin of these documents, it would be very unfair to express an opinion. But apart altogether from this, there are many valuable hints which an authority like Mr Richards may give to his music-loving countrymen. As an interpreter of different styles of music he can render them good service. The great masters have fortunately been able to express their ideas on paper, and to leave behind them the monuments of their genius. The mere mechanical player cannot give us any idea of what these master-minds invented. Genius must interpret genius. We need not stay to inquire what relationship there is between the genius who invents and the genius who interprets; but we know from experience that the compositions of Bach, Handel, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, and others would be little better than dead letters, were there not appreciative minds like Mr Brinley Richards to take their works as they find them in the shape of mere marks or impressions on paper, and make them rise, so to speak, from the dead, and sing again as they sang when their now long-departed creators called them into existence. Of Mr Richards' ability as an interpreter his countrymen have reason to be proud.

Cardiff, March 28.

CHERUBINI.

(Continued from page 201.)

Such was the very remarkable and justly renowned artist to whom Cherubini resolved to apply for advice and lessons which he felt he still needed, and by means of which he resolved to perfect his musical education. It must be allowed not only that his choice was a happy one, but that he was singularly favoured by chance. Sarti, especially after 1779, at which period he was entrusted with the task of directing the music in the Cathedral of Milan, was overwhelmed with work; the attention exacted by his official duties, the numerous compositions he had to write for the Cathedral, the operas demanded from him on all sides, the journeys he was compelled to make to superintend the getting-up and preside at the performance of these operas, implied an excessive amount of labour and did not allow him a moment's repose. Aware, when he received Cherubini, with what kind of person he had to do, and the confidence he could place in him, having the young man, moreover, always at his side and being able to guide him as he chose, he conceived the idea of making an anonymous fellow labourer of him and of discharging on his pupil's shoulders a portion of the work that weighed upon his own. With this intent he soon adopted the habit of having the airs for the secondary characters in his operas composed by Cherubini. We know that the Italian public, especially at that period, attached importance only to the leading characters in a dramatic work, they did not trouble themselves in the least about the due proportion and the general balance of a vast composition; two or three airs entrusted to the important personages, one or two showy duets, and a grand concerted piece was not merely all they wanted, but all to which they listened; the rest was considered as simple padding, and the benevolent audience, after eagerly listening to the fashionable artist or the fashionable air, retired to the back of their box to discuss quietly their personal affairs during the execution of the other pieces.

It was the "other pieces" which Cherubini, as soon as he arrived, was commissioned by Sarti to write. The reader must perceive what a piece of good fortune it was for a young musician training for the stage to be entrusted with such work and under such conditions. Without running any danger, without incurring real responsibility, since his name was not made public, writing under the eye and guidance of the master, who was always ready to correct faults and eliminate errors, the pupil served in the most practical and certain manner his apprenticeship as a dramatic composer, gaining experience of the stage and a knowledge of orchestral effects, at the same time that he was learning to turn to account and develop his ideas, and training himself to the right use of lyrical declamation. There could be no better and no more profitable school for an artist endowed with good natural gifts, and we can easily understand that, after a course of this description, Cherubini was able to brave the stage on his own account, armed as he was from head to foot and possessing precocious experience. And it was not long before he did so. He had been scarcely more than two years with Sarti before he went to Alexandria to bring out his first opera, returning afterwards to his master, who was still in Milan, and resuming his studies with him. However, I cannot do better, as regards this little known epoch of his life, than reproduce the following extract from the notice dictated by him to de Beauchesne; the information—as we may well conceive—being more precise than anywhere else:

In 1778, Leopold II., Grand Duke of Tuscany, whose enlightened taste rendered him the friend and patron of artists, granted the young composer Cherubini a pension, which enabled him to go to Bologna, where the celebrated Sarti resided, as he wished to complete his education under him. Sarti conceived a friendship for his pupil, to whom he gave excellent advice, which strengthened him in the science of counterpoint and of ideal style. During the time Cherubini remained with this master, the latter, when visiting different towns of Italy, for the purpose of composing operas, always took Cherubini with him, and even entrusted him, the better to exercise the young man's powers, or when he himself was too much pressed by his numerous occupations, with the composition of the second parts in his operas, so that the master's scores contain many pieces due to the inspiration of his pupil.* In the year 1779, Cherubini

* Elsewhere—in the very summary notice he placed at the head of the chronological catalogue of his works—Cherubini again says:—"It was by this great master's lessons and advice that I formed myself in counterpoint and went to Milan with his master, who had just been appointed chapel master in the Cathedral there. In 1780, he was engaged to go and compose an opera at Alexandria, in Piedmont, for the autumn fair. This opera, in three acts, the first work he composed for the stage, was entitled, Il Quinto Fabio.† After having it performed, he returned to Sarti in Milan, as he was always accustomed to do, when he had been obliged temporarily to absent himself. He continued his studies with Sarti, and in 1781, composed several pieces, sacred and profane, five of which were interpolated in a comic opera acted at the Scala Theatre. In the course of 1781, he entered into an agreement to go and compose an opera at Venice, where, however, he did not stay long, because, while he was composing the opera, and before it was completed, the manager of the theatre became a bankrupt, and Cherubini returned to Sarti in Milan.

Digitized by Google

Having been engaged the preceding year for Florence, where he was to compose an opera, he set out at the commencement of 1782, and, in the month of January, produced Armida (in three acts) at the Teatro della Pergola. After its production, he did not return to Sarti, because he had been engaged, for the spring of the same year, to go to Leghorn and compose an opera with which to open the new theatre there, sometime in the month of May. This work, in three acts, was entitled, Adriano in Siria. On his return to Florence, he was again engaged to compose an opera, also in three acts, entitled, Messenzio, which was played in that town on the 8th September, at the Teatro della Pergola. It is from this epoch that we must date the cessation of his studies with Sarti, whom he saw only once subsequently at Parma, when that master had composed an opera entitled, Alessandro e Timoteo.

(To be continued.)

A GLEE FOR MEN'S VOICES.*

Could a man be secure, when he takes him a wife,
That her love would endure to the end of his life,
Who wouldn't be ready and haste for the ring?
But, steady, boys, steady, we bachelors sing.
You mustn't go courting
Like butterflies sporting:
Remember that marriage will last all your life.

Could a man be secure that the girl who seems sweet
Would always be sensible, kind, and discreet,
Never sharpen her voice into scolding too shrill
He would soon make his choice and let Love have his will.
But ware, friends, surprises,
For wisdom advises
To look ere you leap, and stand firm on your feet.

But if you discover, by using your eyes,
A girl, when you love her, has the sense to be wise,
To be true in the dark hour, and sweet in the glad,
Secure her, my brother, while she's to be had:
For a man may be sure
That a wife that is pure,
And honest, and sweet, is a prize, is a prize.

* Copyright. ARCHER GURNEY.

Mrs Watts-Hughes gave a free concert at the Holloway Hall, under the management of the Messrs Tennyson, to a large and enthusiastic audience. Among the performers were Lady Colin Campbell, Miss Gladstone, the Hon. Spencer Lyttleton, Mrs Watts-Hughes, Miss Williams, Miss Colthurst, and Miss King. The last mentioned played a solo on the drum descriptive of a battle-piece. A selection of old English madrigals was sung by Dr Champney's amateur choir.

dramatic composition. When I was with him he made me compose, to exercise myself and relieve him in his labours, all the airs of the second characters in his operas. These airs, which were not published under my name, are not included in the present catalogue, and I do not possess one of them; they are scattered about in my master's scores." It is worthy of remark that Cherubini has nowhere mentioned the titles of those among Sarti's works for which he wrote the airs in question. If we may consider exact the dates given by Fétis in his article on Sarti, the following must evidently be the works: Gli Amanti consolati, 1779; Fra due Litiganti il Terzo gode, 1780; Scipione, 1780; Achille in Sciro, Florence, 1781; L'Incognito, Bologna, 1781; and Giulio Sabino, Venice, 1781. This last was considered Sarti's best opera in the serious style; as for that entitled Fra due Litiganti, which is comic, its success was immense, and there was not a town in Italy where it was not performed.

† "This was my first opera. I was then just turned nineteen," he says in the Chronological Catalogue of his works.

WAIFS.

Wagner's Meistersinger has been revived at Leipsic.

Mathilde Mallinger has been starring at Dortmund.

Johann Strauss has abandoned his concert-tour in America.

The tenor, Stagno, is engaged at the Teatro Costanzi, Rome.

Mr William Dorrell is passing the Easter recess at his residence in Sussex.

A new Politeama Gra is being erected on the site of that burnt down at Alexandria.

An execution was lately put in the Union Amphitheatre, Montevideo, for unpaid rates.

Theodor Wachtel has been singing at Breslau in Le Postillon de Lonjumeau (of course).

Carl Rheinthaler's Kätchen von Heilbronn has been produced at the Theatre Royal, Dresden.

Joseffy, the pianist, was announced to play in Boston (U.S.) on the 15th, 19th, and 22nd inst.

After an interval of thirty-three years, Halévy's Guido et Gienèvra has been revived at Hamburgh.

The title of Professor has been conferred on Dr Brosig, chapelmaster of the Cathedral, Breslau.

Georges Nadaud has returned to Paris from Nice, his Villa Pandore being closed till next winter.

Among the artists at a recent concert at the Teatro Bellini, Naples, were Bottesini and Cotogni.

A new opera, Il Sortilegio, by Sig. Scontrino, will be produced this season at the Teatro Alfieri, Turin.

Liszt returns in Passion Week from Pesth to Weimar. (Unhappy Pesth! Happy Weimar!—Dr Blunge.)

The Duke of Coburg's opera, Diana von Solange, has been performed at the Stadttheater, Königsberg.

In No. 13 of Die Musikwelt, Dr Max Goldstein announces that the paper in question will be discontinued.

J. S. Bach's Passion Music was to be given on Good Friday by the Handel and Haydn Society, Boston, U.S.

A new opera, La Tempestad, book by Don Ramos Carrion, music by Don Ruperto Chapi, is now playing in Madrid.

A new opera, Marino Spinola, by Sig. Augusto Jocteau, is in preparation at the Teatro Vittorio Emmanuele, Turin.

Bottesini has purchased an idyllico-fantastic libretto, La Figlia dell' Angelo, for the purpose of setting it to music.

Alejandro Rey, pianist, "first prize" at the Conservatory, Madrid, has been playing with success at concerts in Lisbon.

Bertall, the French caricaturist, is dead. He was born on the 18th December, 1820. His real name was d'Arnoux.

Donadio (the beauty!) is engaged for three nights at the Teatro Bellini, Naples.—(I shall go to Naples.—Dr Blunge.)

The girl-violinist, Teresa Tua, has had the distinguished honour of playing before Verdi at his winter palace in Genoa.

The Teatro Principal, Barcelona, opens on the 9th inst. for Italian opera. The season is to last till the end of May.

Massenet lately visited Angers, to conduct, at the Popular Concerts, an unpublished orchestral suite of his, entitled Scènes de Féerie.

Gounod's Tribut de Zamorra at the Teatro Regio, Turin, has "achieved" a complete fiasco. It was given four times and then shelved. It has also turned out a failure at Lyons.

The Municipal Council of Lubeck have appointed Hasemann manager of the Stadttheater, which is largely subsidized by the Corporation.

After two performances of Goldmark's Regina di Saba at the Teatro Apollo, Rome, Bruschi-Chiatti gave up her part (Sulamid) to Contarini.

The Commissioners for examining the theatres of Germany with a view to safety in case of fire, report favourably of Wagner's Theatre at Bayreuth.

A subscription, which Liszt heads with 300 francs, has been opened for erecting a monument over the grave of Hector Berlioz at Montmartre.

Miss Victoria de Bunsen, who is now recovering from her late severe illness, has gone to Bournemouth for a few weeks. All who have the pleasure of knowing the esteemed Swedish contralto hope that she will return in perfect health, and able to fulfil her numerous engagements during the ensuing season.

Digitized by Google

THE GRESHAM LECTURES.—Dr Wylde's lectures on music, at Gresham College, are announced for the 30th and 31st of May and 1st and 2nd of June.

De Giosa's Rabagas has been produced at the Teatro Argentina, Rome. Composer multitudinously recalled on the first night.—(30,000 times.—Dr Blidge.)

Instead of Wagner's Rienzi, already in rehearsal, Donizetti's Duca d'Alba will be given at the Teatro San Carlo, Naples. (Much of a muchness.—Dr Blidge.)

The Royal Prussian Chamber-Musicians, Gantenberg, Wieprecht, and Pohl, by a cabinet-order of the Emperor, are created "Royal Prussian Chamber-Virtuosos."

The baritone, Ugo Franceschi, lately at the Teatro Apollo, Rome, has, it is said, inherited £12,000.—(Which enables him to snap his fingers at Apollo.—Dr Blidge.)

Sixty fair members of the aristocracy of Palermo will, for a charitable purpose, sing, at the Politeama, in Mozart's Stabat Mater.—(Query—Rossini's?—Dr Blidge.)

There is some talk of appointing Léon Jéhin, conductor at the Theatre, Antwerp, sub-conductor at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, Brussels, in place of Warnots, who has seceded.

A successful performance of Gounod's Philémon et Baucis has been given at the Casino dell' Unione, Naples. Smeroschi, an old favourite at our Royal Italian Opera, was the Shepherdess.

Paul Bulss, Dresden, is offered an engagement to sustain the leading character in Nessler's Rattenfänger von Hameln, when that opera is performed in London.—(When, oh, when!—Dr Blidge.)

Mathilde Mallinger wished to have Taubert's Cesario revived for her farewell appearance at the Royal Operahouse, Berlin, but this being, happily, out of the question, Gounod's Roméo et Juliette was substituted.

Lola Beeth, a young pupil of Mdme Dustmann's, Vienna, has made a "hit" as Elsa, at the Royal Operahouse, Berlin. (Everybody seems to "make a hit" as Elsa; and yet there has only been one Elsa.—Dr Blidge.)

The death of F. Kücken, the composer of numerous German Lieder, &c., and successor to Lindpaintner as Court conductor at Stuttgart, is announced as having taken place at Schwerin, where he lived during his latter years.

"Ecce Sacerdos Magnus," the appropriate hymn composed by Professor Glover for the return from Rome of His Eminence the late Cardinal Cullen, has been performed, with chorus and full orchestra, with great effect at the opening of the new church of St David's, Swansea.

FAREWELL.*

'Tis very hard to bid farewell,
When we from lov'd ones part,
It sinks like friendship's dying knell,
Deep, deep into the heart.

Sometimes to part in hope. Alas!
Always to part in pain,
And often many years will pass,
E'er next we meet again.

Sometimes no more on earth to meet,
Yet one bright hope is giv'n
By Him who makes life to us sweet,
The hope to meet in Heav'n.

*Copyright.

EMILY JOSEPHS.

Advertisements.

Just Published.

DANSE PYRRHIQUE.

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By

BROWNLOW BAKER.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Where may be obtained, Composed by Brownlow Baker, "Bourrée," in E flat, 4s; "Memory" (Romance), 3s.

PLAYED BY MDLLE KREBS.

LISZT'S "TARANTELLE DE LA MUETTE DE PORTICI" ("MASANIELLO"). 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

CHAPPELL'S VOCAL LIBRARY OF PART-SONGS, &c.

		Composed or Arranged by	Price
1.	Dulce Domum. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
2.	Down among the Dead Men. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
3.	The Girl I've left behind me. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
4.	British Grenadiers. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
5.	Long live England's Future Queen. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
6.	My task is ended (Song and Chorus). A.T.B.B.	... Balfe	4d.
7.	Thus spake one Summer's Day. S.A.T.B.	... Abt	2d.
8.	Soldiers' Chorus. T.T.B.B.	Gounod	4d.
9.	The Kermesse (Scene from Faust)	,,	6d
10.	Up, quit thy bower. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	4d.
11.	Maidens, never go a-wooing. S.S.T.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
12.	Fagot Binders' Chorus	Gounod	4d.
13.	Sylvan Hours (for Six Female Voices)	Joseph Robinson	6d.
14.	The Gipsy Chorus	... Balfe	4d.
15.	Ave Maria	Arcadelt	1d.
16.	Hark! the Herald Angels sing. S.A.T.B.	Mendelssohn	1d.
17.	England Yet (Solo and Chorus). S.A.T.B.	Jules Benedict	2d.
18.	The Shepherd's Sabbath Day. S.A.T.B.	J. L. Hatton	2d.
19.	Thoughts of Childhood. S.A.T.B.	Henry Smart	2d.
20.	Spring's Return. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
21.	An old Church Song. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
22.	Sabbath Bells. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
23.	Serenade. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
24.	Cold Autumn Wind. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
25.	Orpheus with his Lute. S.S.S.	Bennett Gilbert	2d.
26.	Lullaby. S.A.A.	,,	1d.
27.	This is my own, my native land. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
28.	March of the Men of Harlech. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
29.	God save the Queen. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
30.	Rule, Britannia. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
31.	The Retreat. T.T.B.B.	L. de Rille	2d.
32.	Lo! morn is breaking. S.S.S.	Cherubini	2d.
33.	We are Spirits. S.S.S.	G. A. Macfarren	4d.
34.	Market Chorus (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	Auber	4d.
35.	The Prayer (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
36.	The Water Sprites. S.A.T.B.	Kücken	2d.
37.	Eve's glittering Star. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
38.	When first the Primrose. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
39.	O Dewdrop bright. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
40.	Sanctus from the Messe Solennelle. S.A.T.B.	Rossini	4d.
41.	Nine Kyries, Ancient and Modern	,,	2d.
42.	Sun of my soul. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	2d.
43.	'Twas fancy, and the ocean's spray. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
44.	A Prayer for those at Sea. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
45.	O Thou whose power (Prayer from Mose in Egitto)	Rossini	2d.
46.	The Guard on the Rhine. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
47.	The German Fatherland. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
48.	The Lord is my Shepherd (Quartet). S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
49.	Te Deum in F	Jackson	2d.
50.	Te Deum in F	Nares	2d.
51.	Charity (La Carita). S.S.S.	Rossini	4d.
52.	Cordelia. A.T.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	4d.
53.	I know. S.A.T.B.	Walter Hay	2d.
54.	Chorus of Handmaidens (from Fridolin)	A. Randegger	4d.
55.	The Offertory Sentences	Edmund Rogers	4d.
56.	The Red Cross Knight	Dr. Callcott	2d.
57.	The Chough and the Crow	Sir H. R. Bishop	3d.
58.	The "Carnovale"	Rossini	2d.
59.	Softly falls the moonlight	Edmund Rogers	4d.
60.	Air by Himmel	Henry Leslie	2d.
61.	Offertory Sentences	E. Sauerbrey	4d.
62.	The Resurrection	C. Villiers Stanford	6d.
63.	Our Boys (new Patriotic Song)	H. J. Byron and W. M. Lutz	4d.
64.	The Men of Wales	Brinley Richards	2d.
65.	Dame Durden	... ...	1d.
66.	A little Farm well tilled	Hook	1d.
67.	There was a simple maiden	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
68.	Fair Hebe	,,	1d.
69.	Once I loved a maiden fair	,,	1d.
70.	The jovial man of Kent	,,	1d.
71.	The oak and the ash	,,	1d.
72.	Heart of Oak	,,	1d.
73.	Come to the sunset tree	W. A. Philpott	4d.
74.	May. S.A.T.B.	W. F. Banks	2d.
75.	Pure, lovely innocence (Il Roi de Lahore—Chorus for Female Voices)	G. Massenet	4d.
76.	A Love Idyl. S.A.T.B.	E. R. Terry	2d.
77.	Hail to the Woods! A.T.T.B.	J. Yarwood	2d.
78.	Near the town of Taunton Dean	Thomas J. Dudeney	2d.
79.	Our merry boys at sea	J. Yarwood	2d.
80.	The Shepherd's Farewell. S.A.T.B.	Berlioz	3d.
81.	When the sun sets o'er the mountains (Il Demonio)	A. Rubinstein	3d.
82.	Hymn of Nature	Beethoven	3d.
83.	Michaelmas Day (Humorous Part Songs, No. 1)	Walter Maynard	4d.
84.	Sporting Notes (Humorous Part Songs, No. 2)	Walter Maynard	4d.
85.	Austrian National Hymn	Haydn	4d.

LONDON:

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND STREET, W.

CITY BRANCH—14 & 15, POULTRY.

Digitized by Google

SHORT PIECES FOR THE ORGAN.

EDITED AND ARRANGED BY

WILLIAM SPARK, Mus. Doc.,

Organist of the Town Hall, Leeds.

PRICE OF EACH BOOK, FOUR SHILLINGS.

CONTENTS OF BOOK I.

PRAYER	Arcadelt
ANDANTINO D major	Batiste
LARGHETTO	Spohr
ALLA MARCIA, D major	Chopin
ANDANTINO, F major	W. Spark
ANDANTE, C major	W. H. Nichols

CONTENTS OF BOOK III.

ADAGIO RELIGIOSO, "Hymn of Praise"	Mendelssohn
ADAGIO, F major	Pleyel
SARABANDE, D minor	J. S. Bach
GAVOTTE, D major	J. S. Bach
PRELUDE	E. W. Healey

CONTENTS OF BOOK V.

MODERATO and ALLEGRO, from the 7th Concerto	Corelli
ANDANTE GRAZIOSO	Dussek
ANDANTE, from the Concerto in G minor	Mendelssohn
ANDANTE, from Op. 83	Stephen Heller
"BUT THOU DIDST NOT LEAVE"	Handel

CONTENTS OF BOOK VII.

TRUMPET VOLUNTARY	Purcell
DUET, from the "Vater unser"	Spohr
ICH GROLLE NICHT, Song	Schumann
ANDANTE, from the 12th Symphony	Mozart
MINUET and TRIO, from do.	Mozart

CONTENTS OF BOOK IX.

VOLUNTARY, Andante, A major	Samuel Wesley
CHORUS "So shalt thou gain" ("Hercules")	Handel
ANDANTINO, F major	S. Neukomm
INTRODUCTION to the Third Part of "The Creation"	Haydn
ANDANTE, Air for Soprano	Lindpaintner

CONTENTS OF BOOK XI.

ROMANZA, from the Second Concerto	Mozart
QUINTETT, "Giuri ognuno"	Rossini
ADAGIO CANTABILE, Sonata Pathétique	Beethoven
BOURRÉE, D major	Handel

CONTENTS OF BOOK XIII.

LORD, REMEMBER DAVID	Handel
L'ADDIO	Schubert
DIAPASON MOVEMENT	J. P. Kirnberger
CARO MIO BEN	Giordani
O SALUTARIS HOSTIA	Auber

CONTENTS OF BOOK XV.

AVE VERUM	Mozart
MARCH, C major	Purcell
ANDANTINO, G major	Dussek
ANDANTE MAESTOSO, Overture, "Tannhäuser"	Wagner
CONCLUDING VOLUNTARY, C major	Hesse

CONTENTS OF BOOK XVII.

ADAGIO, B flat, "La Malinconia"	Beethoven
AIR, "Verdi prati"	Handel
LARGHETTO, Theme from Op. 9	Dussek
LARGHETTO, F major	W. Kanss
ANDANTE SOSTENUTO, C minor	F. Hiller

CONTENTS OF BOOK XIX.

ARIETTA CON CORO, "Invano alcun desir"	Gluck
O SALUTARIS	Batiste
PRELUDE, C major	Beethoven
ANDANTE, F major	Mozart

CONTENTS OF BOOK II.

VOLUNTARY	J. S. Bach
ADAGIO	Louis Spohr
ANDANTINO	D. Hemingway
MARCH in "Scipio"	Handel
PRELUDE	E. W. Prevost

CONTENTS OF BOOK IV.

ANDANTE, "Julius Cæsar"	Handel
PRAYER, Larghetto Maestoso	Bellini
MARCIA RELIGIOSO	Gluck
ANDANTE CANTABILE, Trio, C minor	Beethoven
PRELUDE	August Wilhelm Bach

CONTENTS OF BOOK VI.

MARCH, from the Second Set of Sonatas	Handel
PRELUDE	Gebhardi
ANDANTE MOLTO CANTABILE, from Sonata, Op. 109	Beethoven
LARGHETTO	Weber
ANDANTE SOSTENUTO	Mendelssohn

CONTENTS OF BOOK VIII.

AVE MARIA	Cherubini
ADAGIO, from the Symphony in G major. No. 16	Haydn
ALLA MARCIA	Michael Haydn
ANDANTE QUASI LARGHETTO	Dussek
INTERMEZZO	W. Spark

CONTENTS OF BOOK X.

MARCH, D major	Hummel
PIE JESU, from the "Requiem Mass"	Cherubini
MELODY, F major	Adolphe Nordmann
AIR, "Ne men con l'ombri" ("Xerxes")	Handel
ANDANTE MODERATO, C major	F. Lachner

CONTENTS OF BOOK XII.

CHANT DE BERCEAU, from Op. 81	Stephen Heller
ANDANTE, G minor, from a Sonata	Haydn
ADAGIO, D major, from a Sonata	Pinto
TRÄUMEREI, Lento, F major	R. Schumann

CONTENTS OF BOOK XIV.

SPIRTO GENTIL	Donizetti
MODERATO, Alla Marcia	Donizetti
MINUET, E major	Handel
LARGHETTO, 7th Concerto	Mozart

CONTENTS OF BOOK XVI.

THEME, C major, from Concerto, Op. 64	Mendelssohn
CHORUS, "Les Huguenots"	Meyerbeer
RECITATIVE, "Armida dispietata" / ARIA, "Lascia ch'io pianga"	Handel
MINUET, D major	Haydn
VOLKSLIED, G major	Old German

CONTENTS OF BOOK XVIII.

AVE MARIA, Soprano Air	Batiste
ADAGIO, E flat	J. S. Bach
ANDANTE GRAZIOSO, D major	Beethoven
FUGUE, C major	H. Jaeschke

CONTENTS OF BOOK XX.

ORGAN THEME, A flat	A. Hesse
THEME, A flat	F. Schubert
CHORUS, "We therefore pray Thee" (Dettingen "Te Deum")	Handel
VOLKSLIED, "Hope"	Mendelssohn
ANDANTINO, F major	Gluck

LONDON: ASHDOWN & PARRY, HANOVER SQUARE.

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA,

COVENT GARDEN.

(LIMITED.)

The Opera Season of 1882 will commence on TUESDAY, APRIL 18th.

The following are the Arrangements for the Season, and they will be adhered to as nearly as circumstances will permit:—

ENGAGEMENTS.

Mdme ADELINA PATTI, Mdme SEMBRICH,
Mdme FÜRSCH-MADIER,
Mdlle OLGA BERGHI (her First Appearance in England),
Mdlle ALWINA VALLERIA, Mdlle VELMI, Mdlle GUERCIA,
Mdlle SONNINO, Mdme CORSI,
and
Mdme ALBANI (Court Singer to H.M. the Emperor of Germany).

An Engagement has also been arranged with
Mdme PAULINE LUCCA,
Who will appear, during the Season, in several of the Characters by which she gained her great reputation in England.

Mdme TREBELLI, Mdlle GHIOTTI,
and
Mdlle AMELIE STAHL (her First Appearance in England),

Signor NICOLINI, Signor MIERZWINSKY,
Signor LESTELLIER (his First Appearance in England), Mons. VERGNET,
Signor FRAPOLLI (his First Appearance at the Royal Italian Opera),
Signor MASSART (his First Appearance in England),
Mons. SOULACROIX,
Signor IGENIO CORSI, Signor MANFREDI, Signor FILLE,
and
Signor MASINI.

Signor COTOGNI, Mons. BOUHY (his First Appearance in England),
Signor MAURICE DEVRIES (his First Appearance in England),
Mons. DUFRICHE (his First Appearance in England),
Signor UGHETTI, and Signor PANDOLFINI.

Mons. GAILHARD,
Mons. DAUPHIN, Mons. GRESSE, Signor SILVESTRI, Signor SCOLARA,
Signor RAGUER, and Signor DE RESZKÉ.

Conductors, Composers, and Directors of the Music:
Signor BEVIGNANI,
Mons. JOSEPH DUPONT.

Director of Private Concerts: Sir JULIUS BENEDICT, to whom all applications for Artists should be addressed.

Principal Danseuses:
Mdlle ADELINA GEDDA (her First Appearance in England),
Mdlle L. REUTERS, Mdlle E. REUTERS, Mdlle REUTERS.

Maestro al Piano	Signor BISACCIA.
Assistant Stage Manager	Signor LAGO.
Principal Violin Solo	Mr CARRODUS.
Leader of the Military Band	Herr L. SAAR.
Leader of the Ballet	Mr BETJEMANN.
Organist	Mr PITTMAN.
Maitre de Ballet	Mons. HANSEN.
Suggeritori	Signor FORTUNATI and Signor SONNINO.
Repetiteur de Chœur	Signor CARLO CORSI.
Decorator	Mr LABHART.
Machinist	Mr. WHITE.

The personnel of
THE ORCHESTRA as well as that of THE CHORUS
Will remain nearly the same as last Season.

It is announced, with great regret, that, in consequence of failing health, Signor TAGLIAFICO, who has been connected with the Royal Italian Opera, as Artiste and, latterly, as Stage Manager, for over Thirty Years, is compelled to resign his position.

Stage Manager:
Mons. LAPISSIDA (of the Théâtre de la Monnaie, Brussels).

Artistes Costumières	Mdme DUBREUIL, Mons. FEIGNAERT, &c., &c.
Scenic Artists	Mr DAYES, Mr CANEY, and Assistants.

During the Season a Selection will be made of those Operas of the Répertoire which have, from time to time, proved to be the most acceptable to the Subscribers and the Public, in addition to which, will be produced—

LENEPVEU'S Opera, "VELLEDA," principal characters by Mdme ADELINA PATTI and Signor NICOLINI.

BOÏTO'S Opera, "MEFISTOFELE," principal characters by Mdme ALBANI, Mdme TREBELLI, Mons. BOUHY, Signor MASINI.

BIZET'S Opera, "CARMEN."

And, if time should permit, towards the end of the season, MASSENET'S Opera, "HERODIADE," principal characters by Mdme ALBANI, Mdlle STAHL, Signor MIERZWINSKY.

An entirely New Italian Version has been made of "IL FLAUTO MAGICO," principal characters by Mdme SEMBRICH, Mdme FÜRSCH-MADIER, Mdlle VALLERIA, Signori COTOGNI, VERGNET, and GRESSE.

MEYERBEER'S Opera, "L'AFRICAINE," will also be given during the Season, with the following powerful Cast: Selika, Mdme PAULINE LUCCA; and Inez, Mdme ALBANI; Vasco di Gama, Signor LESTELLIER; Nelusco, Signor PANDOLFINI.

FLORAL HALL CONCERTS.

The Floral Hall Concerts will take place as in previous Seasons.

THE SUBSCRIPTION WILL CONSIST OF THIRTY-FOUR NIGHTS, but as there will (after the first week) be regularly Four Opera Nights in each week, viz., Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, Subscribers will, by making known their wishes at the commencement of the season, have the choice of selecting either Two (or more) of those Four Nights.  The attention of Subscribers is particularly requested to this privilege.

TERMS (for Thirty-Four Nights).

Boxes on the Second Tier	(for Four Persons)	...	...	...	70	Guineas.	Boxes on the Pit Tier (for Four Persons)	... ...	185	Guineas.
Ditto First Tier, at the Side	„	...	...	...	100	„	Orchestra Stalls	each	35	„
Ditto do. Central	„	...	...	...	140	„	Balcony Stalls	do.	21	„
Ditto Grand Tier	„	...	...	...	200	„	Amphitheatre Stalls, first and Second Rows	do.	16	„

All Subscriptions to be Paid in Advance.

N.B.—Shareholders to the amount of Twenty-five Shares and upwards will be entitled to a deduction of 20 per cent. on the above prices of subscription, and also to a deduction of 10 per cent. on all tickets for any single entertainment.

Subscribers of last Season are respectfully requested, if they wish to retain their Boxes or Stalls, to notify the same, at once, to MR EDWARD HALL, at the Box Office, under the Portico of the Theatre, where applications for Boxes and Stalls are to be made.

Also of Mr MITCHELL, Messrs LACON & OLLIER, Mr BUBB, Messrs CHAPPELL, and Mr OLLIVIER, Bond Street; Messrs LEADER & Co., 62, Piccadilly; Mr ALFRED HAYS, 4, Royal Exchange Buildings, and 26, Old Bond Street; and of Messrs KEITH, PROWSE & Co., 48, Cheapside.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN, March, 1882.

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, & SPALDING, at 3 and 5, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, April 8, 1882.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 60.—No. 15. SATURDAY, APRIL 15, 1882. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA,
COVENT GARDEN.

OPENING NIGHT OF THE SEASON.

TUESDAY Next, April 18th, MEYERBEER'S Opera, "LES HUGUENOTS" (concluding at the end of Third Act):—

Valentina	Mdme FURSCH-MADIER.
Margherita di Valois	Mdme VALLERIA.
Urbano	Mdme TREBELLI.
Conte di San Bris	Signor DE RESZKE.
Conte di Nevers	Signor COTOGNI.
Marcello	Signor GRESSE.
Huguenot Soldier	Signor CORSI.
and
Raoul di Nangis	Signor MIERZWINSKY.
Conductor	Signor BEVIGNANI.

The Incidental Divertissement will be supported by Mdlle Reuters.

Previous to the commencement of the Opera the National Anthem, "God Save the Queen," will be sung.

Doors open at 8.0; the Opera commences at 8.30. The Box Office, under the portico of the Theatre, is open from Ten till Five. Orchestra Stalls, £1 5s.; Side Boxes on the first tier, £3 3s.; Upper Boxes, £2 12s. 6d.; Balcony Stalls, 15s.; Pit Tickets, 7s.; Amphitheatre Stalls, 10s. 6d. and 5s.; Amphitheatre, 2s. 6d. Programmes, with full particulars, can be obtained of Mr Blward Hall, at the Box Office, under the Portico of the Theatre, where applications for Boxes and Stalls are to be made; also of Mr Mitchell, Messrs Lacon & Ollier, Mr Bubb, Messrs Chappell & Co., and Mr Ollivier, Bond Street; Messrs Leader & Co., 62, Piccadilly; Messrs Cramer & Co., 201, Regent Street; Mr Alfred Hays, 4, Royal Exchange Buildings, and 26, Old Bond Street; and of Messrs Keith, Prowse & Co., 48, Cheapside.

CRYSTAL PALACE SATURDAY CONCERT. THIS DAY, April 15th, at Three. The programme will include Overture, Euryanthe (Weber); Pianoforte Concerto in G minor (E. Schütt), first time in England; Pastoral Symphony (Beethoven); Introduction to Act III., Dance of Apprentices, and Procession of Master Singers, Die Meistersinger (Wagner). Vocalists—Mdme Sinico and Mr Henry Blaser (his first appearance.) Conductor—Mr AUGUST MANNS. Seats, 2s. 6d., 1s., and 6d.

MR GANZ'S FIRST ORCHESTRAL CONCERT, ST JAMES'S HALL, SATURDAY Afternoon next, April 22nd, at Three o'clock. The programme will include Liszt's Symphony to Dante's "Divina Commedia;" also Beethoven's Symphony in B flat, No. 4; Overture, Egmont; Violin Concerto (Mendelssohn), Violin—Herr Ondricek. Conductor—Mr GANZ. Sofa Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Balcony Stalls, 7s.; Area Stalls, 5s.; Balcony, 3s.; Admission, 1s. May be had at Austin's; Chappell & Co.; and of Mr WILHELM GANZ, 126, Harley Street, W.

PROFESSOR MICHAEL BERGSON (late Principal at the Conservatoire of Geneva) has the honour to inform his Friends and Pupils that his ANNUAL CONCERT will take place in the month of MAY, at ST GEORGE'S HALL. Particulars will be shortly issued. The following Compositions by Professor BERGSON will be introduced: "Concerto Symphonique," Op. 62, played with immense success by the Composer, at his Concerts in Paris, Geneva, and London; also his "Grande Polonaise Héroïque," for violin, as played by MM. Pollitzer, Castali, and Herr Joseph Ludwig, with distinguished success.

ST. GEORGE'S HALL.

PROFESSOR MICHAEL BERGSON'S GRAND ANNUAL CONCERT.—Prof. M. BERGSON begs to announce that the following popular Compositions of his will be performed early in May, viz.: "Il Ritorno," Rondo-Valse, sung by Miss Berta Foresta; "The Better World," sung by Miss Jessica O'Brien; "Serenade Moresque," sung by Signor Ria, tenor, San Carlo, Naples; Sacred Song, "At morn I beseech Thee," sung by Miss Alice Fairman; "The Two Hearts," sung by Mrs Furlong. Signor Ria will sing on this occasion, Ascher's popular Romance, "Alice, where art thou?" and also Mr W. H. Holmes's Song, "Memories Sweet and Sad" (the poetry by Mrs M. A. Baines).

MADAME MARIE ROZE'S PROVINCIAL TOUR.

MADAME MARIE ROZE will appear next week in CONCERTS at Tunbridge Wells, Hastings, Cheltenham, and Bath, under the direction of Mr Vert, to whom all communications should be addressed.—52, New Bond Street, W.

SIGNOR CIRO PINSUTI begs to announce that he hopes to RETURN to London on the 17th inst. Letters to be addressed care of LAMBORN COCK, 23, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Under the immediate patronage of
Her Most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN and the Royal Family.
President—The Right Hon. the Earl of DUDLEY.
Principal—Professor MACFARREN, Mus. D., Cantab.

The EASTER TERM will commence on MONDAY, April 24th, and terminate on SATURDAY, July 22nd.

Candidates for admission (bringing music they can perform) may be examined at the Institution on Saturday, April 22nd, at Eleven o'clock.

By order, JOHN GILL, Secretary.

Royal Academy of Music,
Tenterden Street, Hanover Square, W.

SCHUBERT SOCIETY. President—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT. Founder and Director—Herr SCHUBERTH. Sixteenth Season, 1882. Members are informed that the Second Concert (70th since formation of Society—Schumann's Compositions in first part of programme), will take place at the Langham Hall, on Thursday, 20th April. Ladies and Gentlemen desirous of joining the Society may have prospectus and full particulars on application to H. G. HOPPER, Hon. Sec., 244, Regent Street, W.

LONDON CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.—Principal—Mr LANSDOWNE COTTELL.

The Directors invite attention to the recent extension and increased accommodation, residential and otherwise.

Fees from Two Guineas per term, residential from Fourteen Guineas, inclusive of the Musical and Fine Art Lectures.

Free Tuition is awarded to talented young artists unable to pay fees by fund granted for this purpose.

Prospectus (one stamp), Hon. Sec., 6, Tavistock Square.

MR and Mdme BODDA'S (Miss LOUISA PYNE) ACADEMY FOR SINGING, Operatic and Miscellaneous. "BONALLY," 85 and 87, Cambridge Gardens, Notting Hill. Professional and Amateur. In and Out-Door Students. Studies—Singing (Private Lessons), Elocution, Piano, Deportment, Choral Practice, Italian. Prospectuses as above, or Mr STEDMAN, 12, Berners Street.

TO CONCERT GIVERS, &c.

THE LONDON ART GALLERIES, 23, BAKER STREET, W.—These Galleries are available in the Evenings for High-Class Chamber Concerts, Rehearsals, Readings, &c., for which their acoustic properties are eminently suited. For terms address—ADAM F. HARDY, Secretary, as above.

GERMAN CONDUCTOR, CHOIRMASTER, PROF. OF MUSIC.

A GERMAN Professor of Music from the Academy of Music, Berlin, pupil of Kullak, Dorn, Wüerst, seeks for a good Engagement as CONDUCTOR and (besides) as CHOIRMASTER. He is also an excellent and much-quested Pianist, Singing and Compositions Master of good name. Address send to Berlin, Post Office, No. 60, sub. A. B. F. G.

REMOVAL.

SIGNOR BEVIGNANI begs to announce his REMOVAL to No. 25, UPPER BEDFORD PLACE, RUSSELL SQUARE, W.C.

ORGAN FOR SALE.

CHURCH ORGAN (small) FOR SALE. Two Rows of Keys, 9 Stops, 2½ Octaves of Pedals. At present in use, but can be seen any time by applying to Mr GARSIDE, 159, Graham Road, Hackney.

"THE MESSAGE."

MR VERNON RIGBY will sing BLUMENTHAL'S admired Song, "THE MESSAGE," Wolverhampton, April 17; and at the Royal Albert Hall, April 22nd.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" and "THE MESSAGE."

MR DUNCAN FINLAY will sing at the Morley Hall, Hackney, on Monday next, April 17th, the popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU" (by desire), and BLUMENTHAL'S, Song, "THE MESSAGE."

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR GEORGE COX will sing ASCHER'S "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU," at Dorchester, on April 25th.

Digitized by Google

"THE MESSAGE."

MR CHARLES CHILLEY will sing BLUMENTHAL'S admired Song, "THE MESSAGE," at the Concert to be given by the Civil Service Vocal Union, on Wednesday evening, April 19.

"ANGELS' FOOD."

SIGNOR SCHIRA'S admired Song (for Tenor or Soprano), "ANGELS' FOOD" (Poetry by RITA), is published, price 4s., by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.—An Harmonium Part to the above Song is also published, price 1s.

NEW SONGS, with Words and Music by H. C. HILLER.

"IN THE HAVEN" (Tenor) Mr ABERCROMBIE'S new Song ... ... 4s.
"THY DEAR NAME" (Tenor or Soprano), Mr ABERCROMBIE'S new Song 4s.
"SWEETEST SLUMBER" (Tenor or Sop.), Mr FAULKNER LEIGH'S new Song 4s.
"THE QUEEN'S SHILLING" (Baritone), Mr HORSCROFT'S new Song ... 4s.
"THE BORDER RAIDER" (Baritone), Mr CHAPLIN HENRY'S new Song .. 4s.
Sent post free for 24 Stamps each.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

PARIS UNIVERSAL EXHIBITION, 1878, CLASS XIII.
Gold and Silver Medals, Paris, 1878. Gold Medal, Paris, 1879.
Gold Medal, Rome, 1880, and two Diplomas.

ARTISTIC HOUSE,
PARIS—10, RUE DU FAUBOURG-POISSONNIÈRE, 10—PARIS.

CH. J. B. COLLIN-MÉZIN,
Violin, Violoncello, and Bow Maker.

The celebrated VIOLINS and VIOLONCELLOS for SOLOISTS, which, since the adoption of the new system, are the only approved, recommended and played by the greatest Masters; among others, Messrs Sivori, Marsik, Hollmann, Léonard, Armingaud, Miss Marie Tayau, &c., &c.; Messrs Massart, Sauzay, Dancla, Franchomme, Maurin, Chevillard, Jacquard, &c., Professors at the Conservatoire of Music, Paris.

PRICES:—
Violin, £12; Tenor, £14; Violoncello, £20.
BOW in Pernambuco, Silver Mounted, first class, £1 4s.; Collin-Mézin, £1 12s.
Catalogues and Testimonials post free on application.

The only Gold Medal for Wind Instruments with Keys, in the Paris Universal Exhibition of 1878, was unanimously awarded by the Jury to Messrs P. GOUMAS & Co., for the fine quality of tone and finish of their Instruments.

SPECIAL MANUFACTORY OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS
FOR
CLARIONETS, FLUTES, PICCOLOS, OBOES, BASSOONS, COR ANGLAIS, FLAGEOLETS, AND SAXOPHONES.

P. GOUMAS & Co.
(Late BUFFET, CRAMPON & Co.),
Established 1830.

Nine Prize Medals have been awarded to GOUMAS & Co. for general excellence and improvements in the Manufacture of Wind Instruments with Keys.
Manufacturers of all kinds of Wood Wind Instruments for Military Bands, Musical Instrument Makers to Her Majesty's Army and Navy, and to the Armies, Navies, and Conservatoires of France, Belgium, Italy, Russia, Austria, Spain, America, &c.
Manufactory at Mantes (Seine et Oise), France. Paris: Passage du Grand Cerf, 18 et 20.
LONDON: 39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET.
Price Lists sent free on application.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,
MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF
ALL KINDS OF MUSIC STRINGS FOR ALL MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Sole Depôt for Signor ANDREA RUFFINI'S (of Naples) Celebrated Strings for Soloists, manufactured by him on a system invented by Mons. J. B. VUILLAUME, of Paris.
Sole Agent for CHARLES ALBERT'S (of Philadelphia, U.S.) new Patent Improved Chin Rest; also his improved String Gauge.
39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, W.
Price Lists free on application.
All kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner on powerful machines made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

Just Published.
THE BETTER WORLD.
Words by Mrs. M. A. BAINES.
Music by
MICHAEL BERGSON.
Composed expressly for and sung by Mdme MARIE ROZE; sung also by Mdmes SANDERINI, DE VANNEY, and Miss JESSICA O'BRIEN.
Price 4s.
London: STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

THE VOICE AND SINGING.
BY
ADOLFO FERRARI.
THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING,
Price 12s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.
"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

VOCAL EXERCISES COMPOSED BY FRANK MORI.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.
N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by the late FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

New Edition of "LE PETIT SOLFEGE."
LE PETIT SOLFEGE. Vingt Solfèges pour Voix de Mezzo-Soprano. Par JOS. CURCI. Price 6s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.
"This work for educational purposes will be found of inestimable value, since it is one of the very few which confines itself to the cultivation of the middle of the voice; and whilst the phrases are admirably adapted to develop the breathing powers and volume of the voice, the melodies are so exquisitely harmonized that they must prove of great benefit in the improvement of the taste and ear of a student in singing."—Pictorial World.

THE ART OF SINGING.
New Edition, Revised and Improved, of
A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR
THE VOICE.
By T. A. WALLWORTH.
A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdme Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklein, and other successful Vocalists.
Full Music Size, price 7s.
London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.
For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.
DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis, of Basingstoke, says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

LA POMPA DI FESTA. Grande Marche, pour Piano, à Quatre Mains. Par IGNACE GIBSONE. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"HER VOICE."
"HER VOICE." IGNACE GIBSONE'S popular Song (poetry by "A Soldier's Daughter"), sung by Mdme ENRIQUEZ, is published, price 4s., by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"PARADISE LOST." An Oratorio. Composed by ANTON RUBINSTEIN, on the Poem of MILTON. The English version of the words by JOSIAH PITTMAN. Paris: GERARD, 2, Rue Scribe.

THE DRAMA IN PORTMAN-MARKET.

Another MINOR RECORD.

(Concluded from page 207.)

The most noteworthy event of 1862 was the engagement, for six nights in April, of Mr Benjamin Webster, and Mr Paul Bedford, for whom Watts Phillipps's celebrated play, The Dead Heart, was got up. Miss Mandlebert, a once favourite actress, was to be seen here, in the pantomime at Christmas. Mr Arthur Stirling appeared in Macbeth and Hamlet during Passion Week, 1863, and Toole played for Mr Cave's benefit on Wednesday, the 1st of April, as did also Mr Belmore—now established as an actor of celebrity at the West End, by his remarkable creation of Stephen Hargreaves, the "Softy," in a dramatic version of Miss Braddon's novel, Aurora Floyd, at the Princess's Theatre.

We may briefly dispose of the remaining events in Mr Cave's management, which terminated about Easter, 1867. Moncrieffe's Claud Duval was revived in May, 1863. Mr Benjamin Webster accepted another engagement, for six nights, in the November of that year, and on Christmas Eve, the since celebrated Vokes family made their first bow to a London public in the pantomime, Harlequin Jack Frost. Mr Henry Lorraine was here in March, and Mr Belmore in September, 1864. An Australian actor, Mr Neil Warner, had some success as Hamlet and Shylock, in March, 1865. Mr Henry Neville, Mr H. J. Montague, Miss Lydia Foote, and Miss Nellie Farren gave their services in Tom Taylor's Ticket-of-Leave Man, for Mr Cave's benefit, during July, 1866. Mr Felix Rogers, a burlesque actor of repute, superintended the direction, whilst the lessee went over to Sadler's Wells in August. Mr James Anderson was once more engaged, in December, and produced his own play—of very considerable merit—The Scottish Chief, in which Miss Ada Cavendish sustained the part of Helen Mar. Mr T. Thorne also played on one occasion, for a benefit, at this date. The Dog of Montargis was revived in March, 1867. Miss Augusta Thomson starred in April, as well as Mr Walter Montgomery, Miss Fanny Addison, and Miss Atkinson, from Drury Lane. Mr Cave being engaged to direct the stage arrangements of the Victoria Palace Theatre, sub-let the Marylebone, at Whitsuntide, to Miss Augusta Thomson and a Miss Estelle Bodenham, who opened with the Beggars' Opera. Mr Henry Lorraine, Mr Edmund Phelps, and Miss Hudspeth were members of the company during their brief tenure, which expired in August. Mr Albert Montgomery and Mr Clifford Lacy held it successively during the winter. Mr Charles Verner was their principal actor, and played, in conjunction with Mr Arnold Cave and Miss Mary Marshall—ranked in her day among the best of stage soubrettes—for Mr Lacy's benefit, in July, 1868.

Early in the autumn of this year it was rumoured that the Marylebone had found a new proprietor, who intended to raise the prices and restore it to the level of a first-class theatre. Accordingly, on Saturday, the 10th of October, having been very handsomely re-decorated and re-christened the "Royal Alfred," in compliment to H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh—who was present during the evening—it was opened with some ceremony, under the lesseeship of Mr H. R. Lacey, and the stage direction of the well-known actress, Miss Amy Sedgwick. The lessee delivered an inaugural address, in which he spoke of "throwing sensation to the winds" and "devoting his theatre to high-class comedy." His speech was scarcely borne out by the performance, which consisted of a new drama of "strong interest," by Mr C. H. Stephenson, entitled Pindee Singh, in which Mr Neil Warner, Mr George Melville, Mrs Stephens, Miss C. Forde, and Miss Amy Sedgwick appeared, followed by a very broad farce, The Goose with the Golden Eggs. Mr Lacey's efforts did not meet with the support anticipated, and the speculation was abandoned at the end of a month. Mr Lacey made a second attempt, with a pantomime, Whittington and his Cat, at Christmas, and on the termination of its run, at the end of February, 1867, gave way to Miss Henrade, who opened on Easter Monday with Boucicault's Flying Scud. Mr Worboys, Mr Charles Harcourt, and Mr George Sidney then tried their hands at management, in succession, without much result. Miss Rosina Rance played in the opening of Mr Soutar's pantomime, Gulliver's Travels, towards the close of 1869. Mr Giovanelli, of Highbury Barn notoriety, occupied the house in the winter of 1870-71, and had a benefit in March of the latter year, at which Miss Fanny Huddart and Miss Rebecca Isaacs, Messrs Alfred Rayner, McIntyre, Fairclough, C. Seyton, and George Honey assisted.

Mr Giovanelli was succeeded at Easter, 1871, by Mr Charles Harcourt, who opened with The Colleen Bawn and Burnand's burlesque, Black-Ey'd Susan, in which Miss M. Oliver and Mr Dewar appeared. The Alfred Theatre, as it was still called, seemed now to assume a better position than for a long time past. The well-known tragedian, Mr T. Swinbourne, was engaged for first lead, and a series of Shaksperian representations, including Othello, Macbeth, and Hamlet, were very creditably put upon the stage. As the summer advanced the performances assumed a lighter character. The Flowers of the Forest, The Streets of London, Gilderoy, and Watts Phillipps's Nobody's Child were consecutively found in the bills. The Gaiety company, comprising Miss Julia Matthews and Miss Albertazzi, Messrs J. D. Stoyle, Aynsley Cook, and J. G. Taylor, played in opera-bouffe. Miss Henrietta Hodson was also here, and a sensational drama, Across the Continent, by an American author—Mr James McCloskey—made a decided hit in July. In October Shakspere's King John was mounted on a really superior scale, and its principal characters were very adequately interpreted by a new actor, Mr Pennington, Mr and Mrs Charles Harcourt, and their company. A new drama by Mr Burnand, Paul Zegers, or The Dream of Retribution—for the leading part in which Mr Marcus Elmore was specially engaged—was brought out in November. This play might well bear revival at theatres of greater pretension. Later there was a good pantomime, The House that Jack Built, and a good clown, Harry Paulo. Another new play, A Life's Race, written by a Miss Evelyn, was given about the middle of February, 1872, and acted by the authoress in conjunction with Mr and Mrs Harcourt, Mr Swinbourne, and that consummate artist, Mr Herman Vezin. Mr Swinbourne also played Sir Edward Mortimer in The Iron Chest, and, on the 16th of March, Mr Lionel Brough gave his services for the benefit of Mr Harcourt, whose term had now expired. Miss Nelson made a brief experiment in management during the following winter, and on Whit-Monday, 24th of May, 1873, Mr Arnold Cave once more resumed his old place as lessee, with the clever and fascinating Miss Litton as "star" for the opening representations.

Mr Cave, at first alone, and afterwards with Mr Albert West as partner, has, down to the present time, retained the lesseeship of the Marylebone Theatre—which speedily resumed its original nomenclature. He has conducted it entirely as a low-priced theatre, for the entertainment of the masses; and the duration of his management is the best proof of its success, and of the approbation with which it is regarded by the neighbourhood. Appealing solely to one class of frequenters, and those of a very humble description, splendour on either side of the footlights was neither practicable, nor to be looked for. Yet the house, nevertheless, has been respectably conducted; and, occasionally, actors of position have trod its boards. Mr T. C. King had an engagement in June, 1873. Mr Belmore, Mr Emery, and Mr Alfred Rayner were more than once performing here; and Mr Creswick played a round of Shaksperian parts, in December, 1876. For the rest, The Crimes and Cruelties of Mother Brownrigg, The Mysterious House at Chelsea, Steelcap the Robber, and "the interesting slave-drama," Ida May, have happily been relieved by plays of a worthier class, like All that glitters is not Gold, Marianne, The Child of Charity—an old, and well-constructed domestic drama, written for the Victoria, in the days of Miss Vincent—and Halliday's King of Scots. It is curious, moreover, to note that, within the last ten years, pieces so venerable in their antiquity, as the pantomime of Mother Goose, Don Giovanni in London, Tom and Jerry, The Scamps of London, and Therése, The Orphan of Geneva, together with those dearly-loved favourites of our—and our grandsires'—childhood, The Miller and his Men, The Castle Spectre, The Knight and the Wood-Demon, and—above all others—Raymond and Agnes, or, The Bleeding Nun of Lymphenburg, have, at intervals, been given at the Marylebone Theatre. Clearly, then, our manager, possesses classical inclinations, which, under other conditions, might have developed themselves into something more elevated than the above. But Mr Cave is controlled by the exigencies of his situation, and—wise in his generation—provides, for his audiences, such fare as seems most likely to answer the purpose of both. As an employer of labour, as an upright paymaster, and as the prosperous proprietor of an institution erstwhile the scene of such innumerable misfortunes, he deservedly stands high in the estimation of his neighbours; and that he may long continue to remain "the right man in the right place," is, without doubt, the wish of all who know him. Should the Marylebone, however, "in the whirligig of time," fall into other hands, and sufficient capital be forthcoming for the implanting of a purer taste, in a quarter which boasts—be it known—its wealthier, as well as its poorer, inhabitants, such an enterprise, whatever the result, would, at any rate, not be opening up entirely new ground. For we believe we have shown, in the foregoing sketch, that there have been periods in its earlier career, when more than one brave and protracted fight was made for the establishment of the highest forms of the Drama—both new and old—in the lowly little playhouse, overshadowed by—Portman-Market.

Digitized by Google

MICHAEL WILLIAMS.

Eastbourne, 1882.

CHERUBINI.

(Continued from page 217.)

Sarti's lessons, as we see, had in every respect borne good fruit, and, after four years of stubborn labour, the pupil was able without danger to separate from the master. Henceforth certain of himself, Cherubini resolutely entered the lists; at the very first steps he took he met with success, and the astounding fertility he always exhibited was already employed to such purpose that in no more than eight months he brought out three operas. This was beginning well and entering with spirit on the career he meant to follow. His fertility indeed had something really prodigious about it, and the same year, 1782, in the course of which he offered the public three important dramatic works, was marked, moreover, by numerous detached pieces in various styles, which we find entered in his Catalogue: an air written for the famous singer, Babbini, in an opera called Semiramide, the production of several composers and performed in Florence; four separate nocturnes for two voices; a collection of six nocturnes, published in London in 1786; a canzonet; three other vocal pieces; and lastly, a couple of duets with accompaniment of two cors d'amour, "composed for my lord Cowper."

Sarti's kindness and personal connections cannot fail to have been useful to his pupil, and certainly helped the latter to remove the innumerable obstacles which a young composer always finds in his way when he wants to place himself in communication with the public. Perhaps, too, the affection of his fellow townsmen somewhat facilitated Cherubini's first essays, for we may say that, rare as such a thing is, he was a prophet in his own country, since he was lucky enough to bring out with applause two of his operas in Florence. But, whatever the reason, his first efforts were so successful that the leading cities in Italy asked him for scores, and his reputation, having quickly extended beyond the frontiers of Italy, was soon to procure him an invitation to occupy an important position in London. And all this at an age when others are still sitting on the benches of the school. Let him once more speak himself and tell us the further progress of his labours:

"Some time before the expiration of the preceding year (1782) Cherubini entered into an agreement to go and compose a three-act opera in Rome. This opera, entitled Il Quinto Fabio,* was performed at the Teatro Argentina in the course of January, 1783. In the same year he was again asked to go to Venice for the purpose of writing a two-act buffo opera. It was entitled Lo Sposo di Tre, Marito di Nessuna, and was performed at the Teatro San Samuele in the course of the month of November, 1783."†

On his return to Florence he was engaged to write a three-act opera for the Teatro della Pergola. It was called L'Idalide, and played in the course of February, 1784. He then went in the month of May to Mantua for the fair, to compose a two-act opera bearing the title of Alessandro nell' Indie. It was while he was busy on this work that his master—Sarti—passed through the place without being able to see him. Sarti was on his road to St Petersburgh, where he was engaged. Cherubini never saw him afterwards because, when he had fulfilled his engagement in St Petersburgh, Sarti stopped at Berlin, where he died in 1802, after undergoing an operation for the stone.‡

Concerning all this first portion of Cherubini's career, this period of his artistic life which comprises his early efforts in Italy, we do not, unfortunately, possess any especial information or any interesting details. Indeed, we are even absolutely ignorant who were the interpreters of his early works. I have reason for believing that two famous artists—Babbini, the tenor, and Crescentini, the soprano—whom he was subsequently to meet again in London, took part in the performance of those works of his which were given at Florence, for they were then there. However, I have sought in vain, without coming across it, for the slightest trace of any scrap of information. Still I may say that, thanks to the autobiographical Notice from which I have quoted several fragments, and despite even of its sobriety, I have been enabled to establish more in detail than any one has ever done up to now the early historical facts in the master's career.

During Cherubini's last visit to Florence the Jesuits conceived the singular idea of having an oratorio formed of various pieces taken from his operas performed in their church. The idea was carried out, Cherubini writing only three new pieces—two choruses and an air.§ It was at this epoch that, in consequence of a sort of challenge among several musicians, he composed a five-part madrigal with continuous bass, Ninfa crudel, in which, it is said, he resolved so correctly and so elegantly a complicated contrapuntal problem that he found himself thenceforth classed among the first harmonists of the day.

(To be continued.)

BOATMEN'S EVENING SONG.*

There's a light in the west,
Where the sun sinks to rest,
And our bark speeds gaily on.
The vesper bell
We know so well
Keeps time to our evening song.
Speed away, gallant bark, speed away!
To the shore we left at the dawning of day!

Now the daylight's gone,
And shadows creep on,
In the purple hazy west;
And the sun sinks bright,
Amid clouds of light,
Like a golden orb to rest!
Speed away, gallant bark, speed away!
In the evening light
The shore looks bright
That we left at the break of day.
Speed away!

* Copyright. GWENNY.

PRESENTATION TO MR LAZARUS.—The members of "The Knight's Club" have presented to Mr Lazarus, the eminent clarionettist, a handsome gold locket with his monogram set in brilliants, in token of their esteem and regard for him as an artist, and as a slight return for his kindness in playing many consecutive years at their grand annual meetings. The locket was presented by the permanent chairman of the club, Mr Pawle, with a complimentary speech at a special dinner given at their locale in the Strand. Mr Lazarus acknowledged the gift in appropriate and eloquent terms. Among the members present were Messrs Toole, Loveday, Thorne, Ledger, Billington, Charles Coote, Donald Nicoll, Cathie, Cutler, and many other distinguished members of the literary and theatrical world.

* This was the second score he wrote on the same subject. Such a course was at that period not unusual in Italy, and some composers even set the same libretto three or four times.

† It was in reference to this work that the Venetians, playing on Cherubini's name, called him Il Cherubino, meaning, as they said, to characterize by this surname the sweetness and angelic grace of his melodies.

‡ Notice dictated to Beauchesne.

§ The Chronological Catalogue of Cherubini's works mentions only the two choruses; but this is merely an oversight, for in the catalogue (contained also in his agenda) of those of his compositions which he had in his library I find, after mention made of the two choruses, that the air also is mentioned thus: "Tutto d'orror m'ingombra, air inserted in the same oratorio." Despite his usual care, Bottée de Toulmon, when publishing the first of the catalogues, neglected to consult the second, without thinking that there were some differences between the two, and that the one was thus the complement of the other.

Digitized by Google

ON THE OPENING OF ST GEORGE'S HALL,

SPOKEN BY

MRS. STIRLING.

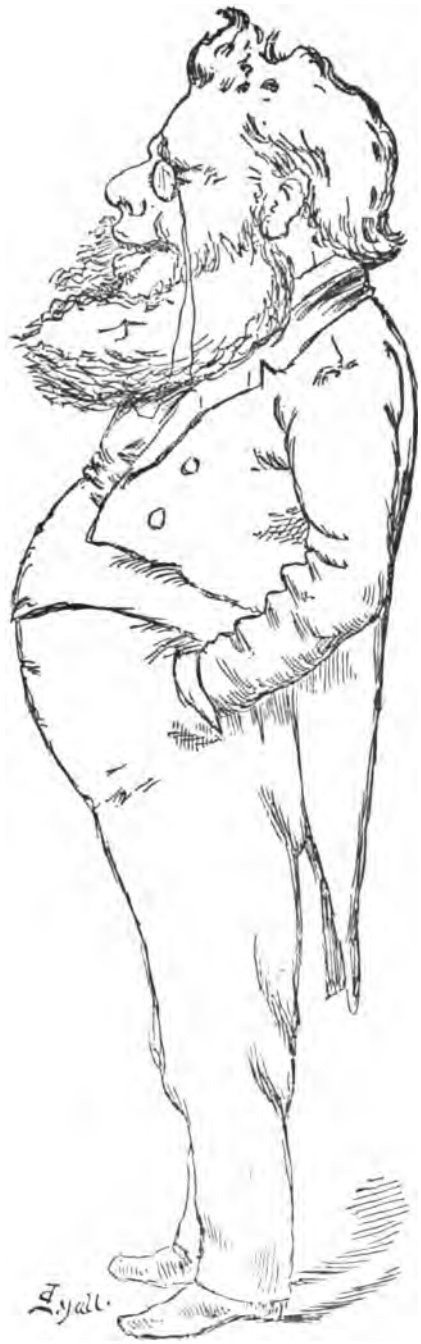
Accordant here in grateful mood we meet
Divine Cecilia's hallowed muse to greet;
To this fair Hall she stoops from native skies—
Loved may she dwell here! long her pæans rise!
With ev'ry grace delighting still to charm—
Cold though our clime—her welcome ever warm!

To you that know her magic pow'r so well
What guerdon Music's varied gifts to tell?
How youth immortal on her look awaits
To win a smile of pleasure from the Fates?
How on her altar burn eternal fires
Who ev'ry age with love and joy inspires?
Who soothes despair—and bids e'en rage be calm—
Who sounds the charge, and lifts the victor's psalm!
To her this throne her faithful votaries rear,
Hailing her sovereign, peerless monarch here—
And in her honour raise the full, triumphant cheer!

Nor less than public benefactors they
Who so extend the limits of her sway—
More smoothly rolls the hurried stream of life
When Song prevails above the din of strife;
Now to the struggle of our daily race
The sweet Enchantress lends a tone of grace—
Now o'er the turmoil waves her mighty wand,
And the hushed nations kneel in awe at her command.

On WYLDE, then, may prosperity descend
And crown his efforts with a brilliant end!
Or, happier, be it one supreme beginning
In praise commenced, and still new praises winning!
Lend but your favour—grant your potent aid—
All fears shall vanish, for success is made—
Good words and wishes all give way to deeds—
Nought like success, of all we know, succeeds.
And Fortune then shall enter smiling here,
Genius sublime in pow'r of sound appear;
A living source and fountain of delight
Here murmur forth divinely fresh and bright;
And here be heard while war's dread discords cease
The full, harmonious choruses of peace.
Yet one more joy—one form of beauty more
Above life's battle like an angel soar—
Yet one more voice our island Albion gain,
To bid the Muse within her seas remain,
And grace th' imperial calm of high Victoria's reign!

HENRY T. BRAITHWAITE.



PALERMO.—After a stay of several months, Wagner, with his family, left on the 19th March for Acireale, at the foot of Mount Etna. He was to return to Germany in the early part of the present month. To mark his appreciation of the cordial welcome he found here, Wagner gave a morning party, which was attended by the Prefect, Count Tasca, Prince Gungi, the Grand-Duke Constantine of Russia, and all the local notabilities. A military band, in the garden, played, under his own direction, the "Huldigungs-marsch," dedicated to the King of Bavaria, and the "Kaiser-marsch." Later on another gave the "Siegfried-Idyll."

PESARO.—Pedrotti recently paid a visit to this town for the purpose of concerting with the Municipality as to the opening of the Istituto Rossini, of which he has been appointed director. He was cordially welcomed by the Municipal Council and a large number of the inhabitants, who were waiting for him at the station, and afterwards serenaded by torchlight.

NANCY.—A Municipal School of Music will shortly be opened here. The staff will consist of seven professors: two for violin, one for violoncello, one (able also to give elementary instruction on trumpet) for horn, one for clarinet, one for flute, and one for oboe (with elementary instruction on bassoon). These professorships, open to public competition, will be awarded to candidates who pass the best examination.

FRANKFORT-ON-THE-MAINE.—The celebration of the approaching centenary of the Stadttheater will last from the latter part of August to the 2nd September, when Hanno Fürst im Norden, the drama performed on the same date a century before, is to be given. The week will also be dedicated to the memory of Goethe. The two parts of Faust, and Götz von Berlichingen, will be produced, with new scenery, dresses, and appointments.

MDME CHRISTINE NILSSON has stated that she will resume professional life for three years only, after which she will finally retire. Her engagements in England are to extend over two months. Then she goes back to Paris, to proceed, after a short stay, to St Petersburgh, and from thence to Sweden, her native country, to take farewell. Mdme Nilsson proposes to make her future home in the French capital.—Standard.

GENEVA.—In conformity with the wishes expressed by the various local instrumental and vocal associations, there will be an instrumental and vocal tournament from the 5th to the 7th Aug. Invitations have been issued to a large number of German and other foreign associations.

Owing to the inability of the Sinfonie-Capelle to take part in the performance, Liszt's Christus, which the St Cecilia Association, Berlin, announced for the 8th inst., could not be given.

MR J. T. CARRODUS, our great violinist, has been passing the Easter vacation with some members of his family at Malvern. He takes part to-day in Gloucester, at a concert organized by Mr C. Harcourt Lloyd, the excellent organist of Gloucester Cathedral, and worthy successor of the late Dr S. S. Wesley.

Raimondin, by von Perfall, Intendant-General of the Theatre Royal, Munich, has been performed at the Stadttheater, Leipsic. Fiasco!—(No wonder.—Dr Blidge.)

The first Austrian Ladies' Quartet have concluded their winter campaign, after giving forty concerts at Dresden, Königsberg, Riga, Warsaw, Lemberg, and other leading towns.

Anton Bennewitz, hitherto Professor of the Violin at the Conservatory, Prague, has been appointed director, after having acted provisionally as such since the death of Joseph Krejci.

Digitized by Google

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS,

ST JAMES'S HALL,

REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.

THE MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS

WILL BE RESUMED

EARLY IN OCTOBER NEXT.

DEATH.

On April 13, PETER JOSEPH RIES, aged 91, for many years with Messrs John Broadwood & Sons, and brother to the late Ferdinand Ries, the friend and pupil of Beethoven.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.'s, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). Advertisements not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 15, 1882.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Mr Gye has issued his prospectus for the season—to begin on Tuesday, the 18th inst., with what opera, or with what singers, has yet to be announced. This document is accompanied by another, of which, being printed for "private circulation," we are not called upon to discuss the merits. Enough that the Royal Italian Opera is henceforth to be a Company (Limited); that Her Majesty's Theatre will be absorbed in the scheme; that Mr Ernest Gye, as managing director of the Company, will superintend all performances of Italian Opera in London and the country, while Mr Mapleson undertakes a similar responsibility in New York and throughout the United States. Thus we have, once more, a coalition of the two Italian Opera companies, which, in 1869, when the late Mr Frederick Gye, who went into a sort of temporary partnership with Mr Mapleson, is said to have realized a profit of £22,000 in a season extending little over three months. Be that as it may, it seems that the short duumvirate has leapt into life again, though under somewhat different conditions. Italian Opera in London is to be exclusively held at Covent Garden, while Mr Mapleson's exertions in that direction are to be confined to the United States. Whether the two companies are ever intended to be worked together in London, New York, or elsewhere, remains at present a matter for speculation, not to be set at rest until the Royal Italian Company (Limited) is virtually established. Meanwhile Mr Gye's arrangements for the forthcoming season are just such as if no fusion of the two interests had ever been contemplated. Mr Gye is absolutely his own master; and, it must be admitted, has made out a programme which, if not studded with novelties, offers many genuine attractions. A brief reference to its contents will suffice to prove this. To begin with the singers. Not only Mesdames Patti, Sembrich, Fürsch-Madier, Valleria, and Albani figure among the leading sopranos, but (welcome addition) that old favourite with our English public, Mdme Pauline Lucca, enough in herself to give lustre to the season, even with less dazzling surroundings. The contraltos are headed by Mdme Trebelli, who, with Mdlle Amelie Stahl, highly esteemed as an operatic vocalist in Germany, will share the characters belonging for years past to Mdme Scalchi (for the present, at least, a seceder.) From the tenors we miss the exuberant Spaniard, Señor Gayarre, in lieu of whom we are promised Signor Lesteller, of excellent report; with these being associated Signor Nicolini, Signor Masini, the tenor after Verdi's own heart, the tenor of Aïda and the Requiem for Manzoni, "Signor" Mierzwinski, the Polish Duprèz (of the "ut de poitrine"), Signor Frapolli, recognized at Her Majesty's Theatre as one not merely acceptable on account of his vocal talent, about which there can be hardly two opinions, but also because of his versatility and general usefulness. Among the barytones we have the perennial Signor Cotogni, M. Bouhy, well known and regarded in Paris and Brussels, and Signor Pandolfini—not quite a stranger among us. In this category of barytones one name will be missed with general regret—that of M. Lassalle. If the list of basses (or rather barytone basses) only comprised M. Gailhard and Signor de Reszké (the last especially), it would inspire confidence, now that such basses as the elder Lablache and Herr Formes are no longer obtainable: but happily these are associated with several others of tried capability. In fine, the troop of vocalists is a strong one. About the new comers we prefer speaking, in accordance with their merits, as they from time to time appear. The only absolute novelty announced is an opera, entitled Velleda, by a composer entitled "Lenepveu," about whom, knowing nothing, we can say nothing. As Mdme Adelina Patti, however, is to assume the principal part, Velleda, doubtless, has something special to recommend it. Boïto's Mefistofele, with Mdme Albani as Marguerite and Helen of Troy (perhaps, too, Signor Pandolfini as Mefistofele); Bizet's Carmen, with Pauline Lucca as the wild and petulant gipsy; Il Flauto Magico, after "a new Italian version," which it is to be hoped may in no way interfere with the Orphean music of Mozart, recognized by Wagner himself as "greatest of absolute musicians"—with Mdme Sembrich as "The Queen of Night" and the Africaine of Meyerbeer, with Pauline Lucca in her original part of Selika, Mdme Albani in that of Inez, Signor Pandolfini as Nelusko, and the new tenor, Signor Lestellier, as Vasco di Gama, are also unconditionally promised. Added to these, "if time should permit, towards the end of the season," M. Massenet's last opera, Hérodiade, will be produced. Should time not permit, the loss of Mr Gye's patrons is one upon which they will hardly be justified in claiming over-much commiseration. Nevertheless, if all the promises are fulfilled, a brilliant season for the Royal Italian Opera may be expected. This, moreover, in spite of the formidable opposition of the Wagnerian cyclus (organized by Mr Mapleson, Mr Gye's accepted colleague), at Her Majesty's Theatre, where the English public is to make acquaintance with the gods and goddesses of Valhalla; the giants, Fasolt and Fafner, who construct that impregnable fortress (impregnable to all but fire), and quarrel over the promised guerdon; the numerous and interesting progeny of "All-Father Wotan," ancestral trunk of the Volsungs, including the Walkyries (Brynhilde and her eight sisters); Siegfried, the man of will and physical force, who knows not fear, and takes to wife his ninth grand aunt, after her long sleep amid burning bushes; Alberic and Mime, the dwarfish Niblungs; and, finally, the heroes and heroines of the Nibelungen-Lied—the "Ring," in fact, the whole "Ring," and nothing but the "Ring" (three times over). Italian opera is not dead, however, or likely to die for a long period—not, indeed, until the public ear has lost its faculty of appreciating a song "tune"—or, in less familiar parlance, rhythmical melody, with beginning, middle, and end. The orchestra and chorus at the Royal Italian Opera will be, for the most part, the same as we have been accustomed to expect, Mr Carrodus being first violin, Mr Josiah Pittman, organist, Signor Bevignani and M. Dupont, joint conductors.—Graphic.

The Princess of Wales has accepted the dedication of Gade's new cantata, Psyche, which will be sung by Mdme Marie Roze at the forthcoming Birmingham Festival.

MAD. CHRISTINE NILSSON.—A short time since Lord Lyons, English Ambassador in Paris, called on this lady, who has been so terribly bereaved, to convey to her a message of condolence and sympathy from Her Majesty Queen Victoria. The King of Sweden, also, has addressed a most kind and feeling letter to the gifted and famous artist.

The Order of the Prussian Crown, fourth class, has been conferred on Edwin Schultz, who, commissioned by the Prussian Minister of War, has published a collection of Soldiers' Songs, in one-part and four-part editions.

Miss Glynn (Mrs Dallas), the Shaksperian actress and reader, specially celebrated, it will be remembered, as "Cleopatra," is now, we hear, devoting herself to elocution alone, and gives lessons in that art to vocalists, dramatic students and clergymen.

Digitized by Google

CONCERTS.

ST JAMES'S HALL.—Mr Ambrose Austin is an entrepreneur of spirited and intelligent enterprise, as the town has often had occasion to observe. No one understands the art of compiling a musical programme for the multitude better than this indefatigable gentleman—few indeed so well. The most recent of his efforts in this direction occurred on Good Friday evening, when he gave a concert at St James' Hall, suitable to the sacred character of the day of course, but composed at the same time of materials of the choicest quality and executed by vocal and orchestral artists of the most attractive reputation. The "shilling" people, and their name is legion upon these occasions, have seldom had so costly a repast set before them and it was gratifying to find that the Hall was filled from one end to the other with the class of visitors for whom the concert was chiefly intended, small deduction having been made from the area seats for those of a higher price. A programme consisting of Rossini's Stabat Mater and a series of sacred pieces, culled from the oratorios and elsewhere, could but be instinct with interest, and, as we have recorded, the calculations of Mr Austin were borne out by the plethoric aspects of the hall, and we trust, coincidently, by the more substantial reckonings of the ticket office. The Stabat Mater was performed with superb effect, when it is said that Mdlle Marie Roze sang the soprano part, Mdme Patey the contralto, Mr Edward Lloyd the tenor, and Mr Frederick King the bass, there is obvious warrant that the picturesque and warmly-tinted music of Rossini met with as satisfactory an exponency as the most fastidious connoisseur could desire. That the morceaux upon which the public ear the more readily fastens partly as having been associated with the names of most of the greatest singers of the day, and partly on the strength of their own intrinsic beauty should exercise their easily understood influence was no matter of surprise. It is only necessary in short, to say, that the principal vocalists, the well-disciplined chorus of Mr L. C. Venables, and the orchestra—consisting of nearly fifty picked instrumentalists—did, one and all, their best, producing—what indeed might have been assumed beforehand—an ensemble of remarkable completeness. The oratorio and other sacred selections were allocated to the second part of the programme. Foremost among them were Handel's "Angels ever bright and fair," and "Let the bright Seraphim," gems both, the popular value of which it is hardly possible to measure when sung by such an exemplary artist as Mdme Marie Roze. Gounod's air, "There is a green hill far away," gave Mdme Patey an opportunity of exemplifying to unquestionable advantage her lovely voice and no less highly finished style. Miss Agnes Ross was also one of the lady-singers, and agreeably impressed the audience by the breadth and intelligence with which she rendered Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer." Known hitherto simply as a singer of Scotch songs, to which she imparts a flavour and individuality communicable only by those "to the manner born," her début in the noble choral solo of Mendelssohn betokened loftier aspirations, and, from the success she met with, it may be concluded she has not misjudged her capabilities. Among the other incidents of the evening were able deliveries by Mr Frederick King and Mr Charles Abercrombie of Gounod's fine song, "Nazareth," and Haydn's never-failing air, "In native worth." Nor ought it to remain unmentioned that Mr Edward Lloyd sang Gounod's deeply suggestive recitative, "How frail and weak a thing is man," prefacing the charming air, "Lend me your aid," with such irresistible effect as to provoke three re-calls into the orchestra. Besides the above, the programme contained a "Meditation of J. S. Bach," played for the first time in England, arranged by Gounod for band, chorus, and pianoforte, the solos being in the hands of Mr J. T. Carrodus and his son, Master J. Carrodus; the march from Costa's Eli; the majestic chorus, "Nearer my God to Thee" (memorable as having been sung at the funeral of President Garfield); and the two "Hallelujah" choruses from the Mount of Olives and The Messiah. The concert was conducted by Mr L. C. Venables, of the South London Choral Association, and Mr Sidney Naylor.—H.

Miss Rosa Kenney's recital on Tuesday afternoon, March 28, at the Marlborough Rooms, Regent Street, attracted a large and distinguished gathering. Besides giving, with much energy and dramatic expression, the Laureate's Charge of the Heavy Brigade, and a selection from the Passing of Arthur, Miss Kenney appeared with Mr Charles Wyndham in two scenes from the Hunchback, which for the occasion were "rolled into one." In these she acted Helen with remarkable archness and with a keen sense of humour, affording her excellent support as Modus. Although scenery was dispensed with, and the narrow limits of a platform intended for elocutionary purposes had to suffice for a stage, the effect of the performance was thoroughly diverting. Mr Herbert Standing introduced in the first portion of the entertainment his comic recitation of "The 'Bus Driver's Story," and gave it with much humour. Miss Edith Wynne sang two songs in her best style, and Mrs. Aylmer Gowing gave two recitations.—Globe.

ALBERT HALL.—The Good Friday performance of The Messiah at the Royal Albert Hall, by Mr Barnby's Choral Society, was as successful as it usually is upon these penitential anniversaries. The cheaper parts of the building were, as a matter of course, filled to overflowing, the visitors in the lower and more expensive districts being also numerous. Of the performance itself there is little to be said, for Mr Barnby's choristers and instrumentalists have too often been heard in this greatest of oratorios to need any further remark than that their close familiarity with the music produced all those ripened excellencies of effect which the public from long experience have been taught to look for, and which they know so well how, in a certain sense, to critically enjoy. The delivery of the choruses, to make separate mention of them, nobly maintained the credit of the conductor's phalanx of singers, and the vast and imperishable monuments of choral writing with which it was entrusted, were presented with a breadth and impressiveness to which ordinary compliment would fail to do justice. The principal vocalists were Mdme Albani, Mdme Enriquez, Mr Joseph Maas, and Signor Foli, and it will easily be understood that the solo music was rendered with a prestige and efficiency that could not be excelled. The organ, as customary, fell into the competent hands of Dr Stainer.—H.

BERLIN.

(Correspondence.)

Mdme Mallinger took leave of her many friends and admirers on the 31st ult., as Juliet, in Gounod's Roméo et Juliette. The Royal Operahouse was crammed. The event is thus described in the Neue Berliner Musikzeitung:

"When the popular artist made her appearance, she was received with unanimous applause, flowers, and wreaths; 'ovations' repeated scene after scene, reaching their acmè at the end of the grand air of the fourth act, when Mdme Mallinger attained the full height of her pristine vocal excellence. Again and again she was compelled to appear before the lights. This was also the case when the curtain fell for the last time. After the opera, there was a no less touching farewell on the stage. Leaning on the arm of the Intendant, General von Hülsen, Mdme Mallinger came on the stage, transformed into a flower garden, where nearly all the members of the companies at the Royal Opera and Theatre Royal, were assembled. Von Strantz, in a short speech devoted to the praise of their 'fair colleague,' presented Mdme Mallinger, on behalf of the operatic company, with an album containing all their photographs, together with those of the Intendant-General, the Director, and the two Conductors. Deetz then handed Mdme Mallinger, in the name of the members of the Theatre Royal, a laurel wreath, accompanied by a highly complimentary speech, with reference to her past services. With the singing of a choral-quartet: 'Wie weh ist mir, wenn ich muss scherden' ('How sad I feel, now I must part'), the ceremony was brought to a close. Mdme Mallinger, deeply affected, withdrew, on the arm of the Intendant-General, to her own room, which was decked out with floral offerings. Meanwhile a crowd had assembled outside the Theatre, who, on Mdme Mallinger's getting into her carriage, gave three loud cheers, to which Mdme Mallinger responded by waving her handkerchief."

The renovation of the Concert Room in the Theatre Royal, though commenced on the 6th of May, 1881, will take another year to complete.—A great surprise was in store for Salomon recently on the 200th night of his appearing as Mephisto. Previously to the commencement of the opera, Borck, Geheimrath, entered the artist's dressing-room and presented him in the Emperor's name with a diamond ring. After the third act, his Majesty had a conversation with Salomon, and congratulated him on his long and successful impersonation.

"PARDONNEZ-MOI."

Que puis-je te dire
Que tu ne crois?
Mon cœur s'afflige;
"Pardonnez-moi."

Foi de ma vie,
Vie de ma foi:
Est-ce là ma faute?
"Pardonnez-moi."

Ame forte et claire,
Puisque tu vois
Ces larmes qui brûlent,
"Pardonnez-moi."

Après souffrance,
Douce est la joie;
Mon cœur se brise—
"Pardonnez-moi."

A. J. D.

Digitized by Google

FORM, OR DESIGN, IN VOCAL MUSIC.

(Continued from page 192.)

Scena and Aria.

The Italian scena and aria, a later form than the cantata, is a group of three movements. The first, the scena, embodies the action and is recitative—the music of the orator or of the improvisor, who speaks the thought of the moment. The aria, comprising two movements, embodies the meditation, and is in cantabile music, rhythmic, and in perfect design—the music of the poet, who speaks the thoughts that have grown and been perfected in his mind. It is this alliance of poetry and oratory with music, and above all, with the sympathetic expression of the human voice, which gives to the scena and aria such immense influence over the hearers; and it must be added that the same cause renders its creation and interpretation tasks which none but the greatest and the best, both of authors and performers, can accomplish.

The form differs from the Italian cantatas just now described in having the recitative massed together in the beginning, instead of its being spread through the whole piece. Of the two movements of the aria, the first is in slow, the second in quick time. Though both movements are cantabile in the sense of singing, yet in this particular form the name cantabile is allotted only to that in slow time, while the quick takes the name of cabaletta. The sense of cantabile is here restricted to the singing of gentle emotions rather than strong passions, and seems to have descended from the old story-tellers who would relate their story in rhythmic song with much expression, but without the excitement of acting. The cabaletta is, as it were, the climax of the story, and can be expressive of lively or more vehement emotions—joy, determination, despair, or fierceness.

So the last movement of Purcell's cantata, "From rosy bow'rs," is expressive of determination, and may be considered an early parallel to the cabaletta.

In Handel's Semele there is an example of a scena and aria in the group of movements for Semele, "Ah me, what refuge," "Oh Jove, in pity," and "The morning lark." The scena, "Ah me, what refuge," is an unaccompanied recitative carried on in a manner similar to that already described in "Deeper and deeper still," though very much shorter. Following it immediately is the cantabile or slow movement of the aria, "Oh Jove in pity," which is a concise sonata. After the close of this is the third movement, "The morning lark," which is in the Scarlatti form; it is in quick time and constitutes the cabaletta, or quick movement of the aria.

Beethoven's "Ah, perfido," is a more modern scena and aria, which retains the three divisions of recitative, cantabile and cabaletta. The scena is an accompanied recitative written throughout in the manner described before with the examples, "Deeper and deeper" and the passage from Iphigenia. Every verbal phrase has its accented words strengthened by emphatic notes in the vocal phrases. Every break in the words, whether by comma or otherwise, has a corresponding break in the music strengthened by emphatic chords in the accompaniment. Every change of feeling has a corresponding interlude or accompaniment. The interludes contain the modulation which changes the key of one vocal phrase to the key of the next, and thus serves to prepare the mind for the change of feeling which is to be expressed in the next vocal phrase, and further strengthened by the next coming interlude or accompaniment. Thus the interlude in G, which has been preceded by the declaration in G, "Perfidious, perjured one," closes in A minor (a), and thus suggests the coming change which is expressed in the gentler phrase in that key (b), "Are these thy last farewells?" and strengthened by the gentler interlude in A minor (c).

Ex. 156.

In the course of the scena there is a passage in time, accompanied throughout, but keeping up the declamatory effect. Every comma of the words corresponds to rests in the voice part, and motion in the bass melody fills it in and keeps up the continuity. "If there is justice in Heaven, if there is pity, they will punish thee; my shade follows thee and I shall see my revenge":

Ex. 157. Andante grave.

At the words, "I shall see my revenge," the time is free again. In this passage the effect of almost judicial dignity is attained by the regular time; and the sudden break into uneven time befits the sudden return of the human passion of revenge. By-and-bye the feeling changes again: "Stay, avenging gods, spare that heart, wound mine—For him I lived, I fain would die for him;" and the manifold breaks of the sentences are filled up with repetition in different keys of a melodious and rhythmic interlude which adds to the expression of the voice.

Up to this point the words are declamatory; ideas crowd upon one another—horror, cry for justice, passion, vindictiveness, exultation at the punishment which must come—follow in quick succession and are as quickly driven away by returning love. These are fit words for the constant change of key, and of musical idea, and for the broken rhythm of recitative. After this come words that can be dwelt upon, thoughts which can be kept in the heart, turned over and over in the mind, and so they fitly go into a complete movement, slow and cantabile, and with much repetition. "For pity's sake, say not farewell; deprived of thee, what can I do?" This is the cantabile, or slow movement of the aria, and is in the rondo form. Its principal subject is:

Ex. 158.

After a full close the first episode begins, in B flat, and after a close returns to E flat, prior to the return of the principal subject in that key. A second episode is in C flat; and after this is a coda in E flat, which takes the place of the final return of the key with a new idea:

Ex. 159.

The cabaletta, or quick movement of the aria, is the rondo described in former pages, a movement of great passion with alternate complaint and yearning. "Ah, cruel one, thou wishest me to die" and "In such anguish, am I not worthy of pity?"

Another example of a scena and aria of this kind is Mozart's "Non temer"—the aria of which is one of the rondos described before.

Oliveria Prescott.

(To be continued.)

The Metastasio Festival in Rome is to be postponed till next year. The Municipality have granted a site in the Piazza San Silvestro for a monument to the renowned dramatic poet.

Digitized by Google

MUSIC IN NEW YORK.

Mr Mapleson played his trump card last Wednesday evening by producing L'Africaine, with new scenery by Magnani, new costumes, and an attention to mise-en-scène which he has not yet shown here. As a spectacle the fourth act was better than anything that we have had for the last fifteen years, and it is as a spectacle that the revival will chiefly be remembered, because L'Africaine has been better sung here before. In 1871 it was given with Lucca as Selika, Maurel as Nelusko, and an excellent tenor named Abrugnedo, who fell sick and disappeared after the first weeks of the season, as Vasco di Gama. Since then the opera has not been heard here, and it therefore attracts almost as much attention as would a novelty. It is pleasant to record that the first performance was a complete success in every respect. Mdme Minnie Hauk as Selika, Campanini as Vasco, Galassi as Nelusko, were eminently satisfactory, while, as I have already said, the ballet scene was wholly unprecedented in splendour, and contributed largely to the success of the opera, which has now been given twice before overflowing audiences.

Beside L'Africaine, a melancholy performance of Fidelio has been the only new work—new in Mr Mapleson's American repertoire—that has been given here. The Leonora, a Mdlle Dorani, known to Cincinnati fame as Miss Dora Hemminges, meant well, but was not fit for the task. The other incidents of any interest concerning Mr Mapleson's doings are few. Ravelli has been taking Campanini's place in Aida, much to the latter's indignation, for Campanini would sing six times a week rather than have any one else appear as Radames, Faust, or Don José. In fact, he has been singing so constantly that his voice is not what it was six months ago, and his best friends are apprehensive of the future. He has been engaged to sing at the May festival in place of Mazzini, who has refused to come at the last moment. Mdme Lablache appeared last Saturday as Amneris, her first appearance here in two years. She is a valuable addition to the company, which has had no contralto to speak of this year.

The Metropolitan Operahouse Company, which was to build a superb operahouse, in which Gye was to give opera, the like of which had never been seen on this side of the water, has come to grief. About £180,000 have been used up in buying land, and building foundations. Various explanations are given of the failure. It is said, on one hand, that the persons most interested in building a new operahouse have been invited to take boxes in the present Academy, which will be enlarged. Vanderbilt, Mills, Keene, and other millionaires who have come to the surface within the last twenty years, had no boxes in the Academy, and could not buy them. Therefore, they wanted to build a house of their own, but are pacified by the prospect of boxes. Another story is, that the stockholders are frightened at the prospective cost of the enterprise, and want to stop before it is too late. At any rate, the work is at a standstill, and Mr Mapleson, mounting his high horse, stipulates that the Academy shall be enlarged, beautified, and otherwise improved for his occupation next year.

The engagements for the May festival now include Mdme Materna, of the Vienna Operahouse, Mdme Gerster, Miss Cary, Campanini, Galassi, and William Candidus. The subscription amounts to £10,000 before the sale has really begun, and the indications are that the series of seven performances will bring £25,000 into the treasury. Whatever money remains after the expenses are paid will form a nucleus for a permanent Festival Fund.

Oscar Wilde has left for California, and talks, it is said, of going home by way of India, rather than incur the risk of new insults from the hordes of New York scoffers. The butt of the clown's jokes in Barnum's circus is a counterfeit Oscar, who gets rolled up in the carpets, deluged with flour, and treated to indignities generally. Wilde went to see Patience when he was in New York, and observed, loud enough for half the house to hear, that "this (meaning Patience) is the sort of homage which mediocrity pays to genius." But I doubt if horses could drag him to Barnum's, even to see his namesake ride on Jumbo.

I see that Mr Strakosch is disposed to differ with me as to the merits of his present company. I wrote to the Musical World concerning his company before it had appeared here, and I now find nothing to retract after having sacrificed myself to the extent of attending half a dozen of Mr Strakosch's performances. With the exception of Mdme Gerster, the company is ridiculous. Some members of the company—Giannini for instance—have voices, but do not know how to sing, and others know how to sing but have no voices. The money which Mr Strakosch makes out of his Gerster performances, as I said in a recent letter, he loses on the off-nights. He is now somewhere in the Western States.

HAVEY.

New York, March 27, 1882.

PEACE ALL ROUND.*

We'll pledge the Queen, and in that plight
We'll pledge Old England round and round.
Long may her might be merged in right,
And not in filching others' ground.
Among the nations, east and west,
We'll make for peace, 'tis Freedom's star;
That Statesman serves his country best,
Who shuns the gory path of war.

Peace all round; where true Englishmen are found;
There the great cause of Freedom's safe, my boys,
For the great heart of Britain still is sound.

To all her swarthy sons, who now
Are grafted on fair England's stem,
The wide world o'er, to all who bow
'Neath Britain's Queenly diadem;
No craven fear will bind our hands,
Our greatness will the brighter shine,
Because at home, in distant lands,
Our hearts beat high at Freedom's shrine.

Friends all round! where true Englishmen are found;
There the great cause of Freedom's safe, my boys,
For the great heart of Britain still is sound.

* Copyright.

WEITSTAR.

WAIFS.

Mons. Ovide Musin, the violonist, has returned to town for the season.

Cotogni was among the artists who sang at the last Court Concert in Rome.

Padilla and Mad. Artôt-Padilla are making a concert tour in Germany.

Massini has been made a commander of the Spanish Order of Charles III.

Tamberlik with his company is now at the Coliseo Calderon de la Barca, Valladolid.

Donizetti's Duca d'Alba has been some time in rehearsal at the San Carlo, Naples.

Peschka-Leutner will take part in the German operatic performances here in June.

The Italian operatic season at the Teatro San Fernando, Seville, opened on the 9th inst.

The ballet, Excelsior, was given on the 30th ult. for the 40th time at the Teatro Regio, Turin.

Mad. Carvalho has gone to Saint-Raphael, to take part in the inauguration of the Casino.

Gayarre, the Spanish tenor (no longer to be heard at Covent Garden), has gone to Bilbao.

The ballet, Excelsior, has been performed more than fifty times this season at the San Carlo, Naples.

The library of the Algiers Theatre, lately destroyed by fire, was valued at more than 200,000 francs.

A new buffo-opera, Dottor Cosmos, by Deschamps, has been successfully produced at the Pergola, Florence.

Campo-Casso has sent in his resignation as manager of the Grand Théâtre to the Municipal Council of Lyons.

Eduard Strauss, with his orchestra, has been giving concerts in the Winter Garden of the Central Hotel, Berlin.

Anton Rubinstein's G minor Symphony was played and favourably received at the second Academy Concert, Munich.

A new Symphony by Gernsheim met with so much applause in Rotterdam that it was repeated a week afterwards.

Digitized by Google

Emma Thursby, "the American enchantress," and her trusty adviser, Maurice Strakosch, have returned to Paris.

Goula, conductor, gave a grand banquet on the 24th ult., to the members of the orchestra of the Teatro Real, Madrid.

Important alterations are to be made in all the theatres of Madrid with a view to the safety of the public in case of fire.

W. Hill's Alona, though already accepted in Cologne and Hamburgh, will be first produced at Frankfort-on-the-Maine.

Miss Rosa Kenney's next Dramatic and Musical "recital" is fixed for Monday morning, May 15, at the Marlborough Rooms.

The Carola-Theater, Leipsic, is let from the 1st September to Vogler, manager of the Victoria, Frankfort-on-the-Maine.

Signora Vitali, Masini, Pandolfini, and Uetam, recently took part in a concert at the house of the Duke Fernan-Nuñez, Madrid.

Professor Wilhelm Speidel celebrates to-day, the 15th inst., his twenty-fifth anniversary as director of the Liederkranz, Stuttgart.

A cantata, "Alla Gioia," by a young composer, Signor Pietro Mascagni, has been performed at the Teatro Avallorati, Leghorn.

Sarasate, the Spanish violinist, has given a series of concerts in Milan, in which he took part not only as soloist but as leader of quartets.

Antonie Schläger, from the Carl Theater, is engaged at the Imperial Opera, Vienna, for five years, commencing on the 1st October.

Among the gifts offered to Mdlle de Reszké on the occasion of her benefit at the Teatro Real, Madrid, was a splendid guitar, formed of real flowers.

On account of ill-health, Mad. Pauline Lucca has been obliged to renounce her engagement at the Royal Opera, Berlin. She has gone to Italy.

The Italian operatic company at Bilboa includes, among others, Signore De Cepeda, Pozzoni, Lodi, Beloff, MM. Gayarre, Kaschmann, Laban, and Uetam.

Wieland der Schmidt, a second opera by E. von Mihalovich, is accepted at the Theatre Royal, Dresden.—(This may be accepted on oath.—Dr Blidge.)

Mr Walter Coward, son of the late Mr James Coward (organist to the Crystal Palace), has been appointed an alto singer in the choir of the Temple Church.

Lola Beeth selected Margarethe in Gounod's Faust for her second part at the Royal Opera, Berlin. She is now engaged as a regular member of the company.

Lux's opera, Der Schmied von Ruhla, has been successful in Mayence, Mdlle Bettaque, formerly of the Royal Opera, Berlin, playing the leading character.

Owing to its very unsatisfactory performance, Bizet's Carmen has not been appreciated at the Teatro Pagliano, Florence. (So much the worse for Florence. Summon Minnie Hauk.—Dr Blidge.)

Mad. Rappoldi-Kahrer recently gave a concert at Chemnitz.—(This is barely credible.—Dr Blidge.) Rappoldi himself took part in a Beethoven Concert given by F. Schulz a short time since at Magdeburg.—(This may be verified by ear-witnesses.—Dr Blidge.)

Advertisements.

NEW SONG BY J. L. HATTON.

THE GOOD SHIP ROVER. Words by JOHN STEWART. Music by J. L. HATTON. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

PLAYED BY MDLLE KREBS.

LISZT'S "TARANTELLE DE LA MUETTE DE PORTICI" ("MASANIELLO"). 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NEW VOCAL QUARTET.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" Arranged for Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, and Bass by G. B. ALLEN. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

DANSE PYRRHIQUE.

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By

BROWNLOW BAKER.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Where may be obtained, Composed by Brownlow Baker, "Bourrée," in E flat, 4s; "Memory" (Romance), 3s.

CHAPPELL'S VOCAL LIBRARY OF PART-SONGS, &c.

		Composed or Arranged by	Price
1.	Dulce Domum. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
2.	Down among the Dead Men. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
3.	The Girl I've left behind me. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
4.	British Grenadiers. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
5.	Long live England's Future Queen. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
6.	My task is ended (Song and Chorus). A.T.B.B.	... Balfe	4d.
7.	Thus spake one Summer's Day. S.A.T.B.	... Abt	2d.
8.	Soldiers' Chorus. T.T.B.B.	Gounod	4d.
9.	The Kermesse (Scene from Faust)	,,	6d
10.	Up, quit thy bower. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	4d.
11.	Maidens, never go a-wooing. S.S.T.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
12.	Fagot Binders' Chorus	Gounod	4d.
13.	Sylvan Hours (for Six Female Voices)	Joseph Robinson	6d.
14.	The Gipsy Chorus	Balfe	4d.
15.	Ave Maria	Arcadelt	1d.
16.	Hark! the Herald Angels sing. S.A.T.B.	Mendelssohn	1d.
17.	England Yet (Solo and Chorus). S.A.T.B.	Jules Benedict	2d.
18.	The Shepherd's Sabbath Day. S.A.T.B.	J. L. Hatton	2d.
19.	Thoughts of Childhood. S.A.T.B.	Henry Smart	2d.
20.	Spring's Return. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
21.	An old Church Song. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
22.	Sabbath Bells. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
23.	Serenade. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
24.	Cold Autumn Wind. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
25.	Orpheus with his Lute. S.S.S.	Bennett Gilbert	2d.
26.	Lullaby. S.A.A.	,,	1d.
27.	This is my own, my native land. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
28.	March of the Men of Harlech. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
29.	God save the Queen. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
30.	Rule, Britannia. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
31.	The Retreat. T.T.B.B.	L. de Rille	2d.
32.	Lo! morn is breaking. S.S.S.	Cherubini	2d.
33.	We are Spirits. S.S.S.	G. A. Macfarren	4d.
34.	Market Chorus (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	Auber	4d.
35.	The Prayer (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
36.	The Water Sprites. S.A.T.B.	Kücken	2d.
37.	Eve's glittering Star. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
38.	When first the Primrose. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
39.	O Dewdrop bright. S.A.T.B	,,	1d.
40.	Sanctus from the Messe Solennelle. S.A.T.B.	Rossini	4d.
41.	Nine Kyries, Ancient and Modern	,,	2d.
42.	Sun of my soul. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	2d.
43.	'Twas fancy, and the ocean's spray. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
44.	A Prayer for those at Sea. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
45.	O Thou whose power (Prayer from Mose in Egitto)	Rossini	2d.
46.	The Guard on the Rhine. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
47.	The German Fatherland. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
48.	The Lord is my Shepherd (Quartet). S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
49.	Te Deum in F	Jackson	2d.
50.	Te Deum in F	Nares	2d.
51.	Charity (La Carita). S.S.S.	Rossini	4d.
52.	Cordelia. A.T.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	4d.
53.	I know. S.A.T.B.	Walter Hay	2d.
54.	Chorus of Handmaidens (from Fridolin)	A. Randegger	4d.
55.	The Offertory Sentences	Edmund Rogers	4d.
56.	The Red Cross Knight	Dr. Callcott	2d.
57.	The Chough and the Crow	Sir H. R. Bishop	3d.
58.	The "Carnovale"	Rossini	2d.
59.	Softly falls the moonlight	Edmund Rogers	4d.
60.	Air by Himmel	Henry Leslie	2d.
61.	Offertory Sentences	E. Sauerbrey	4d.
62.	The Resurrection	C. Villiers Stanford	6d.
63.	Our Boys (new Patriotic Song) H. J. Byron and W. M. Lutz		4d.
64.	The Men of Wales	Brinley Richards	2d.
65.	Dame Durden		1d.
66.	A little Farm well tilled	Hook	1d.
67.	There was a simple maiden	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
68.	Fair Hebe	,,	1d.
69.	Once I loved a maiden fair	,,	1d.
70.	The jovial man of Kent	,,	1d.
71.	The oak and the ash	,,	1d.
72.	Heart of Oak	,,	1d.
73.	Come to the sunset tree	W. A. Philpott	4d.
74.	May. S.A.T.B.	W. F. Banks	2d.
75.	Pure, lovely innocence (Il Roi de Lahore—Chorus for Female Voices)	G. Massenet	4d.
76.	A Love Idyl. S.A.T.B.	E. R. Terry	2d.
77.	Hail to the Woods! A.T.T.B.	J. Yarwood	2d.
78.	Near the town of Taunton Dean	Thomas J. Dudeney	2d.
79.	Our merry boys at sea	J. Yarwood	2d
80.	The Shepherd's Farewell. S.A.T.B.	Berlioz	3d.
81.	When the sun sets o'er the mountains (Il Demonio)	A. Rubinstein	3d.
82.	Hymn of Nature	Beethoven	3d.
83.	Michaelmas Day (Humorous Part Songs, No. 1)	Walter Maynard	4d.
84.	Sporting Notes (Humorous Part Songs, No. 2)	Walter Maynard	4d.
85.	Austrian National Hymn	Haydn	4d.

LONDON:

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND STREET, W.

CITY BRANCH—14 & 15, POULTRY.

Digitized by Google

NEW VOLUMES of the ROYAL SERIES.

THE SONGS OF SCANDINAVIA
AND NORTHERN EUROPE.
EIGHTY-THREE NATIONAL AND POPULAR SONGS.

THE SONGS OF EASTERN EUROPE.
ONE HUNDRED VOLKSLIEDER OF AUSTRIA, HUNGARY, BOHEMIA, SERVIA, &c.

WITH ENGLISH WORDS BY CLARA KAPPEY.

EDITED BY

J. A. KAPPEY.

Price 2s. 6d. each, paper covers; 4s. cloth.

"Messrs Boosey & Co. have done good service not only to amateurs but to art, by including in their series of volumes of national melodies 'The Songs of Scandinavia' and 'The Songs of Eastern Europe.' The first-named contains eighty-three examples; and the second, a hundred. We need not insist upon the importance of collections like these, whatever the country they represent; but we must say that no musical library is complete without the songs of Scandinavia and Eastern Europe. The editor, Mr J. A. Kappey, has taken great pains to secure melodies of a genuinely representative character, and at a time when attention is becoming more and more directed to folk-tunes as a source of new thematic ideas, the volumes in question are of peculiar value. They have our most hearty commendation, the 'Songs of Eastern Europe' more especially, since the volume contains, besides examples of Liszt, Chopin, and other masters, a very valuable collection of volkslieder from the hitherto untouched wealth of the Austrian provinces."—Daily Telegraph.

"Messrs Boosey & Co. have published two additional volumes of their National Songs, which appear likely to be the most interesting of the series. We know little of the rich repertory of Scandinavian Songs, and Mr and Miss Kappey, the editors of these books, are to be thanked for introducing some of the best specimens to public notice. Five of the Russian songs are so old as to be traditional; and in the series are to be found a beautiful Cossack lullaby by one Bachmetieff, a gipsy song by Lvoff, and several songs by Warlamoff. These and the Polish songs (all of which are traditional) may be considered among the most interesting items of a small but acceptable collection. Two ancient Lithuanian songs, a couple of Finnish, and four ancient Norwegian melodies, will likewise be found in the book. The majority of the Swedish songs are by Lindblad, that prolific song writer, who died in 1864. Tradition says that the old melody of 'The Beggar Boy' was once sung in the days when she was a poor child by the distinguished artist now known as Mdme Christine Nilsson. Included in the Danish songs is the traditional 'Dannebrog,' the music of which is attributed to one 'Bay.' It would be interesting to inquire the foundation for this statement, as the origin of the Danish National Anthem was generally understood to be unknown. The tradition of the 'Dannebrog Banner,' which, in 1719, fell down from heaven to bring victory to the Danish arms, is duly recorded in a footnote. Most of the Dutch songs given date back to the sixteenth century; and there are besides three songs by W. F. G. Nicolai, and one Flemish song. Altogether eighty-three of the national songs of northern Europe are included in this valuable and interesting book. In future editions a larger preface or more footnotes, giving further particulars of the old songs whose history is known, would be welcome. Equally interesting are the songs of Eastern Europe, recently issued by Messrs Boosey, and likewise edited by Mr and Miss Kappey. Among the thirty-four Austrian songs, the large majority are volkslieder, and they include Tyrolean, Styrian, and Polish songs, two of them by Chopin. These are followed by twenty-three characteristic specimens of Hungarian songs, giving a very fair idea of the peculiarities of Hungarian music, and comprising modern songs by Liszt, and some traditional songs of Bosnia, Moravia, and Dalmatia. The first of the Bohemian songs is the 'War-song of the Hussites,' once, it is believed, the national song of the country. A few specimens of Servian, Swiss, Greek, and even Turkish melodies. The last are very peculiar; and he peculiar intervals common to this and other Eastern music are claimed by some to have been handed down direct from the music of the ancient Hebrews."—Figaro.

LONDON: BOOSEY & CO., 295, REGENT STREET.

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA,
COVENT GARDEN, LIMITED.

CAPITAL £200,000 IN 19,900 ORDINARY SHARES OF £10 EACH, AND 1000 FOUNDERS' SHARES OF £1 EACH.

Of the Ordinary Shares, 4,000 have already been subscribed for at par, 2,900 are taken by the Vendors, together with the 1,000 Founders' Shares; and the remainder of the Ordinary Shares, viz., 13,000, are now offered for Subscription at par.

After payment of a cumulative 5 per cent. dividend on the Ordinary Shares, one-half of all surplus profits will be divided among the holders of the Ordinary Shares, and the remaining half among the holders of the Founders' Shares. The amounts payable in respect of the Ordinary Shares are as follows: £1 on Application, £1 on Allotment, £2 on June 1, 1882, £3 on July 1st, 1882. Holders of 25 Shares and upwards will be entitled to a reduction of 20 or 10 per cent. on the prices of admission, as explained in paragraph 12.

DIRECTORS.

The Right Hon. the Earl of LATHAM, Chairman. | His Serene Highness Count GLEICHEN. | J. H. RENTON, Esq., Throgmorton St. | W. M. EATON, Esq., 33, Old Broad St. ERNEST GYE, Esq., Managing Director.

Bankers—Messrs ROBARTS, LUBBOCK, and CO., 15, Lombard Street; Messrs RANSOM, BOUVERIE, and CO., 1 and 2, Pall Mall East.
Solicitors—Messrs ASHURST, MORRIS, CRISP, and CO., 6, Old Jewry, E.C.; G. M. SAUNDERS, Esq., Carlton Chambers, 8, Regent Street.
Brokers—Messrs HELBERT, WAGG, and CAMPBELL, 18, Old Broad Street; PATRICK BUCHAN, Esq., 10, Angel Court.
Secretary—F. S. VINCENT, Esq. Offices—ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, Covent Garden.

PROSPECTUS.

THE death of the late Mr Frederick Gye having necessitated the realization and division of his estate amongst his family, this company has been formed for the purpose of combining the two Italian Operas in London, and for purchasing from Mr Gye's executors the Covent Garden Opera House and Floral Hall, with the whole of the plant and contents, and also the lease and goodwill of Her Majesty's Opera House, with scenery, costumes, music, furniture, &c., the whole of which latter the executors have agreed to purchase for the above purpose.

2. The Covent Garden Opera House, the Floral Hall adjoining, and the buildings in Hart Street (which together cover an area of about 58,086 square feet) are held on leases direct from his Grace the Duke of Bedford, K.G., for a term, of which about 66 years are unexpired, at a ground rent of £1,216 12s. per annum, or at a rate of about 5d. per square foot, the present value of land being at least 1s. 6d. per square foot; and these leases, including all the boxes and seats, except the box belonging to the ground landlord, and the boxes and seats hereafter specified, together with the goodwill of the business, and the entire stock of music, scenery, dresses, armour, furniture, properties, and other plant for the mounting of the répertoire, which now comprises more than fifty operas, will be made over to the company by the executors of the late Mr Frederick Gye as a going concern.

3. A lease of Her Majesty's Theatre, commencing in last year (1881), was granted to the executors by the present Crown lessees, for the whole of their unexpired term under the Crown, viz., 30½ years, at an annual rental of £5,000, free from any existing rights, except the reservation of two boxes by the lessor. The average rents for which this theatre lets for the various periods of the year would be sufficient to pay the above annual rental, and insurance, taxes, &c., even should the company merely sublet the theatre, instead of using it themselves for any of the various entertainments for which such a theatre is suitable.

The above lease is based upon the decision of the High Court of Justice in the action of Quilter v. Mapleson; but should that decision be reversed on appeal, the old lease held by Mr Mapleson, which has about ten years to run (upon which a ground rent only of £1,934 6s. is payable), will be handed over to the company, subject to 12 property boxes and 26 stalls, reserved from the lease.

The arrangements now published with regard to Her Majesty's Theatre will be carried on by the company upon its formation.

4. The following is a description of the buildings and property and interests acquired by the company, by which will be seen the independent security which the Shareholders have for their subscribed capital, irrespective of the annual profits of the business.

(A.) The buildings known as Covent Garden Theatre and the Floral Hall attached, the storehouses in Hart Street, all built by the late Mr F. Gye, together with the before-mentioned lease (66 years unexpired); the buildings taken at cost and the lease at 20 years' purchase of the valued rental, and after allowing for sinking fund for redemption of capital	£206,780	0	0
(B.) The machinery, chandeliers, gas mains, fitttings, water supply, and fire mains, heating apparatus and other fittings, valued at	50,000	0	0
(C.) The scenery, costumes, properties, music, armour, and accessories for the répertoire of over 50 operas, valued (after allowing for depreciation) at	75,000	0	0
(D.) Scenery, costumes, properties, furniture, music, &c., at Her Majesty's Theatre	20,000	0	0
	£351,780	0	0
(E.) In addition to the above, the Lease of Her Majesty's Theatre, and the Goodwill of both Theatres are estimated at	£60,000	0	0

(F.) An agreement made with Mr Mapleson, whereby he has agreed to give his exclusive services to the company for a period of ten years, and to undertake to manage and conduct on behalf of the company the operatic business in the United States, which hitherto has been very profitable, and for which his great experience eminently fits him.

(G.) The benefit of all the agreements with artists, and others, which Messrs. Gye have acquired, together with all rights as to performance of operas, music, &c.

(H.) The benefit of an undertaking by the Messrs. Gye not to carry on any operatic undertaking in opposition to the company.

5. In settling the terms of purchase, the Directors have been able to arrange that £80,000, part of the sum hitherto secured on Covent Garden Theatre, shall remain on mortgage at 4 per cent., and that the holders of three boxes and six stalls shall, subject to indemnity in respect of the said mortgage, retain their seats, in lieu of being bought out in common with the other seatholders. These few seats make no sensible difference in the average nightly takings of so large a theatre as Covent Garden, containing, as it does, 105 boxes and 500 orchestra stalls.

6. The mortgage is redeemable by the company at any time.

7. The capital of the company (viz. £200,000) is appropriated as follows, viz.:—

(A.) For the purchase of the whole of the above properties and interests in both Opera Houses (subject to the mortgage of £80,000), and to the above boxes and stalls—cash	£140,000	0	0
Fully paid Ordinary Shares	29,000	0	0
" Founders' "	1,000	0	0
	£170,000	0	0
(B.) Reserved for working capital by the company	30,000	0	0
	£200,000	0	0

8. The company will thus have the virtual control of Italian operatic performances in London, in all the principal towns in Great Britain and the United States, for which latter branch of the company's business most important and advantageous arrangements are almost complete, (thereby providing engagements for the artists nearly all the year round).

9. The Covent Garden Opera House was built with a view to the interior arrangements, as to seats, &c., being easily adapted to the requirements of Pantomime, Concerts, and other like entertainments in the autumn and winter, during which seasons it lets on very advantageous terms.

10. The books of Covent Garden Opera have been thoroughly examined by Messrs. R. Mackay & Co., Chartered Accountants, of No. 3, Lothbury, and show that the average annual profit for the six years immediately preceding the death of the late Mr Gye was upwards of £15,000 for that theatre alone, quite irrespective of the business done during those years at Her Majesty's Theatre, which would now have also to be taken into consideration. Mr Gye's sudden death, occuring as it did shortly before the Opera Season of 1879, and other exceptional causes in the years 1879 and 1880, occasioned a falling off in the revenue of those two years, but during the year 1881 there was a large increase in the general receipts over the two above years, and the subscriptions for that season were the highest ever obtained.

11. The following estimate has been prepared by Mr Gye of the profits of the business to be carried on by the company, calculated after paying expenses and outgoings of every kind.

In the year 1869, the only year in which the combination of the two Italian Operas has ever yet been effected, which was at Covent Garden Theatre (as permanently secured by the present undertaking), the profits of the Italian Opera Season alone (extending a little over three months) amounted to £22,000. Assuming, however, that two-thirds only of this sum were to be realized, say	£15,000	0	0
The Average Rents for the winter months at which Covent Garden Theatre lets, amount to £5,000, and this sum may be taken as what would be received, supposing the company let the Theatre, instead of working it, and receiving the extra profits themselves	5,000	0	0
The alterations made last year in the re-arrangement of seats and prices admit of an additional annual profit of £12,000. The average nightly letting of these seats is over two-thirds of their number; but taking only two-thirds, the annual increase will amount to	8,000	0	0
The Operatic and Concert Tours in the principal Towns in Great Britain will produce, at a very low estimate	5,000	0	0
A careful estimate has been made for the undertaking in America and the United States, and a nett annual profit of upwards of £20,000 may be fairly expected. Assuming that about one-half only is realized, viz.:	10,000	0	0
	£43,000	0	0

No sum has been entered on account of profit from Her Majesty's Theatre, as the amount would depend on the particular uses to which the theatre might be put, as explained in paragraph 3.

From this profit of				£43,000	0 0
will first have to be paid:—
Interest on £80,000 at 4 per cent.	£3,200	0	0
Allowance for the annual Redemption of Mortgage, say	3,000	0	0
And for a Reserve and Sinking Fund, including depreciation of scenery, dresses, stock, and other plant, say	2,000	0	0
				8,200	0 0
Sum available for dividend				£34,800	0 0

Or over 11 per cent on the Ordinary Share Capital of £199,000, after payment to the holders of the Founders' Shares of their proportion of the surplus profits.

12. Shareholders to the amount of 25 Shares and upwards will (subject to such regulations as shall from time to time be determined by the Board) be entitled to a deduction of 10 per cent. on the published prices of admission to all operatic performances and concerts given by the company in this country and the United States, or elsewhere, as purchasers of tickets for any single entertainment, and to a deduction of 20 per cent. on the amount of their subscription, should they be subscribers for the London season, or for any series of performances or concerts, not less than twenty in number, out of London.

13. An agreement has been prepared, and will be entered into between Messrs Gye and the company, in which are recited the arrangements for acquiring the different interests comprised in the agreement.

14. There are various contracts connected with the ordinary business of the two houses, such as artists' engagements, rights of representations of operas, &c., all valuable to the company, but the particulars of which cannot, it is obvious, be set out, and applicants for Shares must be considered as having waived this being done.

15. Mr ERNEST GYE has agreed to act as Managing Director of the company.

16. The above-mentioned Contracts and Agreements, the Accountants' Report, and the Estimates of the Value of the Properties, together with the Memorandum and Articles of Association of the company, can be inspected at the Offices of the Solicitors.

If no allotment is made, the amount payable on application will be returned in full. Application for Shares to be made to the Bankers.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application can be had of the Bankers, or the Brokers, or at the Offices of the company.

London, March, 1882.

FORM OF APPLICATION.

To the Directors of

THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN, LIMITED.

Gentlemen,—I hereby request you to reserve for and allot me Shares on the footing of the Prospectus dated March, 1882, and I hereby agree to accept the same or any less number of Shares that may be allotted to me, and to pay the Calls thereon from time to time as required.

Name in full Residence
Date 1882.
Ordinary Signature.

Digitized by Google

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, & SPALDING, at 3 and 5, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street. Saturday, April 15, 1882.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 60.—No. 16. SATURDAY, APRIL 22, 1882. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA,
COVENT GARDEN.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), April 22, will be performed GOUNOD'S Opera, "FAUST E MARGHERITA." Margherita, Mdlle Olga Berghi (her first appearance in England); Siebel, Mdme Trebelli; Marta, Mdlle Ghiotti; Mefistofele, M. Bonhy (his first appearance in England); Valentino, Signor Cotogni; Wagner, Signor Raguer; and Faust, Signor Frapolli. Conductor—M. DUPONT.

MONDAY Next, April 24, ROSSINI'S Opera, "GUGLIELMO TELL." Mathilde, Mdlle Valleria; Eduige, Mdlle Ghiotti; Jemmy, Mdlle Velmi; Guglielmo Tell, Signor Cotogni; Walter, Signor de Reszké; Gessler, Signor Scolara; Melchtal, Signor Raguer; Un Pescatore, Signor Igenio Corsi; and Arnoldo, Signor Mierswinsky. Conductor—M. DUPONT. The Incidental Divertissement will be supported by Mdlle L. Reuters, Mdlle E. Reuters, Mdlle H. Reuters, and the Corps de Ballet.

Doors open at 8.0; the Opera commences at 8.30. The Box Office, under the portico of the Theatre, is open from Ten till Five. Orchestra Stalls, £1 5s.; Side Boxes on the first tier, £3 3s.; Upper Boxes, £2 12s. 6d.; Balcony Stalls, 15s.; Pit Tickets, 7s.; Amphitheatre Stalls, 10s. 6d. and 5s.; Amphitheatre, 2s. 6d. Programmes, with full particulars, can be obtained of Mr Edward Hall, at the Box Office, under the Portico of the Theatre, where applications for Boxes and Stalls are to be made; also of Mr Mitchell, Messrs Lacon & Ollier, Mr Bubb, Messrs Chappell & Co., and Mr Ollivier, Bond Street; Messrs Leader & Co., 62, Piccadilly; Messrs Cramer & Co., 201, Regent Street; Mr Alfred Hays, 4, Royal Exchange Buildings, and 26, Old Bond Street; and of Messrs Keith, Prowse & Co., 48, Cheapside.

CRYSTAL PALACE SATURDAY CONCERT, THIS DAY, April 22nd, at Three. The programme will include Overture, Fidelio (Beethoven); Symphony in D, Op. 60 (Dvorak), first time in England; "Le Carnaval Romain" (Benvenuto Cellini) (Berlioz); "Concertstück" (Weber). Vocalist—Miss Mary Davies. Solo Pianoforte—Mr Franz Rummel. Conductor—Mr AUGUST MANNS. Numbered Seats, 2s. 6d.; Unnumbered Seats, 1s.; Admission to Concert-room, 6d.

MDME SOPHIE MENTER'S FIRST PIANOFORTE RECITAL. MONDAY, April 24, ST JAMES'S HALL, Three o'clock. Schumann's "Carnival," Selections from Scarlatti, Mendelssohn, Henselt, Schubert, Liszt, Rubinstein, and Chopin. Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Balcony, 3s.; Admission, 1s.; Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., 84, New Bond Street; usual Agents; and at Austin's Ticket Office, St James's Hall.

PROFESSOR MICHAEL BERGSON (late Principal at the Conservatoire of Geneva) has the honour to inform his Friends and Pupils that his ANNUAL CONCERT will take place in the month of MAY, at ST GEORGE'S HALL. Particulars will be shortly issued. The following Compositions by Professor BERGSON will be introduced: "Concerto Symphonique," Op. 62, played with immense success by the Composer, at his Concerts in Paris, Geneva, and London; also his "Grande Polonaise Héroïque," for violin, as played by MM. Pollitzer, Castali, and Herr Joseph Ludwig, with distinguished success.

ST. GEORGE'S HALL.

PROFESSOR MICHAEL BERGSON'S GRAND ANNUAL CONCERT.—Prof. M. BERGSON begs to announce that the following popular Compositions of his will be performed early in May, viz.: "Il Ritorno," Rondo-Valse, sung by Miss Berta Foresta; "The Better World," sung by Miss Jessica O'Brien; "Serenade Moresque," sung by Signor Ria, tenor, San Carlo, Naples; Sacred Song, "At morn I beseech Thee," sung by Miss Alice Fairman; "The Two Hearts," sung by Mrs Furlong. Signor Ria will sing on this occasion, Ascher's popular Romance, "Alice, where art thou?" and also Mr W. H. Holmes's Song, "Memories Sweet and Sad" (the poetry by Mrs M. A. Baines).

MADAME MARIE ROZE'S PROVINCIAL TOUR.

MADAME MARIE ROZE will appear next week in CONCERTS at Oxford, Cardiff, Cheltenham, and York, under the direction of Mr Vert, to whom all communications should be addressed.
52, New Bond Street, W.

MR and Mdme BODDA'S (Miss LOUISA PYNE) ACADEMY FOR SINGING, Operatic and Miscellaneous. "BONALLY," 85 and 87, Cambridge Gardens, Notting Hill. Professional and Amateur. In and Out-Door Students. Studies—Singing (Private Lessons), Elocution, Piano, Deportment, Choral Practice, Italian. Prospectuses as above, or Mr STEDMAN, 12, Berners Street.

MARLBOROUGH ROOMS, 307, REGENT STREET
(Adjoining the Polytechnic).

ON MONDAY, MAY, 15th, 1882, AT THREE O'CLOCK,

MISS ROSA KENNEY
(Daughter of the late Charles Lamb Kenney)
Will give a Second
DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL AFTERNOON RECITAL,
Which will include
THE POTION SCENE FROM "ROMEO AND JULIET," "THE VISION OF JOAN OF ARC" (by CHARLES LAMB KENNEY), SCENES FROM "THE SCHOOL FOR SCANDAL," &c., &c.

ARTHUR SKETCHLEY and other Distinguished Artists will appear. Full particulars will be duly announced.

Tickets, 10s., 5s., and 2s. 6d., to be obtained of Messrs Boosey & Co., 295, Regent Street; Messrs Chappell & Co., 50, New Bond Street; Mr Mitchell, 33, Old Bond Street; Keith & Prowse, Langham Hotel and Cheapside.

LONDON CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.—Principal—Mr LANSDOWNE COTTELL.
The Directors invite attention to the recent extension and increased accommodation, residential and otherwise.
Fees from Two Guineas per term, residential from Fourteen Guineas, inclusive of the Musical and Fine Art Lectures.
Free Tuition is awarded to talented young artists unable to pay fees by fund granted for this purpose.
Prospectus (one stamp), Hon. Sec., 6, Tavistock Square.

SCHUBERT SOCIETY. President—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT. Founder and Director—Herr SCHUBERTH. Sixteenth Season, 1882. Members are informed that the Second Concert (70th since formation of Society—Schumann's Compositions in first part of programme), took place at the Langham Hall, on Thursday, 20th April. Ladies and Gentlemen desirous of joining the Society may have prospectus and full particulars on application to H. G. HOPPER, Hon. Sec., 244, Regent Street, W.

MDME KLEIN LETS her SALON for Concerts, Matinées, &c., during the Season.—1, Bentinck Street, Cavendish Square, W.

GERMAN CONDUCTOR, CHOIRMASTER, PROF. OF MUSIC.

A GERMAN Professor of Music from the Academy of Music, Berlin, pupil of Kullak, Dorn, Wüerst, seeks for a good Engagement as CONDUCTOR and (besides) as CHOIRMASTER. He is also an excellent and much-quested Pianist, Singing and Compositions Master of good name. Address send to Berlin, Post Office, No. 60, sub. A. B. F. G.

TO MUSICAL AMATEURS AND PROFESSIONALS.

THE Advertiser, who is promoting a Musical Society for London and the Provinces upon novel principles, is desirous of obtaining the Co-operation of Musical Amateurs and Professionals. Particulars, by letter only, of Mr WELLS, 43, Finsbury Circus, E.C.

"IN SHELTERED VALE."

MR LEWIS THOMAS will sing CARL FORMES' celebrated Song, "IN SHELTERED VALE," at the Music Festival to be held next week at St Leonards.

"THE MESSAGE."

MR VERNON RIGBY will sing BLUMENTHAL'S admired Song, "THE MESSAGE," at the Royal Albert Hall, This Day (Saturday), April 22nd.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR GEORGE COX will sing ASCHER'S "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU," at Dorchester, on April 26th.

"ANGELS' FOOD."

SIGNOR SCHIRA'S admired Song (for Tenor or Soprano), "ANGELS' FOOD" (Poetry by RITA), is published, price 4s., by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.—An Harmonium Part to the above Song is also published, price 1s.

Digitized by Google

Just Published.

THE BETTER WORLD.

Words by Mrs. M. A. BAINES.

Music by

MICHAEL BERGSON.

Composed expressly for and sung by Mdme MARIE ROZE; sung also by Mdmes SANDERINI, DE VANNEY, and Miss JESSICA O'BRIEN.

Price 4s.

London: STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

Just Published.

NOT ONCE OR TWICE.

SONG.

Words by DOROTHY BLOMFIELD.

Music by

F. NEALE

(Composer of "Grandfather's Chair," "My Love and I").

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

ALICE.

TRANSCRIPTION FOR THE

FLUTE AND PIANOFORTE,

OF ASCHER'S POPULAR ROMANCE.

By

J. HARRINGTON YOUNG.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

The only Gold Medal for Wind Instruments with Keys, in the Paris Universal Exhibition of 1878, was unanimously awarded by the Jury to Messrs P. GOUMAS & Co., for the fine quality of tone and finish of their Instruments.

SPECIAL MANUFACTORY OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FOR

CLARIONETS, FLUTES, PICCOLOS, OBOES, BASSOONS, COR ANGLAIS, FLAGEOLETS, AND SAXOPHONES.

P. GOUMAS & Co.

(Late BUFFET, CRAMPON & Co.),

Established 1830.

Nine Prize Medals have been awarded to GOUMAS & Co. for general excellence and improvements in the Manufacture of Wind Instruments with Keys.

Manufacturers of all kinds of Wood Wind Instruments for Military Bands, Musical Instrument Makers to Her Majesty's Army and Navy, and to the Armies, Navies, and Conservatoires of France, Belgium, Italy, Russia, Austria, Spain, America, &c.

Manufactory at Mantes (Seine et Oise), France. Paris: Passage du Grand Cerf, 18 et 20.

LONDON: 39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET.

Price Lists sent free on application.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF

ALL KINDS OF MUSIC STRINGS FOR ALL MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Sole Depôt for Signor ANDREA RUFFINI'S (of Naples) Celebrated Strings for Soloists, manufactured by him on a system invented by Mons. J. B. VUILLAUME, of Paris.

Sole Agent for CHARLES ALBERT'S (of Philadelphia, U.S.) new Patent Improved Chin Rest; also his improved String Gauge.

39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, W.

Price Lists free on application.

All kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner on powerful machines made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

NEW SONGS, with Words and Music by H. C. HILLER.

"IN THE HAVEN" (Tenor) Mr ABERCROMBIE'S new Song ... ... 4s.
"THY DEAR NAME" (Tenor or Soprano), Mr ABERCROMBIE'S new Song 4s.
"SWEETEST SLUMBER" (Tenor or Sop.), Mr FAULKNER LEIGH'S new Song 4s.
"THE QUEEN'S SHILLING" (Baritone), Mr HORSCROFT'S new Song ... 4s.
"THE BORDER RAIDER" (Baritone), Mr CHAPLIN HENRY'S new Song .. 4s.

Sent post free for 24 Stamps each.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NEW SONG BY J. L. HATTON.

THE GOOD SHIP ROVER. Words by JOHN STEWART. Music by J. L. HATTON. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

PLAYED BY MDLLE KREBS.

LISZT'S "TARANTELLE DE LA MUETTE DE PORTICI" ("MASANIELLO"). 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co. 244, Regent Street, W.

THE VOICE AND SINGING.

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING,

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

VOCAL EXERCISES COMPOSED BY FRANK MORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by the late FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

New Edition of "LE PETIT SOLFEGE."

LE PETIT SOLFEGE. Vingt Solfèges pour Voix de Mezzo-Soprano. Par Jos. CURCI. Price 6s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

"This work for educational purposes will be found of inestimable value, since it is one of the very few which confines itself to the cultivation of the middle of the voice; and whilst the phrases are admirably adapted to develop the breathing powers and volume of the voice, the melodies are so exquisitely harmonized that they must prove of great benefit in the improvement of the taste and ear of a student in singing."—Pictorial World.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE.

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdme Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklein, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis, of Basingstoke, says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

CONCERT GRANDS · PARLOUR GRANDS · UPRIGHT GRANDS.
ROSENKRANZ & Co
ESTABLISHED 1797 IN DRESDEN.
THE BEST VALUE IN THE TRADE
9, ARGYLL STREET, LONDON, W.
PIANOFORTES
EXCELSIOR · FAVORITE · AND COTTAGE PIANOS.

LA POMPA DI FESTA. Grande Marche, pour Piano, à Quatre Mains. Par IGNACE GIBSONE. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"HER VOICE."

"HER VOICE." IGNACE GIBSONE'S popular Song (poetry by "A Soldier's Daughter"), sung by Mdme ENRIQUEZ, is published, price 4s., by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"PARADISE LOST." An Oratorio. Composed by ANTON RUBINSTEIN, on the Poem of MILTON. The English version of the words by JOSIAH PITTMAN. Paris: GÉRARD, 2, Rue Scribe.

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The new season at Covent Garden began on Tuesday night with a performance of Les Huguenots, to which the National Anthem, by way of particular distinction, served as a prelude. It is unnecessary to defend the choice of a well-known work for an opening night. A great operatic company assembles under conditions which make elaborate preparation almost an impossibility, and needs must that the selected work be one that, so to speak, runs of itself. Meyerbeer's masterpiece assuredly meets the requirement. It has been performed so often by Mr Gye's company that every person and thing concerned in its representation falls into place without trouble. We do not say that the result is ideally perfect—far from it. But if the imperfect must always be flouted, what would enjoy toleration? The preference given to Les Huguenots is defensible on other and special grounds. Often disparaged as hackneyed, the work never fails to interest and please those who, when beyond its influence, abuse it, while even exigent connoisseurs find in it many a page full of melody that retains its charm, or of power that continues to impress. The performance was attended by a large though not crowded audience, among whom was the Prince of Wales, and passed off as well as could be expected under somewhat untoward circumstances. Handbills were distributed in the theatre asking indulgence for Mdme Fürsch-Madi* (Valentina), on the ground of indisposition, while it was obvious that neither Mdme Valleria (Marguerita de Valois) nor Signor Mierzwinsky (Raoul) enjoyed full possession of their physical resources. With three leading artists so affected, it was no wonder that the representation sometimes flagged. Yet all three did the best that was possible to them. A bad cold could not hide the fact that Mdme Fürsch-Madi is an artist of high intelligence and great sympathy. This most appeared in the fine duet with Marcel, during which the lady was comparatively fresh, and throughout which she earned her full share of the considerable honours bestowed upon the joint effort. Mdme Valleria, with reminiscences of success in Wagnerian opera attending her, made an easy mark as the Queen—a part often played by her, but never before on the Covent Garden stage. She sang, despite a cold, with grace and charm, while making as much as possible of the very slight dramatic element in the character. Marguerita de Valois has been represented by many artists of high rank on our Italian stage, but by none with more genuine attractiveness. Mdme Trebelli, whose "Nobil Signor" was encored, played the page in her own familiar way; Signor Cotogni was again a Nevers whom it would be hard to match, and Signor de Reszké, by means of artistic qualities that are nothing short of eminent, gave much distinction to the rôle of St Bris. The Raoul of Signor Mierzwinsky should, under the circumstances, be judged leniently. It was evident that the Russian tenor did not feel at his ease. Now and then, however, he roused the audience by forcing one of his resonant high notes, while, from a dramatic point of view, he satisfied many, if not all, requirements. Signor Gresse, to whom was entrusted the part of Marcel, did not spare himself in endeavouring to make prominent the bluffness and conscientious zeal of the faithful Huguenot. But he should not have accentuated everything equally. He played the part uniformly in large capitals, and so failed to catch attention at particular points. Otherwise Signor Gresse did well, both voice and appearance being greatly in favour of his success. Concerning the work of band and chorus there is nothing special to be said. Signor Bevignani conducted admirably as usual, and the new stage manager may be congratulated upon at least one laudable innovation. Instead of dispersing the citizens of Paris by means of a company of musketeers, as though they were a seditious gathering, he sent across the stage a patrol of three halberdiers, one of whom gave a warning to retire and passed on.—D. T.

On Thursday night Lucia di Lammermoor was given, with Mdme Sembrich as the unhappy heroine; and this evening Faust e Margherita is announced for the débuts of Mdlle Olga Berghi and M. Bouhy.

THE MUSICAL UNION.

M. J. Lasserre, successor to Professor Ella as Director of the Musical Union, has favoured us with the subjoined circular:—

"In consequence of circumstances beyond control, M. Lasserre will not be able to give any Subscription Concerts of the Musical Union this season. One Grand Matinée only will represent the time-honoured institution in the musical events of the year, and for this M. Lasserre has secured the services of eminent artists. The date and details of this Grand Matinée will be duly announced in the daily papers."

* Who made her début as Mdme Fürsch-Madier last season in the same character.

FRENCH MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(Communicated.)

Arrangements are in active progress for holding a Musical Festival and Competition, between the French Orphéons, in the Royal Albert Hall, on June 20th and 21st, similar to the one held so successfully at Brighton last year, when 2,000 representatives of French, Belgian, and Swiss societies were present. Several of the leading French choirs and fanfares have already intimated their intention to take part in the gathering, including L'Harmonie de Batignolles; La Fanfare des Amis Réunis, Albert-Somme; La Société Musicale de Vichy; La Fanfare Musicale de Montereau, Seine et Marne; L'Union Chorale de Villeneuve la Guyard, Yonne; La Fanfare de Valdampierre, Seine et Oise; La Fanfare Bellemanière, Versailles; La Musique Municipale de Cambrai, Nord; La Société Chorale de St Dié, Vosges; Grande Fanfare de Roubaix, Nord; Société Philharmonique de Braux, Ardennes; Chorale Catésienne du Cateau, Nord, &c., &c., &c. Sirs Julius Benedict, George Elvey, and Herbert Oakeley, MM. Randegger, H. Leslie, Brinley Richards, Albert Visetti, F. H. Cowen, Tito Mattei, T. Wylde, E. H. Thorne, and the members of the last year Musical Festival Committee have consented to act as jurors, in association with other musical authorities from Paris. In addition to the competitions, for which prizes consisting of medals, wreaths, works of art, &c., will be offered, two concerts will be given, supported by the principal societies and distinguished soloists and instrumentalists from the Grand Opera and Conservatoire de Musique of Paris. M. Chérifel de la Grave, of Brighton; M. H. A. Simon, proprietor of L'Orphéon, Paris; and Mr Herbert Bamford, of Wareham, Dorset, are the promoters of the scheme, which will be under high patronage. M. C. de la Grave is again Honorary Secretary.

The Music of the Future.—Unusual Bargain.

A splendid, nobly-sized, Hungarian Orchestriphonikon to be disposed of. This really fine Instrument, possessing all the power and producing more than the effect of a full wind and string band of ninety performers, having been originally constructed, regardless of expense, at the direction of a refined and luxurious nobleman, who had the misfortune to become totally deaf soon after the realization of his elegant hobby, and, having subsequently supplied the incidental music, with surprising success, to a moving Panorama of the Siege of Seringapatam, may be safely entertained by any purchaser wishing to provide himself and his immediate neighbours with the complete effect of a permanent Promenade Concert on the premises. As it was once a little damaged in a "money-returned" riot, and has since played the Overture to William Tell, the "Blue Bells of Scotland," and a Selection from Norma, on the bass alone, omitting one note in three, while the treble portion proceeds, in another key, with a set of Variations on the beautiful air of "Tom Bowling," any ardent admirer of Wagner would find in the performance of this unique instrument an unfailing source of satisfaction. Would make an appropriate and handsome present to a Musical Orphan Asylum in want of a serviceable Washing-Machine. Has a spare barrel set with the Overture to Zampa, that has been used for years as a garden-roller. Would be changed for a Bushel of Potatoes, or any suitable equivalent.—Apply, Mozart, Blowers' Buildings, E.C.—Punch.

BERLIN.

(Correspondence.)

Marianne Brandt chose the part of Leah in Anton Rubinstein's Maccabäer for her farewell appearance at the Royal Operahouse. The Italian operatic season, at the Central Skating-Rink, opened with Donizetti's Poliuto, the principal characters sustained by Signora Adina, Signori Aramburo, Parboni, Corsi, and Gasperini, under the conductorship of Bimboni. The second opera was Crispino e la Comare, by the Brothers Ricci. A new three-act opera, Prinz Orlofsky, music by Raida, has been produced at the Victoria Theater.—According to annual custom, there was a performance of Graun's Tod Jesu, at the Singakademie, on Good Friday.—After an interval of twelve years, Jean Vogt's oratorio, Die Auferweckung des Lazarus (The Raising of Lazarus), has been given, with Radecke's Vocal Association, strengthened by outsiders, and Bilse's Orchestra.

Digitized by Google

THE MUSICAL EAR.

It would be curious, if it were practicable, to ascertain how far the development of the musical ear of England has kept pace with the growth of our musical organization—the whole system of choir formation, concert giving, and general musical education, which have been so characteristic of the progress of English society during the past two or three generations. The thing cannot be done, because we have no sort of record of the extent to which the possession of an "ear" has been enjoyed at any particular time past. It would not be difficult, perhaps, to devise a fairly satisfactory standard of time and tune by which to test the musical sensibility of any given number of persons sufficient to represent the "ear" of the day, and it would, perhaps, be not altogether without scientific utility to do so with a view to a repetition of the test a few years hence. We seem to be on the point of making a very decided advance in musical matters in this country. The time is evidently quite ripe for it; a very general desire for improvement has given rise to what seems to be a strong movement, and the next ten years ought to witness a great stride in our musical education. It would be very interesting to be able at the end of this period not only to look back on the progress that has been made in the higher departments of the subject, but to have also some sort of criterion of the extent to which the unmusical mass has been brought along by the general tide. By the unmusical mass we must not be understood to mean the mass of the lower stratum of society, but that great body of unmusical people to be found.

We have really very little idea of the extent to which musical insensibility prevails. We cannot tell with any degree of certainty whether one person in five, or one in ten, or one in a hundred is practically destitute of the musical faculty. We have no means of ascertaining the truth on the subject. If we had we should be probably startled. We should find many facts which would at first appear hardly credible. In an ordinary Albert Hall assembly, for instance, we should, if we only had some trustworthy test, find that no inconsiderable number of persons composing it not only derived no pleasure from the finest music to be heard there, but were positively pained by it, and only sat through the performance under the compulsion of circumstances. Edwin, who perceives that all the world affects a musical enthusiasm, and knows that Angelina has a special craze upon the subject, will undergo any amount of torture with a smiling face, and even shout lustily for an encore rather than have it suspected that he really feels a strong inclination to howl like a dog at every outburst of harmony. He knows that in one of Angelina's favourite passages in Shakspere, the great poet has made Lorenzo declare that the man who is not moved with concord of sweet sounds is fit for treason, the motions of his spirits are dull as night, his affections dark as Erebus. Let no such man be trusted, says Lorenzo. In his innermost heart, Edwin may perhaps suspect that Lorenzo was something of a humbug, and merely gave utterance to what he thought would be sure to please a girl who had just revealed a special susceptibility of soul to the influence of music. But not for the world would he breathe any such suspicion. On the contrary, he will probably quote the passage with hearty approval, and applaud vociferously even at moments of supreme anguish rather than have it supposed that he is a being of this dark and dangerous nature. It requires some little fortitude of soul to avow a strong repugnance to anything in which society generally recognizes at once a means and an outcome of refinement. There have been some equal to such an avowal; but they have been either below or above the ordinary conventionalities of "society." At any rate, they have been outside such conventionalities, like Voltaire, for instance, who always appeared to be put in the worst possible mood by music, however good, and who made no secret of his strong aversion to it. Usually, however, a person finding everybody about him apparently capable of appreciating music, will naturally do his best to conceal his own private sentiment on the subject, and will refrain from an admission which would at once relegate him to the Goths and barbarians.

That there are some "ears" of an organization so peculiar that the finest music jars upon their sensibilities most unpleasantly and even painfully, is a fact as indisputable as that there are some eyes to which a full flood of light occasions only suffering, and olfactory senses to which the sweetest odours of flowers are sickening and repulsive. No doubt, however, they are comparatively few. A more numerous section of the community probably are those who are more or less insensible merely to the power of music, just as some are insensible to the charms of colour or are wanting in the sense of smell or taste. Enthusiasts have sometimes maintained that every individual has a certain degree of musical faculty which only requires to be developed, but that certainly is not the case. Unquestionably there are to be found in any considerable community a certain small percentage of those who are incapable of distinguishing between one musical sound and another. Such incapacity is probably due to some physical defect, and in that case, of course, no amount of training will be of any use. But it would be easy to accumulate a host of facts in support of the contention that wherever there is a capability of distinguishing one sound from another there is the possibility of making a musician. The foreign potentate who did not at all enjoy the concert, but thought the preliminary tuning of the fiddles immensely fine, undoubtedly had the making of a good instrumentalist. He had a strong preference for one kind of sound as compared with another, and the rectification of any little eccentricity of taste would only have been a matter of time and teaching. "No ear" is, it must be confessed, rather a dismal starting-point for a musical career, and it may be open to grave question whether it is really worth while to make a start from such a point. In determining this question of ear or no ear, however, serious mistakes are often made. School teachers will often require fresh pupils to sing certain notes, and will forthwith pronounce upon their "ear" without reflecting that the fault may possibly lie in the unpractised vocal powers, and not in the power to discriminate between sounds. Most amateurs who sing only occasionally must be well aware that it is not always in their power to hit just the note they wish, and that their own sense of tune, quite as much as that of the bystanders, is often outraged by their own voice. The power to produce a given note, and the power to recognize it when produced, are distinct things. But even when the ear is naturally wanting, it is astonishing what a little careful training will sometimes do. It was stated the other day by a large pianoforte maker, that a man who is now an excellent tuner, when first put there as a lad, was apparently all but destitute of the sense of musical sound. The delicate perception of the tuner was gradually acquired by effort and practice. The process that was carried on in this individual case by specific effort, is precisely that which goes on more slowly in the community at large by the multiplication of concerts, singing classes, public bands, &c., and the time may come when a person with no musical ear will be almost as great a phenomenon as a person with no ears at all.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The competition for the Lady Goldsmid Scholarship took place on Monday, April 17. The examiners were Sir Julius Benedict, Messrs Eyers, Jewson, Lunn, Walter Macfarren, Brinley Richards, Harold Thomas, Westlake, and the Principal (chairman). There were eighteen candidates, and the scholarship was awarded to Annie Cantelo.

Subjoined is the list of works played by the competitors:—

Study, in C minor, Bk. 4 (Chopin), Sonata, in E, Op. 109 (Beethoven); Chromatic Fantasia (J. S. Bach); Sonata, in D minor, Op. 31, No. 2 (Beethoven); 3me Ballade, in A flat (Chopin); Il moto Continuo (arranged by Brahms), Sonata, E flat, Op. 27, last movement (Beethoven); 3me Ballade, in A flat (Chopin), Sonata, in C minor, Op. 111, 1st movement (Beethoven); Fugue, in E minor (Handel), Masaniello (Thalberg); Nocturne, in C minor, No. 12 (Chopin), Toccata (Schumann); Prelude and Fugue, E minor, Vol. 2 (J. S. Bach), Barcarolle (Chopin); Fugue, in A flat, Vol. 2 (J. S. Bach), Ballade, in G minor (Chopin); Sonata, in F minor, Op. 5, last two movements (Beethoven); Sonata, in C, 1st movement (Paradies), Aufschwung (Schumann); Italian Concerto, last two movements (J. S. Bach), Study in F minor, No. 4 (W. Sterndale Bennett); Selections from Études Symphoniques (Schumann), Organ Fugue, in G minor (J. S. Bach)—(arranged by Liszt); Fugue, in F, Vol. 2 (J. S. Bach), Allegro Grazioso (W. Sterndale Bennett); Capriccio, in B flat minor, Op. 33 (Mendelssohn); Fugue, in D minor, Vol. 2 (J. S. Bach), Tema con Variazioni (W. Sterndale Bennett); Prelude and Fugue, in B flat, Vol. 1 (J. S. Bach); Kreisleriana, Nos. 1 and 2 (Schumann).

THE LATE MR ROSSETTI.

The funeral of Mr D. G. Rossetti took place on Friday afternoon in the picturesque little churchyard of Birchington-on-Sea. The arrangements were of the simplest kind, the cortége consisting only of the poet's aged mother and other members of his family, besides a few intimate friends. The funeral service was read by the Rev. J. P. Alcock, the vicar of Birchington, who had visited Mr Rossetti during his last illness. We are asked to state, with reference to the proposed exhibition of Mr Rossetti's works at the galleries of the Fine Art Society, that neither the family nor the principal owners had been consulted when the announcement was made, and without their consent any exhibition of Mr Rossetti's pictures would, of course, be extremely defective.—Times.

Digitized by Google

CHERUBINI.

(Continued from page 224.)

III.

The young reputation of Cherubini procures him an invitation to go and write two operas in London.—His distinguished reception in England.—His first visit to and first stay in Paris. His connection with Viotti and the happy influence it exercised on his future.—Viotti presents him at Court; Queen Marie Antoinette receives him most kindly and facilitates his introduction at the Sacred Concerts.—He settles definitively in Paris, after composing and bringing out one last work in Italy.

Cherubini had not yet completed his twenty-fourth year, yet he had just brought out his eighth opera, and his reputation had spread so far and so rapidly that, on his return to Florence from giving his last work at Mantua, he was asked to sign an engagement binding him to go and compose two Italian operas in London for the two seasons of 1785 and 1786.* The two operas were to be performed at the King's Theatre in the Haymarket. The proposal was a tempting one and he did not hesitate accepting it. He was then doubtless far from thinking that, though destined to see Italy once again, he never would return to his native town! However this may be, he started from Florence for England some time in the month of September, 1784.† He was received in London in the most courteous and distinguished manner, as he himself informs us, without entering into minute details; "During his stay in London, he had the honour of being presented to the Prince of Wales, afterwards Regent, and then King, under the name of George IV. This Prince was very fond of music, especially vocal music. Cherubini played on several occasions with him and the Duke of Quisbourg, with whom he was very well acquainted."‡ He brought out in the spring of 1785 his first work, La Finta Principessa, which was a buffo-opera. According to tradition, it met with a very favourable reception, but, singularly enough, Burney, the celebrated English writer, does not say a word about it in his History of Music, or of any other of Cherubini's works which followed it, and which were almost servile copies. After this fortunate beginning, Cherubini wrote six pieces for an opera entitled Demetrio, a sort of patchwork, the music of which emanated from different composers.§ Soon afterwards, having some leisure in consequence of the usual yearly closing of the theatre, he profited by the opportunity to come and make a short stay in Paris, which, as we can easily understand, he was very desirous of seeing and knowing:

"Towards the end of July this year," he says, "he paid a visit to Paris, where he first made the acquaintance of the celebrated Viotti, with whom he formed a close friendship, and with whom he promised to come and spend the next year in that capital. It was during this visit that he was presented to Marie Antoinette, by whom he was most favourably received, and who expressed a wish to hear some of his music at the concerts which took place in the Château of Versailles."‖

The journey which he thus made simply for his pleasure, was destined to exert upon his future a decisive influence of which he then had no idea. From that day, though two years were to pass before he resolved on settling in Paris, he belonged virtually to France, which he was to make his adopted country. His close intimacy with Viotti, to whom he was naturally attracted by their common nationality, was destined to bring about this result, and we shall see by what concatenation of events his career took a new and unexpected direction. Viotti, the incomparable violinist, had resided in Paris since 1782. After a long course of travel which he undertook in Europe with his master, Pugnani; after his stay in Germany, Poland, and Russia; after his triumphs at Warsaw, St Petersburgh, and Berlin; he came to Paris to consecrate definitively his young but already immense reputation. For two years he had enchanted the amateurs of the Sacred Concerts, causing them to forget Jarnowick, and had astounded all our artists, for whom his noble and grandiose execution, full of poetry, disclosed a complete transformation in the art of violin-playing. Then, suddenly, in consequence of something which people have endeavoured to explain, but which has really remained unknown, he gave up most absolutely appearing before the Paris public. However, as he was hardly thirty and possessed talent which may without exaggeration be qualified as marvellous, we may well suppose that he did not desert the noble cultivation of art and the pursuit of the purest ideal. Young, handsome, gentlemanly, and endowed with the most happy gifts of intelligence, he had quickly found himself sought after by all the most eminent members of high society and the cleverest men in Paris. Having become conductor of the Prince of Guéménée's famous concerts, he was received at Court, where the Queen accorded him a particularly flattering welcome, and he was to be seen in the salons of Mdme d'Etioles, Mdme de Rohan, and the Duchess de Richelieu. On the other hand, very accessible to the new ideas and liberal doctrines, which then were the daily preoccupation of all, he became intimate with the encyclopædists, frequented men of letters and authors, forming affectionate relations with some, among whom Marmontel, Florian, and the Abbé Morellet, are especially mentioned. Having amassed a veritable fortune on his grand European tour, he was in consequence independent, and divided the pleasant and smiling existence he led in Paris between important labours of composition, the care he bestowed on his pupils, numerous mundane relations, and periods of intelligent and studious leisure. When Cherubini, preceded by the great reputation he had achieved in his own country, came, to a certain extent, accidentally, and made his first stay in Paris, Viotti, whose generous sentiments were equal to his admirable artistic powers, determined to know him, and welcomed him like a brother. Older by some years, already settled a considerable time in the French capital, where he possessed an immense circle of acquaintances, and well versed in the artistic life of the day, Viotti constituted himself in some sort the protector, the guide, and the Mentor of his compatriot, infusing into his intercourse with the latter such amenity, graciousness, and affectionate cordiality, that Cherubini, touched by such conduct, soon returned sentiment for sentiment, and an almost fraternal intimacy, never afterwards to be disturbed, was thenceforth established between them. Their meeting was indeed a piece of good fortune for Cherubini; unknown in Paris, where he had no connections, he found a friend whose natural attachment sought only to be employed for his profit, and who created opportunities for being useful to him. Viotti adored France, where he had settled with delight and it was soon his desire to induce Cherubini to settle there too. As we have seen, Viotti presented him directly after his arrival to the Queen, Marie Antoinette, who received the young composer most encouragingly, and I should be very much astonished if it was not Viotti who had also facilitated Cherubini's introduction, during his rapid journey, at the Sacred Concerts. This introduction has escaped all the biographers, not one of whom, up to the present time, has spoken of it. The event, however, is not

* According to Picchianti, Cherubini undertook also by this engagement the functions of Director of the London Philharmonic Society. Two reasons incline me to consider this assertion incorrect: in the first place Cherubini does not say a word about such a thing in his Notice dictated to de Beauchesne, and then his catalogues contain no indication whatever of any composition written by him for the above Society. Now it would be very astonishing, had he been placed at the head of a musical institution of this kind, that he should not think fit or be obliged to write something for it. I am more disposed to believe that, as Choron and Fayolle assert (Dictionnaire historique des Musiciens), he had the title and duties of "Composer to the King," a fact which caused him to write various detached pieces which were interpolated, as we shall subsequently see, in the operas performed at the King's Theatre.

† A highly distinguished English writer on music, Mr George Grove, says somewhere that Cherubini was present at Handel's Commemorative Service, celebrated in July, 1784, at Westminster Abbey. Mr Grove has probably been deceived by some erroneous statement, for Cherubini says textually in the Notice dictated to de Beauchesne that "he started for London in the month of September, 1784." Besides, it was in the month of May that he brought out his Alessandro nell' Indie at Mantua, and it was not till after his return to Florence that he agreed to go to England; and we must suppose that events followed each other with very great rapidity to enable him to reach London and be installed there in the month of July.

‡ Notice dictated to de Beauchesne.—There is here an error in the name, which latter should be: the Duke of Queensbury.

§ The Chronological Catalogue (published by Bottée de Toulmon) would lead us to suppose that only four pieces were written for Demetrio and two for another opera. But the other catalogue shows decisively that all six were composed for this work. One of the pieces was written expressly for Crescenti; another was sung by Mdme Ferraresi.

‖ Notice dictated to De Beauchesne.

Digitized by Google

without interest, since it represents the first step made by Cherubini before the French public, two years and a half previous to the production at the Opera of his Démophon, the earliest work written by him for any theatre of ours. It strikes me as difficult to believe that the idea of such a step did not emanate from Viotti, and it was certainly the great violinist who on this occasion smoothed the path for his new friend. He was familiar with the customs of the Sacred Concerts, he knew intimately Legros, formerly a singer at the Opera, who had become the very energetic director of these interesting entertainments, and the authority derived from his brilliant successes easily enabled him to be useful to a young composer, who, moreover, was not a mere nobody. Cherubini had brought with him to Paris another of his compatriots, the celebrated singer, Babbini, whom he had known in Florence, who belonged to the Italian company at the King's Theatre, and had, doubtless, taken part in the performance of La Finta Principessa. The two agreed that they would appear simultaneously before the public, and on the 8th September, 1785, the bills of the Sacred Concert contained the titles of four compositions of Cherubini's, a symphony and three Italian airs, all three sung by Babbini. What "symphony" was this? I cannot say. Never, as far as I know, did Cherubini write a regular symphony, and, furthermore, there is no trace in his catalogue at this period of any work of such a description or at all resembling it. The composition in question was presumably the overture to one of his operas.

(To be continued.)

LINES FOR MUSIC.

I'm but a simple country girl,
To fashion's ways a stranger;
Tho' from afar I hear the whirl,
Which warns me there is danger.

In honest work I spend my life,
Quite heedless of the morrow;
For never does the voice of strife
Turn pleasure into sorrow.

My dress is of the simplest kind,
Untutored is my gait,
To worldly cares I'm always blind,
Regardless of my fate.

But tho' in money's worth I'm poor,
Untaught with wealth to toy,
My heart is sound, my love is pure:
These are the springs of joy.

So if your choice be fixed like mine,
Well tried as melted gold,
We'll find in love a richer mine,
Than dreams can e'er unfold.

Copyright.* DAVID ALEXANDER HUME.

THE ARDITIS AND SERJEANT BALLANTINE AT RICHMOND.—(From "Ballantine's Reminiscences.")—"Amongst others from whose society this pleasant resort (Richmond) derived an additional charm were Signor and Mdme Arditi, with whom I was fortunate enough to form an acquaintance shortly after their arrival in this country; and I believe it was upon my invitation that they, for the first time, made its acquaintance; and since that period, in their company, I have often and much enjoyed myself."

KNELLER HALL.—Mr Childers, accompanied by Mrs and Miss Childers and his private secretary, Major the Hon. Neville Lyttelton, paid a visit to the Military School of Music, Kneller Hall, Twickenham, on Friday, April 14th. The party was received by the commandant, Lieutenant-Colonel Thompson, and the band performed the usual complimentary march. The pupils were then inspected, after which they were assembled in their respective classrooms. The method of classification and general course of training, the text-books used, and other matters of detail were explained to the right hon. gentleman. The men's quarters, dining-hall, and chapel were afterwards visited. The party remained with Colonel and Mrs Thompson to lunch, during which the band played.

The Leisure Hour for May contains the Autobiography (hitherto unpublished) of William Jackson, of Exeter, the well-known Musician, the friend of Gainsborough, Goldsmith, and Sir Joshua Reynolds. Many letters of Gainsborough are in the narrative. Jackson was long the most popular composer of his day. His canzonets, "Love in thine eyes for ever strays," "Time hath not thinned my flowing locks," and others, were favourites in every drawing-room, while his "Te Deum in F" echoed through every cathedral in England. He seems to have studied with great success the secret of national melody, and the popularity of his songs lasted till Dibdin became the universal favourite, appealing, as he did, to patriotic enthusiasm roused by stirring events.

WHITECHAPEL FINE ART EXHIBITION.

The collection of pictures that for a fortnight adorned the uninviting walls of St Jude's schoolroom has been scattered, and the noble works sent back to their several owners. Sunday, the 16th inst., was the last of the too few days granted for the enjoyment of a sight rare to dwellers in the east of London. It need not be said that money entered not into the calculations of the organizers of the exhibition, for there was no entrance fee; but at the same time it should be recorded that there was no evidence of any motive other than the amusement of the humble visitors. Doubtless the 20,000 gazers felt unwonted ease in the consciousness that the fine things were not so many baits used for doctrinal or political purposes. The hard ways of a labourer's life lead him to suspect that every benefit must be paid for in some way or other, and occasionally he goes so far as to imagine that the prayers offered up in church and chapel for his soul's and body's health are not always so disinterested as they might be. He likewise doubts the sincerity of gratuitous displays in speech, or song, or show, made on his behalf by the titled and wealthy, if applause from his hand, or throat, be sought or expected in reward. It was, therefore, somewhat hard to fix the fact in the minds of the toilers at the East-end that their amusement was the only object thought of by the organizers of the exhibition, but this was done by keeping the schoolmaster and the priest quite out of sight. Whilst guarding any approach to dogmas and ethics, the managers, at the same time, did not show desire to instruct the people in the principles of the art of painting; indeed, the pictures seemed chosen for the subjects illustrated, rather than for the art displayed. Had the amiable gentlemen gone in for art teaching they might have placed before astonished eyes specimens of classical art, indulging in nudity, to demonstrate grace of outline, elegance of proportion, richness of tint, and strength of expression. Thinking that a course of Ovid would be necessary for their uncouth students to grasp the tender ideas, they wisely admitted no works that would lead the dwellers in Whitechapel to think that art had somehow gone astray, had been transformed into a panderer of sensuality. So Venuses were left to hang in rooms and halls where pure minds, by sophistication, can see only sublimity manifested by drawings that elsewhere would come under Lord Campbell's act against indecency.

The exhibition instead embraced such works as Munkacsy's "Lint Pickers" (No. 92), in which a story of war is graphically told. The looker-on could not but be rivetted by the group of women listening, whilst engaged in their task of preparing stuff to stanch wounds, to the words of one just come in with damaged limb from the scene of horror. The news brought by him works its misery upon the faces of wives, mothers, and children occupied in the truly woman's task of getting ready to nurse and comfort maimed and mangled sufferers. So likewise Josef Israel's "Departure" (No. 59) excited sympathy by the natural way the widow's grief is expressed. Sorrows such as hers are not uncommon in the neighbourhood, and many of the visitors had seen similar hovels steeped in woe. The knowledge that scenes of poverty and grief were not disregarded by the rich, that this very picture of destitution had its home in a gilded saloon of the wealthy, might do something to strengthen the feeling that the West-end of London was after all not so far away. The managers of this exhibition are doing blessed work if they bring the rich and poor a little closer together. The Englishman, however humble, is a lover of animals, and Briton Riviere gratified that amiable passion by his striking painting, "Roman Holiday" (No. 46), with its tigers, slaying and slain; and still further by the dog (45)—a dog, by the way, well known in every street of the neighbourhood. Why, it is just such an one as Bill Sykes delights in, and there, in the picture, it crouches away as if it heard the angry voice of its husky-throated master. And the dogs in Nettleship's pictures (Nos. 97 and 98) were lovingly gazed upon; the St Bernard for killing the wolf, and the bull-dog and pup for the eager defence they are making on behalf of their young mistress. Professor Richmond's romances appealed to minds sensible to the mysteries of death and of sorrow, and Watts' imaginings took the beholder to realms untrodden in prosaic life. Some of the seafaring men who went to the exhibition might have been familiar with "Amsterdam" (No. 63), painted by Jacob Maris, and those who knew not the scene, would be struck with its similarity to views on the lower Thames.

The design of the directors evidently was to appeal to the feelings of the visitors, and consequently the pictures were generally pitched in a sober, if not a sad key. They certainly succeeded in their purpose. Yet it would have been perhaps beneficial, to have imparted the gaiety of colour to their admirable collection. Without prejudice it may be said that the inhabitants of the East-end are children in art, and all children, big and little, are fascinated with the charm of colour. The building, likewise, is a dark one, and the relief was wanting that bright tints afford. On entering the rooms sounds of voices in conversation were heard, that gave one the idea that the supercilious pratings, so destructive of enjoyment at Burlington House, had migrated to Whitechapel. By further experience it was found that the talk came from young men who had undertaken the duties of friendly expositors to the inartistic crowd. Those gentlemen did admirable service by going from one knot of vistors to another to unfold, in familiar speech, the design and character of the several paintings. Their friendly and unostentatious remarks were highly instructive, and fully appreciated. They carried out the purpose of the committee by insisting upon the connection that exists between art and labour. A picture by Zimmermann, "Her Serene Highness" (No. 64) may have assisted them in their humane task. A little heiress is seen amongst a group of peasants; the old labourers, accustomed to serfdom, bow slavishly to the silk and satin, whilst a young girl, with implements of husbandry upon her shoulders, looks on with the calmness of equality, and that too in spite of the haughtiness of the lackey, who sees not the affinity hidden by silks and rags. Now the richly dressed girl may represent art, and the poorly clad stand for labour, but for all that they are sisters. The flunkies of Society, and their name is legion, may declare there is no relationship, but the time may come, longed for by such noble spirits as Ruskin, when art and labour shall go through the world hand in hand.

Digitized by Google

PENCERDD GWEFYN.

VIENNA.

(Correspondence.)

The "Guests' Season" at the Imperial Operahouse during the time that members of the regular company are on leave of absence, commenced on the 12th inst., when Mad. Weckerlin, from Munich, and Herr Gudehus, from Dresden, appeared for the first time before a Viennese public, the opera being Tannhäuser. The lady was to play four nights only, but the gentleman is engaged up to the 15th May. Mad. Wilt comes on the 1st May and remains till the 15th June. Mdlle Marianne Brandt, and the tenor, Stritt, are secured for the whole of May. Riese, tenor at the Theatre Royal, Dresden, is engaged from the 15th May to the 15th June, an engagement for the same period having been offered to Siehr, bass, from the Theatre Royal, Munich. Niemann, from the Royal Opera, Berlin, and the barytone, Reichmann, begin on the 1st and play till the 15th June, when the operatic season proper closes. For next season, which begins on the 1st August, Broulik, tenor, Wigand, bass, and Lehmann are engaged. During this month there will probably be only two "guests," Reichenberger, bass, and Gabrieli, from Hanover, soprano. The regular company all return on the 1st September, and the first novelty is expected on the 4th October.

MUSIC AT BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.

(From a Correspondent.)

The second soirée de musique, got up among the members of the Société Philharmonique, took place last evening at the Salle des Pompiers, and was a success. After a quintet, executed very creditably by MM. Thibout, Sons, and Delattre, the duo, or music-lesson from Paer's Maitre de Chapelle was given, Mdlle S. D., as the pupil, decidedly carrying off the palm from the somewhat languid barytone who represented the maestro. An Allegro movement for violoncello, executed by M. Thibout fils, and a chorus, under the direction of M. Ed. Brunet, by the members of the Society, entitled "Li. Tsin," brought the first part of the programme to a conclusion. The air from Galathée, when the statue of Pygmalion finds she is animated, appropriately brought life into the second part. It was well rendered by Mdlle R. One of Liszt's "Rhapsodies Hongroises" was played with remarkable accuracy by Mdlle Adams. Two lengthy songs by an indifferent singer "dragged their weary length along." The finale consisted of a chorus, "Nymphe aux Bois" (Delibes), admirably rendered by the amateur members of the Society.

This is the second winter this deserving Society has sought to promote good music and cheer the long evenings when the regular season is over. They give four public concerts, three "concerts intimes," and a ball. Their funds are flourishing, so let us hope that "they may long live and prosper."

X. T. R.

Boulogne-sur-Mer, April 18, 1882.

ALGIERS.—Active measures have been taken for building another Théâtre National on the site of that recently destroyed, and it is hoped the new house will be ready by November or December at the latest. 11,000 francs were collected for artists and other sufferers by the fire.

MABEL'S ANSWER.*

Oh ask me not to be thy bride,
I dare not answer Yea;
When Willie parted from my side,
And sailed adown the flowing tide,
He bore my heart away.
A fair exchange—he took to sea
The love you crave so ardently,
And false to him I cannot be,
O leave me now, I pray.

The tide may ebb, the tide may flow,
And weary days must come and go,
But love like mine no change can know,
Said pretty Mabel Gray.

Now Reuben, lad, there's one I know
Would gladly be thy wife,
The love thou would'st on me bestow
To her is dear as life.
That love grows stronger day by day;
I'm sure she would not say thee Nay;
Pause, ere you throw such love away,
For fickle hearts are rife.

The tide may ebb, the tide may flow,
And fickle maids may come and go,
But love like hers no change can know,
Said earnest Mabel Gray.

Ah Mabel, lass, my heart has read
Thy tale another way,
That little maid, young Reuben said,
Is charming Mabel Gray.
He clasped her in his fond embrace,
The blushes mantling o'er her face,
Then, looking up with witching grace,
She faintly whispered Yea.

The tide may ebb, the tide may flow,
The happy days will come and go,
For at the altar bending low,
Is witching Mabel Gray.

*Copyright.

WETSTAR.

NEW YORK GRAND OPERAHOUSE.

There seems just now to be some doubt whether, after all, the projected new Operahouse in New York will be erected. Differences, it would appear, have arisen among the managing directors, Mr Vanderbilt and one or two other "millionaires" feeling inclined to withdraw from the undertaking, although a vast deal of money has already been thrown into it. The ultimate expenditure threatens, I hear, to double, if not nearly triple that at first contemplated. To build a new grand Operahouse without any State "subvention," as, for example, in Paris, is a matter of some peril. The late Mr Frederick Gye is the only instance to be recorded of such an enterprise on the part of a private individual. When Covent Garden Theatre was burnt down (1856), he built the new Royal Italian Operahouse, at his own risk, and opened it in the spring of 1858, on the very day he had announced. He himself did not witness the first performance (the Huguenots was selected for the occasion), being prostrate with illness, caused by over-fatigue and incessant anxiety; but he kept his pledge to the public; and the fact must always be recorded, to his honour, as one of the most interesting and remarkable in the history of opera in England.—(Correspondence of the "Graphic.")

At the New York May Festival there will be 300 instrumentalists and some 3,200 singers.

Digitized by Google

DEATH.

On April 12th, ROBERT RIVIÈRE, of 47, Gloucester Road, Regent's Park, N.W., and of Broad Street, Bloomsbury, aged 73. Friends will please accept this (the only) intimation.

On April 13th in Paris, after a few days illness, ARTHUR BLANCHARD, the beloved second son of Blanchard Jerrold.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.'s, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). Advertisements not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 22, 1882.

BENVENUTO CELLINI.

(Episode in the life of Hector Berlioz.)

BY JULES JANIN.*

The world of an artist is a world of itself; a land of faery, which from afar appears to the uninitiated, as the Eldorado appeared to Candide. At a distance may be distinguished confused murmurs, incessant agitation—but what is said, what is done, remains unknown, unknowable. What blank despair in those cloud-capped Archipelagos, of which none know the cause! What delirious rapture whose source must ever remain hidden from the ken of simple mortals! There was a palace at Versailles; and in this palace lived a king and queen; and around this king and queen, as though round a common centre, came every passion, every glory, every ambition of the multitude, to live and die. There was motion, —there was the spot on which the mighty Archimedes might have fixed the lever with which he was to move the world. And yet the Versailles of Louis XIV. was not more difficult of access, was not surrounded by walls more lofty, or darkness more profound, than the artist world of which we speak, where so many have penetrated by right of conquest, but whence none have returned to give an account of what they have seen and heard.

For example—we attend a concert given by Hector Berlioz; we listen to the mournful inspirations of a dejected mind, relating to itself in its own passionate language, a strange and fearful drama, mingling together its treasures of harmony and tears; and, after hearing the Marche au Supplice, we return quietly home, humming the Postillon de Longjumeau! Or perhaps we are present at the first representation of Benvenuto Cellini, and without endeavouring to unravel the meaning of those touching inspirations, without attempting to comprehend all the profound melancholy displayed in that affected gaiety, we assume the grand connoisseur, and exclaim—"Ah! he will do better next time!"—and we think we have done all, said all—unmindful that the Chant de Supplice, to which we have paid such frigid attention, may perhaps have burned up the existence of the author!—that Benvenuto Cellini, which we condemn so hastily, is the glory of him whom we trample under foot!—yes, his glory!—his life!—on this die he had staked his genius!—he had devoted his head, his heart, his soul, to this one object, and we tell him he must try again!—he must take his revenge! as though speaking of a horse-race in the Champ-de-Mars!—If we were not stupid, we should be as cowardly as we are cruel!

* Translated from the French of —— years ago.

And have we the least idea of what becomes of this great artist, exposed to our frigid condolence, our insulting pity, and the revenge we suggest to him?—He returns home with despair in his heart! Heaven! what a change!—He left home bursting with hope and pride!—He proceeded to a certain triumph—Glory was waiting to place the laurel on his brow.—He had invited the crowd to feast on the beauties his genius had prepared for them!—He was going to revel in a flood of harmony of which himself was the source!—to hear the last echo of a twenty years' golden dream, sublimed by love, by grief, by experience. What could have been grander or more imposing than an artist thus proceeding to his triumph? Not Christopher Columbus going to the discovery of a new world.—A single moment has shattered all these hopes! The fall of a brick has overturned the whole of this poetic scaffolding! This dazzling glory has fled on the wings of air! The name, which should have been so popular, has hardly been pronounced by the disdainful multitude! Oh, misery!—what a dreadful abyss between the moment of setting out, and the moment of return!—And yet it is the same genius. But the crowd would understand nothing; their hearts refused to beat, their eyes refused to weep;—something was out of order in these vast machines, by which glory is fabricated. Poor artist!—but this instant clad in hope—now feeble and naked, doubting himself!—Pray for him! These are griefs unknown to the crowd which crushes a man of genius under foot, as it would crush an ant with its booty. The crowd is brutal, improvident, insensible. Little recks it, if the few chosen men devoted to its service die of grief or of joy. It is prodigal of its condemnation as of its praise. No tyrant, even when tyrants flourished, was ever more headstrong and unfeeling.

Behold Berlioz at home, alone with his wife, who cannot console him, and his child, who seeks in vain for his caresses. Discouraged and sad, he betrays no signs of consciousness. Around him all is silence;—the least idea that presents itself to his imagination, he rejects with horror as though it were criminal. No more music —no more of those solemn festivals, which were wont to take place night and day in the heart of the artist, as his visions of loveliness floated before him. His friends no longer recognize the Berlioz of former days; he is out of spirits, he is ill; he no longer peruses his favourite poets—he no longer maintains those proud and intimate conversations with Beethoven, which have given birth to so kindred a spirit between them. His friends request him to play—he remains obstinately silent.—"Defend yourself, Berlioz," say they; "if you will neither play, nor sing, nor compose, at least take your pen and defend yourself." No—Berlioz refuses to write. And truly why should he write like a simple mortal, who is accustomed to speak with the thousand voices of orchestra and chorus?—His friends think him entirely lost; they whisper to each other that he will never recover his mental discouragement. Every day with increased inquietude they demand,—"What is Berlioz about? —have you heard any sounds issue from his house?—has he awakened from his lethargy?—has he commenced another of those gorgeous symphonies picturing the many-tinted clouds—the borders of flowery meadows—and rivers frozen by the winter?" And each looks despondingly at the other.

In order to distract him from his torpor the friends af Berlioz proposed that he should give a concert, at which the Marche au Supplice, and the Chant d'Harold should be performed,—thus to involve in succession the dreams of his youth, when he was but an unknown wanderer among the mountains of Abbruzzi.—Nothing, however, was affected by this concert: Berlioz did not attend—he was ill—confined to his room—while his work was being performed!—This was the last hope of his friends.—"Unhappy Berlioz," said they, "what can be done for him?"

One more chance, however, was afforded to Berlioz. He gave a second concert. This time he was at his accustomed post, and conducted the orchestra himself. To see him was enough to understand the terrible disappointment he had undergone. No longer the fearless enthusiast, full of youth and energy, who, from his elevated estrade, as the trumpet sounded, seemed as though he would launch himself into futurity. He looked like one recently vanquished, already lost to his past triumphs. However, by little and little, as he listened to that mighty poem, the history of his joys and griefs, the artist became reanimated; his eyes were steeped in refreshing tears, his heart beat more loudly than ever, the blood circulated wildly in his veins; his audience, moved like himself, returned him emotion for emotion. But what were his feelings on beholding in an obscure corner of the room—a being, dark and impenetrable—who wept?—yes—the tears were flowing from his eyes—yes—his perpetual smile was arrested—his austere look was softened! It was Paganini who thus abandoned himself to this supernatural emotion!—Paganini himself!

Paganini is a strange being;—a most inexplicable riddle. There is nothing human in his appearance. His long bony head, covered with dishevelled hair, can hardly contain the fire which gives light to that morose regard, so difficult for human looks to bear. We can scarcely be certain, in beholding him, that he is not a corpse, which has risen from the grave to walk the earth, so much does he resemble the Lazarus of Rembrandt stripped of his winding-sheet. His arms hang loosely to the ground, and his bony hands, furnished with tendons of steel, plainly denote the terrible struggles which have given him such complete control over his violin—that tormented soul enclosed within four pieces of wood. We always look upon this singular man with awe, whether he salutes the pit with his heavy, cold, and marble smile—whether he breaks the strings of his violin through a fantastic caprice, for which he gives no reason—or whether he abandons himself truly and proudly to all that galvanic inspiration which leaves us mute and transported. We have seen him in the most opposite situations;—on a beautiful spring evening, singing on his instrument the prayer from Moise, as it should be sung by Raphael's St Cecilia in the paradise of Mozart;—on a gloomy winter night, when the influenza was raging, more sombre and sad than ever, and he arrived, bow in hand, causing instantaneous silence, as though he were an apparition from the tomb, expressly to point out with his finger those who were destined to die.

Digitized by Google

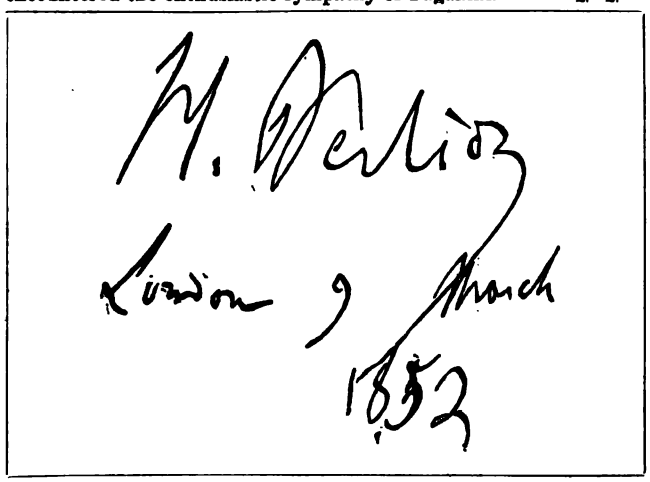
Nor the voice of the beloved one, nor the picturesque costume of distant countries, nor the magnificence of the East, nor the nudity of the savage, nor the newly-acquired laurels of the warrior, nor the unearthly brightness shed over the death-bed of a young and lovely woman, ever produced such effect as the simple presence of this dark and inspired phantom. And phantom-like he was, in his habits and caprices. He was seen—and he was seen no more. He was one instant joyful to excess, the next, depressed with sadness. He travelled from one end of Europe to the other, and, during his absence, endless deeds of gloom and mystery were attributed to him; even his amours were jealously discussed. He was a species of wandering Jew, with a cross of fire between his eyebrows. He went through the world, making gold like an alchemyst who has found out the secret of secrets; and crowds divided to let him pass. He was separated from mankind by an invisible circle which none had dared to break through. In a moment of desperation a young writer,* who wielded his pen as novices wield their swords, had the temerity to attack him. It appeared a bold action to laugh at the general fear, and approach this shadow near enough to find out where his heart was placed. He approached him—and on what grounds think you?—On those of avarice—of insensibility—of hard-heartedness—of unwillingness to give a stroke of his bow in order to save the poor from hunger and cold! The phillippic was vehement—it was repeated. The writer who attacked such a being was welcomed with gladness. Paganini, however, remained unmoved, and deigned no reply. It was useless attempting to force him to play for the poor; he played no longer for anybody—not even for himself; and if at times he felt a yearning towards his violin, he shut himself up in his chamber, and, double-locking his door, placed a mute on his instrument, and breathed music scarcely audible to the greedy ear. But to him—the great artist—this little was enough;—he heard the rest in heaven. Such was the man—such was the living shadow whom Berlioz discovered vehemently applauding the adventures and misfortunes of Harold. When the work was over, when the orchestra had sent its last sigh up to heaven, Paganini prostrated himself before him:—he could not speak, his voice failed, but not his enthusiasm. Never was enthusiasm more eloquent. And what did Berlioz? He looked around as though the puppet of a dream. He abandoned himself freely to that consolation which came from so high a quarter. How he would have triumphed had all his condemning judges been present at that moment! But no; he thought not of them—he thought not of the glory they denied him; he saw but Paganini—Paganini, who was at his feet;—he was dazzled—intoxicated. Thus, for the first time, we learned that Paganini was a man like other men, that his heart beat like other hearts, that his eye could shed tears, that his mind could comprehend as other minds, and that, consequently, there was nothing supernatural in the man, but his talent.

This event renewed the lease of existence for Berlioz. Hope returned, and with hope the consciousness of genius. He hurried home in triumph, just as he had set out on the first night of the opera. What were his feelings the next day, on receiving a letter from his saviour, containing these words—"You will be Beethoven!" And enclosed in the letter were twenty thousand francs, of which Paganini requested his acceptance. Twenty thousand francs! A fortune for Berlioz! For not merely was it twenty thousand francs, but three years of repose, study, liberty, and happiness.

* Jules Janin.

Paganini thus rendered a double service to Berlioz; he restored him self-confidence, and at the same time accorded him the leisure necessary to the cultivation of his genius. He—a stranger—did for the poor French artist what not a crowned head in Europe could have done. Rare benefaction! Benefaction which the obliged might accept, not only without blushing, but with glory to himself, and the full liberty of exclaiming to all comers, "Behold my benefactor!" Who would have believed, however, that Paganini, the hard-hearted and avaricious Paganini, could have been the man to offer so great an example of well-directed generosity! In these times Paganini is the only gentleman in Europe who has given us a specimen of the traditionary magnificence of Francis the First and his court.

Let us praise him for his liberality, and the singular esprit d'àpropos, which induced him to come to the assistance of one of the most undoubted-geniuses of the day; that inflexible mind which has never condescended to flatter the silly caprices of the crowd; that bar of iron which knows not how to bend; that rebellious spirit which prefers rather to remain unknown than to offer incense to the plebeian ear. If Berlioz has failed in his opera, it is because he did not choose to succeed. He carried his wild independence to such an extent that, if by chance he lighted upon one of those sparkling phrases, so much admired by the French, he cast away the unoffending tune, as a gardener would cast away a parasite. And thus he failed. But, had he succeeded, he would not have encountered the enthusiastic sympathy of Paganini. J. J



PAULINE LUCCA, having much improved in health, has returned from Italy to Vienna, but will probably not sing again till she appears at the Royal Italian Opera.

THE remains of the once-famous Catalani, who died at Paris in 1849, will shortly be removed to Pisa, and laid in the vault beneath the marble monument erected to her by her three sons.

ROME (Correspondence). — Goldmark has written to thank Mancinelli for the care he took in getting up and conducting La Regina di Saba at the Teatro Apollo.—Donizetti's Duca d'Alba is to be again performed during the approaching spring season at the Teatro Costanzi.—Nannetti, the well-known bass, is here.—Before leaving Rome for Bilboa, Gayarre was entertained at a banquet given in his honour by some of his fellow countrymen resident in the Eternal City.—Marchesi (director of the Palestra Musicale), Salvi, and others well known in the world of art, propose to get up a joint-stock company for the purpose of establishing here a permanent opera.

NEW YORK.—The concert of the Philharmonic Club at Chickering Hall on Tuesday night, April 4, crowned the work of the season. The programme appealed to the taste of lovers of the higher order of chamber music. It began with Spohr's Quintet in D minor, op. 130, for pianoforte and strings, and ended with Mendelssohn's Octet. Between these pieces were two new compositions composed by Rafael Joseffy—an "Evening Song" for quintet of strings, and a "Pastorale," for strings and flute, the instruments played by the Club members—as well as three pianoforte pieces by Richard Hoffman, who also played the pianoforte part of the quintet and in it exhibited brilliant execution backed by intelligence, taste, and judgment. Mr Hoffmann afterwards gave one of Schumann's "Noveletten," a familiar gavotte by Bach, and a transcription of the Scherzo of Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony.

Digitized by Google

a lyric theatre. It is let for three months, beginning on the 1st May, to M. Brunn, who, if report can be trusted, intends to produce a three-act comic opera by M. George Roze.—M. Talandier, a radical deputy, has given notice of an amendment to the budget with a view to abolishing subsidies to theatres. There is not much chance of its being adopted.

—o—

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(From the "Musical Standard.")

A recent number of the Liverpool Mercury has a report of an important meeting lately held in that city in aid of the Royal College scheme, and a leaderette on the same topic. Mr Rensburg was the leading supporter of the scheme, and Mr T. L. Paget also spoke at some length in the same direction. The arguments presented by some of the speakers would, if space permitted, be open to some criticism, though the speeches were characterized by much earnestness. The fault of the meeting was the one which has characterized all such meetings—the silence of the best known and practical men of the musical profession. Persons of social position are valuable contributors to the success of any scheme, but the real esprit de corps must come from the professors of the science or art presumably to be advanced by the given scheme in hand. What would be thought of the Royal Academy of Painting or the College of Surgeons being nursed almost exclusively by outside laymen? However, when all the lay talk is over, much of which is actually doing injury to the scheme by its obvious want of insight into the requirements and condition of our national musical life, then it is to be hoped our professional musicians will break their present somewhat ominous silence. It is useless to expect real progress in the undertaking until the artistic world itself is seriously and properly invited to encourage and to forward the scheme. The sooner such an invitation for help is extended to the profession, and the sooner their assistance is not limited to the position of merely being asked to give money, the better for all concerned. The world at large will then, indeed, be more induced to believe in the possible realization of the earnest efforts of the promoters. The following letter from a well-known hand appears in the columns of the Musical Times:—

Sir,—If the new Music School which our Royal Family has so ably and eloquently inaugurated is to be considered a National Institution, worthy of national support, allow me to say there must be some alteration in its scheme. It was expressly stated at the meeting at St James's that the hundred free scholarships, to which the generous British public are asked to contribute, were to be thrown open to all comers and to all nations. In that case, surely, the school would be international and continental rather than national; and its advantages would appear to be intended chiefly for our poorer neighbours across the channel. Foreign musicians stand in no need of such assistance. They have their own State-supported conservatoires all over the continent. Moreover, they have always received the most cordial support and patronage in this country, from the time of Handel downwards. If the new school is to be considered National, its scholarships must be confined exclusively to the children of English parents, born on English soil, and its musical direction placed in the hands of English musicians. Unless this condition be carried out, it is not difficult to foretell that the school will meet with but short-lived success, like the last National venture, and the British public will soon tire of contributing to its support.—Yours faithfully, A. S. C.

P.S.—Since writing the above, I hear that Professor Donaldson has pointed out the same defect, at a meeting which took place recently at Glasgow.

These words deserve serious consideration. England has never, and it is to be hoped never will hesitate to recognize and employ foreign talent and skill; but the scheme standing on a national basis and to be supported by national means should at least secure its free scholarships for the education of British-born subjects. It is to be hoped that no thought or consideration will be wanting, and no point overlooked in discussing the future of the Royal College of Music; and its best friends cannot but desire the fullest consideration of all it is proposed to do in connection therewith.

A stone tablet has been placed in the library of the Liceo, Bologna, in memory of Gaetano Gaspari, formerly librarian of the institution.

THE NIBELUNG'S RING.

Those who witnessed the production of Wagner's music-drama, Der Ring des Nibelungen, at Bayreuth, must have regarded it as specially belonging to the "future," so far as concerned England. The vast scheme of the work—a play that occupies four nights—the novelty of its character, its executive difficulty, and the doubtfulness of its reception, were obstacles that appeared insurmountable. The idea of transferring the Nibelung's Ring to an English stage was, therefore, so completely dismissed, that we deemed ourselves favoured beyond measure when, at the so-called Wagner Festival, certain selections were given as concert pieces. Life, however, is full of surprises, and it is always the unexpected that happens. The great Festival play is in progress of being transferred to England, and next month will attract the neutral curious, and the partizan enthusiastic, to Her Majesty's Theatre. One is tempted to ask what could have induced Mr Angelo Neumann and Messrs Schultz-Curtius to enter upon so grave an enterprise. It costs many thousands of pounds to engage a large London Theatre, and bring from Germany a complete executive corps, with dresses, scenery, and appointments complete. Besides, it does not appear that the English public have felt a consuming anxiety to test the gold of the Nibelung's Ring. There has been no pining for the opportunity of doing this, nor has any section of our people assumed the attitude of the African in missionary books, and cried to the priests of the Wagner cult, "Come over and help us!" This may be a shameful truth, but then the vast mass of us are Philistine folk; and who looks to gather grapes from thorns, or figs from thistles? The question assumes another aspect when we consider that London takes high rank among German cities. It has a Teutonic population, which, if transferred to the Fatherland, would be a perceptible addition to the conscription list. Nor is this colony an exception to the rule which makes a patriot among strangers particularly jealous for his country. It is the most natural thing in the world for Germans whom good or evil fortune have exiled from their native soil to assist at the apotheosis of their national heroes. As a matter of fact, they do so here whenever opportunity allows; above all, when Wagner is concerned. He, bold, aggressive, revolutionary, is to them in art what Bismarck, the eagle, "screaming (and scheming) for the thrones of kings," is in statecraft; and of all this the managers of the present enterprise no doubt take due account. It must be confessed that Germans are chiefly concerned. At the memorable supper given to Wagner at Bayreuth in 1876, the guest of the evening remarked that he had bestowed upon Germany—not upon the world—"a new art," suited to the temperament and tastes of the race. The Italians, he observed, have a lyric drama which satisfies them, and as much may be said of the French—why should not the Fatherland be equally well provided? Why not, indeed? But the "new art" comes to England as an exotic. It was never intended for us, and, should we find it disagree with our preferences, the result will neither be surprising nor an impeachment of the inventor's skill. Accepting the announcements made, there is every reason to anticipate an adequate representation of the music-drama. Mr Neumann promises a good sample of the best talent on the German lyric stage, an orchestra and chorus of repute, and the scenery, &c., used at Bayreuth in 1876. Moreover, the performances are placed under the direction of Herr Seidl, whose name is coupled with a testimonial of exceptional merit from none other than Wagner himself. So far, good; at the same time, it would be idle to look for the marvellous perfection exhibited in the old Franconian city six years ago. We cannot hope to hear again such an orchestra as was then directed by Herr Richter, nor to be called upon for such admiration as was excited by the finished result of three months' arduous rehearsal. The power of comparison, however, is in few hands. Most of those who witness the Nibelung's Ring at Her Majesty's Theatre will do so for the first time, and may be trusted, amid their wonder, puzzlement, boredom, or delight, not to have room for the consciousness of disadvantage.

Much was written in these columns and elsewhere concerning Wagner's trilogy at the time of its first representation, but much is forgotten in six years, and it may not be amiss, without trespassing upon ground better reserved for future occupation, to give some general idea of the scope and character of the work. The distinctive principles by which the poet-composer was guided are few in number, easily set forth, and understood without difficulty, save when expounded with amazing volubility and cloudiness by Wagner himself. They are the superiority of the myth as poetic subject matter, the absolute subordination of music to poetry, and such an enlargement of the domain of music as shall make it not only appeal to feeling, but to mental perceptiveness, which recognizes therein continual and elaborate suggestion of motives, situations, and characters. It cannot be necessary to point out with minuteness how sharply this theory separates the new German art from that which we know as opera. Opera does not ignore the myth, it is true, but largely prefers events in historical or social life. At the same time it sacrifices everything to musical effect, and to the real or imaginary claims of the art; while it is no less exclusively devoted to the simple, direct, and natural function of music—namely, the excitation of feeling appropriate to the dramatic situation, or, of merely pleasurable sensations. The Nibelung's Ring is a supreme illustration of Wagner's carefully elaborated theory. Its subject exists in the region of pure myth, and has been stripped by the poet of whatever human interest gathered round it in the course of transmission through many ages. Pagan in its origin, the German race associated the legend with Christianity, recast many of its characters in a mould akin to that of Christian chivalry, and gave them rank and position in settled states. On the other hand, we find the myth unadulterated among the traditions of Iceland and the far north. There it exists in all its extravagance, its terror, and its pathos, with a plentiful admixture of the supernatural, and a mingling of gods and men common to the primitive legends of every race. It was to the Icelandic myth that Wagner went, and his drama is one of supernatural Paganism—a setting forth of a protracted contest for dominion, typified by the miraculous Ring, between the gods of Walhalla and the powers of the nether world. Humanity enters into this as by a side door, and the beings who represent it are far removed from our consciousness. Wagner did well, perhaps, to discard the "purely human" of the Nibelungen story, and give his preference to gods, giants, dwarfs, and their half-human progeny, even though it be hard to say which class bears the palm for qualities looked upon in these latter days as contemptible. The men of the Nibelungen are a terrible company. "Torture and carnage," says M. Taine, "greed of danger, fury of destruction, obstinate and frenzied bravery of an over-strong temperament, the unchaining of the butcherly instincts—such traits meet us at every step in the old Sagas. The daughter of the Danish Jarl, seeing Egil taking his seat near her, repels him with scorn, reproaching him with 'seldom having provided the wolves with hot meat, with never having seen for the whole autumn a raven croaking over the carnage.' But Egil seized her and pacified her by singing 'I have marched with my bloody sword, and the raven has followed me. Furiously we fought, the fire passed over the dwellings of men; we slept in the blood of those who kept the gates.'" With like delectable company the reader of the Nibelungen Saga mixes, and he may prefer Wotan and Alberich, the supernatural antagonists, who, instead of providing the wolves with hot meat, seek to outwit each other "in ways that are dark and tricks that are mean." It is at least conceivable that Wagner might have lighted upon a myth more worthy of his genius. We do not deny that the poem of the Nibelung's Ring exemplifies the eternal truth that lust of power brings evil, and that redemption comes through the love that expiates; nor can we refuse to recognize in the hero Siegfried and the heroine Brunnhilde characters cast in a truly heroic mould; but these things are a little leaven, barely equal to leavening the whole gigantic lump of that which, in its exceeding "far-removedness," touches us nowhere, or only does so to disgust and repel. Take away Siegfried, with his Brunnhilde, and the remainder is trickery, lies, and crime, culminated in incest and murder. The lesson of the drama, it seems to us, might be taught in a simpler and nobler fashion. At the same time the glamour thrown around it by the genius of the poet must receive frank acknowledgment. We cannot choose but hear when the ancient mariner of Bayreuth tells his wondrous tale. "The wedding guest, he beat his breast," and so may we, but we listen all the same. Into the general question of the superiority of the myth for purposes of lyric drama there is no space to enter. Enough that we vainly examine the Nibelung's Ring for proof that such superiority exists. The great lessons of human life, with which genuine drama has to do, should be worked out by men and women, not by a lot of impossible creatures whose only connection with humanity lies in the fact that they sprang from the imagination of a dark, superstitious, and ferocious age.

Digitized by Google

In his musical treatment of the Nibelung's Ring, Wagner shows most clearly what he means by the subordination of music to poetry. No work from his pen already known to English audiences does so to the same complete extent, for even in Lohengrin the influence of established form is great if not precisely dominant. But the trilogy will not allow established form to be represented by even a rag of its venerable, and, as some may now contend, tattered garment. The huge drama goes on regardless of music. Its characters soliloquise and hold long conversations just as though another art were not concerned, save that their intonations and inflections are regulated by musical signs. Of vocal melody, as the term is generally understood, there can be little under such conditions, and Wagner makes very few departures from the spirit of his theory. Occasionally, a symmetrical phrase occurs; but for the most part the actors are required to declaim rather than sing, musical interest being thus confined to the orchestra. As in pure drama it rarely happens that two people speak at once, Wagner sets his face against concerted vocal music, though he does not entirely discard it. He would have some difficulty in justifying or explaining his practice, if not his theory, on this point. The Rhine daughters sing together, so do the Walkyries, and so do Gunther's men as they greet their master and Brunnhilde. But if concerted utterance be permissible in these cases why not in others where it would even more naturally be expected? Why, for example, are all the spectators dumb when Hagen plunges his spear into Siegfried's back, and when the body of the hero is borne in solemn procession to the house? This, however, is a very minor matter by comparison with the principle which reduces music to the place of a mere attendant upon poetry—a place analogous to that of a groom who rides behind his mistress, with no power to influence her direction or her pace. We cannot believe that Wagner has definitely settled the relative position of the two arts. He has, as far as his own personal action goes, revolutionized a system universal, long established, and mainly founded, as we believe, on the nature of things. But all facts, even those most nearly connected with himself, show that he cannot influence others. According to his principle, he should be the poet Wagner first, the musician Wagner next. Which is he? Men should consider his poetry first, his music next. Which do they so prefer? When the Nibelung's Ring is performed have the listeners ears for music before verse, or verse before music? Which do they the more discuss? and which the more seriously justify or condemn? It is vain to contend against facts like these, because they are surface indications of that which lies too deep for uprooting. Granted that music has long unduly prevailed over poetry, and committed all manner of extravagance, the rightful superiority is hers in any case, and the substituted despotism of poetry is but the adoption of one evil in place of another.

With regard to the peculiar power with which Wagner has endowed his Nibelungen music, by an elaborate system of representative themes, we must take another opportunity of speaking. The subject is far too interesting for brief and hasty treatment.

The season at the Teatro Regio, Turin, was brought to a close with the 30th performance of Ponchielli's Gioconda and the 45th of Excelsior.

MILAN.—During the season lately terminated the works performed at the Scala were Guillaume Tell, Les Huguenots, La Sonnambula, Bianca di Cervia, L'Hérodiade and Simon Boccanegra.

Digitized by Google

WAIFS.

A concert has been given in Boston (U.S.) in aid of the Russian Jewish Refugees.

Verdi's Les Vêpres Siciliennes has been well received in Bordeaux.

Lecocq's buffo-opera, Le Jour et la Nuit, is thought well of at the Hague.

The Austrian pianist, Alfonsina von Weiss, has been playing at Madrid.

Lola Beeth's engagement at the Royal Operahouse, Berlin, is for three years.

Tamberlik is the famous Roman—not Russian—tenor. Perish the thought!

Fassò is appointed to succeed Pedrotti as Director of the Liceo Musicale, Turin.

Mr F. B. Jewson is passing the Easter holidays at his favourite retreat, Ramsgate.

The fourth centenary of the invention of printing will be celebrated in Vienna on the 24th June.

Mdme Reicher-Kindermann, of the Leipsic Stadttheater, has been "starring" in Bremen.

The sometime defunct Italian musical and theatrical journal, La Scena, has been resuscitated.

A zarzuela, Catalanes de Gracia, music by Albeniz, is underlined at the Teatro Eslava, Madrid.

Il Duca d'Alba was to be performed for the first time at the San Carlo, Naples, on the 15th inst.

Dr Hans von Bülow is engaged to be married to Fräulein Schanzer, of the Meiningen Court Theatre.

A new National Theatre is to be constructed, with the express sanction of the Czar, at Moscow.

Talazac, of the Paris Opéra-Comique, sang on Thursday in Passion Week in a Sacred Concert at Lille.

Breitkopf and Härtel, Leipsic, have published a biography of Luigi Boccherini, written by G. G. Guidi.

Theodore Semet's comic opera, Die Grille von Berry, has been produced at the Stadttheater, Cologne.

Colonne is to conduct this year the classical concerts of the Portuguese Musical Association, Lisbon.

Mdlle Durand has returned from Moscow to Florence, where she intends taking a holiday till the autumn.

Johann Strauss's last buffo opera, Der lustige Krieg, is being performed at the Thalia Theatre, New York.

Mapleson's Italian Opera company was to sing for a fortnight in Philadelphia, commencing on the 17th inst.

The Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha has conferred on Ludwig Klee, Berlin, the title of "Ducal Music-Director."

Henri Panofka, the well-known professor of singing, has been created officer of the Order of the Italian Crown.

Donizetti's "posthumous" work, Il Duca d'Alba, will be performed next season at the Imperial Opera, Vienna.

Ambroise Thomas's Mignon, with Ferni-Germano as the heroine, has been performed at the Teatro Manzoni, Milan.

It is said that Herr Neumann intends including Italy among the countries to be visited by his Niebelungen company.

The Philharmonic Society, Malaga, under the direction of Regino Martinez, lately celebrated its thirteenth anniversary.

Espin y Guillen, Agero, and Hernandez y Santa-Marina, are appointed professors at the National School of Music, Madrid.

Carl Heymann, the pianist, has announced a second series of concerts in Moscow. They were to commence on the 16th inst.

Beethoven's Missa Solennis was performed, under the direction of Dr Ferdinand Hiller, at the tenth Gürzenich Concert, Cologne.

M. Alexandre Guilmant's organ recitals at the Trocadero, Paris, are to commence on Thursday, May 4, and to continue until June 1.

Carmen and Mignon are promised for the summer season at the Teatro Sannazaro, Naples, where Virginia Ferni is said to be engaged.

Count Zichy, the one-handed amateur pianist, took part in the annual concert for the benefit of the Austro-Hungarian Relief Society at Dresden.

Higginson is reported to have lost 10,000 dols. by the first season, just terminated, of the Boston (U.S.) Symphony Society, conducted by Henschel.

Mendelssohn's Athalie, with connecting text by E. Devrient, has been given by the Vocal Association, Torgau, under the direction of Dr Otto Taubert.

On the 4th inst., the Singakademie, Glogau, gave a performance of J. S. Bach's Cantata: "Ich hatte viel Bekümmerniss," and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

The House of Commons used to be considered the best Club in London. It is fast degenerating into a second-rate Music-hall—only without the harmony.—Punch.

Flotow, composer of Martha, Stradella, and other very remarkable operas, will be seventy on the 27th inst. His friends in Vienna intend duly to celebrate the event.

Mühlsteph, organist, in Berlin, celebrated on the 4th inst. his fiftieth professional anniversary. The Organists' Association got up a little festival in honour of the event.

Henry E. Abbey leaves America for this country next month, to complete the arrangements for his contemplated autumn operatic season at the Grand Opera House, New York.

The Brussels Society of Music, under Joseph Mortens, will shortly give a performance of Franz Liszt's Légende de Sainte Elisabeth, at which the composer has promised to be present.

Giuseppina Zimmermann, formerly of the Victoria, Berlin, and now at the Walhalla, in the same capital, has been engaged for three years as première danseuse at the Stadttheater, Leipsic.

It is asserted that Ferrari, manager of the Italian Opera at Buenos-Ayres, intends giving Massenet's Hérodiade, with Borghi-Mamo, Tamagno, and Bottestini in the chief characters.

A slight panic, caused by the scenery catching fire from a pistol-shot, occurred recently at the Teatro Goldoni, Modena, but the flames were extinguished before much damage was done.

An engineer at Nantes has invented a machine called the "Automatic Extinctor," which, after giving instant warning of a fire in a theatre or elsewhere, will set off to aid in putting out the flames.

A new weekly paper, La Musica Populare, has been started by Sonzogno. The first number contains a portrait of Adelina Patti, and the air, "Se cerca, se dice," from Metastasio's Olimpiade, set to music by Pergolese.

Mr Gwyllym Crowe, the conductor of the autumnal Promenade Concerts last year at the Royal Italian Operahouse, is still, and has been during the past week, seriously ill, and his medical attendant forbids him attending to business matters for the present.

The will and codicil of the late Dowager Countess of Essex (Miss Stephens) has been proved by her niece, Miss Esther Matilda Johnston, to whom she has bequeathed all her real and personal estate. The value of the personal estate amounts to over £71,000.

Mr Barton McGuckin will not be able to sing the tenor music in Rubinstein's Paradise Lost at the Philharmonic Society's concert (announced for the 27th, but postponed until the 29th inst., in consequence of the Royal wedding), as he has to sing that evening at Dublin, with the Carl Rosa Opera Company, in Balfe's Moro, or the Painter of Antwerp.

Bizet's Carmen, owing, as we learn from a correspondent in Florence, to the worse than mediocrity of the performance, has not been attractive at the Pagliano. So much the worse for the Pagliano and the Florentines, always the last to understand the merits of anything in the operatic way that, by accident, may overstep the boundaries of their somewhat limited faculty of appreciation.

The theatres in Madrid, without exception, are to undergo supervision, with a view to such alterations and modifications as may ensure, in a greater or lesser degree, the safety of the public in case of fire. The catastrophe at the Ring Theatre in Vienna, lamentable as it was, would seem to have made an impression so deep and universal that much good is likely to come of it.

Mary Liszt, a pupil of Mdme Marchesi's and lately at the Milan Scala, is engaged at the Royal Opera, Berlin, for a two months' trial, with a view to succeeding Lilli Lehmann (Wagner's original Flosshilde). After singing in St Petersburgh, Lilli Lehmann was to appear on the 13th and 15th inst. in Prague. She next fulfils an engagement simultaneously with Marianne Brandt and Niemann, at the Imperial Opera, Vienna.

Donizetti's "Posthumous" Opera, Il Duca d'Alba is in rehearsal at the San Carlo, Naples. That it will be given at every musical town in Italy may be taken for granted; as also that the vast majority of opera-goers who love music for itself, and (pace the "advanced" school) are by no means inclined to believe that Italian opera is dead, or even dying, that we are never more to listen to the flowing melodies of Mozart, Rossini, Donizetti, Bellini, Auber (as much influenced by Rossini as Rossini by Mozart), with other minstrels to whom song came as a natural utterance, and whose melodies, issuing from the primeval source, must live for ever, will have an ardent desire to hear it as soon as possible in England. For this result, devoutly to be wished, we must look to Mr Gye, whose great establishment, since the beginning, five-and-thirty years ago, has owed so much of its success to certain operas by the distinguished Bergamese composer, and so many of whose most esteemed prime donne have earned their fame as representatives of Lucia.—Graphic.

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.—We have received the prospectus of the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden (Limited), which has been formed for the purpose of combining the two Italian Operas in London and of purchasing from the executors of the late Mr Frederick Gye the Covent Garden Opera House and Floral Hall, with the plant and contents, as well as the lease and goodwill of Her Majesty's Operahouse, with all its plant, scenery, &c., which the said executors have agreed to buy for that purpose. Mr Gye's decease would have necessitated some measure of the kind in order to facilitate the division of his estate, and the opportunity has been taken to renew the experiment made in 1869 of effecting an amalgamation of the interests of Mr Mapleson with those of Messrs Gye. The prospectus states that Mr Ernest Gye will act as managing director, while Mr Mapleson has agreed to give his exclusive services to the company for 10 years and to carry on the operatic business in the United States. It is arranged that a sum of £80,000, at present secured on Covent Garden Theatre, will remain on mortgage, at 4 per cent., and will be redeemable at any time. The capital of the company is £200,000, in 19,900 ordinary shares of £10 each, and 1,000 founders' shares, of £1 each. Of the former 4,000 have been subscribed at par, 2,900 are taken by the vendors, and the remaining 13,000 are now offered to the public. With regard to profits, after payment of a cumulative dividend of 5 per cent on the ordinary shares, one-half of all surplus profits will be divided among holders of ordinary shares and the remainder among holders of founders' shares. Holders of 25 shares or more will be entitled to a deduction from the prices of admission, both in this country and in the United States. Messrs Gye undertake not to carry on any operatic undertaking in opposition to the company.—Times' City article.

Advertisements.

NEW VOCAL QUARTET.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" Arranged for Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, and Bass by G. B. ALLEN. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

DANSE PYRRHIQUE.

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By

BROWNLOW BAKER.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Where may be obtained, Composed by Brownlow Baker, "Bourrée," in E flat, 4s "Memory" (Romance), 3s.

Just Published.

UNITY.

A NEW MASONIC SOLO AND QUARTET.

Dedicated by express permission to His Royal Highness PRINCE PATRICK, DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, and all true and accepted Masons.

By

RICHARD F. HARVEY,

Organist of Unity Lodge 238 (Dublin).

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

POLKA ET VALSE.

POUR LE PIANOFORTE.

No. 1. FOLICHONNE POLKA ... ... Price 4s.
No. 2. SOUVENIR DE JEUNESSE VALSE ... ... Price 4s.

Composées par

BENTAYOUX.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

L'AMANTE.

VALZER, PER VOCE DI MEZZO-SOPRANO.

Musica di

G. MURATORI

(The English Version of the words by MARIA X. HAYES).

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

CHAPPELL'S VOCAL LIBRARY OF PART-SONGS, &c.

		Composed or Arranged by	Price
1.	Dulce Domum. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
2.	Down among the Dead Men. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
3.	The Girl I've left behind me. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
4.	British Grenadiers. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
5.	Long live England's Future Queen. S.A.T.B. ...	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
6.	My task is ended (Song and Chorus). A.T.B.B.	... Balfe	4d.
7.	Thus spake one Summer's Day. S.A.T.B.	... Abt	2d.
8.	Soldiers' Chorus. T.T.B.B.	Gounod	4d.
9.	The Kermesse (Scene from Faust)	,,	6d.
10.	Up, quit thy bower. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	4d.
11.	Maidens, never go a-wooing. S.S.T.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
12.	Fagot Binders' Chorus	Gounod	4d.
13.	Sylvan Hours (for Six Female Voices)	Joseph Robinson	6d.
14.	The Gipsy Chorus	... Balfe	4d.
15.	Ave Maria	Arcadelt	1d.
16.	Hark! the Herald Angels sing. S.A.T.B.	Mendelssohn	1d.
17.	England Yet (Solo and Chorus). S.A.T.B.	Jules Benedict	2d.
18.	The Shepherd's Sabbath Day. S.A.T.B.	J. L. Hatton	2d.
19.	Thoughts of Childhood. S.A.T.B.	Henry Smart	2d.
20.	Spring's Return. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
21.	An old Church Song. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
22.	Sabbath Bells. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
23.	Serenade. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
24.	Cold Autumn Wind. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
25.	Orpheus with his Lute. S.S.S.	Bennett Gilbert	2d.
26.	Lullaby. S.A.A.	,,	1d.
27.	This is my own, my native land. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
28.	March of the Men of Harlech. S.A.T.B.	Dr. Rimbault	2d.
29.	God save the Queen. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
30.	Rule, Britannia. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
31.	The Retreat. T.T.B.B.	... L. de Rille	2d.
32.	Lo! morn is breaking. S.S.S.	... Cherubini	2d.
33.	We are Spirits. S.S.S.	G. A. Macfarren	4d.
34.	Market Chorus (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	... Auber	4d.
35.	The Prayer (Masaniello). S.A.T.B.	... ,,	1d.
36.	The Water Sprites. S.A.T.B.	... Kücken	2d.
37.	Eve's glittering Star. S.A.T.B.	... ,,	2d.
38.	When first the Primrose. S.A.T.B.	.. ,,	2d.
39.	O Dewdrop bright. S.A.T.B	... ,,	1d.
40.	Sanctus from the Messe Solennelle. S.A.T.B.	... Rossini	4d.
41.	Nine Kyries, Ancient and Modern	... ,,	2d.
42.	Sun of my soul. S.A.T.B.	Brinley Richards	2d.
43.	'Twas fancy, and the ocean's spray. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	2d.
44.	A Prayer for those at Sea. S.A.T.B.	,,	2d.
45.	O Thou whose power (Prayer from Mose in Egitto) ...	... Rossini	2d.
46.	The Guard on the Rhine. S.A.T.B.	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
47.	The German Fatherland. S.A.T.B.	,,	1d.
48.	The Lord is my Shepherd (Quartet). S.A.T.B. ...	G. A. Osborne	2d.
49.	Te Deum in F	... Jackson	2d.
50.	Te Deum in F	... Nares	2d.
51.	Charity (La Carita). S.S.S.	... Rossini	4d.
52.	Cordelia. A.T.T.B.	G. A. Osborne	4d.
53.	I know. S.A.T.B.	... Walter Hay	2d.
54.	Chorus of Handmaidens (from Fridolin)	A. Randegger	4d.
55.	The Offertory Sentences	Edmund Rogers	4d.
56.	The Red Cross Knight	Dr. Callcott	2d.
57.	The Chough and the Crow	Sir H. R. Bishop	3d.
58.	The "Carnovale"	... Rossini	2d.
59.	Softly falls the moonlight	... Edmund Rogers	4d.
60.	Air by Himmel	Henry Leslie	2d.
61.	Offertory Sentences	E. Sauerbrey	4d.
62.	The Resurrection	C. Villiers Stanford	6d.
63.	Our Boys (new Patriotic Song) ... ... H. J. Byron and W. M. Lutz		4d.
64.	The Men of Wales	Brinley Richards	2d.
65.	Dame Durden	... ...	1d.
66.	A little Farm well tilled	... Hook	1d.
67.	There was a simple maiden	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
68.	Fair Hebe	,,	1d.
69.	Once I loved a maiden fair	,,	1d.
70.	The jovial man of Kent	,,	1d.
71.	The oak and the ash	,,	1d.
72.	Heart of Oak	,,	1d.
73.	Come to the sunset tree	W. A. Philpott	4d.
74.	May. S.A.T.B.	W. F. Banks	2d.
75.	Pure, lovely innocence (Il Roi de Lahore—Chorus for Female Voices)	...G. Massenet	4d.
76.	A Love Idyl. S.A.T.B.	... E. R. Terry	2d.
77.	Hail to the Woods! A.T.T.B.	... J. Yarwood	2d.
78.	Near the town of Taunton Dean	Thomas J. Dudeney	2d.
79.	Our merry boys at sea	... J. Yarwood	2d.
80.	The Shepherd's Farewell. S.A.T.B.	... Berlioz	3d.
81.	When the sun sets o'er the mountains (Il Demonio) ...	A. Rubinstein	3d.
82.	Hymn of Nature	... Beethoven	3d.
83.	Michaelmas Day (Humorous Part Songs, No. 1) ...	Walter Maynard	4d.
84.	Sporting Notes (Humorous Part Songs, No. 2) ...	Walter Maynard	4d.
85.	Austrian National Hymn	... Haydn	4d.
86.	A May Carol. S.S.C.	Joseph Robinson	4d.

LONDON:

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND STREET, W.

CITY BRANCH—14 & 15, POULTRY.

Digitized by Google

SHORT PIECES FOR THE ORGAN.

EDITED AND ARRANGED BY

WILLIAM SPARK, Mus. Doc.,

Organist of the Town Hall, Leeds.

PRICE OF EACH BOOK, FOUR SHILLINGS.

CONTENTS OF BOOK I.

PRAYER ... Arcadelt
ANDANTINO D major ... Batiste
LARGHETTO ... Spohr
ALLA MARCIA, D major ... Chopin
ANDANTINO, F major ... W. Spark
ANDANTE, C major ... W. H. Nichols

CONTENTS OF BOOK III.

ADAGIO RELIGIOSO, "Hymn of Praise" ... Mendelssohn
ADAGIO, F major ... Pleyel
SARABANDE, D minor ... J. S. Bach
GAVOTTE, D major ... J. S. Bach
PRELUDE ... E. W. Healey

CONTENTS OF BOOK V.

MODERATO and ALLEGRO, from the 7th Concerto ... Corelli
ANDANTE GRAZIOSO ... Dussek
ANDANTE, from the Concerto in G minor ... Mendelssohn
ANDANTE, from Op. 83 ... Stephen Heller
"BUT THOU DIDST NOT LEAVE" ... Handel

CONTENTS OF BOOK VII.

TRUMPET VOLUNTARY ... Purcell
DUET, from the "Vater unser" ... Spohr
ICH GROLLE NICHT, Song ... Schumann
ANDANTE, from the 12th Symphony ... Mozart
MINUET and TRIO, from do. ... Mozart

CONTENTS OF BOOK IX.

VOLUNTARY, Andante, A major ... Samuel Wesley
CHORUS "So shalt thou gain" ("Hercules") ... Handel
ANDANTINO, F major ... S. Neukomm
INTRODUCTION to the Third Part of "The Creation" ... Haydn
ANDANTE, Air for Soprano ... Lindpaintner

CONTENTS OF BOOK XI.

ROMANZA, from the Second Concerto ... Mozart
QUINTETT, "Giuri ognuno" ... Rossini
ADAGIO, CANTABILE, Sonata Pathétique ... Beethoven
BOURRÉE, D major ... Handel

CONTENTS OF BOOK XIII.

LORD, REMEMBER DAVID ... Handel
L'ADDIO ... Schubert
DIAPASON MOVEMENT ... J. P. Kirnberger
CARO MIO BEN ... Giordani
O SALUTARIS HOSTIA ... Auber

CONTENTS OF BOOK XV.

AVE VERUM ... Mozart
MARCH, C major ... Purcell
ANDANTINO, G major ... Dussek
ANDANTE MAESTOSO, Overture, "Tannhäuser" ... Wagner
CONCLUDING VOLUNTARY, C major ... Hesse

CONTENTS OF BOOK XVII.

ADAGIO, B flat, "La Malinconia" ... Beethoven
AIR, "Verdi prati" ... Handel
LARGHETTO, Theme from Op. 9 ... Dussek
LARGHETTO, F major ... W. Kauss
ANDANTE SOSTENUTO, C minor ... F. Hiller

CONTENTS OF BOOK XIX.

ARIETTA CON CORO, "Invano alcun desir" ... Gluck
O SALUTARIS ... Batiste
PRELUDE, C major ... Beethoven
ANDANTE, F major ... Mozart

CONTENTS OF BOOK II.

VOLUNTARY ... J. S. Bach
ADAGIO ... Louis Spohr
ANDANTINO ... D. Hemingway
MARCH in "Scipio" ... Handel
PRELUDE ... E. W. Prevost

CONTENTS OF BOOK IV.

ANDANTE, "Julius Cæsar" ... Handel
PRAYER, Larghetto Maestoso ... Bellini
MARCIA RELIGIOSO ... Gluck
ANDANTE CANTABILE, Trio, C minor ... Beethoven
PRELUDE ... August Wilhelm Bach

CONTENTS OF BOOK VI.

MARCH, from the Second Set of Sonatas ... Handel
PRELUDE ... Gebhardi
ANDANTE MOLTO CANTABILE, from Sonata, Op. 109 ... Beethoven
LARGHETTO ... Weber
ANDANTE SOSTENUTO ... Mendelssohn

CONTENTS OF BOOK VIII.

AVE MARIA ... Cherubini
ADAGIO, from the Symphony in G major. No. 16 ... Haydn
ALLA MARCIA ... Michael Haydn
ANDANTE QUASI LARGHETTO ... Dussek
INTERMEZZO ... W. Spark

CONTENTS OF BOOK X.

MARCH, D major ... Hummel
PIE JESU, from the "Requiem Mass" ... Cherubini
MELODY, F major ... Adolphe Nordmann
AIR, "Ne men con l'ombri" ("Xerxes") ... Handel
ANDANTE MODERATO, C major ... F. Lachner

CONTENTS OF BOOK XII.

CHANT DE BERCEAU, from Op. 81 ... Stephen Heller
ANDANTE, G minor, from a Sonata ... Haydn
ADAGIO, D major, from a Sonata ... Pinto
TRÄUMEREI, Lento, F major ... R. Schumann

CONTENTS OF BOOK XIV.

SPIRTO GENTIL ... Donizetti
MODERATO, Alla Marcia ... Donizetti
MINUET, E major ... Handel
LARGHETTO, 7th Concerto ... Mozart

CONTENTS OF BOOK XVI.

THEME, C major, from Concerto, Op. 64 ... Mendelssohn
CHORUS, "Les Huguenots" ... Meyerbeer
RECITATIVE, "Armida dispietata" } ... Handel
ARIA, "Lascia ch'io pianga" }
MINUET, D major ... Haydn
VOLKSLIED, G major ... Old German

CONTENTS OF BOOK XVIII.

AVE MARIA, Soprano Air ... Batiste
ADAGIO, E flat ... J. S. Bach
ANDANTE GRAZIOSO, D major ... Beethoven
FUGUE, C major ... H. Jaeschke

CONTENTS OF BOOK XX.

ORGAN THEME, A flat ... A. Hesse
THEME, A flat ... F. Schubert
CHORUS, "We therefore pray Thee" (Dettingen "Te Deum") Handel
VOLKSLIED, "Hope" ... Mendelssohn
ANDANTINO, F major ... Gluck

LONDON: ASHDOWN & PARRY, HANOVER SQUARE.

Digitized by Google

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, & SPALDING, at 3 and 5, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, April 22, 1882.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 60.—No. 17. SATURDAY, APRIL 29, 1882. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA,
COVENT GARDEN.

First Appearance this Season of Mdme Albani.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), April 29, will be performed VERDI'S Opera, "LA TRAVIATA." Violetta, Mdme Albani; Giorgio Germont, Signor Cotogni; Barone Duphol, Signor Scolara; Alfredo, Signor Frapolli. Conductor—M. DUPONT.

MONDAY next, May 1, MEYERBEER'S Opera, "LES HUGUENOTS," concluding at the end of the Third Act. Valentina, Mdme Fürsch-Madi; Margherita di Valois, Mdme Valleria; Urbano, Mdme Trebelli; Conte di San Bris, Signor de Reszké; Conte di Nevers, Signor Cotogni; and Raoul di Nangis, Signor Mierswinsky. Conductor—Signor BEVIGNANI. The Incidental Divertissement will be supported by Mdlle Reuters.

TUESDAY next, May 2, MEYERBEER'S Opera, "DINORAH." Dinorah, Mdme Sembrich; Un Caprajo, Mdme Trebelli; Hoel, Signor Cotogni; and Corentino, Signor Frapolli.

THURSDAY next, May 4 (Subscription night, in lieu of Saturday, August 5), VERDI'S Opera, "AIDA" (to commence at 8.15). Aida, Mdme Fürsch-Madi; Amneris, Mdme Stahl (her first appearance in England); Amonasro, Signor Padolfini; and Radamès, M. Vergnet.

Doors open at 8.0; the Opera commences at 8.30. The Box Office, under the portico of the Theatre, is open from Ten till Five. Orchestra Stalls, £1 5s.; Side Boxes on the first tier, £3 3s.; Upper Boxes, £2 12s. 6d.; Balcony Stalls, 15s.; Pit Tickets, 7s.; Amphitheatre Stalls, 10s. 6d. and 5s.; Amphitheatre, 2s. 6d. Programmes, with full particulars, can be obtained of Mr Edward Hall, at the Box Office, under the Portico of the Theatre, where applications for Boxes and Stalls are to be made; also of Mr Mitchell, Messrs Lacon & Ollier, Mr Bubb, Messrs Chappell & Co., and Mr Ollivier, Bond Street; Messrs Leader & Co., 62, Piccadilly; Messrs Cramer & Co., 201, Regent Street; Mr Alfred Hays, 4, Royal Exchange Buildings, and 26, Old Bond Street; and of Messrs Keith, Prowse & Co., 48, Cheapside.

CRYSTAL PALACE SATURDAY CONCERT, THIS DAY, April 29th, at Three. The programme will include Wedding March, composed in honour of the marriage of H.R.H. the Duke of Albany with H.R.H. the Princess Helen of Waldeck (first time of performance with orchestra); Overture, Magic Flute (Mozart); Pianoforte Concerto, in E flat, No. 1 (Liszt); Symphony in C (Schubert); Pianoforte Solos, "Ouvertura di Ballo" (Sullivan). Vocalist—Mrs Hutchinson. Solo Piano—Mdme Sophie Menter. Conductor—Mr AUGUST MANNS. Seats, 2s. 6d., 1s., and Admission to Concert-room, 6d.

UNDER DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE.

MDLLE ALICE ROSELLI'S GRAND EVENING CONCERT, STEINWAY HALL, May 2, at Half-past Eight. Artists—Misses Santley, Alice Roselli, Helen Meason, Lillia Reynolds, Mdme Enriquez, Miss Kipping; Mr W. H. Cummings, Frank May, and Mr Jessurun. Pianoforte—Mr Sidney Smith. Violin—Herr Joseph Ludwig. Conductors—Signor CIRO PINSUTI, Mr BIRD, and LINDSAY SLOPER. Stalls, 21s.; Reserved, 10s. 6d. and 5s.; Admission, 1s.; to be had of Mdlle ALICE ROSELLI, 21, Halsey Street, Cadogan Square, S.W., and at the Hall.

MDME SOPHIE MENTER will give her LAST PIANOFORTE RECITAL previous to her provincial tour, at ST JAMES'S HALL, on FRIDAY, May 5, at Three o'clock. Mdme Sophie Menter will play Beethoven's Sonata, Op. 57 (Appassionata), and Selections from Handel, Scarlatti, Mendelssohn, Schubert, Chopin, Rubinstein, and Liszt. Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Balcony, 3s.; Admission, 1s.; Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., 84, New Bond Street; Chappell & Co., 50, New Bond Street; and at Austin's Ticket Office, St James's Hall.

UNDER DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE.

HERR S. LEHMEYER will give TWO PIANOFORTE RECITALS on WEDNESDAY, May 24, and WEDNESDAY, June 28, at ST JAMES'S HALL, New Room (entrance in Piccadilly, restaurant door), to commence at Eight o'clock. Herr Lehmeyer will play a selection of Classical Pianoforte Music on each occasion, and also introduce some of his best pianoforte pupils. Herr Lehmeyer will be assisted by one eminent vocalist on each occasion. Subscription Tickets for the two recitals, One Guinea; Single Tickets, 12s. 6d. For further particulars apply to Herr LEHMEYER, 67, Wigmore Street, Cavendish Square; Messrs Chappell & Co., 50, New Bond Street; and at St James's Hall.

"MIDNIGHT CHIMES."

MISS COSFORD will sing Professor BERGSON'S new Song, "MIDNIGHT CHIMES," at Northampton next week.

MARLBOROUGH ROOMS, 307, REGENT STREET
(Adjoining the Polytechnic).

ON MONDAY, MAY, 15th, 1882, AT THREE O'CLOCK,

MISS ROSA KENNEY

(Daughter of the late Charles Lamb Kenney)
Will give a Second

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL AFTERNOON RECITAL,

Which will include

THE POTION SCENE FROM "ROMEO AND JULIET," "THE VISION OF JOAN OF ARC" (by CHARLES LAMB KENNEY), SCENES FROM "THE SCHOOL FOR SCANDAL," &c., &c.

ARTHUR SKETCHLEY and other Distinguished Artists will appear. Full particulars will be duly announced.

Tickets, 10s., 5s., and 2s. 6d., to be obtained of Messrs Boosey & Co., 295, Regent Street; Messrs Chappell & Co., 50, New Bond Street; Mr Mitchell, 33, Old Bond Street; Keith & Prowse, Langham Hotel and Cheapside.

MR SINCLAIR DUNN'S ENTERTAINMENT, "SONGS OF BRITAIN," TUESDAY, May 2, at the LONDON ART GALLERIES, 23, Baker Street, Portman Square. Artists: Miss Eleanor Rees, Miss Ella Hall, and Mr Sinclair Dunn. Admission by Ticket—Reserved Seats, 4s.; Unreserved, 2s.

MR SINCLAIR DUNN, Scottish Tenor, has been engaged to give his popular Entertainment, "A NIGHT WITH SCOTCH POETS," at Kensington Palace, on Wednesday, 24th May.

MR GEORGE GEAR'S CONCERT, TUESDAY next, May 2, at Three o'clock, ST GEORGE'S HALL. Miss Anna Williams, Mdme A. Paget, Mdme Patey, Mr Percy Blandford. Violin, Miss K. Chaplin; harp, Mr Oberthür; pianoforte, Mr George Gear. Accompanists, Miss Nellie Chaplin and Mr H. Parker. Tickets, 10s. 6d., 7s., 5s., 3s., and 1s., at the Hall, and of Mr G. GEAR, 66, Seymour Street, Portman Square, W.

